 shewing many diuine things to man, was worshipped of man; but hee referring him to God, saith;
 worship him, for I am thy fellow seruant, homines aduersus; tom. 8. quest. 3. part. 11.

Thirdly, where findeth hee that Angels in all the olde Testament suffered themselves to be adored: he can shew neyther precept nor practise for the adoration of Angels: And that the Angels since Christs coming did depart from their right, it is a prophane conceit, and derogatorie to Christ, as though he by his coming empaiued the state of Angels, which by him is made glorious: And if our Saviour would haue the chaire of Moses reuerenced, though euill men sate in it, Matth. 23. 2. it was not his pleasure, that the dignitie of those holy Spirits should be abated.

Fourthly, to the third sayeth, that the Apostles did well in refusing to be adored vnto: hee saith to offer sacrifice is an external act of worship to be performed onely to God, 1. Cor. 10. 14.

What reason haue they to burne incense vnto Saints and their images, rather than to offer sacrifice? For it appeareth in the law, that the burning of incense was more precious, and a more high poyn of the Leviticall seruice, then was the offering of sacrifice: First, the Altar of incense was more curiously made, being overlaid with fine golde, and was called the golden altar; the other for burnt offerings, the brazen altar, Exod. 40. 26. Secondly, the altar of incense was placed in the Tabernacle neere vnto the most holy place; the other altar stood at the doore without, Exod. 40. 26. 29. Thirdly, the ministers were diuers: the Priests offered sacrifice in their courses, but Aaron onely, and his successors the high Priests burned incense, Exod. 30. 7. Fourth-ly, vpon the brazen altar incense was offered with other sacrifices, Leuit. 23. but vpon the golden altar no burnt sacrifice or any oblation, but onely incense was offered vnto God: Fifthly, Of all offerings and oblations, it most liuely prefigureth the sacrifice of attonement wrought by Christ vpon the crosse, who therefore is called by the Apostle, A sacrifice of sweete smelling sauour vnto God, Heb. 1. 3. 2. Seeing then that the offering of incense was a more soueraigne thing in the law, then was the oblation of sacrifices: there is small reason for it, that our aduersaries should reuerse the lesse, that is, the offering of sacrifices for the Lord, and participate the greater and more worthy thing, that is, censing of odours and perfumes vnto Saints, as Bellarminus doth, cap. 1.

If sacrifice were no then to be offered to Saints, much lesse are prayers to be made vnto them: for to call vpon God is a greater thing, then to offer sacrifice, Psalms. 78. vers. 8.
 If Saints cannot challenge the lesse, that is, to haue sacrifices; they haue no right to the greater, namely, to be called vpon and prayed vnto.

Lastly, Augustine saith, Non sit nobis Religio cultus hominum mortuorum, &c. Let vs not make in any part of Religion to worship men that are dead: for if they liued well, they are now in that flux, due they neede not; neither doe require any honour at our hands: but they would haue vs to worship God; by whose illumination or reuelation, they may vnderstand, and doe reioyce, that we are partakers and fellowers in the same faith. They are then to be honoured for imitation, not to be adored for Religion, Aug. de ciuitate dei lib. 22. cap. 1.

Bellarminus answereth here to St. Augustine in very meane; that he speaketh against the error of the Gentiles, who made wicked men departed from God: as id. lib. 2. cap. 1. Contra. But Aug- ustinus speaketh not of wicked men, but of such, as by a godly life, and are to be imitated: but so are not the wicked. Therefore his meaning is, that men, though neuer so godly, or worthy of imitation in their life, are to be adored, or worshipped: The lesse we see then faileth in his answer.

St. Augustine, cap. 45: Sancti, qui vna habent deum suum, non sunt in se separati, &c. The Saints, who liued happily ended this life, as the most noble members of Christs body; are worthy of vs to be honoured, as with that worship, which is due vnto God, but with the worship of loue and brotherly fellowship, as we worship or reuerence holy men in this life. The argument from hence is that, as holy men are to be worshipped in this life, so are the Saints in heauen: but no to-ligious worship is due vnto them here, but onely brotherly.

A ciuill adoration then we denie not to be due vnto holy men, such as the citill late adored to Princes: Cod. lib. 2. tit. 9. l. 6. Nos non adoramus personam? They are said to adore the King robes, that is, the kingly Maieſtie: but this is farre from religious adoration.

I will in the last place alleadge the ſentence of a learned Papiſt againſt the adoration of ſaints, namely Diuid, who thus writeth, There be certaine ſtories of the ſaints to be ſuſpected, non enim narratur ſancti in mortis agone conſtituti, aut moniſſi aut exhortati, ut ex hoc mundo tranſeant in regnum celeſtium. As when the ſaints are reported in the agonie of death, to haue warned or recomended that after they were gone out of this world, they ſhould be worſhipped, and in diſeaſes and dangers to be called vpon; for it is not like, that they paſſing out of the world were careful for their honour, but would pray rather with Dauid, Lord enter not into iudgement with thy ſeruant, for thou art God. 1. Sam. 26. 19. Thus farre one of their owne, miſliking the adoration of ſaints.

Maſter Lambert holy Martyr hath ſealed this truth: who out of Auguſtine here before alleadged doth thus inferre, that we ſhould worſhip no men departed, be they neuer ſo good or holy, for they ſeek no ſuch honour, but that we ſhould worſhip God alone: Hominum non ſanctiſſime charitate non ſequimur: we honour them with loue, not with any worſhip or ſeruite. 1. Cor. 13. 1.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS FIRST PART, CONCERNING VOWES AND OTHERS MADE TO OR BY SAINTS.

1. Error.

The Papiſts.
First, vowes may be made to ſaints (ſay they) properly as vnto God, though not altogether in the ſame manner: Prayer may be made to ſaints, therefore vowes alſo. A vowe in the Greek tongue is called ἐπιτηδεύω, prayer προσεύχεται. As they differ not in name, ſo neither in deede: they to be ſeuered. Belſam.

Anſw. 1. He taketh that for granted, which is chiefly in queſtion: for it is idolatrie to praye any other but vnto God: Call vpon me in the day of trouble, Pſal. 50. 15. It is not lawfull to praye vnto ſaints, therefore not to vowe.

2. To make vowes is a more ſtrict and binding act of religion, then prayer is; for in common there is a prayer: we pray God to giue vs grace to performe the thing vowed: and therefore it is a full purpoſe of the heart with a ſolemne promiſe, whereby we bind our ſelues to the performing. Again, we may make petition and requeſt vnto mortall men, but vowes we can make none vnto them: It would not therefore followe, though ſaints might be prayed vnto, that they are capable of our vowes.

Secondly, it is alſo lawfull (they ſay) to ſwear by the name of ſaints, becauſe all is reſpect to the honour of God: as he that ſweareth by the Temple, ſweareth alſo by him that dwelleth therein. 2. Chron. 36. 16.

Anſw. 1. In this place Chriſt reprooueth the Pharifees for their ſwearing, and condemneth by this argument: that howſoeuer they thought it a ſmall matter to ſwear by the Temple, yet ſwear they did ſwear by God himſelfe. See then the boldnes of theſe men, that dare iuſtifie ſwearing by creatures by the ſame reaſon, that Chriſt condemneth it. 2. Our Sauour ſaith nothing but this, that in every oth there is an inuocation of the diuine power, and therefore whoſoeuer ſweareth by a creature, committeth idolatrie, in making it his God. Mat. 23. 16.

The Preſbiter.
That it is great impietie to make vowes vnto ſaints, it is thus proued, Eſay 19. 21. In the day the Egyptians ſhall knowe the Lord, and ſhall doe ſacrifices, and vowe vowes vnto the Lord. But ſacrifices are not due vnto ſaints, but onely to God: therefore neither vowes.

Again, the vowes of Chriſtians are not to binde themſelues to goe in pilgrimage, or to offer vnto this ſaint or that, this Image or that. Auguſtine ſaith, Aliaſt pſallimus, alius aleamus, alius amamus. One voweth a cloke, another oyle, a third a wax candle: God careth not for theſe vowes, ſaith Solomon, quod habet redemptio ipſum offer hoc eſt. Amicus meus. But offer & vow vnto God, that ſuch as this day he hath redeemed, that is, thy ſoule. The vowes therefore of obedience and reuerence and all Chriſtian duties are the vowes of the ſoule, the vowes of body and ſoule to the ſeruice of God. Rom. 12. 1. But this cannot be vowed vnto any but to him who hath redeemed vs: Ergo, not to any ſaint.

2. That we ought onely to ſwear by the name of God, the Scripture is plaine, Deut. 10. 20. Thou ſhalt feare the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his name, and by no other. Exod. 23. 13. But ſaints are not to be ſerved or ſcrued, for the Septuagint tranſlate δοξάζω. That ſhall worſhip God, which kinde of worſhip the Papiſts themſelues dare not attribute to ſaints, neither are we to ſwear by them.

Again, to ſwear, is to call him to witneſſe by whom wee ſwear, and ſo to make him our God: for whom we ſwear by, we confeſſe to be our ſauour and lord of our heade, and our of false swearers. To swear then, is to call God to witnesse. Quid tu facis, cum iuras? Dices sepe iurabis. Augustinus. What dost thou, when thou swearst? Thou callest God to witnesse.

But they that swear by Saints, call them to witnesse; and none else are called to witnesse, but they by whom they swear: Ergo, they make Saints their Gods, seeing God is called upon in every oath.

Concil. Constantinens. 4. can. 61. Clergicis per creaturas iuramentum accipimus in obsequium; si per creaturas iuramentum accipimus: That a Clergie man swearing by creatures should sharply be re-proved, and if he continue in that vice, to be excommunicated: But he that sweareth by Saints, swears by creatures. This Canon is also confirmed in the decrees: deus. 22. quæst. 2. c. 3. bon. 8. tit. 2. c. 1.
So also in this purpose the decree of Pope Pius: ibid. 10. Sequitur per capitulum Dei. hoc apud iuramentum. If any man do swear by the haire or head of God, if he be an Ecclesiasticall person, let him be deposed; if a lay-man, let him be anathematized: It is he not lawfull to swear by the body of Christ, or any part thereof, which is united to his Godhead in one person, which lawfull Canon is it lawfull to swear by any other creatures. Let vs see also to this purpose the determination of their Masters: Quæritur verum licet iurare per. A question is made, whether it be lawfull to swear by the creatures? and it seemeth we ought not, because it is written in the Law, Thou shalt render thy oaths unto the Lord: and a little after, The lawes were dominanded, if they did swear, they should swear only by the Creator, not by the creature; for swearing by the Angels, &c. they did worship the creatures, which honor was more safe to be given unto God, then to the creatures, lib. 3. dist. 39. deus. 22. quæst. 2. c. 3. bon. 8. tit. 2. c. 1.
The holy confessor of Gods truth, about anno. 1400. saith thus, Te facimus per unum sanctum Christum et omnia sunt in agnitione. And thereupon inferreth, that it is unlawfull to swear by creatures, because it is a thing contempt of diuers creatures, Fanpag. 329. Wherefore hee saith further, when an oath is ministrall, not to swear by; but it is vsed as an excommunic-ation, and is the signe or witnesse, for the better aduancement to be had in the oath: An offitium fuerit in manu eius per suam manum, iuramentum per suam manum, Gen. 24. and as facit et dicit dominus de lapide de stonibus a witnesse of the covenant betwixt them, Gen. 31. yet neither did he swear by his masters thigh, nor the other by the stones.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DISTINCTION

of the two kinds of worship, id est of the religious and civil.

The Religious

The kind of worship which is proper to God, they say, is fully expressed by the Greeke word latreia. 27. Error.
Neither is this word vsed, but for the worship of God: the other word sebeia is taken for all kind of service both of God and men; so that the religious worship, which is called latreia, is only due to God: the other called sebeia, may be attributed to Angels and Saints, Beatus

This distinction is but of late invented and toynd of our aduersaries; somewhat to countenance them out in their Idolatrous and superstitious worship of Saints: We thus doe refute.

Argum. 1. This distinction helpeth them not: for there are onely two words which doe become two kinds of worship, sebeia is the religious honbut: latreia is the ciuill due, such as men performe to their masters. They should haue found out three names for their three kinds of worship: they haue gayned nothing by this distinction, but that ciuill adoration is due vnto Saints, such as is given to men vpon earth. As for their fained word sebeia, which may be called a supererogation, when they can finde it in Scripture, they shall know more of our winde: and yet receiving this terme, it signifieth but a more ciuill seruice, it becometh not a new kind of religious worship.

Argum. 2. Neither are the words so vsed, as they make vs beleene: for the word latreia, which they make proper for the seruice of God, is applied to men, as Leuit. 24. Opus seruili non faciesis.
Thou shalt doe no seruile works; the word is latreia. Leuit. 24. also sheweth out of pro-phane authors, that sometime the word latreia is taken for the seruice of men or maides to their masters: as 10. lib. 1. de ciuit. Diuina. 1. So likewise Laurentius Vallæ sheweth the same vie of the word.

So concerning the word sebeia, is taken in Scripture for the proper seruice of God, as *Gala.
4. 8.* Ye did seruice to them that by nature were no Gods: the word is, sebeia. Eph. 2. religious seruice is onely due vnto God, not vnto Angels or Saints, for they are not by nature Gods. So we see that these two words, not onely in prophane authors, but in Scripture also are confounded.

Augustinus. 1. de ciuit. Diuina. 1. Deus. 22. quæst. 2. c. 3. bon. 8. tit. 2. c. 1.

in Exod. 24. Religious service is due vnto God as Lord; religious worship is onely due vnto God as he is God.

Belarmine answereth; that this place of Augustine maketh for him; for hence it followeth, that the worship called religio being due vnto God, as God, is not communicable vnto any, because there is but one God; but the other, called seruicia, seruice, being attributed to God as Lord, may be communicable, because there are many truly and properly called Lords; Belar. cap. 10.

Contm. First, he directly oppugneeth the Scripture, for the Apostle saith, Peto vobiscum ad adorandum Deum, et ad laudandum Iesum Christum. 1. Cor. 14. 16. The Apostle saith, that there is but one Lord that properly and verily, he saith, there are many. Secondly, the Apostle saith, There are many Gods in the world, ver. 17. that is, improperly so called; so then, as many are called Lords, so also they are named in some sort gods in the earth; and that in Scripture, Psal. 82. 6. I have sayd, you are Gods, &c. Wherefore he hath answered nothing.

That there is but one kind of religious worship, and that onely due vnto God, and that no other reuerence beside, is but a ciuill kinde of adoration, we haue the euident testimonies of Cyprian, Nicene, & action. 4. Quid aliud est, quam honoris adhibere exhibitus emphaticus adorationis. What else is adoration or worship, but a more emphaticall or earnest yielding of honour? It is then a new kinde of honour, but a further degree onely of ciuill worship.

Likewise in the same Councell, action. 7. Tharistius entreating of the worship of Saints, doth notably handle this point: adversus. 1. adorationis est salutatio; 2. salutatio est amor, 3. amor, significat quod quis amat, id etiam adorat, & quod adorat, id etiam amat: To adore, or worship, is all one, as salute, or loue; for that which a man loueth, he adoreth; and what he adoreth, he loueth. Thus goeth forward: of the Pharisees our Saviour saith; that they loue the first places at feasts, in the synagogues in the markets: Certum est, salutatio honoris hoc Deus dominus appellari. It is certaine, that by salutation here is vnderstood adoration, or worship: Againe, in another instance out of the 11. of the Acts, ver. 19: how Paul saluted or embraced the Elders assembled with James: Hic salutatioem honoris est, adorationis istius saltem et positio finem significat. Here the Apostle, by his honorable salutation, signifieth their mutuall adoration of another. Further (saith he) Est adratio, qua venerationem & desiderium significat: There is an adoration, which signifieth a reuerent kind of desire, as we adore the Emperour: Est autem tantum significat: There is an adoration that signifieth feare, as Isaac adored Esau 10. gratiam notat: There is an adoration which betokeneth thankfulness, as Abraham adored the sonnes of Heb of whom he bought the field: Qui sperant beneficium, adorant: They that hope for a benefite, adore, as Isaac adored Pharao. And all these are but diuers kinds of ciuill adoration, such, and no other, as are due vnto the Saints, as more plainly writeth Adrianus 1. epistol. ad Constantium about the time of this 2. Nicene Councell: Qualis est iste adorationis honor? professio, quoniam is, quo nos inimicum persequimur, salutantes nos inter nos per honorandis, & desiderium: What manner of worship is this, (which is to be giuen to the Saints?) surely none other, besides, which we giue one to another, saluting our selues by honour and loue. Thus this popish distinction of religious worship, is found to be cleane contrarie to antiquitie.

THE THIRD PART, CONCERNING the kissing of holie mens feete.

The Popists.

IT is a signe of reuerence done both to Christ and other sacred persons, as Prophets, Apostles, Popes, or others representing his person here vpon earth, Rhemist. AB. 4. sect. 3.

Argum. 1. The Shunamite fell downe and embraced Elisha feete, 2. King. 4. 27. Ergo, the Popes feete ought to be kissed.

Ans. 1. Your Popes must be first as holie as this Prophet was, who was thus reuerenced for his holines, before they can challenge the like honour.

2 This reuerence to the Prophet was voluntarie in the woman, not looked for or caused by the Prophet, as the Pope looketh for it of dutie.

3 Here is no mention made of kissing of feete, but onely that she caught him by the feet, which was partly a signe of her ioy, that she had met with the Prophet, partly by this sudden and disordered gesture, the Prophet perceiued that she was troubled in minde: for Gabaz would haue thrust her away, but he said, Let her alone, for her spirit is troubled within her.

4 This is no warrant for the Pope to offer his feete to bee kissed of Kings and Emperours, because the woman fell downe at the Prophets feete, thinke you, that if the King of Israd had so done, the Prophet would haue suffered it?

Argum. 2. Maria kissed Christ feete: Ergo, the Popes feete ought to be kissed.

Ans. What arrogancie is this, that the Pope, a mortall and sinfull man, should challenge the honour which was done to Christ, being God in the flesh and woide of liue? He might as well the like blasphemie challenge to be worshipped: because the women in the Gospell caught Christ by the feete and worshipped him, Matth. 28.9. We may see by this, of what spirit he is, and whether he be not that Antichrist, that shall make himselfe as God, 2. Thess. 2.4.

The Protestants.

The kissing of the feete, was an humble and lowly gesture, which was worthily vsed toward our Saviour Christ, who was God in the flesh, and in his bodie and humanitie annexed to his Godhead, as God to be worshipped: but it is too diuine, and too lowly an homage to be offered to any mortall man: And holy men in times past refused it, when any carried away with immoderate zeale and admiration of their person, were readie to giue it vnto them.

Argum. 1. When Cornelius fell downe at Peters feete, the holy Apostle would not suffer him to doe it. The Pope is of a cleane contrarie spirit to S. Peter: for he refused it being offered; the Pope holdeth out his toe, and offereth it to be kissed, and vrgeth men thereunto.

Argum. 2. If such kissing of feete be commendable, how commeth it to passe that the Pope only hath holie feete to kisse; and not other Bishops and Clergie men, as well as he?

Augustine thus writeth vpon those words of the Psalme, Worship his footstoole, reading according to the Septuagint, saith he, the earth is his footstoole, but wee must not worship the earth: Conuertere ad Christum, & inuenis, quomodo sine impietate adoretur terra: suscepit enim de terra terram, quia cuncta terra est in Psal. 98. I turne me (saith he) vnto Christ, and I finde how the earth may without any impietie be worshipped: for he tooke earth of earth, flesh of the flesh of the Virgin, the flesh is earth. Out of these words I conclude, that the flesh, the bodie, the humanitie ought not in any to bee worshipped, but onely in Christ, for the neere coniunction of the Godhead and humane nature together: and therefore consequently no kissing of feete, which is an externall act of diuine worship, is seemely for any mortall man.

The Iesuite might as well defend other insolent parts of the Popes, as the kissing of their feete, as that they take vpon them to be carried vpon mens shoulders, as Stephanus 2. was anno 757. Alexander 3. did tread in the Emperour Frederick's necke: Adrianus 4. found fault with the Emperour for holding his stirrup on the left side: to whom the Emperour made this sober answer: Scire velim ex utro officij genus ex debito sit, an beneplacito, &c. I would know of thee, whether this seruice be of dutie, or good will; if of good will, it skilleth not on which side he commeth, that sheweth his good will. So then it seemeth, that this great reuerence shewed to the Popes, as in kissing their feete and such like, proceeded rather from the good will, and lowlinesse of others, then of any dutie belonging to their persons. But concerning this and other proude parts of the Pope, the said Frederick the Emperour writing to Adrianus, saith, as the truth was: Superbia detestabilem bestiam efficit ad sedem Petri reptasse videmus: Wee see that the detestable beast of pride, is crept euen into Peters chayre.

THE THIRD QUESTION, CONCERNING the inuocation of Saints.

This question hath three parts: first, whether prayers are to bee made vnto Saints. Secondly whether they doe pray for vs. Thirdly, whether they vnderstand our prayers.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER prayers are to be made to Saints.

The Papists.

Their assertion is this, Santos defunctos pie & utiliter à uiuentibus inuocari: That Saints departed are with great profit and pietie called vpon, and praied vnto: and that it is not onely lawfull but godly, so to doe, Rhemist. 1. Tim. 2. scil. 4. Bellarm. cap. 19. lib. 1. de Sanctor. beatiss.

Argum. 1. They say, they doe not pray vnto Saints, as authors of any benefit or grace, but as intercessors onely: Neither doe they make them immediat intercessors, but only through Christ, concluding all their prayers, per Christum Dominum nostrum. Bellarm.

Ans. 1. It is false, that you pray vnto them as intercessors onely, for you desire them not onely to pray for you, but to haue mercie on you: for thus they pray, O blessed Ladie haue mercie vpon vs, preferre thy seruants, let the merits of S. Marie bring vs to the kingdome of heauen. Fulk. 1. Timoth. 2. scil. 4.

2 It is also false, that they make them not immediat intercessors, but conclude their prayers, Per Christum Dominum nostrum: For in that blasphemous prayer, Tu per Thomas sanguinem quem pro nobis impendis, fac nos Christe se audere, quò Thomas ascendis: Here they aske life eternall of Christ by the blood of Thomas of Canturburie. How then is it true, which the Rhemists affirme in word, that Christ alone by his merits procureth all grace and mercie toward mankinde, ibid. when they hope hope to obtaine their requests by the merits of Saints? See Falk, annot. Job. 16. vers. 3. where diuers prayers to Saints, as to S. Marie, S. Osmond, S. Anne, S. Katherine, are reckoned vp, and none of them concludeth, per Christum Dominum nostrum.

Fox. pag. 1174

Likewise anno 1551. in Scotland it was taught as good doctrine among the Papists, that it was lawfull to say the Pater noster to Saints, that we may call them our fathers, and say Hallowed be your names, because God hath made their names holy, and that their kingdome may come, because the kingdome of heauen is theirs by possession: and further, that their will may be done, seeing their will is Gods will: and so of the other petitions. Whereby it appeareth, that they would haue prayers made vnto Saints properly, euen as vnto God.

Argum. 2. Exod. 32. 13. Moses thus prayeth, Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob thy seruants. Moses here hopeth to haue his prayers heard by the merits of these holie men, Bellarmin.

Ans. Moses rehearseth only the couenant, which the Lord made with these holy men and their seed, as the words following do shew, Towhom thou swarest by thine owne selfe and saidest vnto them, I will multiplie your seede: Moses therefore pleadeth not the merits of Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, but vrgeth and presseth the promise of God, and couenant made with them: as we may reade, Genesis 17. 7. where the Lord saith to Abraham, I will be God vnto thee, and thy seede after thee.

Bellarmin replieth, that mention is not onely made of the couenant, but of their merits also: as 1. King. 15. 4. For Dauid sake did the Lord giue him a light in Ierusalem, &c. because Dauid did that, which was right in the sight of the Lord, &c.

Contra. First, here is no mention of *Dauid*s merits: for in the same place Dauid sinne against Urias is remembred, which was sufficient to staine all *Dauid*s merites with God. Secondly, God doth many times crowne the righteousness of the parents with temporall blessings in their posteritie, according as the Lord promisseth in the second commaundement, I will shew mercie vpon thousands to them that loue me: So that all this dependeth vpon Gods mercie and promise. Thirdly, compare this place with chap. 11. 32. 34. there we shall finde this reason giuen, because I haue chosen Dauid, &c. therefore God would not rent all the kingdome from Salomons posteritie: wherefore this mercie to *Dauid*s seede, did first of all issue from the free election of God. Fourthly, this place maketh nothing at all for the inuocation of Saints, though God respecting the obedience of Dauid, should shew mercie vnto his seede.

Argum. 3. The Saints doe pray one for another here vpon earth, and doe one desire another prayers: Saint Paul, Rom. 15. Ephes. 6. Coloss. 4. and in other places desireth to be assisted by their prayers: Ergo, much more may we desire the prayers, of Saints departed, Bellarmin. R. hemist.

Ans. First, to pray one for another while wee liue, is a dutie of charitie, and commaunded in Scripture: but to request the prayers of Saints departed, hath no warrant in the word. Secondly, we doe not desire the godly liuing to pray for vs, as our Mediatours, or as though by their worthines we are brought into the fauour of God, as you say the Saints doe: and therefore your argument followeth not, from the prayer of the liuing to the prayer of the dead. Thirdly, we may one pray for another, and one request the prayers of another, while we liue, because we know our mutuall necessities: but the Saints departed know not what things are done vpon earth, neither are euery where present to heare our prayers. Thus is their argument answered, whereof Bellarmin so boasteth, that he saith, it was vnanswerable, cap. 19.

Argum. 4. Bellarmin produceth diuers testimonies of the fathers, and certaine Canonisall Councils to proue the inuocation of Saints: as namely, Synod. 7. act. 6. in fine: Cum timore &c. Let vs doe all with feare, entreating the intercession of the vndefiled Virgin, of the Angels, and all Saints, &c.

Ans. First, this 7. Synode, which was the Nicene 2. is not worthie to be counted among the generall Councils, wherein it was concluded that images of Saints were to be worshipped, and it was assembed against, Iconoclastas, the breakers of Images: but the 4. Constantin. rather is to be held the 7. generall, which was gathered against, Iconolatras, the worshippers of Images: wherein it was concluded, that it was neither lawfull to haue the images of Saints, nor to worship them. And that this deserueth rather the name of a generall Council, it may appeare, both because it had the presence and consent of two Emperours, Leo and Constantinus; whereas the other had but the consent of Irene the Emperesse, Constantinus her sonne being yet vnder her government, who afterward comming to yeeres of discretion, did abrogate the constitutions of this Council: as also for that the one was moderated by the reuerend Patriarke of Constantin. Paulus, and Theodosius Bishop of Ephesus; but the other was ouerruled by Tharasius that vnlearned prelate of Constantinople, of a lay man suddenly made a Patriarke, contrarie to the Canons, whole election Charles the great did take exception against.

Secondly, that it may appeare what respect is to be had to this Council, let vs see some of their best stiffe: Action. 4. one Iohannes stepped vp, and said, Maiores imago quam oratio: An Image is greater then prayer. Action. 1. Tharasius the President said: Malum perpetuum idem est & agnoscere:

Euill

Euill or Sinne is alwaies equall and the very same: & idem est errare in magnis & paruis, and to erre in great matters or small, concerning the faith, is all one. Such blasphemous and erroneous conclusions may very well beleeme such a blinde Councell. Of the same kind is their resolution for the inuocation of Saints.

Thirdly, this Synode is of no great antiquitie, being celebrate about anno 780. and therefore not much to be regarded. Almost 400. yeeres before this the doctrine of the Church was otherwise, as out of Ambrose is most euident, whereas he thus writeth in 1. cap. ad Roman. Dicunt per istos in se ipso ad deum etc. They say that by these (that is by Saints) they may haue access to God, as by Courtiers we come vnto the King: Goe to, is any man so mad, or so forgetfull of himselfe, as to giue the honour of the King to a Countier? and doe they thinke they doe well, that giue the honour of God to a creature, & religio Domini conseruatur adorant, and leauing the Lord, to adore their fellow seruants? And therefore wee come vnto the King by Courtiers, because the King is a man, and knoweth not to whom he should commit the affaires of the kingdom; but vnto God, to whom nothing is hid, who knoweth euery mans merits (that is, works) suffragatorum non est opus, sed uisus deus a, wee neede no speaker, but a deuout minde, &c. No doubt this saying of S. Ambrose was agreeable to the doctrine of the Church in those daies: out of the which we may gather these three reasons against the inuocation of Saints: first, because this were to giue the honour of the King to his subjects, of God to a creature. Secondly, Angels and Saints are our fellow seruants, and therefore not to be worshipped, with our inuocation. Thirdly, it is not so with God as with Princes: to them wee must haue access by others, because they otherwise know not our necessities, but God knoweth our hearts.

Belarmine answereth to this so euident a testimonie, is very ridiculous: first, saith he, Saint Ambrose speaketh against the Ethnicks, that did worship the starres, and calleth them our fellow seruants, that is, creatures.

Contra. First, it is a very improper and vnusuall speech, to call the senselesse creatures our fellow seruants, and this beggerly shift bewraith the nakednes of their cause. Secondly, S. Ambrose speaketh of such fellow seruants, as should admit vs into Gods presence; but I thinke he is not so foolish to thinke, that the starres are mediators vnto God for vs: wherefore it is euident he speaketh of the mediation of Saints.

Secondly, saith he, on Gods behalfe, suffragatorum non est opus, we neede no spokeman, but in respect of our selues, we haue neede, &c.

Contra. Absolish and vnlearned distinction: for first S. Ambrose maketh this comparison: We neede a spokeman to the King, because he knoweth not our wants; but to God we neede none, because of himselfe, he vnderstandeth our prayers: wherefore there is no neede at all of a spokeman to God. Secondly he sheweth, that on our behalfe also we neede no spokeman, but a deuout minde: a deuout minde, I thinke is not required on Gods behalfe, but on ours. Thus this paltrie popeling wrastleth by his subtiltie with the cleere euidence and light of truth, but euery where proclaimeth the weaknes of his cause. And as he answereth this place of S. Ambrose, so he dealeth most ignorantly and rudely with the rest; as hereafter may bee shewed, if it please God, more at large: but fully now to answer the obiections out of the fathers, would enlarge this volume too much, of purpose therefore I doe forbear: yet here and there in the more waightie controuersies, I thinke it not amisse to giue a taste.

The Protestants.

That prayer is onely to be made vnto God, and to no other creature beside, as being an especiall part of the worship of God, which we ought not to giue to any other: thus it is prouoed out of the word of God.

Argum. 1. Rom. 10. 14. How shall they call vpon him, in whom they haue not beleued? But wee must beleue onely in God, and therefore onely pray to God. Rhemist. answer: It is true, no more can wee pray vnto our Ladie, nor any Saint in heauen, vnlesse we beleue they can helpe vs. So doth Belarmine answer likewise.

Ans. The Scripture euery where teacheth that wee must beleue in God, and that they are cursed that put any confidence in man, Ierem. 17. 5. Again, they can haue no assurance to settle their conscience, but out of the Scriptures: They haue a vaine perswasion of the abilitie of Saints to helpe them, but they haue no ground of any such beleefe out of the Scripture.

Bow. as great a patron of poperie in his time, as any of the Rhemists now, he saith thus; To trust to any we bid you not; but to call vpon them, and pray to them, we bid you. For pag. 1, 87. He thought it a grosse thing, that wee should trust to Saints, which the new Papiists set downe for good wholesome doctrine.

Argum. 2. Heb. 4. 16. Let vs come with boldnes to the throne of grace: Ergo, we haue no neede of the inuocation of Saints, seeing we haue free and bold access through Christ.

Rhemist. By this reason we should not pray one for another, while we are alie.

Ans.

Ans. We doe not put our confidence in the merite and worthines of other mens prayers, as you doe in the intercession of Saints. Again, this mutuall dutie of prayer one for another, is commanded and required of God, as the other is not: wherefore to runne vnto Saints, and not vnto Christ, is to doubt either of his readines, or abilitie to helpe vs.

Argum. 3. Ioh. 16:26. Christ saith, that after he hath by his mediation and intercession brought vs into the fauour of God, In that day shall you aske the Father in my name, and I say not, that I will pray to the Father for you, for the Father himselfe loueth you. If then the prayer of Christ to God his father, shall not then be needfull, what vse is there of the prayer of other creatures? 1. Tim. 2. fect. 4.

Argum. 4. Our Saviour Christ hath taught vs in the Gospell, to whom wee should direct our prayers, saying, Our Father, which art in heauen, &c. Matth. 6. This prayer cannot bee said either to an Angel or Saint: Ergo, it is contrarie to Christs rule to pray vnto them.

Bellarmino answereth, by the same reason, onely God the Father should be praised vnto, neither God the Sonne, nor the holy Ghost; for he teacheth vs onely to say, Our Father, &c.

Contra. First, here he sheweth his grosse ignorance; as though the whole Trinitie in respect of vs, and every one of the persons, is not our father, though in the respect that they haue one to another, there is but one father and one sonne: for Christ is called the everlasting father, Esay 9. and the holy Ghost, Iam. 1. 17. is named by the Apostle, Pater luminum, the father of lights. Secondly, there is not a petition in the Lords prayer but agreeth to the whole Trinitie: as where we pray, Hallowed be thy name, for there is one name of the whole Trinitie, as Matth. 28. Goe and baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost: as S. Ambrose sheweth, lib. 1. de spiritu sancto. Let thy kingdome come: this also concerneth the whole Trinitie, which hath but one kingdome: as S. Ambrose proueth out of that place, Rom. 14. The kingdome of God is not meate, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the spirit: the kingdome of God, and of the spirit, is all one. So likewise, they haue all one will: they all doe together forgie vs our sinnes, as Ioh. 20. Receive ye the holy Ghost, whose sinnes ye remit, they are remitted. The holy Ghost therefore forgieue sinnes, as well as the Father, or the Sonne: wherefore it is euident, that the Lords praier is directed to the whole Trinitie in the name of Father. Thirdly, yet Bellarmino is not altogether so absurd, as some popish Scotch Diuines haue been, who were not ashamed to graunt, that the Lords prayer might bee said to the Saints. See Fox pag. 1274.

Augustine saith, Pro quo nullus interpellat, & ipse pro omnibus; hic vnus verusque Mediator est. lib. 2. cont. Parmenian. cap. 8. He for whom no man prayeth, but himselfe entreateth for all men, he is the onely true Mediatour: Ergo, Saints no Mediatours, and therefore not to be prayed vnto.

Let vs see the testimonie of holie Martyrs: Thomas Haukes, It is an abominable blasphemie against God, and his sonne Christ, to call vpon any, to trust to any, or to pray to any, but onely to Christ Iesus. His reason is out of Saint Paul Rom. 10. that we cannot call vpon any, vpon whom we beleue not: But our beleefe, faith and trust must onely bee fixed vpon God. To this agreeeth the conclusion of a generall Councell, Nicen. 2. session. 2. Theodosius President of the Councell thus saith, Asperis verbis testamur nos duntaxat in vnum Deum veram latreiam, i. cultum, & fidem vltimam referre & reponere: We doe plainly testifie, that we repose and referre our faith and trust onely to God.

Iohn Lambert holie Martyr: Whereas the Papists commonly obiect, that as wee cannot bee admitted into the presence of the Prince, but by mediators, and friends going betweene; so is it betweene God and vs: he answereth, that there is great difference betweene God, and a mortall Prince: For neither hath the Prince the knowledge that God hath, who knoweth and seeth all things euery where; &c. neither is he in mercie and gracious dealing like to God: who is of that infinit mercie, that I may as soone obtaine of him, that is needfull, as I should by praying to Saints to be Mediatours, &c. And so he concludeth, I will pray vnto Saints, when I thinke that God either cannot or will not giue my petition; but that shall neuer be: Ergo, &c. pag. 1109. respons. ad articul. 14.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE Saints departed doe pray for vs.

The Papists.

31. Error.

THat the Saints in heauen doe not onely pray in generall, but particularly for vs, ready in all our needs by their prayer and mediation to assist vs: thus they would proue it.

Argum. 1. 2. Pet. 1. 15. I will endeavour (saith the Apostle) that you may haue remembrance of these things after my departure. Peter promisseth to be carefull of them, and to pray for them after his departure, Rhemist. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 18.

Ans.

Ans. This which here the Apostle promisseth, he performeth in writing this Epistle, whereby they might be put in remembrance, when he was gone. And therefore he saith, ver. 13. I thinke it meete so long as I am in this tabernacle to stirre you up by putting you in remembrance: be acquainted now onely to bee the time wherein he may doe them good, and therefore deferreth it not. There is no fillable, which soundeth that way, that he would pray for them after his dissolution.

Argum. Apocal. 5. 8. The 24. Elders are said to have golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the Saints, Rheniss. in hunc locum. Ergo, the Saints in heauen doe pray for vs.

Ans. The 24. Elders doe represent the Church Militant vpon earth, whose conuersations in heauen, and they doe continually offer vp their prayers. And that the place is so to be vnderstood, appeareth ver. 10. Thou hast made vs Kings and Priests, and wee shall minne vpon the earth: that is, then kingdome is spirituall, in fighting against, and ouercomming the concupiscence of the flesh and all carnall desires.

Argum. Iere. 15. 1. ff. Moses and Samuel stood before me, my affection could not be toward this people: therefore Moses and Samuel being dead, did vse to pray for the people, Belserm.

Ans. First, the contrary rather may bee gathered, that Moses and Samuel did not pray for the people being dead: because the Lord saith, if they did, etc. but it is not like, that their charitie is less in heauen, to cease praying for the people, if the Saints had any such office, seeing that Samuel yet liuing said, God forbid, that I should cease, praying for this people. 1. Sam. 12. 23. Secondly, this place may bee expounded by that Ezech. 14. 20. Though Noah, ioh. Daniel, were in the midst of the city, they should but deliver their owne soules: So here, if Moses and Samuel were liuing to pray for the people, as they vsed to doe, God will not heare them.

Argum. Luk. 16. in the parable, the rich man prayeth for his breshren, much more do the righteous pray for the whole Church: as Reuel. 6. The soules vnder the altar crye, Lord how long doest thou not iudge and avenge our blood, &c. Belserm. cap. 18.

Ans. First, to the first place I answer, that it is a parable, or admitting it to be a storie, we must needs acknowledge many things to bee spoken in parable and allegorie, as that he desireth a drop of water to coole his tongue, whereas he neither had any tongue, his bodie being left in the grave, neither is water able to alluage the paines of hell. Again, to take the conference between Abraham and the rich man literally, may bee occasion of many doubts: as, how they could one heare another talke, there being a great gulfe betwene them: neither had Abraham any such power to send Lazarus to the liuing: wherefore it is hard vpon euery part of this parable to ground an argument. Secondly, there is no charitie in hell, how then can there bee any prayer there, which proceedeth of charitie? Thirdly, but be it graunted that the prayer of the rich man is historical: it onely sheweth a generall desire and wish that he hath to his kindred: and so wee denie not, but that the Saints in generall doe desire the consummation of Christs bodie, and the eternall rest of the rest of his members yet militant in earth.

To the second place we likewise answer: first, if that prayer or complaint, which the soules vnder the altar make, bee strictly according to the letter taken, is it to bee thought, that the Saints haue less charitie in heauen, then they had in earth? for Stephen prayed that his persecutors might be forgiven at his death, and doth the soule of Stephen now being vnder the altar call for vengeance? This is Hieromes reason: They doe not desire their blood, which persecuted them, pro eis enim precatio sufficit, &c. for they prayed for them, that the sin should not be laide to their charge. Secondly, they pray not therefore particularly for the destruction of any, but generally, that an end may be made of the tyrannie of Satan; as Hierome expoundeth, Spirituales nequitia hic intelliguntur: Spirituall enemies are here vnderstood, De vir. perfectis. And it is in effect the same with the prayer of the Church, Apocal. 22. 17. The spirit, and the bride say come: that is, they do all waite for the final accomplishing of Christs kingdome. Thirdly, we graunt then that the Saints in heauen doe long both for the consummation of their owne glorie, and with generally vnto the Church militant the like triumphant end and victorie of their labours: and we confesse as much as Scriptura saith: Magnus illic charorum numerus nos expectat; &c. parentum, fratrum, filiorum de salute sua securo, de nostra sollicita: A great number of our friends doe there waite for vs, &c. being secure of their owne saluation, carefull for vs, Serm. 4. de mortalitate. But hence it followeth not, that they haue particular knowledge of our manifold necessities, and so make their particular requests vnto God for vs.

The Protestants.

*T*hat the blessed Saints doe sing vnto the praise of God in heauen, and do magnifie the Lord, and praise him with a new song of thankgiuing, which is a kind of prayer, we denie not, Apocal. 5. 9. and that they haue a generall desire and longing, both for vs, for themselves, and all the elect of God, that the day of our refreshing were come, and that all the people of God were joyed in one, and their enemies vanquished and destroyed, wee learne also out of the Scripture, Apocal. 6.9. But that they should offer vp our speciall prayers, and make particular request for vs to God, it nowhere in the Scripture is found, but rather the contrarie.

Argument. The Scripture nowhere testifieth, that the Saints in such manner doe pray for vs: Ergo, wee may safely bee ignorant of it; nay it were great presumption, without Scripture to beleue it.

Argument. The Saints departed know not our wants, nor what is done in the earth. The liuing know that they shall die, but the dead know nothing at all, Eccles. 9.3. But of this more shall be said in the next part. See Augustine of this matter. contro. 8. quest. 2. part. 2.

Argument. 3. Saint Paul saith, There is one mediator of God and man, the man Iesus Christ. 1. Timothy. 2.3. Ergo, Saints are not our mediators, and so consequently they doe not pray for vs.

Bellarmine answereth, Christ is said onely to be our mediator for three causes: first, because he is the onely mediator of our redemption. Secondly, he is a mediator not by his office onely, but in respect of his nature also, being both God and man. Thirdly, because he is so a mediator, that he needeth not any other mediator, as the Saints doe, who are mediators, but not in the foresaid respects, Bellarmino. cap. 20.

Ans. Bellarmino hath strengthened our argument well, and given three reasons why the Saints cannot be mediators in any respect at all. First, there can bee no aduocate or mediator, but the same must bee the propitiation for our finnes, as Saint John sheweth, Epist. 1. chap. 2. vers. 2. The Saints are not a propitiation for our finnes. Ergo. Secondly, the Apostle saith, A mediator is not of us, Galath. 3. 20. So then he that is the mediator betweene God and man, must not bee of one nature; he must be both God and man: Ergo, Saints are no mediators. Thirdly, he cannot be a mediator, that hath himselfe neede of a mediator, as the Apostle sheweth, that they could not be our high priest, that had neede first to offer for their owne finnes, and then for the finnes of the people, Heb. 7. 27. and to offer vp our prayers is belonging to the priesthood: Saints cannot be our priests: Ergo, neither our mediators. Thus hath Bellarmino reasoned well for vs against himselfe.

Francis Rebezies holy Martyr, sheweth in what manner Saints doe pray for vs: who, when Doctor had put forth this reason, The Apostles made intercession to Christ when as he was vpon the earth, why may they not doe so now: seeing Christ then was the intercessor of the world, as now. He thus answereth; So long as they were in the world, they exercised their ministry, and prayed one for another, as needing humane succours together: but now being in paradise, all the prayer they make is this, that they wish, that they which be vpon earth may attaine to their felicitie: but to obtaine any thing at the Fathers hand, wee must haue our recourse onely to his Sonne. See pag. 922. col. 2.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER THE SAINTS vnderstand our prayers, and be alwaies at hand to helpe vs.

The Papists.

3a. Error.

They affirme three things, which they are driuen to graunt by necessitie of argument, while they stilly maintaine inuocation of Saints: for first they graunt that they know our hearts, and our inward repentance, and secret thoughts; for otherwise it would not auail to pray for them, yet not of themselves, but by the reuelation of God, Bellarmino. cap. 20. And of foure opinions of this matter, as that the Saints know our prayers either by the reuelation of Angels, or by their celeritie or agilitie of nature, passing from place to place, or at once they see in God as in a glass, all things that may concerne them, or else they know mens secret thoughts, by some special reuelation from God, as Elisba descried the corruption of Gebezi, 2. King. 5. and Samuel had a secret reuelation concerning Saul, 1. Sam. 9. 15. Of these foure he preferreth the two last, and reuileth the other.

Ans. Neither of these foure waies can stand: not the first, for though Angels should reueale to the Saints, yet our thoughts they cannot reueale, because they know them not themselves: not the second, for Saints doe rest vnder the Altar, which is Christ, Apoc. 6. and passe not to and fro, seeing that Christ, as he is man, shall be contained in the heavens till his comming againe, Act. 3. Not the third, for we shall not see Christ as he is, till he doe appeare, 1. Ioh. 3. 2. And concerning the last, we denie not, but that God may reueale to the Saints some things at his pleasure, as he did to the Prophets: but it hereof followeth not, that all our prayers are reuealed vnto them: for neither were all things reuealed to Samuel, as 1. Sam. 16. when he went to anoint Dauid and Elisba saith, 2. King. 4. vers. 27. concerning the Shunamite, Her soule is vexed, and the Lord hath not told me.

Again, what a preposterous order is this, and superfluous, God first reuealeth vnto them our prayers, and then they sollicite God in our behalfe? I pray you what neede this, seeing God knoweth

ech our prayers? First, why is he not as readie of himselfe to graunt our requests, as to stay till he be entreated?

Secondly, seeing it were in vaine to pray to Saints, if they had not power to helpe vs: they also are vrged to confesse, that the Saints are patrones of men, and haue the gouernment of the world committed to them; yea, that they may receiue others into the kingdome of heauen. 33. Error.

Argum. 1. Apocal. 2. 26. To him that ouercommeth, will I giue power ouer nations, and he shall rule ouer them with a rod of yron: Ergo, the Saints haue the gouernment of men committed vnto them, Rhemist. ibid. Bellarm. cap. 18.

Ans. The power which our Sauour here promifeth, is the participation of his kingly inheritance: first, spiritually to ouercome the world by faith in this life, and after this life they shall be set in full possession of his royall inheritance. The rod of yron, is the word of God, which is also called a two edged sword, whereby they execute vengeance vpon the heathen, Psal. 149. 7. It is the sword of the spirit, whereby the wicked shall be destroyed. Augustine expoundeth it to be the rod of Iustice, whereby the good are corrected, and the wicked broken in pieces, Homil. 2. in Apocal.

Again, it followeth in the text, As a potters vessell shall they be broken. This cannot be vnderstood of the Church of God: wherefore this place serueth not to proue the regiment of the Saints ouer the Church of God. Thirdly, seeing this is a promise made to euery one of Gods Saints, who are many hundred thousands, by this reason euery one of them should haue a regiment in the Church of God, which were infinite. Lastly, Christ promifeth that they shall rule, with a rod of yron, as himselfe hath receiued; and chap. 3. 21 they shall sit with him in his throne: will they inferre herevpon, that the Saints haue the like kingdome and power and glorie with Christ? this were very absurd to graunt, and against Christ blasphemous. Wherefore, the meaning of these and the like speeches is nothing else, but this, that Christ shall impart, and communicate vnto the Saints the glorie of his kingdome, not in such full manner as he himselfe hath it, but in such sort, as it is meete for them to receiue. Saint Ambrose thus expoundeth the like words of our Sauour, Ioh. 17. Father, I will that they whom thou hast giuen me be with me where I am, &c. Vi sint mecum, non ut sedent mecum &c. That they may be with me (saith he) not sit with me; where I am, but not as I am; to see my glorie: to see it, not to haue it; for the seruant seeth, the master possesseth, lib. 5. de fide. cap. 3. And againe, vpon those words, Ephes. 2. 6. He hath made vs sit together in heauenly places in Christ: Non ut humines sedere sibi ad dextram patiatum Deus, &c. Not that God doth suffer men to sit at his right hand, but to sit in Christ, who is the foundation of all, the head of his Church, who hath in himselfe merited to our nature the prerogatiue of the heauenly seate, &c. lib. 5. de fide. cap. 7. Thus Ambrose sheweth how the Saints are said to sit in the heauenly throne, namely in Christ, in respect that our nature in him is aduanced to that heauenly seate; which prerogatiue being complete and full in Christ, is in measure communicated to his members.

Argum. 2. Luk. 16. 9. Make you friends of the vnrightheous Mammon, that when they needs, they may receiue you into euermlasting habitations: See, the Saints may receiue their friends and benefactors into their eternall mansions, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. Almes bestowed vpon the poore doe procure their prayers, but not their patronage. 2. The words are thus parabolically to be vnderstood: They shall receiue you, that is, shall giue testimonie of you, and your almes shall be a testimonie of your charitie, and proceeding from a lively faith, shall euermlastingly bee rewarded. 3. That it is not meant of the persons, but of the work, is plaine, because almes which issue from a true faith, shall be rewarded at the Lords hand, though bestowed vpon an hypocrite.

Thirdly, they also hold that the Saints at their pleasure can be present with their bodies, and be amongst vs, and so heare our prayers, Bellarm. cap. 20. 34. Error.

Argum. 1. Otherwise the Saints should be fettered as it were in heauen, if they remaine and be kept all in one place.

Ans. They are not fettered when they are limited by the Lord to a place: see also what a goodly opinion these fellows haue of heauen, making a prison of it, Rhemist. annot. Apocal. 6. 9.

Argum. 2. They follow the Lambe whither soeuer he goeth: Ergo, they may be euery where.

Ans. 1. That place, Apocal. 14. is vnderstood of al the elect, yea of those that do imitate and follow Christ, liuing vpon earth, as it followeth vers. 4. These are bought from men, being the first fruites vnto God, &c. which comprehendeth all the elect both liuing and departed to God. 2. If the soules are euery where, because the Lambe is euery where, then Christ in his humanitie is euery where, and so the Papists are become Vbiquitaries.

Argum. 3. The Devils are of great dexteritie, and celeritie in passing from one place to another: Ergo, much more the Saints.

Ans. 1. The argument followeth not: for devils by propertie of nature together by the sufferance of God, doe wander vp and downe the world, being thereto appoynted of God: but the soules of Saints haue no such office, as we reade in Scripture, to bee cursory spirits in the world.

2 Though it should be graunted, that in a short time they are able to change their places: yet it is vnpossible, they should be in so many places to heare the prayers euery where made vnto them, vnlesse they could be in diuers places at once.

The Protestants.

First, it is a great vntruth and blasphemie to say, that the Saints do knowe our thoughts, inward Repentance, prayers, as the Rhemists affirme.

Argum. 1. God only is the knowe of the heart, neither doth he communicate this propertie of the Godhead to any creature: he may reueale what he thinketh good vnto them: but for them, when they will themselves, to know our secret prayers and meditations (for this is the question) it is impossible.

Bernard agreeth with vs, thus wryting: Ioseph cum prauidisset exaltationem suam, non tamen praecon- sui venditionem, quamuis propior esset venditio, quam exaltatio: Though Ioseph foresawe his exaltation, yet did he not foreknowe that he should be soulede; and yet his selling was nearer, then his prefer- ring. By this he sheweth, that although God may and doth reueale some things to the Saints, yet it followeth not, they should knowe all things.

Belarmine answereth; that God onely is the knowe of mens hearts naturally, and by his owne power: but the saints know them by reuelation.

Contra. 1. Reg. 8. 39. Salomon saith, Thou onely knowest the hearts of all men: He saith not, God chiefly or principally knoweth the hearts, but onely. If God then onely know our hearts, then the saints know them not.

Argum. 2. Augustine out of those words of the Prophet Isay 63. 16. Abraham is ignorant of vs; and Iacob knoweth vs not, concludeth thus, Si tanti patriarche, quid erga populum ex hisprocre- tum ageretur, ignorauerunt, quomodo mortui vinorum rebus atque altibus cognoscendis adiuuandisq; miscerentur? If so great Patriarkes were ignorant what became of the people which was borne of their loynes; how is it like, that other dead can be present to vnderstand, and be helping to mens affaires? And here S. Augustine also meeteth with the cauillous answer of Belarmine, who saith, that the Patriarks vnder the law being dead, knew not the affaires of the liuing, because they were not yet in heauen: but the saints now departed are in heauen, and therefore may and doe know our estate: for S. Augustine reasoneth cleane contrary, If Abraham so great a Patriark knew not, much lesse the dead now: Againe, he still very vnlearnedly beggeth the thing in ques- tion, seeing we haue proued before, that the Patriarkes were in heauen.

This was the confession of one Paul Lutter, confessor of Gods truth anno. 1529. that Saints in heauen cannot helpe vs, and know no more what men doe here in this world, then a man in the North countrey knoweth what is done in the South contrey: Fox. 1040. col. 2.

Secondly, we acknowledge no patrones, protectors or captaines in heauen, but our Lord God and Sauour Christ.

1 Psal. 73. 25. The Prophet David saith, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? and Iacob calleth onely vpon the Lord God, to be the guide of his iourney, Gen. 28. 20. Vpon which words of the Psalme saint Ambrose thus noteth, Tu portio mea es, abundas mihi ad omnia, &c. Thou O Lord art my portion, thou sufficest me for all things, I require none other thing, but to haue thee my por- tion: I neede the helpe of none, being receiued of thee; neither is there any thing in heauen, which I seeke beside thee &c. de interpel. lib. 4. c. 12. Behold, Christ onely in heauen, without the helpe ei- ther of Angell, or Saint, sufficed Ambrose, and may suffice euery faithfull man.

2 By appoynting Saints to be patrones of places and countries, at length they brought in a multitude of popish Saints; and were not in superstition farre behinde the Gentiles, who gloried in the number of their gods: For haue they not allotted some to countreyes, as S. George for En- gland, S. Andrew for Scotland, S. Denis for France, S. Patrick for Ireland? So likewise diuers Saints were called vpon for diuers diseases, as S. Rombal for the tooth-ach, S. Petronil for the Ague: One for horse, as S. Luce, S. Antony for pigges, S. Gregory for Schollers, S. George for Souldiers: Euen thus the Heathen inuented diuers gods, Neptune for the sea, the Satyrs for the woods, the Nymphs for the water, Ceres for corne, Bacchus for wine, Venus for the Troians, Pallas for the Grecians, Iu- piter for the Romanes.

Nay, they were yet more ridiculous, they appoynted many gods for one thing: as for Infants Vagitanus, that made them to crye, Cuninus, that kept them in their Cradle, Adona, Abona, to teach them to goe: So for the entrie of the house, they had Limentinus the God of the threshold, Cardea the god of the hinges, Forculus that kept the doore: for their Corne, they had the Goddesse Seia when it was sworne, Proserpina when it sprouted, Nodorus when it knotted, Hospitalia when it eared, Flora when it waxed white, Runcina when it was cut downe. The like superstition almost raigneth in poperie. But what neede we runne to so many for these things, when as at the Lords hands we are promised, asking in the name of Christ, to receiue all things we neede? This great folly of theirs sheweth what good cometh by the deuised patronage of Saints.

Bernard

De cura pro
mortuis

August. lib. 4.
cap. 8.

Bernard here helpeth vs well, writing vpon that place in the Canticles: My welbeloued is as the apple tree among the trees of the Forrest, Cantic. 2. vers. 3. Non comparantur huic omnia ligna sylvarum, &c. All the trees of the wood are not to be compared to this: for although there be fayre and great trees which may seeme to helpe, by their prayer, ministerie, instruction, example; yet Christ onely the wisdom of God is the tree of life: the other trees though they haue a shadowe of solace, yet no refection of life: there is one author of our life, the onely mediator of God and man.

Master Tisdall holy Martyr hath put to his scale: Why should I trust in Pauls prayer or holiness: for if Paul were aliue, and loued me, as he did them of his time, what could he do for me, or with me, but to preach Christ, and pray to God for me to open my heart, to giue me his spirit, and to bring me to the knowledge of Christ? &c. For. pag. 1250. col. 2. artic. 16. This holy Martyr with the rest, were farre from making Saints their patrones, or aduocates.

Thirdly, it is also another popish fable and dreame, that the Saints may bee present euery where, as it pleaseth themselves, at their tombes and sepulchers, and wherefoeuer els they are called for.

Argum. 1. Act. 1. 21. The heauens containe the humanitie of Christ: it hath pleased him there to rest himselfe, vntill his comming to iudgement: Ergo, much more are the Saints kept in their resting places.

Argum. 2. The Saintes are at rest, they doe cease from the affaires of this life, Apocal. 14. 13. They rest vnder the Altar in the peace of Christ, Apocal. 6. 9. there expecting and waiting the comming of Christ to iudgement: Ergo, they doe not wander nor stray abroad in the world, neither doe intermeddle with humane affaires.

Augustine saith, Si rebus uiuantium interessent anima mortuorum, me ipsum pia mater nulla uelle desereret, quater a marique secuta est, ut mecum uimeret: De cura pro mortuis: If the soules of the dead were present at the affaires of the liuing, my deuout mother would neuer a night bee from me, who when she liued, followed me by sea and land, to haue my companie, and to liue with me: Ergo, the Saints departed are not present with vs when they would.

Bernard also agreeth, writing thus vpon the death of Humbertus: Quandiu uiueres in eum laudum quousque mecum, ne forte possemus, uel ego adulationis notam, uel ille culpam incurere uanitati: ex hoc saeculo iam timetur, nec ego illum video, & forsitan ille me non audit: While he liued, I opened not my mouth in his praise, least that I might haue incurred the suspicion of flattery, he of vaine glorie: but now neither of these is feared, for I neither see him, and perhaps he heareth not me: Sermo, in obitum Humberti. Bernard doubteth whether the Saints be present to heare vs, and thinketh rather that they doe not.

I will lastly adde out of their owne decrees. par. 2. cap. 13. qu. 2. c. 39. Patendum est, nos circa mortuos, quid his agatur, &c. We must confesse that the dead know not, what is done here: but they doe heare of those that depart hence, not all things, but what they are suffred to declare, and what it behoorth them to heare, &c. So then the dead know not all the affaires of the liuing, but so much, as pleaseth God should be declared vnto them.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, CONCERNING the reliques of Saints.

This question hath foure parts. 1 Whether the reliques of Saints are to be worshipped. 2 Of the translation of reliques. 3 Of the keeping and preferuing of reliques. 4 Of the miracles wrought at the tombes and reliques of Martyrs.

THE FIRST PART, CONCERNING the worship of Reliques.

The Papiſts.

The reliques of Saints, that is their bodies and bones, and Sepulchres, where they are buried, are to be adored and reuerenced, Tridentin. Concil. sess. 25. though with lesse honour somewhat, than the Saints themselves, Bellarm. de reliquijs sanctor. lib. 2. cap. 21. And not onely their bodies (say they) are worthe of due reuerence, but other monuments of theirs, as S. Peters chaire at Rome, Rom. 16. vers. 16. the prison, wherein S. Paul was kept in Malta, Rhemist. Act. 28. 1. the chaine that S. Paul was bound with at Rome, Act. 27. 4. the stone that hit S. Stephen vpon the Elbow now to be seene at Ancona in Italie, Act. 7. sess. 6.

Ans. As for S. Peters chaire, and S. Pauls chaine, they are neither able to shew that Peter sat in such a chaire, or that it is the very chaine which they shew, wherewith Paul was bound. Concerning the prison house at Malta, they shew that which neuer was: Paul was a prisoner, but not in prison there: that of the stone that smote Stephen vpon the elbowe is a meere fable: See Act vpon that place.

Argum. 2. Iofias, when he caused the bones of other dead to be burned, yet he commanded them to let the Prophets bones alone, Bellarmin. cap. 7. The disciples of Iohn came and buried his bodie: an example of dutie and religious deuotion to the dead bodies of Saints, Rhemist. Matth. 14. sect. 2. Their bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost, and shall be rayed againe to life: Ergo, they must be adored and worshipped, Trident. Concil. sess. 25.

Answ. One answer may serue for all these arguments. We deny not, but that the dead bodies of the faithfull are to be laide vp with reuerence in hope of the resurrection; but it therefore followeth not, that they must be abused to Idolatry. Iohns disciples buried his bodie, but shined it not to be worshipped; Iofias made difference betweene the bones of the Idolatrous Priests, and of the true Prophet: the one he burned, and thought them unworthie of honest sepulture; the other he suffered to rest, and enioy the honour of buriall. But of any adoration or worshipping of his bones, we read not.

Argum. 3. Isay 11. 10. Erit Sepulchrum eius gloriosum: His graue or sepulcher shall be glorious. This is vnderstood of the grate of Christ, that it should be honoured: wherefore reliques are worthie of honor. Bellar. cap. 3.

a Menueah

Answ. First, though the Latine text so translate, as the Iesuite readeth; yet there is no such thing in the originall: the word is mnos, which signifieth rest, and so the Septuagint translate it, and mensis: so that the sense is, his rest, that is, his Church, shall be glorious: and so is this word vsed Psalm. 132. 14. This is my rest for ever. Secondly, wee denie not, but that (admitting the Latine reading) the place of Christs buriall was glorious, and to be honoured, while as Christs precious body was there, but that afterwards it remained holy, this text sheweth not. Thirdly, if Christs bodie and the place thereof were to be honoured; how serueth this place for the reliques of Saints? Christs bodie was to be adored, because of the vniting to the Godhead; but the seruants are not to be honoured as the Master.

The Protestants.

THe bodies of Martyrs are reuerently to be brought to the ground, in testimonie of our hope of their resurrection, and their memorie is to be honored, as in praying God for their constant Martyrdome: so the Psalmist saith, Right precious in the sight of God is the death of his Saints, Psalm. 116. as also in following their steps, and propounding vnto vs their good example but to adore and worship their bones, to kisse, and kneele downe at their sepulchres, is too grosse idolatrie, and not to be vsed amongst Christians.

Argum. 1. The Lord did of purpose himselfe burie the bodie of Moses in a secret place, which was neuer knowne to the Israelites: and this reason is generally rendred by most writers, least the people of Israel should worship his bodie, and so commit Idolatrie: Ergo, the adoration of the bodies of Saints displeaseth God. Argum. Calvin.

Bellarmin answereth, that though the people of Israel might by that meanes haue fallen into idolatrie; yet the people of God may now more safely honour reliques, because they are not so prone to idolatrie.

Answ. Experience of popish idolatrie proueth the cleane contrarie: for the like superstition and worshipping of images was neuer so common and vsuall, no not in the most corrupt times of that Church, as now it is in poperie.

And what danger of superstition is occasioned by the keeping of reliques, and other such vnprofitable vsages, I appeale to the late popish synode Augustens. cap. 23. Sedulo moniti populum, ut ceremonias religiosissimas institutas in abusum vertant, aut superstitionem, sed ipsi ad exercitulum pietatem variantur: That the people should be continually admonished, that they turne not ceremonies most religiously instituted, to any abuse, or superstition, but vse them for the exercise of pietie. If there bee feare of superstition in the vse of ceremonies which had a good beginning, much greater danger is there in these, that can haue no good vse, neither euer had any good institution.

Argum. 2. Our Sauour Christ reproveth the Scribes and Pharisees, calling them hypocrites, because they did garnish the sepulchres of the Prophets, whom their forefathers put to death, Matth. 23. 29. but their doctrine they neglected and regarded not. Such hypocrites are the Papists at this day, who commit a double fault; for they contemne the doctrine of the Apostles, whose memories they would seeme to honour: and againe, in the superstitious honour and worship, which they yeeld vnto them, they exceede the bounds of Christian pietie.

3 Their bodies were not to be worshipped when they were aliue, much lesse now they are dead. What are they now but earth; dust and ashes? according as the Lord said to Adam, Thou art dust, and to dust shalt thou returne, Gene. 3. 19. What is this els, but to worship the earth, even dust and ashes? So Augustine saith, Timeo adorare terram ne damnes me, qui fecit calum & terram: I am afraid afraid to worship the earth, least he condemne me, that made both heauen and earth. Onely in Christ (saith he) I finde, Quomodo sine impietate adoretur terra: How the earth, that is, his body, may be worshipped without any impietie: namely, because of the neere coniunction and vnion of his humane nature with the Godhead in one person: for otherwise of it selfe the bodie of Christ is Gods Creature and workmanship, and not capable of diuine worship. This then is the priuiledge that Christ hath, more then all Saints and Martyrs beside, that in him onely the humanitie is adored.

Concil. Carthag. 5. can. 15. Placuit à glorioſſimis imperatoribus peti, ut reliquia non solum in simulacris, sed in quibuscunq; locis, lucis vel arboribus deleantur: We thinke good to make request to the most renowned Emperors, that reliques may be taken away, not onely such, as are kept in shrines and images, but in what place soeuer, woods, or trees: These fathers were so farre off from worshipping reliques, that they would not haue them at all extant.

Concil. Lateranens. sub Innocentio 3. cap. 62. Ne reliquia sanctorum ostendantur extra capsam: That the reliques should not be shewed out of the caske or chest, where they were kept: It should seeme that their meaning was not to haue them worshipped; vnlesse we thinke the chest and cask should be worshipped withall.

Their owne decrees also witnesse with vs, part. 2. can. 1. qu. 1. c. 65. Si ita Martyrium fecerimus, ut infra volumus ab hominibus reliquias honorari: If wee desire Martyrdome, to the intent our reliques should be honoured of men, it deserueth punishment, and not reward: And if it be a sinne in them to require it, it is in vs also to performe it.

The holy Martyrs haue sealed this doctrine: Thomas Bilney holy Martyr; Priests (saith he) take away the offerings, and hang them about their whores neckes, and after that they take them againe from their whores, if they please them not, and hang them vpon the Images: and is not that a great relieke, when it is hanged there againe? Fox. p. 1010. And are not such reliekes now meeete things to be worshipped?

Iohn Lambert holy Martyr: That oblations should be offred or done to the sepulchres and reliques of Saints, God did neuer institute any such thing in the new testament, which is the veritie and rule of all Christen people to follow and beleue. And this he further sheweth by the buriall of Moses, whose graue was hid from the Iewes, lest they being prone to new fangled worshipping, should haue fallen into idolatrie: this argument we haue touched before.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE TRANSLATION of the bodies of Saints.

The Papists.

It is a vsuall thing amongst them to translate, and carrie from one place to another the bones and reliques of Saints: as they say Iohn Baptists head was translated from Samaria to Alexandria and is now at Amiens in France, Rhemist. Matth. 14. sect. 1. So the bodie of S. Luke was removed they say, from Achaia to Constantinople, and from thence to Padua in Italy, where now it remaineth: Argum. in Luk. Rhemist. The stone also that hit S. Stephen, is now at Ancona in Italy, ibid. 7. sect. 6.

Argum. 1. Ioseph gaue charge concerning his bones when he dyed, and they were removed from Egypt to the land of Canaan, at the departure of the Israelites, Exod. 13. Heb. 11. 22. Ergo, the removing and translation of Saints bodies or reliques is lawfull, Rhemist. Bellarm. cap. 4.

Ans. Ioseph gaue commandement concerning his bones to testifie his faith and hope in the promise of God, for the inheritance of the land of Canaan, as it followeth: God will surely visite you and bring you to the land which hee sware to Abraham; therefore ye shall cary my bones hence, &c. Gen. 50. 24. They were not removed to be adored or worshipped: Ergo, no such translation of reliques is hereby proued. Secondly, you can shewe no such charge, that Saint Paul, Peter, or any of the rest, gaue concerning the translation of their bodies, as Ioseph gaue vnto his posteritie.

The Protestants.

WE denie not, but that the bodies of the dead, before they be interred, may be conueyed vnto the place of their buriall, as Iosias was carried being dead by his seruants from Megiddo to Ierusalem, where a sepulchre was prepared for him, 2. King. 23. 30. But either for the dead to be removed to be buried in some one place more then another, for the holinesse thereof; or the bones of Saints to be raked out of their graues, and translated, with intent to shrine them, and set them vp to be adored: they are superstitious customes, and not vsed of ancient time among the people of God.

Argum. 1. That the place profiteth not the dead, but vnto them it is all alike wheresoeuer they are buried: we haue shewed afore, 1. part. controuer. 9. quest. 2. part. 4. The example of Augustine mother is notable, and worthie the memorie: She had with great care provided her a sepulchre neere vnto her husband, who dyed at Thagasta in Africa, and was there buried, and was purposed her selfe to lye by him: but the Lord so disposed, that she left her life at Hostia in Italie, and being readie to depart, she sayd thus to her sonnes: Ponite hoc corpus ubicunque, nihil vbi eius cura conturbet: Burie my bodie where you thinke good, take no great care for it. And being asked, if it grieved her not to leaue her bodie so farre off from her owne citie, she gaue this godly answere: Nihil longe est à Deo, neque timendum est, ne ille non agnoscat in fine seculi, unde me resuscitet: August. lib. conf. 9. cap. 11. No place is neerer to God then other, neither am I to feare, least the Lord should not as well raise me vp in this place, as in mine owne citie: Ergo, in respect of the dead, it skilleth not where they are buried.

Argum. 2. The other custome of translating of reliques to be worshipped, is farre more impious and superstitious: for hereupon it commeth, that the people haue beene deceived with false reliques: yea one and the selfe same relice is said to be in diuers places. As of S. Iohn Baptists head: his face they say, is at S. Iean Angelz: the rest of his head at Malta: his skull at Nemours: his braine at Nouium Rastrouienfe: his iaw bone at Vesalium: a peece of his eare at S. Floride: his forehead and haire in Spaine at S. Saluadores: and yet for all this his whole head is to be seene at S. S. uesters in Rome, and at Amiens in France: Fulk. Matthew 14. 2. Thus they haue mangled also the bodie of S. Peter: halfe (they say) is at S. Peters in Rome, halfe at S. Pauls: his head at S. Iohn Laterane: his neather iawe with his beard at Poytters in France: at Triers many of his bones, Fulk. Rom. 16. sect. 4. See what mockage and coofening here is, and abusing of simple people! How can their whole bodies be in one place, and yet their parts and bones in another? And where doe they learne thus to dismember their bodies, and to rake them out of their graues? The honouring of the bodies of Martyrs, is to suffer them quietly to rest in their graues, and not to rotte about the ground. Iosias honoured the Prophets sepulchre, and would not remoue his bones: herein therefore they dishonour the Martyrs, and offer violence to their bodies, thinking falsely that they doe great worship vnto them.

Augustine saith, that he which would now renew the ceremonies of the Iewes, that are now buried: Tanquam sepultos cineres eruens, non erit pius deducitor aut baiulus corporis, sed impius sepulchri violator. Epistol. 19. He should be as one raking in the ashes of the dead, and so be rather a violator of Christian buriall, then a bringer of the bodie honestly to the ground. So by Augustines iudgement, eruens sepultos cineres, he that pulleth out dead mens ashes, bones, or reliques, is sepulchra violator, a prophaner of their buriall.

Synod. Moguntiac. can. 51. Deinceps corpora sanctorum de loco ad locum, nullus presumat transferre, sine consilio Principis, vel Episcopi, & sancta synodi licentia: From hence forth let no man presume to carie the bodies of the Saints from place to place, without the counsell of the Prince or Bishop, and leaue of the Synode. This Councell disliked the common and vsuall manner of translating Saints bodies, and therefore maketh a restraint for it: this Canon is alleaged among the decrees, part. 3. dist. 1. c. 37.

We haue also further euidence both out of the ciuill and Canon law, Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. c. 26. L. Reliquia in aedes publicas non debent illicitè inferri: Reliques must not be removed or carried from their places, into publike or common houses. This law forbiddeth reliques to be removed out of the Church. Lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 14. Valentinian. Nemo sine Augusti assensibus, &c. That no man without the leaue of the Emperor should remoue any humane bodie.

Likewise in what cases humane reliques should be removed, or translated, the law hath determined: as Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 1. Si vi fluminis reliquia filij tui contingantur: If thy sonnes reliques be beaten vpon by the water, thou mayest remoue them, or vpon any other iust or necessary cause ibid. leg. 10. Si necdum perpetua sepultura corpus traditum, &c. If the bodie be not yet interred, or committed to sepulture, it may be removed. So then there may be ciuill occasions to remoue bodies, but no religious.

The Canon law also agreeth, decret. part. 3. dist. 1. c. 36. Tribus ex causis Sanctorum loca transfmutanda sunt: The places of the Saints may be changed vpon 3. occasions, when as persecution is raised in the place: secondly, when as the place it selfe is difficult, or inconuenient: thirdly, when as, Malorum societate granantur, they are molested with the companie of the wicked. This Canon alloweth Saints bodies to be removed, eyther when persecuters would rage against their ashes, or the place is inconuenient, by reason of the ouerflowing of water, or otherwise; or when the people are readie to abuse them to idolatrie, or any other vngodlines: but all this while, no mention is made of translating of reliques, to be honoured or worshipped.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE KEEPING and preserving of relikes.

The Papists.

We must not thinke it impossible, that the monuments of Saints, as their garments, relickes, bones, should indure a long time, seeing Manna was kept so many hundred years in the pottle, which was placed by the Arke, being a thing so apt to putrifie. Rhemist.
Hebr. 9. vel. 4.

Anso. When we haue a commaundement for the reseruatiō of such things, as the Israelites had, we may beleue they will keepe so long. And againe, the Israelites for all that did not worship the pot of Manna, though it were of such long continuance.

The Protestants.

The bodies and bones of men departed neither are to be kept out of their graues, as we haue shewed, neither can they be preserved without corruption.

Argum. 1. Vnto all Adams seede it is sayd, Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou returne: onely the bodie of Christ had this priuiledge, Psal. 16. Not to see corruption: Ergo, the bodies of men departed though they were neuer so holy, being all the seede of Adam, must be turned to dust.

Argum. 2. If they would glorifie God and speake the trueth, they doe very well know by experience, that the relikes of Saints haue no such promise or warrant for their continuance: for most, if not all of their relikes, were forged and deuised, and no such thing indeed. S. Peters beaine at Geneva was found to be a pumice stone: S. Anthonies arme was found to be an Harts pillew at Toures of late the image of Venus in an Agate was worshipped for the image of the Virgine Mari- ri: the blood of Hales in England was descried to be but the blood of a Drake: the three hostes at Calice were but three white counters sold into a marble stone. These and many such monuments and relikes of Saints the Church of Rome hath great store: no maruaile now, if they be of long continuance, for stones and counters may last a great while: and Drakes blood, with other such stuffe, is not so daintie, but it may be still renewed.

Of such coofening trickes Augustine complaynted in his time; speaking of runnagate Monkes, he saith: Ally membra martyrum, sita mem martyrum, venditant: Ally simbrins suas & phylacteria uidenificant: Some doe boast of relikes of Martyrs, which they carrie about, and perhaps they are no such relikes: some doe extoll their habite and Monkish weede: De opere Monachorum, cap. 28.

To this place of S. Augustine Bellarmine thus answereth, cap. 5. That S. Augustine doubtteth onely of such relikes, which were priuile caried about, not of those which were publicly shewed.

Contra. Yea many of your publique relikes were forged; for to what end else, was that decree made by Innocent. 3. decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 45. c. 2. Pralati non permittant &c. Prelates shall not suffer those which come to their Churches to worship, Varijs signentis & falsis &c. to be deceived with false and fained relikes, as the custome hath been in diuers places for luter sake. So then euen publike in their Churches they vsed to deceiue the simple people, with forged relikes.

Set then, I pray you, what diuinish idolatrie was this, to cause the people to worship counters, Drakes blood, Harts sinewes, and other such base creatures, in stead of relikes: which, though they were such indeede, ought not to be worshipped.

Gelasius decret. de apocryphis, thus writeth of this matter: Scriptura de inuentione crucis dominica, & alia de inuentione capitis Iohannis Baptista, nouella quadam relationes sunt, & nonnulli eas catholici legunt: sed cum hac ad catholicorum manus veniant, beati Pauli precedat sententia, Omnia probate, quod bonum est truite: The writings of the inuention of the Lords Crosse, and of Iohn Baptists head, are new reports, and some Catholikes reade them: but when such writings come to Catholikes hands, let them remember S. Pauls saying, Trye all things, and keepe the best. Here we haue the iudgement of a Bishop of Rome, who thinketh that many relikes, that are sayd to haue been found, and so kept and preserved, are but meere forgeries, and foysted in by heretikes.

THE FOURTH PART, CONCERNING VISIONS and miracles done at the Tombes and relikes of Martyrs.

The Papists.

First, they almost make it an ordinarie thing in their Church to worke miracles: Bellarmino saith, 38. Error.
that it is a sufficient note of the Church, the glorie or power of miracles, De eccle. lib. 4. cap. 14.
Christ saith, that they that doe beleue in him, shall doe greater workes then he. No maruaile then, if the image of our Lady (say they) and the like, worke miracles, as Peters shadowe did, and that they seeme greater then Christs: for hee promisseth that his Saints shall worke greater miracles.

miracles then himselfe, Rhemist. annot. Iohn. 14. sect. 3. They also call vpon vs to confirme our doctrine by miracles, because wee preach newly and extraordinarie, Rhemist. 2. Corin. 12. sect. 5.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, that place alleadged prooueth not such a generalitie and perpetuities of working miracles: for then every one that beleueth should doe greater workes then Christ: for our Sauour speaketh generally, He that beleueth. Augustine doth farre otherwise, and in a better sense expound this place: He that beleueth in me shall doe the same workes that I doe: Qua opera, nisi ut ex impio iustus fiat? prius ego facio, deinde & ipse faciet, quia facio, ut ipse faciat. What workes, saith he, but that he which beleueth, of a wicked man shall be made righteous? which workes first I doe (saith Christ,) then he himselfe doth it, because I make him to doe it. Quod origo in illo, sed non sine illo Christus operator: Mans conuersion is wrought by Christ in man, and not altogether without man, because Christ working in vs, doth enable vs by his grace to worke out our salvation, Philipp. 2. 12. yet is it not our selues that worke, but the grace of God in vs. Then it followeth, he shall doe greater workes then these: Prorsus maius hoc esse dixerim, quam est celum & terra: The redemption and conuersion of men, is a greater worke then the heauens or the earth, Tract. in Iohan. 72. Augustine therefore doth properly vnderstand this place, not of outward miracles, but of the wonderfull conuersion of the heart, which wee are said to worke, because Christ worketh it in vs.

Origen also long before Augustine thus expounded this place, Hom. 7. in Iouis. Christum dicis, qui credit in me, &c. Christ saith, he that beleueth in me, shall doe greater things then these: Viri cum manu mihi videtur, &c. For it seemeth indeede a greater thing vnto me, that man being in the flesh, being armed onely with the faith and word of Christ, doth ouercome legions of devils, though it bee Christ that ouercometh in vs, yet he saith it is more, that he ouercometh by vs, then by himselfe.

2. As wee denie not but that there may in these daies bee miracles wrought: and all such miracles as serue to confirme the doctrine deliuered in Scriptures, we doe not refuse, though wee be not bound to beleue any mans report of such miracles, but onely the writings of the Apostles and Euangelists: so we affirme that there is no such necessitie of miracles, as in times past, neither that we are to be pressed to shew miracles, seeing wee profess the ancient Apostolike faith, which hath beene alreadie confirmed by the miraculoud workes of our Sauour Christ and his Apostles. Wherefore wee condemne the fabulous histories and reports of popish Saints, whose liues are full of miracles, if we will beleue them, then were the liues of Christ and his Apostles. Nay, there is nothing almost done in their seruice but by a miracle: Christs bodie present in the Masse by a miracle: Diuels chased away with holy water: Saints know their thoughts, heare their prayers, are present here and there, their bodies many yeeres kept from corruption, and all by miracles. I conclude this point with Augustine: Aut non sunt vera, quae dicuntur; aut si hereticorum aliquis facta sunt, magis cauere debemus: Either they are not true miracles, which they boast of: or if they be, we must beware and take heede of them the more.

Thus speaketh also Thomas Bilney holy Martyr: The miracles done at Walsingham, Cantuarie, Ipswich, were done by the diuell, thorough the sufferance of God, For pag. 1001.

Heare also what a whole Councel saith: Coloniens. pars. 6. c. 23. Miraculane impudentium iactantia, nisi quae scripturis prodita, aut non à lentibus scriptoribus summa cum historia fide tradita sunt: Let not miracles be too much boasted of, but such as are set forth in Scripture, or deliuered by graue writers, with euident truth of historie. Wee are not bound therefore to beleue all miracles, which are reported in the popish Church. And that there is now no such necessitie of miracles, another Councell testifieth: Interuallig. Caesar. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei, interna virtus externis signis & miraculis demonstrabatur, ad confirmationem rudis fides: nunc vero adulta & corroborata fides, signa, quae infirmis dantur, non requirit: In the beginning of faith, the inward vertue or operation (of the spirit) was shewed by outward signes and miracles, for the confirmation of the weake faith: but now faith being come to perfit growth and established, needeth not such signes as are for the weake.

2. Tim. p. 183.

To this effect also one of your owne writers alleageth Gregorie, Moral. lib. 27. cap. 11. Quid est Paulus, quod Publii patrem agrum, &c. What is the cause (o Paul) that by thy prayer thou didst heale the father of Publius being an Infidell, Act. 28. but thou prescribest to Timothie for his health after the manner of Phisitions, 1. Timoth. 5. Surely Publius was to be healed by a signe, that he might be conuerted to the faith: but Timothie needed no miracle, being alreadie conuerted: Quid ergo mirum, si propagata fide, &c. What maruile then, if (the faith being now propagated) miracles are not often done, when as the Apostles sometime did not shew miracles in the faithfull? If then in Gregorie his time, almost a thousand yeere since, there were so few miracles, how much fewer are now to be looked for?

The Papists.

Secondly, they doe as much maintaine their fabulous visions and apparitions, as lying tales: as how Christ came in a pilgrimes weede to Gregories table of hospitalitie, Rhemist. Hebr. 1. 2. Peter beleueed the vision and apparition shewed to Cornelius, at his report, before it was written: Ergo, wee ought to beleue visions not written in Scripture, Rhemist. Mat. 10. 32.

The Protestants.

First, that of our Sauour Christs appearing, is an hereticall fable, and impugneth the article of our faith concerning Christs ascension into heauen, and there remaining till his second coming. Secondly, Peter was not bound to beleue Cornelius vision, till he had been by vision admonished himselfe: the Apostles which were then endued with the gift of discerning spirits, could better iudge of true visions, then any man now can: yet wee refuse not to giue credit to visions, when they are as credibly reported vnto vs, as this was to Peter: but no vision, nor miracle, nor Angell from heauen shall draw vs away from the doctrine of the Scriptures to beleue error. Lastly, we deny not, but that they may haue visions: but such, as one Vincenarius bragged of, that wrote against Augustine concerning the originall of the soule: He said, that another Vincenarius who had been a capraine or chiefe Donatist, appeared vnto him in vision, and badde him write those books: to whom Augustine thus answereth: Ille qui se transfigurauit in angelum lucis in de- tibi est transfiguratus, quem tu fuisse veluti angelum lucis credidisti: He that can transfigure himselfe into an angell of light, did transfigure himselfe into the shape of that man, whom thou esteemedst as an angell of light. Such apparitions they may haue, and yet no great cause to boast of them.

Spek was that vision that one Polycronius a Monothelite heretike boasted of in the 6. generall Councell at Constantinople, action 15. how that a man appeared vnto him in white, who tolde him that Christ had but one will, and that he should write the confession of his faith; and lay it vpon a dead man, and he should raise him to life againe: The Councell gaue him the hearing, and provided a dead bodie for him to worke his skill vpon, who muttered ouer the dead a long time in vaine, and could doe nothing. Such visions, as this was, popish priests haue had many: And that we stander them not, one of their late Popes Paulus 3. shall speake for vs: Qui legendas Georgij & Christophori tibi precepit de breuiario: Who commaunded that the legends of George and Christopher should be taken out of the Breuiarie. Thus Paulus Vergerius protested in the late Tridentine Chapter, and therefore was excluded. Of such old wiuies fables thus was it decreed, Council. Coloniensis. cap. 10. Ineptas & auiles fabulas demittat (i. concionator) qualia nuper erant, quae ex nullis probis auctoribus, sed potius suspensissim. hominum commentis adferebantur exempla: The preacher must take heede of foolish old wiuies fables, such as of late were reported not out of any approued authors, but from the suspicious deuices of men.

Such is that tale and Monkish fable of Polare, that he should bee scene euerie yeere in a ludge habite in a certaine lake, called after his name, vnder a hill not farre from Lucerna in Heluetia; and that he, which chaunceth to see him, liueth not a yeere after. This is held to be a ridiculous fable by one of their owne writers, Elphens in 1. Timoth. p. 159. d. Of the like credit he holdeth that dreame reported by Christianus Massani, lib. 8. Chronis. how that Trophimus going to Rome to see Peter, as he sailed, buried his wife, dying in trauell, in a Rock, with the childe at her breasts, and after twy yeeres comming that way againe, found his wife aliue, and the little childe playing at her breast, who were preserued by Mary Magdalen, Elphens 2. Timoth. p. 183. a. Wee see the Papists themselves are ashamed of these fables. The same author doubteth not to say of the second Nicene, where the worship of Images was decreed; That the fathers there, Demonum spectris, & muliebris somnijs parum treuante abutebantur, did without shame abuse the visions of diuels, and womens dreames, to establish their opinion.

Let vs heare also the complaint of Abbas Cluniacensis. more then 400. yeeres since, who (saith he) was ashamed, when he did sing in the Church the song of S. Benet, Mendacia ad minus 24. Canticum Melanopiscus animo reperi: wherein he found 24. lyes at the least, running ouer the long hastle in his minde, lib. 5. epist. 29. Wherefore according to the rule of the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 6. Alexander. Monumentorum inscriptiones non faciunt fidem: The superscriptions of monuments are not to be beleueed. No more are the fabulous visions and miracles, which are reported to haue been scene, and done at Tombes, to be receiued.

The Papists.

Thirdly, they say, that the power of working myracles was in the Apostles actually, and that they properly did giue health, and other things by their miraculous gifts, though they receiued the force and vertue of God. And therefore they finde fault with vs, because wee giue this more: A miracle done by Christ by the hands of the Apostles. First, Peter saith, That which we haue, giue we to thee, Act. 3. 6. Secondly, we must not thinke, that they had no more power, then as dead instruments in the workmans hand, Rhemist. hanc uiam.

The

The Protestants.

WEB both agree, that the power of working miracles was given of God : but herein we differ, they thinke that this power was inherent in the Apostles, and that having once received this power of God, they could execute it themselves : like as a man having the power of seeing and moving by nature, moueth and seeth when he list himselfe. But we hold against the Pelagians, Gratiam Dei ad singulos actus dari, that the grace of God is daily infused, and wee haue neede of it for every act : it is not sufficient once generally to haue receiued it. So then the Apostles were but the instruments of Christs working : he is better said in them and by them to work miracles, then they in and by him. Neither doth it follow, that they are dead instruments : for the horse (I trow) that draweth in the plough is no dead instrument : yet he hath need for eery labour and tilling to haue a driver and a guide : thus we are as vnfit for the Lords yoke by nature, as the horse is for the plough : and therefore haue neede of the Lords continuall direction. The Apostles then gaue that they had, not as owners, but as the Lords agents and instruments of his working.

Argum. Act. 3. 16. Hic nunc habet hunc sonum : et fides quae est per eum habet potestatem hanc dispositionis : huiusmodi : from hence we reason thus : That which depended vpon the faith of the receiver, was not actually inherent in the power of the giuer, but this miraculous worke of healing was by the faith of him that was healed : Ergo, it was not actually in the Apostles that gaue this gift. Again, the name of Christ did make him sound : Ergo, properly the Apostles gaue not health, but only as Ministers, the Name of Christ working in, and by them. And Saine Petrus himselfe denieth, that they did this miracle by their owne power or godlines, Act. 4. 13. wherefore the Apostles properly, (as they speake) that is, by a power inherent or resident in them, did not worke miracles.

Argum. 2. If the Apostles had the power of working miracles alwayes actually in themselves, then might they exercise the same facultie, when they would : but so could they not ; for S. Paulus, when Epaphroditus was sicke, depended by prayer vpon Gods mercie for his health, Philip. 2. 27. whom no doubt he would haue cured by miracle, as well as the father of Publius, Act. 28. 8. if the power had bene alwayes present with the Apostle : So then, as the Apostles had not knowledge and foresight of all things to come ; as S. Paulus trusted to haue been deliuered being a prisoner at Rome ; as it may appeare, Hebr. 13. 23. yet did it not so fall out ; but such things onely, as God did see profitable for his Church to be knowne, were reuealed : in like manner, neither could the Apostles worke miracles as they were disposed themselves at all times, but when it pleased God thereto, to enable them. I will not refuse herein the testimonie of one of their owne, Et alia per nos, Apostolorum pro sua discipulorumque salute uolenter acquisiuisse conspicimus : We see that the Apostles could not do many other things, for their owne, and their disciples health. Effene comment. in Timoth. 2. 183. c.

Iohan. 71.

Augustine thus writeth : Maiores quam ipse fecit, dicti eos facturos sed in eis vel per eos facturi : He saith, they shall doe greater workes then he : that is, himselfe working in them or by them : Ergo, Christ wrought miracles by the hands of the Apostles, they were his liuely instruments in working.

41. Error.

The Papists. Fourthly, they doe greatly triumph and reioyce for the miracles which are wrought by the vertue of holy reliques. First, the woman was healed by touching the hemme of Christs garment : Ergo, vertue in holy reliques, Rhemist. Secondly, napkins that had touched Saine Paulus body wrought miracles, by the vertue given vnto them : Ergo, reliques may, Act. 19. 11. Rhemist.

The Protestants.

Answ. TO the first : first, the vertue was not in the hemme of Christs garment, but he saith, it proceeded from himselfe, Luk. 8. 46. Secondly, it was her faith that healed her, for many that thronged Christ, touched his garments, but receiued no benefite : neither was there any vertue in his garments when the souldiers parted them amongst them. Thirdly, if it pleased the Lord to give some eternall signes, as of oyle, clay, spittle, in healing of men ; yet haue we no warrant, that he will doe the like by touching of reliques.

To the second : first, the napkins brought from Paulus had no such vertue in them : for the text is plaine, that they were wrought by the hands of Paulus. Secondly, not all that touched them were presently healed. Thirdly, they were but as signes and tokens to the diseased, that the Apostle (when it pleased God) might dispense miracles, euen when he was absent. Lastly, if they haue to this day miracles wrought by the reliques and monuments of Saines ; I feare me, nay, I dare say, they are no better then the Donatists miracles were, either signum mendacium hominum, vel peruentia fallacium spirituum : either the glossings and fables of lying men, or the strange workings of deceiuing spirits.

Argum. 1. The Apostles by their owne power, vertue, or godlines did not worke miracles, AG.

Act. 3. is but there was greater vertue in the liuing Apostles, then in dead and senselesse relikes; Ergo, much lesse is there any vertue in relikes.

Argum. 2. If there bee any vertue in relikes, it would appeare as well at one time as another, because the vertue should be abiding in the relikes: but so doth it not, for Elihu cloake at the first smiting did not part the waters, till Elisha had said, where is the Lord God of Elihu? so that the vertue was not in the garment, but in the inuocation of the name of God, 2. King. 2. vers. 14.

Council Nicen. 2. session. 7. Therastin the President propoundeth this question: Quamobrem miracula a nostris imaginibus non eduntur? What is the cause that miracles are not wrought by our images? then he answereth thus: Miracula non credentibus data sunt, sed illis, qui in incredulitate versantur: Miracles are not given to those which beleue, but to those that beleue not. This Councell was celebrated at the least 800. yeeres agoe, about anno. 780. whatsoeuer images and relikes did before, wee haue here the warrant of this Councell, that they haue done none since.

The holy Martyrs also haue confirmed this truth: Thomas Bilney: They gild their gods, and beare them about, and men say, they do speake; and if they speake, it is the deuill that speaketh in them, not God, Fax. pag. 1010.

M. Th. the holy Martyr: When they crie miracles, miracles, remember that God hath made an eueringlasting testament in Christs blood, against which we may receiue no miracles, neither the preaching of the Angels, &c. the end of Gods miracles is good, the end of these miracles is euill, Fax. pag. 115. 1. col. 1. articul. 24.

THE FIFT QUESTION, CONCERNING

Images, and of the signe of the Crosse.

The first part concerning Images, is subdeuided into certaine other articles and poynts. First, of the difference of Idols and Images. Secondly whether it be lawfull to haue images. Thirdly, if it be lawfull to worship them. Fourthly, what manner of worship it should be.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, OF THE DIFFErence betweene Idols and Images.

There is great difference (say they) betweene an Image and an Idoll: an Image called in Greeke εἰκών, is the true similitude of a thing: an Idoll, ἰδωλόν, in Greeke, translated simulacrum, doth represent that which is not, as were the Idols of Venus, Minerva, women Goddesses, which were deuised thing. Images they confesse they haue, but no Idols, Bellar. cap. 5.

Fest. S. Paul saith, 1. Cor. 10. That an Idoll is nothing: that is, doth represent a thing that is not: as such were their heathenish Idols, Bellar.

Ans. First, the place is not so vnderstood: for the Apostle saith, That things offered to Idols also are nothing, which were not made to represent any thing: But his meaning is this, that of themselves they are nothing to breede offence, neither were it needfull to shunne eating of Idoll sacrifices, or to abhorre an Idoll, but that they are abused and turned to the seruice of diuels, as it followeth in the next verse. Therefore an Idoll is not said to be nothing, because it representeth a thing imagined, but that of it selfe, being but wood, or stone, or such like, it were not offensiue, if it were not abused to Idolatrie. Secondly, all the portraictures of the Heathen were not Idols in this sense: for Iupiter, Mars, Apollo, Hercules, whose Images they had, were men sometime liuing. Thirdly, you haue images representing nothing: as the pictures of Angels, of God the father, of the holy Ghost, which haue no shape nor likenes. Again, you haue also your imagined Saints, as S. George, S. Christopher, for there were neuer any such: and therefore you haue Idols as well as the Heathen.

Bellarmin proueth this distinction out of Orig. hom. 8. in Exod. who there affirmeth that then a man maketh a similitude or likenesse, when he portraitureth in mettall, stone or wood the fashion of any creature? but an idoll is some strange shape that is not, as when to a mans bodie is ioyned the head of a dogge, &c. or a man is pictured with two faces, &c. to this purpose Origen.

Ans. 1. This authoritie maketh nothing for them: first, if an idoll be nothing els, but a strange and monstrous shape, then had the Gentiles no idols, for they worshipped the resemblances and pictures of men. Secondly, Origen in the same place sheweth it to be vnlawfull to worship any similitude or likenesse as well as any idoll; writing vpon the second Commandement: Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any idoll, or the similitude or likenesse, &c. Thirdly, this was but Origens conceit; for the fathers did confound these words, indifferently taking the one for the other: S.

Ambrose calleth idols Images: Simulacrum verè nihil est, quia imago videtur rei mortuæ: A simulacrum chre or an idol is nothing, being the image of a dead thing, in 1. Cor. 10. and S. Hierome also, Scubi fia imago, dæmonis dabunt responsa: If an Image were made, the dæmons gaue answer: in 2. Paralip. 23. 11.

The Protestants.

THough the name Idol haue an odious signification in the English tongue, yet neither the Greeke eidolon, nor the Latine simulacrum, doe sound so euill vnto the eares: and in many places of the Scripture we may indifferently reade, idoll or image: for all worshipping of Images is idolatrie. If we will distinguish them; they are thus rather to be seuered: An Idol is that image, which is set vp with an intent to be worshipped: an Image is a generall name as well to y<sup>e</sup> statues pictures set vp for Idolatrie, as lawfull, which haue but a ciuill vse. Beca that the Papists Idols are Images, thus we proue it.

Argum. 1. The Scripture calleth the Gentiles Idols, images, Rom. 1. 23. there the word is vsed: Ergo, idol and Image are taken for one: they haue images set vp for religious or rather religious vices, Ergo, Idols.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 9. 10. There is mention made of Idols of gold, silver, brasse, which cannot be vnderstood of the idols of the Gentiles, which were abolished long agoe: and that prophesie is to be vnderstood of men liuing after the opening of the seuenth seale, which is toward the end of the world, Wherefore it must needs be vnderstood of the Papists, who are the onely known people in the world, that worship images: Ergo, they haue Idols.

Augustine taketh imago, and simulacrum, which is the Latine for the Greeke eidolon, for all one: for the loue of the dead (saith he) images were first made, whereof the vse of simulachers or Idols did arise. Again, Deum non sedere in coelis putandum est veluti flexis poplitibus: tale enim simulacrum Deo nefas est Christiano in templo collocare: God is not to be imagined to sitte in heauen as with bowed knees: such a simulachre or idol it is not lawfull to sette vp in the temple of Christ: de fide & simbolo, cap. 7. The picture then of God, which the papists call an image, Augustine taketh an Idol, for simulacrum, by their owne confession, signifieth the same thing which Idolum doth. Bellarmino cap. 5.

Likewise in the Ciuill law, from whence we may best deriue the different vse of words, an image and a simulacrum or Idoll, is all one: as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 27. leg. 2. Theodosius, Si quauis statue statua, vel imagines eriguntur: If our images or pictures be erected, &c. and tit. 28. leg. 1. the same are called Imperatoria simulachra, the Emperors idols: for Bellarmino graunteth, that euery where in the olde Testament, where the Latine text readeth, Simulacrum, the Greeke hath the word eidolon.

And yet more plainly it appeareth, that imago, and idolum, are all one in signification: for in the Nicens. 2. generall Councell actio. 6. can. 6. Gregorius Bishop thus speaketh, Nemo sub prete exteriorum imaginum, manus in ea, qua Deo sacra sunt, iungat, quia possunt transferri in idola vbi huiusmodi idola: Let no man vnder the colour of pulling downe images, lay his hands vpon things consecrate to God, for such idols may be translated to other vses: Here Images and Idols are taken for all one.

Cassianus a learned Papist taketh an Image and an Idol to be all one: in 20. cap. Exod.

Thomas Hawkes holy Martyr hath sealed this poynt: That there is no difference between an Idoll and an Image: when Bower had thus distinguished, If it be a false God, and an Image made of him, that is an Idol; but if an image be made of God himselfe, it is no Idol, but an Image, because he is a true God. The Martyr answereth: Lay your Image of your true God and false God together, you shall see the difference: haue not your Images feete, and goe not, eyes and see not, eares and heare not, hands and feele not, mouthes and speake not, euen so haue your Idols. pag. 1589. col. 2.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER IT BE lawfull to haue the Images of the Trinitie, of Christ, or of the Angels.

The Papists.

43. Error.

THAT Images may haue a good ciuill vse, as for decencie or comelines of some worke, or for vtilitie of storie, it is of neither part denied: but they further affirme, that it is lawfull to expresse the Trinitie by pictures; as God like an olde man, and with the world in his hand; Christ, as he walked vpon the earth; the holy Ghost in the likenes of a doue; the Angels with wings: and these pictures (they say) are very meete and profitable to be set vp in Churches, Rhomus Act. 17. sect. 5.

Argum. 1. To painte the Trinitie, or any one of them as they appeared visibily, is no more inconinconvenient, then it was vndecent for them so to appeare, Rhemist ibid. at Bellarmin's cap. 8.

Ans. You flatly controll the lawe of God, which simply forbiddeth any similitude to bee made of things in heauen or in earth to worship God by. And Deut. 4. 15. God expressly declarereth that he would not appeare in any visible shape when he gaue the law, least the people should abuse that shape, to make an image of God after it. Again, the argument followeth not: for God saue it was conuenient sometime by visible signes to appeare vnto men, and yet seeth it to be inconvenient for pictures to be made to resemble him by: for els he would neuer haue forbidden it. Lastly, though the argument be admitted, yet seeing now that all such visible apparitions of the Trinitie are ceased, all such visible pictures likewise should be out of vse: And if that, when such apparitions were seene, yet no such images were tolerated, how much lesse are they lawfull now, all such visions being long agoe determined.

Argum. 2. The Angels were pictured in forme of Cherubims: Ergo, Spirits may be portraicted. Bellarm. cap. 8. Argum. 1.

Ans. When you can shew an expresse commandement for your images, as the Israelites had for them, we will yeeld, that they are lawfully made. Again, how followeth it, God may command images to be made for the vse of religion: Ergo, men may? for the law bindeth not the Lord who is the lawmaker. But the law saith, thou shalt not make to thy selfe, that is, by thine owne authoritie, any grauen image. The Cherubims also were not made publicly to be seene and gazed vpon by the people, but were set in the holy place: so are not your pictures and images which are set vpon openly in your Churches to entise people to idolatrie.

Argum. 3. The Scripture describeth God by humane members, as by his hands, eyes, feete, &c. therefore he also may be so described in picture, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, if it be lawfull to set forth God by picture, as he is described in Scripture, then make a lyon also to signifie Christ, for he is called the lyon of the tribe of Iuda: picture him also with Doves eyes, Rauens lookes, Marble legges, &c. for so he is described Cantic. 5. and thus will you make a monster of Christ. Secondly, if an idoll be, as your selues define, a picture of that, which is not, then do you make an idoll of God, when you paint him with hands and feete, &c. whereas there is no such thing in God. Thirdly, the Scripture so describeth God to our capacitie, for our edifying and instruction, because wee cannot otherwise vnderstand the high things of God: but there is no such end of pictures; which are so farre from edifying, that they are rather occasion of offence: and therefore the argument concludeth not, from the phrased of Scripture, to the phantasie of Painters; from diuine authoritie, to humane presumption.

The Protestants.

To set forth the Godhead and deuine nature by any picture or image, is impossible; and therefore both vnlawfull and inconvenient: but to bring them into Churches, and to make them for some vse of religion, is a high stepp vnto grosse superstition.

Argum. 1. Such images of the Trinitie among the Papiests, are made to resemble the diuinitie and Godhead: for to what purpose els should such images be made? Falk. Art. 17. sect. 5. They picture God the father like an old man: because in that forme he appeared to Daniel: but how know they whether it were God the Father, rather then God the Sonne, who is as old as God the Father, or then the whole Godhead? They commend also the image of God the Father with the world in his hand: which is a lying image, and maketh simple people to beleue, that the world was made only by God the Father, which was the worke of the whole Trinitie. Some of the Papiests themselves, as Abulensis, Durandus, Perusinus, doe hold, that the image of God ought not to be made, and that it is rather tolerated, then allowed in the Church.

Bellarm. answereth, that there are two sorts of images, or pictures: some do expresse the very similitude, and nature of a thing, and so onely things materiall and corporall may be pictured: some images do not properly, but by way of Allegorie and implication expresse the thing deciphered, as when Angels are pictured with wings, to shew their celeritie, &c. there can be no image of God made after the first sort, but after the second there may, &c.

Ans. First, if an image be made of a thing, which doth not expresse the nature thereof, as a picture ascribing to God a bodily shape, which he hath not, is but a lying image: secondly, the properties of God being infinite, cannot any way by a picture be implied or shadowed forth, as Ilay 40. 12. God hath measured the waters with his fist, and counted heauen with a spanne: and vers. 17. all nations before him are as nothing, &c. then it followeth, To whom then will you liken God, or what similitude will you set vpon him? the Prophet reasoneth thus, God is omnipotent, infinite, incomprehensible, therefore by no similitude whatsoever can be expressed. Thirdly, S. Ambrose saith, Quod inuisibile est, pingi non potest. & Deus, qui ab his omnibus alienus est, quomodo potest imaginem habere visibilem? That which is inuisible, can not be pictured, and God, which is farre from any bodily shape, how can he haue a visible Image? Ambrose in 1. ad Coloss. He denieth, that God any way may be visibly described.

As for the images of Christ in the forme of a Lambe, and the holy Ghost in shape of a Dove, Bartholomaeus Caranza, a Papiſt ſheweth that they were forbidden in the 6. generall Synode, Canon, 82. Belarmine here answereth, that the Councell condemneth not the Image of Christ in forme of a Lambe, but preferreth onely the other picture of Christ, as a man.

Contra. Firſt, the words of the Canon are theſe, Picturam illius agni Christi, &c. in posterum veteri agno erigendam ſancimus: We decree, that the picture of Christ, as he is man, be from henceforth erected in ſtead of the picture of the Lambe. If the one picture muſt give place to the other, what is that els, but to abrogate the one, and eſta bliſh the other? Secondly, Caranza the ſtridger of the Councels ſo expoundeth the Canon, though it pleaſe Belarmine to oppoſe himſelf againſt him.

Concerning the picture of Christ as he was man, the Papiſts themſelves confeſſe, and we deny not, but it may better be made then the image of the Trinitie; yet can there not be any true image of Christ, as he was in forme of man: for the image doth onely expreſſe his bodily ſhape, not as he was God in the forme of man: and ſo ſuch a picture were dangerous to the weak and ignorant, being a lying image, ſhewing Christ onely as man, who was both God and man. And againe, the image, which is made of his bodily ſhape, is no more the image of Christ, then of any other man, Fulke ibid. 17. ſect. 3.

But ſome will ſay, if Chriffs image cannot conveniently be made, becauſe it expreſſeth not his Godhead; by the ſame reaſon we cannot make a picture of a man, becauſe his ſoule being im- ble cannot be painted.

Anſw. The reaſon is not alike: for he that pictureth a man living, ſetteth forth the life, beauty and motion of the bodie; by which effects, by a conſequent, the ſoule is reſembled, which cauſeth and worketh theſe things in the bodie: but in the bodily ſhape of Christ, there cannot be made to appeare any ſuch notorious ſignes of his Godhead.

2. Though it be not ſimplie vnlawfull to expreſſe in painting the viſible ſhapes that were ſhewed in viſion to the Prophets, if it be onely for uſe and ſignification of the hiſtorie, or if there be any other commendable uſe: yet to make thoſe ſhapes for any uſe of religion, or ſervice of God, is abominable idolatrie, Fulke ibid. Epiphanius ſaw in a Church at Anablatha, an image painted in a table, as it had been of Christ or a Saint, he tooke it downe and cut it in peeces: affirming that it was contrarie to the ſcripture for any image of a man to hang in the Church of Christ. The Eberine Councel, Canon 36. decreed, that no pictures ſhould be made in Churches. If no pictures, much leſſe carued images, which are a more ſtrong prouocation to idolatrie. The wordes of the Councel are theſe: Placuit picturas in Eccleſia eſſe non debere, ne quod colitur, aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur: Wee thinke good that no pictures ſhould be in the Church, leſt that which is adore and worſhip, ſhould be painted in the wallies.

Auguſtine rendreth a reaſon, why it is dangerous to haue images in Churches, where there is yea but the leaſt feare of ſuperſtition: Quis orat intus ſimulacrum, qui non ſic affectus, ut deus exandri putet, nec ab eo ſibi praſtari, quod deſideret, putet? Who (ſaith hee) prayeth beholding an image, and is not ſo affected, as though hee were heard of it, and hopeth not to haue that performed by it, which he deſireth? in Pſal. 113.

Againſt the hauing or making of the image of Christ, it was thus reaſoned Conſtantiopolis generall Synode: as it is alleaged Nicen. 2. actio. 6. tom. 3. Iſſam imaginem Christi Chriſtiformem, eſt autem Chriſtus Deus et homo; ſequitur ut imago ſit Dei & hominis, & ſic deitatem circumſcribibilem, & cum Eutyches conſuſionem inducunt, &c. They doubt not to call the image of Christ, Christ: but Christ is both God and man; it followeth then, that the image of Christ muſt be the image of God and man; and ſo they make the deitie circumscribable, and with Eutyches confound the natures of Christ: or els they doe picture the bodie of Christ without the deitie, and ſo with Nestorius they deuide the perſon of Christ, and ſeparate the humanitie from the diuine nature: Velutis, illi aliam perſonam conſtituentes dum carnem a deitate ſeparant, quam imagine repraeſentant, quam perſonam trinitatis adiungunt: Or thirdly, they make a newe perſon of Christ (while they ſeparate the fleſh from the deitie) which they ſay is repreſented in picture, and ſo adde a fourth perſon to the Trinitie. Theſe abſurdities theſe fathers did foreſee would followe in hauing the pictures of Christ.

Again, they reaſon thus in the ſame place, tom. 3. from the wordes of our Sauour Christ uttered in the institution of the Sacrament, this is my bodie, &c. doe this in remembrance of mee: Velut non eſſet illa alia ſpecies electa ab illo, aut quaſi non poſſet illo alio typo illorum, qua ſub calice ſunt, incarnatio illius repraeſentari: Ecce igitur ſignificatio illius corporis imaginem totam, panis ſcilicet ſubſtantiam, quam mandauit apponi: As though hee had choſen no other ſhape, nor any other type of all things vnder heauen, whereby his incarnation could bee repreſented: Behold then all the images of that quickning bodie, the ſubſtance of bread, which he commanded to bee viſed, &c.

Christ

Christ hath appointed no other way to be called to our remembrance by, but by the Sacrament.

One other reason I will adioyne, alleaged in the same place out of Eusebius Pamphilus, tom. 4. who thus writeth to Constantia the Emperesse, who had sent to him for the image of Christ: what image (saith he) do you require? such an one as may expresse the characters of his diuine nature: but I thinke you are sufficiently instructed of this, that no man hath thus seen the sonne but the father: Sed serui requiris forma imaginem: But you require the image of the forme of a seruant, which he tooke; but vnderstand you that it was ioyned to the glorie of his Godhead: in so much that his Apostles could not behold the glorie of his flesh in the Mount: much more glorious is it now hauing put off mortalitie: Quis igitur gloria & dignitatis splendores lucentes & fulgurantes effigies mortuis & inanimatis coloribus & umbratili pictura possit? Those shining and brightsome beames of so great glorie, who is able with dead and liuelesse colours, and a shadowed picture to expresse?

See also the determination of the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 8. tit. 12. leg. 2. c. Theodos. Valentinian. Basilicam abiciunt imaginis, &c. We forbid the Church to be obscured with the Images or painted tables of any, &c. This law forbiddeth pictures to be set vp in Churches.

One also of their owne writers is bold to write thus of Nicophorus, for reporting of S. Luke to haue bene a Painter, and to be the first that made the Images of Christ and of Mariæ, and of the Apostles: In historia si non mendax, certe valde audax: He is very bold in his historie, if not a liar: Epist. aduent. in 2. Timoth. p. 173.

Thus with the holy Martyrs haue sealed: Nicholas Shetterden Martyr: The lawe forbiddeth to make any manner likenes, or image of God, Deuter. 4. 17. you sawe no shape, &c. To whome Winchester objected thus: Yet by your leaue, we may make an image of so much as was scene, as of Christ, of the holy Ghost, and the father appeared to Daniel like an old man. The Martyr answered: This is no prooffe that we may make images contrarie to the commandement, for the holy Ghost appeared like a Dove, yet was he not like in shape but in certaine qualities, &c. For. pag. 1675. col. 2.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, WHETHER THE

images of Saints are to be worshipped.

The Papists.

The images are to be reuerenced and worshipped, so it be not with the diuine honour due vnto God, it was concluded in the late Tridentine chapter, sess. 25. confessed by our Romish, 44. Error. Act. 17. sed. 5. maintained by the Iesuites, Bellarmin. cap. 12.

Argum. 1. The brazen Serpent was worshipped of the people, seeing it was set vp in a high place, and gaue health to those that looked vpon it: Ergo, images may be worshipped, Bellarmin. The people also fell downe before the Arke and Tabernacle, and worshipped God: Ergo, lawfull, praying to fall downe before a Crucifixe, Romish. annot. Heb. 11. 21.

Ans. First, it was not the Serpent that healed them, but Christ who was thereby prefigured, Job. 1. 14. The Serpent was lift vp, that the people might round about the better behold it, and it sheweth forth also the lifting vp of Christ vpon the Crosse. It was not set vp to be worshipped, neither was it worshipped till the people fell into superstition, & offered incense to it, and therefore because the people abused that monument, Hezekiah brake it downe, 2. King. 18. Secondly, it is not alone to fall downe before, in, or at the Arke & Tabernacle, and to worship God, as to worship the Arke or Tabernacle. You doe not only fall downe before a Crucifixe, but worship it. Neither is it as lawfull to worship before a Crucifixe, as it was before the Tabernacle: for the one was commanded of God, the other is the superstitious deuise of men.

Argum. 2. As the image of Nabuchadrezzar was for his honor, so the image of Christ is for his, Romish. Rem. 13. 14.

Ans. A good similitude, if Christ himselfe had not forbidden so to be honoured & worshipped: Argum. 3. Man is honoured because he is the image of God: Ergo, images of Saints are to be reuerenced, because they are their images, Bellarmin. cap. 12.

Ans. First, man is a liuely image of Gods owne making, images of Saints are the workes of men. Secondly, no image can so liuely represent a Saint, being but a dead thing, as man who hath a liuing soule is the image of God. Thirdly, we do reuerence men with ciuill honour, not with religious worship, as they doe their images. Fourthly, though Gods image in man were to be worshipped, yet it would not followe, that Saints images should: for all diuine worship belongeth onely to God: but the Saints themselves, though they were aliue, are not to be worshipped, much lesse their Images.

Argum. 4. The chiefe Iesomachi, that is, enemies or oppugners of Idols, say they, are the Iewes, Samaritanes, Mahometanes: yea the diuell himselfe loueth no images, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans.

Asw. First, it followeth not, the Jewes and Turkes abhorre images, and therefore Christians ought to loue them: for the heathen hated many vices, which are also to be abhorred of Christians. Secondly, they were not the first Idolomachi, Image haters: for Moses was an Idolomach, when he caused the golden Calfe to be burnt to powder: Hesekiah an Idolomach, that brake downe the brazen Serpent: Iosiah an Idolomach, that caused the Idols to be destroyed, 2. King. 23. Nay, God himselfe was the first Idolomach, that forbiddeth Images and Idols to be made in the morall lawe. Thirdly, I pray you where did the Iesuite learne, that the diuine hateth an image? I am sure the Scripture speaketh contrarie; that what was offered to Idols was sacrificed to diuine, 1. Cor. 10. 20.

The Protestants.

That Images or Idols are not at all to be reuerenced or worshipped, or to be made, or set vp in Churches, or in any other place for any religious, or rather irreligious vse: thus our of the holy scriptures we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. The making of any similitude or likenes, to fall downe before it and worship it, is flatly forbidden in the second commandment, Exod. 20. Ergo, they are not to be worshipped. So likewise, Deut. 4. 15. Isai. 40. 18. and in many other places in the old Testament, worshipping of Images, which is idolatrie, manifestly forbidden in the new testament, Rom. 1. 23. 1. Cor. 10. 20. 1. Ioh. 5. 21. Ergo, not lawfull.

Ans. One Catharinus a great Papist saith, that the commandment in the law against Images, was but temporall, and to continue but till the establishing of the new Testament. But Belarmius utterly misliketh this answer, being most absurd, for the morall law is perpetuall, De imaginibus sanctis lib. 2. cap. 7. They doe giue therefore a more deliberate answer: that the Scriptures doe reprove and condemne the idolatrie of the Heathen, which worshipped their Images as Gods. But so doe not they: they make no account of them, as they affirme, for their matter or forme; but for that relation they haue to the things whose images they are, Rhemist. Philipp. 2. sect. 2.

Ans. First, the Jewes also in their golden Calfe had a relation to that God that brought them out of the land of Egypt, Exod. 32. 4. 5. The like relation had Serapion in setting vp of his Calves, 1. King. 12. 28. for they were not so mad as to think that a Calfe brought them out of Egypt. And it appeareth yet more plainly: for Exod. 32. 5. Aaron saith, To morrow shall be the Lords holie day: the word is Iehonab, which name the Jewes only ascribed vnto God. So Iudg. 17. 3. Micah his mother saith, that she had consecrated the shekles of siluer to the Lord Iehonab, to make a molten image: wherefore in their Images they had relation to God, and yet were they reprov'd for this idolatrie. The like relation the Gentiles also had in their Idols, as Augustinus witnesseth: Non quod illum lapidem colo, &c. adoro, quem video, sed formam ei quem non video. Quis est ille? Numquam quidam inuisibile quod praesidet illi simulacrum: I doe not worship that carued stone or Image: I reuerence that I see, but I serue or worship that I see not: that is, a certaine diuine spirit, which is president in that image. Wherefore popish idolatrie can no more be excused by this shift of reference or relation, then either the Jewes or Gentiles, that pretended the same colour.

articl. 7.

Fox pag 924.

2. It may be proued by the practise of the Popish Church in England, that simply without any such relation or signification they commaunded Images to be worshipped. Thomas Alan Martyr troubled, because he beleeued not in the Crucifixe. Robertus Rans of Dorney molested because he said, that an Image grauen with mans hand, is neither God, nor our Ladie, but made for a remembrance of Saints: nor we ought to worship any thing, but God and our Ladie, and not images of Saints, which are but stocks and stones. Mistresse Alice Dole brought into trouble, for saying; We should not worship that thing that hath eares, and eyes, and can neither see, nor heare. These good men and women, we see, were persecuted in those daies for denying worship to Images, as they were Images. And of later daies, we see the popish sect, even they amongst them, which had the name of learning, to haue fallen into the same idolatrous dotage of their forefathers: as it may appeare by Bowers setting vp of the Rood in Pauls, at the comming in of King Philip: how he with his Chaplains annoynted the Rood, crept vnto it, and kissed it, and so set him vp in his place, all the Queere in this meane season, singing Te Deum: Let indifferent men now iudge, whether they made not this Rood their God amight, Fox pag. 1472. So then the popish practise agreeable to their doctrine was, (as it appeareth) that Images were simply to be worshipped.

Argum. 2. Apocal. 9. 20. Worshippers of Idols of siluer and gold are there condemned; which can be no other but the Papists: for that prophecie is to bee fulfilled in the latter times towards the end of the world, after the opening of the seuenth scale and blowing of the sixth trumpet. But there is no knowne nation in the world, or hath not been many a day, that worshippeth Images, but the popish Synagogue.

Argum. 3. Man is the image of God, and yet is not worshipped: how much lesse ought we to worship carued Images, which are but made with mens hands? As Augustinus saith, Opera hominum non colenda, meliores sunt artifices: The handie workes of men are not to bee worshipped, the workmen workmen themselves are better, and yet not worshipped. What foule idolatrie is this, to preferre the workes of mens hands, before the worke and image of God, to despise men, and haue in so great regard dead stockes and stones?

Argum. Exechias caused the brasen Serpent, which Moses had made, to bee broken in pieces, because the people worshipped it, and burnt incense to it: Ergo, Images are not to bee worshipped.

Belarmine answereth: first, that the people did honour the brasen Serpent, for the matter sake, thinking, that the benefit of health proceeded from the image it selfe, cap. 17.

Contra. First, they could not honour it for the matter, it being of brasie, not of gold, or any other precious metall. Secondly, neither did the people ascribe the miracle to the image it selfe: for in the text it is added, which Moses had made: they remembered very well, that it was made by Moses, at Gods appointment, and so was indued with that vertue.

Secondly, saith he, they did worship it as God, because they offered incense to it, which in the old law was accounted a sacrifice, Abd.

Contra. See first how contrarie Belarmine is to himselfe: for before, Iob. 1. de Sancto beatus, 13. argum. he tolde vs, that the sacrifice of beasts onely was peculiar vnto God: but odors and incense might be giuen to Saints; and that therefore Nabuchodonosor commaunding odors to be offered to Daniel, did therein no vnlawfull thing. But here he affirmeth the contrarie, that the people in offering incense to the brasen Serpent, did giue the honour of God vnto it. Thus well he agreeth with himselfe.

Secondly, the people were not so blind, to think a Serpent to be their God, no more then their forefathers tooke the golden Calf for God, but they worshipped it in the remembrance of God: for they were not so blockish to thinke, that a Calf did bring them out of Egypt. Thus doe the Papists worship their Images euen as the people did the brasen Serpent.

Augustine saith, Noni multos esse sepulchrorum et picturarum adoratores: I know there are many which worship sepulchres & pictures. Of these he warneth men to take heed, Noli consellari turbas imperitorum: Follow not such vnlearned & vnskillfull multitudes. Belarmine answereth, that Augustine wrote thus while he was a yong man, and not fully conuerted, cap. 16. A fillic shift: yet we wil vouchsafe an answer, though if be worthe of none. Let vs heare what Augustine thought when he was old, and staid in iudgement: Iam vero artifex melior est eis, quem is tamen pulchre adorat: In Psalm. 113. uidetur in quantum ea non feceris, quoniam, qua illa non possunt facis, melius et bestia: The workman is better then the image, who gaue fashion and shape vnto it, yet thou wouldest bee ashamed to worship him: thou thy selfe art better, for thou canst doe many things which that cannot: nay a brute beast that heareth and seeth is better. By this we may see what Augustine thought of worshipping of Images.

We haue the glorious testimonie of the holie Martyrs: Claudius Mamerius burned at Lyons for the faith, anno 155: Nothing is to bee adored, but that which is not seene with the eyes, that is God alone, which is a spirit, &c. Images therefore are not to be set vp before Christians, seeing the sense of man is so prone to idolatrie, euer occupied and fixed on those things which be before his eyes, rather then vpon those which are not seene. For pag. 905. col. 1.

Martyr George Wisehart holy Martyr, reporteth how he had conference with a Jew, as he was lying vpon the water of Rhene: and asking him the cause of his pertinacie in not receiuing the Christian faith, alleaged this with other, for that Christians did worship Images contrarie to the law of God, which will haue God onely to be honoured. For pag. 1269. col. 2.

Iohn Maundrel, William Cokerly, Iohn Speer put to death, for denying the worshipping Images, pag. 1193. with many other that gaue their liues in defence of this truth: The Papists for their idolatrie cannot shew so sure a seale.

I will adde in the end the determination of the 7. generall Councell at Constantinople, as it is extant Nicen. 2. actio. 6. item. 6. Qui ab hoc die imaginem ausus fuerit sibi parare aut adorare in ecclesia, aut in privata domo constitinere, aut elam habere; si clericus deponitur; si laicus, anathematizatur: If any man from henceforth shall dare to make him an Image, or to worship it in the Church, or set it vp in his house, or keepe it secretlie, if he be of the Clergie, let him bee depozed; if a lay man, accursed be he.

Augustine, tom. 5. de fine: Nas qui sacerdotij dignitate succincti sumus, simul existimantes una voce defini- mus, omnem imaginem ex quocunque materia improba pictorum arte factam ab ecclesia (Christianorum re- spectu) ueluti alienam & abominabilem: We of the priestly dignitie assembled together, doe define with one voyce, that every Image, of what matter soeuer, made by the lewd skill of painters, is to be cast out of the Church of Christians, as a strange and abominable thing. This was enacted anno 780. by the consent of 300. Bishops assembled at Constantinople, in the presence of two Emperours, Leo, and Constantinus.

Our aduerfaries here answer, that this assemblie at Constantinople is not the 7. generall Synode, node, but that which followed at Nice, called Nicen 2. which was kept vnder the Empresse Irene and her sonne Constantinus, wherein the adoration of Images was established: and to this Councell Adrian Bishop of Rome gaue his consent, which the other wanted.

Ans. The Synode of Constantinople is rather to be held vniuersall, then this of Nice. First, it was assembled by the authoritie of two Emperours, Leo, and Constantinus: whereas this of Nice had but the authoritie of a woman, Irene the Empresse: for her sonne Constantine, being then in his nonage, afterward reuoked his consent, which he gaue in his childhood. Secondly, there were 300. Bishops present at Constantinople, a number sufficient to make a generall Councell, and it came before the other: wherefore then should it not be counted the 7. generall before the other? Thirdly, what though the Bishop of Rome consented not? no more did he to that act of the Chalcedon Councell, which giueth the Patriarke of Constantinople equall authoritie to the Bishop of Rome; yet is it held to bee vniuersall. Again, it had the Patriarke of Constantinoples consent, who was then Paulus, who is the chiefe of the East Churches, as the Pope would bee of the West. Wherefore for ought yet alleaged, the 7. generall Councell shall be that, which was kept at Constantinople, not the other at Nice, and so is it held of the Greekes. And of this superstitious Councell one of their owne giueth this testimonie; That the fathers there, Demonum spellis, & maleficis bus somnijs parum verecundi abutebantur: did vnshamefastly abuse the visions of diuels, and the dreames of women, to proue the adoration of Images, Essenc. in 2. Timoth. p. 15. 1. a.

Lastly, against the adoration of Images wee haue the testimonie of the Ciuill law, Col. 3. 1. tit. 14. leg. 7. Martian. Absit à seculo nostro, &c. Farre bee it, that in our time the accustomed honour should be giuen vnto the cursed Idols, incense to be burnt vnto them, &c. And because it will bee here answered, that this law was made only against the Idols of the heathen: see further, Col. 3. 1. tit. 27. leg. 2. Theodos. Quando statua nostra eriguntur, &c. adfit iudex sine adorationis ambiguo fastigio: When our Images are erected, let the Magistrate be present, without any ambitious or flattering shew of adoration. This law forbiddeth the Images of godly Emperours, and so also Saints, to be adored.

Their owne decrees agree hereunto: Decret. p. 3. distict. 3. cap. 27. Gregor. Sanctorum imaginum quod adorari vniuersis, omnino laudamus, &c. We doe every way commend you, for that you did forbid the Images of Saints to be worshipped. What could bee said more directly against the adoration of Images?

THE FOVRTH ARTICLE, WHAT MANNER of worship is to be giuen to Images.

The Papists.

Bellarmino, who is the mouth of the rest, setteth downe these two positions: First, that Images, though they are not properly to bee worshipped with diuine honour, neither is it fite to teach in the hearing of the people; yet improperly they may haue the same worship, which properly belongeth to the Saint whose image it is. Secondly, there is a religious worship properly due vnto Images, as they are considered in themselves, & non solum ut vicem gerunt exemplari, but not only as they represent another thing: Bellarmin. de Imaginib. Sanctor. lib. 2. cap. 21. 23.

Argum. Bellarminus reasoneth thus: As the image is to that, whose image it is, so the worship of the image is to the worship of the exemplar, paterne, or patrone thereof: but the image, secundum quid, after a sort, is the thing it selfe, as a painted man is a man after a sort: therefore after a sort also the same worship, which is due to the thing it selfe, may be giuen to the image, cap. 35.

Ans. First, he taketh that to be graunted, which is in question: for we denie, that an image hath any worship at all, and therefore it is in vaine to contend, what manner of worship it should bee. Secondly, his owne example is against him: for as a painted or pictured man, cannot bee said to be a man, but onely the image of a man; so neither can the worship of the thing bee giuen to the image of the thing. Thirdly, we graunt, as the image is to the thing, so is the worship, &c. for both such images are idolatrous, and all worship giuen vnto them, impious.

The Protestants.

WE haue shewed before that Images ought not to bee worshipped at all, and that all religious worship is due onely vnto God: wherefore to vs this question is superfluous, with what religious worship Images are to be adored; for no religious worship at all is due vnto them: yet let vs vouchsafe the while, to see the contradictions that are amongst them, and the absurdities that they are driuen vnto.

Argum. 1. Our Rhenists confesse, that Images are not at all to be worshipped with any diuine honour, Aët. 17. sect. 5. But it was decreed in the idolatrous Councell of Nice the 2. and maintained by Thomas Aquinas, Bonauenture, Caietanum, and other Papists, that the image of God is to bee worshipped with the same worship that is due vnto God. And Bellarminus commeth not much short short of them, that faith, impropiè, improperly Images may haue the same worship: as the Kings Ambassadors improperly is honoured as the King. I pray you how farre are these men from making their Images Gods? for they say they are the Lords deputies and Vicegerents, as the Ambassador is for the King.

Againe, the Rhemists affirme, that the images of Christ are not to bee honoured or accounted of, but for the respect and relation they haue to our Saviour, Annas (Philip. 2. 2.) So the Tridentine Councell determineth, Seff. 25. Honos. qui eis debetur, refertur ad prototypa, quæ illa representant: The honour due vnto them is to be referred vnto those things which they represent.

Nicen. 2. action. 2. Non ipsum lignum honoratur, sed ipsum illud, quod in ligno datur contemplandum: The wood it selfe is not to bee honoured, but that which in the wood is offered to our contemplation. Likewise, Action. 3. Imagini honor exhibetur, ad ipsum prototypum refertur: The honor exhibited to the Image, must be referred to the originall. Adrian. 1. epist. ad Conflantinu. Constat ob recordationem sanctorum, imagines tantum pingi, venerari, coli: It is manifest, that Images are worshipped and reuerenced onely in remembrance of the Saints. But Bellarmino teacheth cleane contrarie, that they haue not onely a respectiue honour, as representing other things, but properly and in themselves considered are to bee worshipped. Wee may see by this, how handsomely they agree together.

Argum. 1. Let vs see their absurdities. First, they hold that all Images are not to bee worshipped alike: for they make three degrees of religious worship; the highest, which they call latria, due vnto God; the lowest religious worship, which they call dulia, proper to Saints; the middle or meane worship, called by them hyperdulia, as you would say, Superferuice, to bee giuen onely to the Virgin Mary. And as these three, Christ, the Virgin, the Saints doe differ, say they, in honour; so their Images accordingly must be distinguished in their worship.

Thus it commeth about, that a Roode of wood representing Christ, is more to bee honoured, then an Image of our Ladie of siluer; and her Image, if it be but of stone, is more to be reuerenced then a Saints Image of gold: and thus the excellencie of nature, which is giuen to these things by creation, is inuerted.

It shall be answered, that a baser mettall may be preferred before a more precious kinde, not in respect of the matter, but of the higher representation: We reple, that all such representations by Images are idolatrous, and therefore cannot obscure the priuledge of nature: so also the brazen Serpent had a good signification, yet when it began to be abused to idolatrie, Hexekiah made no better account of it, then of a peece of brasie: and so he calleth it, Nehustan. 2. Reg. 18. 4.

Againe, whereas beside these three deuised worships, which are properly due (as they say) to the Saints, not to their Images, the Images also haue their proper worships: they make three other inferior kindes of worship, which doe exceede in degree, as the other superiour kinde doe: so as Christ hath his latria, worship, his Image must haue hyperdulia, his vnder-worship, (for wee must coine new names for straunge deuises) their Ladie Marie hath her hyperdulia, super-seruice: her Image must haue an hyperdulia, and vnder-ouer-seruice: as the Saints haue their dulia, seruice; so their Images must haue their dulia, an vnder-seruice. And thus haue wee fixe kindes of religious worship; as Bellarmino hath coyned them, cap. 25. and yet before the Iesuite told vs but of two kindes of religious worship, and the third a ciuill; three in all, Lib. 1. de Sanctis. beatiss. cap. 12.

But the Scripture acknowledgeth one onely kinde of religious worship, and that due only vnto the Lord: Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him onely shalt thou serue, Matth. 4. 10. And the Angel forbad Iohn to fall downe before him, giuing a rule for all religious worship: Worship God, saith he, Apocal. 22. 9.

Now, if our aduersaries deale plainly with vs, and tell vs in good sooth, that they would not haue Images to bee adored with diuine worship: I aske them, whether to offer incense bee not a part of diuine worship? They cannot denie it: for Hexekiah therefore brake downe the brazen Serpent, because the people burned incense to it, 2. King. 18. 4. Seeing then the Iesuite alloweth smelling and burning of odors before Images, Bellarmino lib. 1. de Sanctis. beatiss. cap. 13. they giue vnto them diuine honour. The Iesuities simple shift, that offering of incense was a sacrifice then, and so part of diuine worship, but it is none now, is not worth the answer, Bellarmino lib. 2. cap. 17.

We want not the witness of the Papists themselues; as Alexander. 3. p. quæst. 30. art. ultim. De rituali lib. 3. dist. 9. qu. 2. Alphonsus à Castro, &c. All these are bold to affirme, that an Image in it selfe is not to be worshipped at all.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QUESTION, concerning the signe of the Crosse.

This part also is diuided into certaine points or articles.

1 Of the honour due to the true Crosse of Christ, whereon he suffered.

- 2 Of the image of the Crosse.
- 3 Of the signe of the Crosse in the forehead, or made otherwise with the hand.
- 4 Of the power and efficacie of the Crosse.

THE FIRST ARTICLE, OF THE TRVE Crosse whereon our Sauour suffered.

The Papists.

46. Error.

THe wood of the Crosse, both the whole and euery piece thereof (say they) is worthie of great worship and reuerence: and therefore it hath been worthily visited in pilgrimages, honoured with festiuall daies, reuered with all deuotion in times past, Rhemist. annot. Job. 19. sect. 2.

Argum. 1. It is highly sanctified, by the touching, bearing, and oblation of the sacred bodie of Christ, the Altar of that supreme sacrifice, and instrument of our redemption: Ergo, to bee worshipped, Rhemist. ibid. Bellarm. lib. 2. de Imagin. cap. 27.

Ans. If therefore it was holie because it touched the bodie of Christ, and was an instrument of his death: by the same reason, the nayles that pierced him, the speare that gored his side, the tormenters that crucified, Iudas that betrayed and kissed him: All these should also be honoured and worshipped, that handled and touched him, and were instruments, occasions, and procurers of his death.

Againe, admit it was holy, because of Christs bodie, it was holy no otherwise then the ground where the Angell appeared to Moses, Exod. 3. and to Iosua chap. 5. which Bellarmin elsewhere confesseth, was holy, ob presentiam angeli, because of the presence of the Angell: that is, it continued not alwaies holy, but was for that instant: so the Crosse was holy, because of the neeren and presence of Christs bodie, but this holines remained not afterward.

Argum. 2. The Crosse of Christ was found out, say they, in Constantines time the great, by a strange miracle: for there were three Cosses digged vp, which had been a long time buried in the earth: the two Cosses vpon the which the two theues suffered; the third whereon our Sauour hung: They brought them all three to a woman that then lay very sicke, they laid the two first to her, and she remained as she was; then they applied the third, and she was presently made whole, Bellarmin. ex Rufino: Ergo, the Crosse is holy and to be worshipped.

Ans. The inuention of the Crosse by Helena Constantines mother, seemeth to bee a forged and fabulous storie.

1 Eusebius that writeth of the life of Constantine, and the acts of Helena, and registreth diuine matters of lesse importance, yea he sheweth how the Mount Caluarie, where the Heathen had built idolatrous Temples, was purged, and in that place (say they) the Crosse was found; yet he maketh no mention at all of the inuention of the Crosse: which is very like he would not haue omitted, if there had been any such thing.

2 The most ancient author that writeth of this matter, is Ambrose, de obitu Theodosij, which oration Erasmus thinketh to be forged in Ambroses name.

3 There is great disagreement amongst writers about this storie. Ambrose saith, the Crosse was knowne by the title that Pilate fastened to it. Sozomenus and Nicephorus say, the letters were worne out, and it could not be discerned by the title. Paulinus saith, the way to discern it, was revealed to Helena: Rufinus ascribeth the deuice to Macarius Bishop of Ierusalem: Paulinus saith, it was knowne by raising vp a dead man to life: Rufinus, by restoring a sicke woman to health, Fulk. annot. Job. 19. sect. 2. Thus we see of what small credit this storie is. And bee it graunted, that there might be some such thing found: yet they must bring better prooffe for that miraculous inuention, before we will beleuee it.

The Protestants.

WE are not taught any where in the word of God, to giue any religious worship to any creature, nor to adore stockes and stones, no nor the very Crosse it selfe, whereon Christ was crucified, if it were now to be seene or had.

Argum. 1. If there had belonged vnto the Church any religious care of it, the Apostles would (no doubt) haue procured the safe keeping thereof, and not haue suffered the Church to want it 300. yeeres: and it had been an easier sute for Ioseph and Nicodemus to begge the Crosse, then the bodie of Iesus.

Argum. 2. If the Crosse were to be adored, we are vncertaine which it is, and where to be had; and so might worship a common piece of wood, for the wood of the Crosse: for there is no doubt, but this relique is forged and counterfeited as the rest bee. Enagrinus saith, the Crosse was at Apamea: Rufinus, that it was left at Ierusalem, and that Helena sent a piece of it to Constantinople: and in many other places there are pieces of the Crosse to be seene, which if they were all laid together (as Erasmus saith) would fill a ship: for why? Paulinus witnesseth, that the Crosse remaineth neath whole of Jerusalem, as though it had been neuer touched, though innumerable pieces bee daily cut off from it, at the request of men. But this fable that goeth vnder the name of Paulinus, the Papist themselves are ashamed of.

But if churche and right Crosse were to be had; why might it not be serued, if people began to abuse it to idolatry, as Heraclius serued the brazen serpent? he brake it in preece, when the people began to make an Idoll of it.

Augustine sayth, Christus ambulauit in mari, &c. Christ walked in the Sea, to shew vs that our way must be through the Sea: but thou, because thou canst not walke in the Sea, must sayle in a ship, and be carried in a piece of wood: Beleeue in him that was crucified for thee: No man can passe the sea of this world, but being borne vp with the crosse of Christ.

Here Augustine maketh no reckoning of the wood of the Crosse, which was easier to be had in his dayes, then euer since, but ascribed all to faith and beleeve in Christ crucified.

Gelasius diuise the Apocryphis, writeth thus, Scriptura de inuentione crucis dominice nouit la quodam rita inuenerunt, & alia de inuentione capitis Iohannis Baptista, &c. The writings of the inuention of the Crosse are but new deuised reports, and of the inuention of Iohn Baptists head: and therefore he giueth Christians warning to take heede how they reade them. This is the iudgement of a Bishop of Rome, touching the finding out of the Crosse, which he iudgeth to be a fabulous report: thus decreed Gregory hath remembered, part. 1. dist. 15. cap. 3.

The testimonie of Master Hawkes holy Martyr is singular: If the Crosse were of such profite vnto vs, as you say, why did not Christs disciples take it vp and set it on a pole, and carrie it in procession, with (salus festa dies) Chadsey: It was taken vp. Hawkes: Who tooke it vp? Helen, as you say, for she sent a piece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the visitors, when that house was suppressed, and the piece of the holy Crosse (which they had in such estimation) being called for, it was found to be but a piece of a lath, couered ouer with copper, and double gild, as though it had been cleane gold: Fox. p. 1589. col. 2. Were they not well occupied now, that thus deluded the people, giuing them such Crosse to be worshipped?

THE SECOND ARTICLE, OF THE Image of the Crosse or Crucifixe.

The Papists.

The Image of Christ vpon the Crosse, whether painted, carued, or grauen, we see is had in great honour amongst our aduersaries: They kneele downe before their Crucifixe, weare it in their bosomes next to their heart, carrie it in their iourneyes, set it vp to bee adored in their Churches.

Armo. 1. As adoration was done vnto God in old time, at and before the Arke and Tabernacle, so may be done now, at, or before a Crucifixe, relique, image, Rhemist. annot. Heb. 11. f. 8. p.

Armo. 1. It is not all one to worship God at or before a thing, as to worship and adore the thing: the Israelites worshipped God, in, at or before the Tabernacle; yet did they not worship the Tabernacle, as you doe the Crucifixe.

1. They might worship God before the Arke, because they were commanded so to doe: but it is not lawfull to fall downe before a Crucifixe, because all such Images are flatly in the second commandment forbidden.

Armo. 2. The signe of the Crosse appeared to Constantine in the ayre, he caused the Crosse to be carried before him as an ensigne in battaile: When the Iewes had leaue of Julian to build the Temple, there were Crosse seene euery where in their garments, and many such apparitions haue there been of the Crosse: Ergo, it is to be honoured and worshipped, Bellarm. cap. 28.

Armo. 1. What if Constantine caused the Crosse to be carried before him, stamped it in his coyns, set vp his picture with the Crosse in his hand? all this wee grant was done, and may bee done againe: It was but a ciuill, no religious vse of the Crosse: He worshipped it not, vnlesse you will say, he set vp his owne Image with the Crosse in his hand to be worshipped.

2. As for the apparitions of the Crosse (though we thinke many of them to be forged) yet wee denie not, but that the Lord hath, and may yet shew, what signes and tokens it pleaseth him in the heauen, and the earth: yet it followeth not, that the signe of the crosse should therefore be worshipped, because it was shewed to Constantine, no more then other signes and strange sights, that many times appeare in the ayre.

For the other apparition of Crosse in the Iewes garments, we will requite it with another, and yet you shall gaine nothing by it. Anno 1505. vnder the raigne of the Emperour Maximilian, there appeared diuers tokens of bloodie Crosse, the nayles, the sponge, the spere, & other signes of Christs passion, in the garments of men and women, yea in their rockes, while they were a spinning, reported by Francus Mirandula, Carissus, Familianus, Adalantius, Flaccius: But the popish Chronologers nologers make no mention of it, as Christians Messau, and others of that profession. As the Crosses in the Jews garments, that went about to establish their ceremonies againe, did shew, that do what they could, the Gospell, that is, the preaching of his Crosse, should take place, as it did. These signes in Germany did portend, that the Gospell in Germany should be preached, though the Papists strived neuer so much against it. But it is a farre fetcht conclusion to inferre hereupon, that the signe or Image of the Crosse is to be adored.

The Protestants.

The image of the Crosse of Christ, is neither to be painted, carued, grauen, for any religious vse, nor to be adored or worshipped: but men so doing do fall into the grievous and high offence and sinne of Idolatrie. And yet we graunt, that the signe of the Crosse is not to be despised, scorned or contemned: and therefore it was enacted by Thendof, that whosoever did picture the crosse vpon the ground, or pavement, such in contempt of it, should be grievously punished, Cal. 1. m. 1. leg. 1. The like is decreed Trul. Synod. can. 73. Likewise Honorius made a law, that the Jewes should not burne the signe or picture of the Crosse, Ab. 1. m. 12. leg. 10. but it followeth not, the signe of the Crosse must not be despised, or contemned, therefore it is to be worshipped: for though the image of the Prince be not of the subiects to be worshipped, yet there is no good subiect, that will rend it in pieces, or deface it: wherefore that the signe of the Crosse is not to be adored, thus it may appeare.

Argum. 1. The Scripture neuer calleth the Crosse, whereon Christ suffered, the holy Crosse, as the Papists doe, but rather curseth: for S. Paul prooueth that Christ became accursed for vs, because he dyed vpon the Crosse, according to the Scripture, Curseth is every one that hangs on a tree. How then is it now honoured, which was then accursed? And if all Crosses are worshipping, because of Christ his Crosse, then why not all nayles, and speares? for with them he was pierced; all thornes also, because of his crowne of thornes: yea, and all horse-mangertree, because he was layd in a Cribbe.

Bellarmino answereth, that we worship all Crosses, because they are all Images of Christs Crosse: so are not all speares, and thornes, &c. cap. 20.

Contra. As there were other speares and thornes, &c. then those wherewith Christ was crucified; so were there also other crosses, than that vpon which he suffered: for S. Peter and S. Andrew were crucified, and tormented vpon the Crosse: and S. Ambrose saith, Alia cruce nihil mihi profuit, sola crux Christi mihi utilis est, &c. Other crosses do nothing profit mee, onely Christs Crosse is profitable vnto me, lib. 6. m. 1. cap. 1. Therefore all crosses are not Images of Christs Crosse: so then he hath answered iust nothing.

Argum. 2. They are vncertaine of what fashion the Crosse of Christ was, whether like the Greeke letter, τ, or this letter, x, or the Greeke TAV, T, or of this fashion, †, or of this, ✕, which is the vsuall forme of their Crosses: how then dare they worship that which they know not, and are vncertaine of?

Argum. 3. All those reasons which wee brought before against the worshipping of Images, part. 1. in quest. articul. 3. may be vrge against the adoration of Crucifixes.

Augustine thus writeth, Hanc inuolutes saluiferam crucem, omne calumniantium superbiorum expellimus: By beholding this helpfull, or healthfull crosse, we are able to auoyd the poison of all proud venomous cauillers. He speaketh not of any Crucifixe that they had in sight, but of the fruitfull meditation of the passion of Christ: as he saith a little before, Dum vigilantissimè & diligentissimè pietate Christus crucifixus attenditur: When with diligent and watchfull and godly attention we consider Christ crucified. Loe, this was Augustines Crucifixe, to meditate vpon the death of Christ.

Though the picture of Christ crucified haue bin vsed of auncient time, yet was it not then adored, but put onely to a ciuill vse, to call to remembrance the storie of Christs passion. Concl. Nicen. 2. actio. 2. Tharasin the President saith thus, Epistol. ad Antiochen. Episcop. Agnus, qui peccata mundi sustulit iuxta humanam effigiem configuratus erigitur, &c. The Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinne of the world, is figured in his humanitie, that we may be drawne to the memorie of his incarnation, and may be leade as by the hand, to thinke of his most hollesome death and passion.

Actio. 4. of the same Councell, Germanus writeth thus, Epistol. ad Thomam Episcop. Clandiop. Apud Christianos sanctorum virorum imagines nihil aliud sunt, quam fortitudinis eorum delictorumque. Among Christians the pictures of holy men are to no end els, but to describe their fortitude and excellent vertue, and to admonish vs to glorifie and praise God for them. Qua historia narratio per auditum docet, ea tacens pictura per imitationem ostendit: That which in historie is taught by hearing, in picture is shewed by imitation. Here is no mention made of any worshipping of Images, Crosses, or Crucifixes: but the vse of pictures onely is to bring the historie to remembrance.

We haue also the scale of Martyrs: Thomas Man condemned for that he said he would not beleeue hath in the Crucifix, neither worship it, pag. 813. col. 2. art. 7. Franciscus Sen Romanus martyred at Burgos in Spaine anno 1540. for refusing to do homage to a wooden Crosse; saying, it was not the manner of Christianite to worship wood, pag. 930.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, OF THE SIGNE

of the Crosse in the forehead, or made ouer any thing with the hand.

The Popists.

They say, it is an holy and venerable figure, and meete to be vsed, to crosse the forehead, and to crosse parts, to blesse themselves and their meates with crosseing and such like, Rhemist. Art. 1. Iacob crossed his hands when he blessed his sonnes; it is like our Saniour did lift vp his hands in the forme of the crosse, when he blessed. It is a conuenient memoriall of the death of Christ: and therefore to be vsed, Rhemist. annot. Luk. 24. sect. 5.

Asse. vi. Iacob layde his hands after that forme, because of the present occasion: for the younger sonne that should be the greater, was placed at his left hand, and the elder at the right.

2. Seeing the Scripture expresseth not in what manner Christ lifted vp his hands, it is great presumption for you to say, it was done in the similitude of the Crosse.

3. How can it be a conuenient memoriall of Christs death, being neither ordained of Christ, nor taught by his Apostles so to be?

Argum. Ezech. 9. 4. The Angell is commanded to signe with Tau, the foreheads of those which mourned, &c. this, saith Behermine, was none other then the signe of the Crosse, cap. 39.

Asse. First, though the word Tau, there vsed, be the name of an Hebrue letter, yet it signifieth a signe, and is so translated by the Septuagint, signa, give them, or marke them with a signe in their foreheads. Secondly, the Hebrue Tau, hath this forme τ, though in the Greeke language it hath another fashion, yet this figure hath no affinity with the signe of the Crosse; wherefore they haue gayned nothing, though it be granted, that they were marked with Tau. Thirdly, this signe, which the Angell maketh, none but the godly receiue, and they are all deliuered from destruction: but many a wicked and reprobate man is marked with the signe of the Crosse; Ezech. 9. 4. this was in such figure.

Argum. Apocal. 7. 3. Hurt not the earth, til we haue sealed the seapants of God in their forehead: This is the signe of the Crosse, Rhemist. ibid. Behermine. cap. 39.

Asse. It is the signe proper to Gods elect, and therefore not the signe of the Crosse, which many reprobates haue receiued. Let them heare their owne expositors; Behermine. cap. 39. sect. 2. they which Deum suos cognoscunt, &c. That as a Captaine giueth his souldiers some signe, where by they are knowne: so God giueth his a signe, which the diuell seeing, leaueth them, but not approaching to him; Hic Signum esse diuinum Electionis, &c. This signe is the diuine election: and Behermine again these words 2. Timoth. 2. God keepeth, who are his: Hoc ergo signum inpressum sit in a mans heart, and say to himselfe, what doeth it preesse mee, yet seeme outwardly iust, and be inwardly wicked: And then he further saith; Falsum est signum &c. Such a cogitation is an impression of this signe: And this is the signe, which the Elect are marked with.

The Protestants.

Though we finde that the signe of the Crosse hath beene of ancient time vsed in Baptisme, and is now in some reformed Churches without popish superstition; yet this ridiculous and superstitious abuse of the signe of the Crosse, which is common and vsuall among the Popists, to crosse themselves, their foreheads, their eyes, mouth, lippes, to crosse themselves good, smooth, and returning home, chinking thereby to be sufficiently shended and preferred from euill, we doe vtterly condemn, and haue worthily abolished.

Argum. 1. This custome of crosseing hath no warrant from Scripture, neither was pretilled by the Apostles. Yet S. Paul speaketh of diuers crosses, as he calleth the fruite and efficacy of Christs death the crosse of Christ, 1. Cor. 1. 17. Also the crosse is taken for the Gospell which is the preaching of the Crosse, Phil. 3. 18. enemies to the crosse of Christ, that is, his Gospell. The Crosse is also taken for the affliction that followeth the Gospell; Galath. 6. 14. I reioyce in the crosse of Christ; but of any such signe of the crosse to be made, the Apostle no where speaketh: wherefore hauing no warrant in the word, it is a tradition of men, and therefore not after Christ, Colos. 3. 17. This is also testified in their owne Canons, that this vse of signing with the Crosse hath no warrant in the word: decret. 3. distinct. 11. c. 5. Quia Scriptura salutaris crucis signaculo, &c. When Scripture doth teach vs to signe with the ypoist hold some signe of the Crosse, &c.

Calixtus. lib. 4. cap. 17. Constant. Nemo est signandus in fronte, neque in facie, sed in corde. No man must be signed in the forehead, or marked in the face.

the thanksgiving vsed before meate, and by prayer, Falsum primum, the receiving of the faithfull, whereby meates are sanctified: Here is no mention at all of the Crosse. They doe believeing no word for their superstitious crossings, inuocations, incantations, popish blessing, doe become themselves and others, in thinking that the creatures in such order are sanctified vnder them.

Idem, 2. l. 1. c. 1. 3. this reason was vsed against Images, and it may very well serue also against the signe of the crosse: Neque precatorem vllum, qua sanctificari possit, imago habet, sed manet communis et inhonorata vt piffer eam absoluit: An image hath no forme of prayer appoynted, whereby it should be sanctified, but remaineth prophane and vnholly, as it cometh from the work-mans hand: so may we say of the signe of the crosse, that it cannot sanctifie, vnlesse it be first san-ctified it selfe; it cannot be sanctified without prayer of faith, and faith is built vpon the word:
 such sanctification by prayer, the signe of the crosse hath none. Ergo.

Council. Laticen. can. 3. 2. Non oportet hereticorum benedictiones accipere, quia maledictiones magis sunt, quam benedictiones: We must not receiue the blessings of heretikes, because they are curses rather then blessings; yet Bellarmine saith, there is vertue in the signe of the crosse made by a Iew, Pagan, infidel, or whosoever: but this Council saith, that the benedictions of such are maledictions.

Wherefore we doubt not to conclude, that the signe of the crosse as it is vsed by papists, is a superstitious and idolatrous signe; and that as one Robert Cooper confessor of the truth sometime said, the blessing with a shoote sole is as good as a Popish Bishops blessing done no otherwise, then by crossing. See pag. 1043. c. 2.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE

name of Iesus.

The Papists.

The name of Iesus (they say) ought to be worshipped by capping and kneeling thereunto, by wearing it in their caps, and setting it vp in solemne places: allcaging for their purpose that by Paul, that at the name of Iesus all things shall bow; Philip. 2. 10. Yea, they say, that Protestants by diminishing the name and image of Christ, do make a way for Antichrist, Reu. 17. 2.
Phil. 2. 10. 17.

The Protestants.

1. The bowing at the name of Iesus, as it is vsed in Poperie, to bend the knee at the sound thereof, is not commaunded in this place: which sheweth especially the subiection of all creatures of Turkes, Iewes, Infidels, yea of the diuels themselves to the power and iudgement of Christ. Secondly, Protestants haue onely taken away the superstitious abuse of the name of Ie-sus. Thirdly, the kneeling at the name of Iesus is superstitiously abused in poperie: for the people stoop onely at the sound, not vnderstanding what is read, and so make an Idoll of the letters and syllables, adoring and worshipping the very name when they heare or see it: And againe, in kneeling and bowing at the name of Christ, Immanuel, God the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost, and bowing onely at the name of Iesus, Fals. 2. 10. Fourthly, due reuerence may be vsed to our Saviour without any such ceremonie of capping or kneeling, Fals. Neither do we binde any of necessitie to vse this reuerence to the name of Iesus, as the Papists do, which think that Christ cannot otherwise be honoured: neither doe we iudge and condemne those that doe vse it, being free from superstition, and grounded in knowledge, and carefull not to giue offence: for superstitious and offensive ignorance is not in any case to be defended. Fifthly, this outward reuerence to the name of Iesus was first taken vp amongst Christians, because of all other names it was most derided and scorned of the Pagans and Iewes: and therefore they did the more honour it. But now there is greater danger of popish superstition in abusing holy things, then of prophane Paganisme in vicerly contemning them; and therefore there is not such necessarie and iust occasion to vse this externall gesture now, as was in former times: It was not vsed of necessitie then; much lesse now.

Sp. Magnificat. cap. 19. it was thus decreed: Patri religionis ad uocem salutis nostri D. Iesu Christi, iuxta ad Euangelium, &c. Let men with like deuotion at the name of our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ, likewise at the Gospell, the Magnificat, Benedictus, Nunc dimittis, Gloria in excelsis, Gloria patri, and other parts of the diuine seruise, so compose themselves by bowing the knee, virtuouly cherishing, and the like gesture of the whole bodie, as they may seeme to haue their minde occupied in those things that are done. I note out of this decree three things: first, that they should bow at the name of Christ, as well as when Iesus is named: Secondly, that the like reue-rence should be vsed when as other Psalmes are sung, and when mention is made of the Father, and the holy Ghost, as in the Gloria patri. Thirdly, that this gesture should not bee done in reue-rence.

rence to names, words, or syllables so pronounced, but onely to declare our attention. Thus then we see that this superstitious custome in bowing to the name of Iesus onely, is contrarie to their owne popish Canons and decrees. The like thing also was decreed Synod. Augustin. cap. 1. To this effect also Gregor. 10. fest. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 3. Quandoquidem recitatur &c. Wherever that glorious name is rehearsed, cordis genua flectant, let them bow the knees of their hearts, which at the least let them testify by the inclination of the head. So then the reverence of the heart is more requisite, when Iesus is named, then the gesture of the bodie.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, CONCERNING Temples and Churches.

This question hath diuers parts: First, of the forme and situation of Churches. Secondly, of the end and vse of Churches. Thirdly, of their ornaments. Fourthly, of the dedication of Churches. Fifthly, of things hallowed and consecrated for Churches.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SITUA- tion of Churches.

The Papists.

§1. Error.

The Churches and Temples of Christians (say they) are most conueniently and have bene of ancient time builded toward the East, Bellarmius libro tertio, capite tertio, de sanctis.
Argum. 1. Paradise was built in the East, Gen. 2. 8. and therefore wee ought to pray that way, for desire we haue to our countrie.

Ans. First, Paradise was then Eastward vnto Moses and the Israelites being in the Wilderness, when he wrote this storie: but it cannot be East to all christian nations: for Paradise being planted in Eden, which was part of Mesopotamia, must needs be West to the Persians, South to the Scythians and Tartarians, North to the Aethiopians: wherefore this reason is not generall for all Churches in Christian nations. Secondly, it skilleth not where that earthly Paradise is found: our heavenly Paradise is in heauen, which is euery where open to all true beleeuers.

Argum. 2. We looke for Christ to come in the East to iudgement, therefore wee pray toward the East: As the lightning shineth from the East to the West, so shall the coming of the Sonne of man be. Matth. 27. 24. Therefore he shall appeare toward the East, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, by that similitude of the lightning, the suddennes of his appearing, not the place is declared. Secondly, it is great presumption to define that which the Scripture hath not revealed: Christs coming is onely generally set downe, he shall come in the cloudes, Matth. 24. 30. And wee shall be caught vp in the cloudes, 1. Thessal. 4. 17. There is no particular description of the place.

The Protestants.

To vs it is no matter, which way Churches are builded, wee may turne our selues in papers well toward any one part of the heauens, as another: Neither do we refuse to pray in Churches builded toward the East. But that our Oratories and places of prayer ought rather to be builded that way, then any other; out of the Scripture it cannot bee proued, and wee hold it as meer superstition.

Argum. 1. St. Paul exhorteth men euery where to lift vp pure hands, 1. Tim. 2. 8. He saith, in every place, without exception, whether toward the East or the West, or wherefoeuer.

Argum. 2. If any place were more daungerous then other to pray in, it is not so safe, and perhaps more perillous to pray toward the East: for Idolaters were wont to turne them toward the East, and to worship the Sunne rising, Ezech. 8. 17. And for this cause the holy place in the Tabernacle was toward the West, Exod. 26. 29. And it was the custome of the Iewes to pray Westward, least they should be entised to worship the Sunne rising in his strength. And therefore the Iesuite maketh but a bad argument: The Iewes prayed toward the West: Ergo, Christians must pray toward the East: nay, rather contrarie, because they turned their back to the East for feare of Idolatrie; Christians, if any place were to be regarded more then other, ought vpon the same ground also to follow the same custome, for as much as all men by nature are prone to Idolatrie: and the reason of their so praying, seemeth rather to bee morall, then ceremoniall. This I say not, as though I commended the Iewes superstitious praying toward the West, but only to shew that they haue better reason for their custome, then our aduersaries haue for their superstitious turning toward the East. But to Christians all places are alike.

Augustine saith, Cum quis querit orationem, colloca membra, sicut ei occurrit: If any man bee desirous to pray, let him place his bodie, as occasion serueth: he saith not toward the East, or toward the West, ad Simplician. lib. 2. quast. 4.

Council.

Council Constantinop. 6. cap. 7. Singulis diebus quisque duobus vicibus orat, mane & vespere, &c. Everie day let every man pray twice, morning and evening: if he bee in his journey, or in the woods, or fields, wherefoever the morning and evening houre findeth him, so let him doe: knowing that God is every where present. If God bee every where present, then as well in the West, or any other part of heaven, as in the East: therefore it skilleth not which way a man turneth himselfe in prayer.

Walter Brute holy confessor hath sealed this truth, who saith; It is the custome of Necromancers to turne their face to the East, as to a place more apt for their prayers: As Balaam being hired to curse the Israelites, when he could not accomplish his purpose in one place, remoued to another, &c. Fox pag. 497. col. 2. It is not seemely therefore for Christians in their prayers to imitate the superstitious manner of the Heathen, in preferring the East before the West, or one place before another.

AN APPENDIX OF THIS PART, CONCERNING the forme and fashion of Churches.

The Papists.

They would haue their Churches to be built as Salomons Temple was, which consisted of three parts: there was first the porch or court for the people; then the holy place where the Altar stood, and the Priests offered sacrifice; and last of all the most holy place, where the Arke and Mercie seate were placed. So they haue the Church porch, then the bodie of the Church, and above that, their Sanctuarie, as they call it, or the Queere or Chauncell, which was separated from the rest, by steps or staires, hangings or curtaines, and other partitions. And here must stand their Altar, Belarm. lib. 3. de cultu Sanctor. cap. 3. 53. Error.

The Protestants.

Concerning the fashion and forme of Churches, and the diuisions and partitions within, we will not much contend, so these conditions be obserued: First, that all superstition bee avoided, in making one place of the Church holier then the rest, wherein the Papists mightily offend; for the Queere or Chauncell was for their Priests and singers, the other part of the Church for lay men, they were not to enter into that holy place: and thus according to the places, they deuided the congregation: as though one part were more holie then the other. The people also were made to beleue, that to be buried in the Chauncell, but especially vnder the Altar, was more auailable for the dead, then to be buried in the Church. But where learne they that our Churches ought to haue a Sanctuarie as the Iewish Temple had? that was an euident type, and is now accomplished in our Saviour Christ, who is now entered into the heauens, as the high Priest then entered into the holy place to make attonement for the people, Heb. 9. 24. This therefore is very grosse, to reuiue and reueue againe Iewish types and figures: as their owne ordinarie glosse saith, De quatuor concilio lupinitus Ecclesia: Externi ritus & ceremonia legis, quia haec fuerunt umbra Christi sum venturi, &c. superiorum enim adeo adueniente veritate Evangelica, illicita facta sunt & enumerant: The externall rites and ceremonies of the law, because they were a shadow of Christ to come and of his mystrie, therefore the truth of the Gospell being come, are made vnlawfull, and vanished away. Salomons Temple then, with the Sanctuarie and priesthood thereof, which were shadowes of things to come, are no presidents or patternes for Christians to follow.

But if herein notwithstanding they will imitate the building of Salomons Temple, to haue a Sanctuarie, why doe they not also build toward the West, as the Temple was? why bring they not their Altar downe into the bodie of the Church? for in their holy place there was no Altar. And indeede, Altar we acknowledge none, as afterward shall be proued. But we see no reason why the Communion Table may not bee set in the bodie of the Church, as well as in the Chauncell, if the place be more conuenient and fit to receiue the Communicants. But I pray you, why is your Altar rather set in your Sanctuarie, then the Font or Baptisterie? they are both Sacraments, as well Baptisme as the Lords Supper: why should one be preferred, as holier then the other?

Secondly, all things in the Church ought to be done vnto edifying; and therefore wee allow no such partitionis, as doe hinder the edifying of the people, and exclude them from hearing; as in popish Churches the Priest is pueed or mued vp by himselfe a great way off, that his voyce can hardly be perceiued of the people. The Minister is so to stand: and turne himselfe, as he may bee best heard and vnderstood of the people: as Ezra had a pulpit of wood to stand in when he read the law, Nehem. 8. 4.

Augustine thus writeth, Cum Episcopus solus intus est, populus & oras cum illo, & quasi subscribens ad eius verba respondet, Amen: While the Bishop or Pastor prayeth within, the people both prayeth together with him: and subscribing to his words, answereth, Amen. By this it appeareth, that though in Augustines time the Minister had a place for himselfe (as it is meete he should) yet he so disposed disposed himſelfe, that his prayer was heard of all the people: for otherwiſe how could they pray with him, and ſubſcribe or giue aſſent to his words?

THE SECOND PART, OF THE END and uſe of Churches.

This part hath three ſeueral points. Firſt, whether the Churches of Chriſtians are built to offer ſacrifice in. Secondly, whether they be in themſelues places more holy then others. Thirdly, whether they may be dedicated to Saints.

THE FIRST POINT OR ARTICLE, WHE- ther our Churches are for ſacrifice.

The Papiſts.

34 Error.

The principall end of Churches is for the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, and in that reſpect they are truly called Temples: they are not onely for prayer, the preaching of the word, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, but chiefly for the externall ſacrifice of the Maſſe, Beſarm. cap. 4.

Argum. 1. The Churches of Chriſtians haue Altars, therefore ſacrifices: that they haue Altars, he thus proueth: Firſt, 1. Cor. 10. 21. You cannot bee partakers of the Lords table, and the table of diuels. By the table here is meant the Altar; for the table of the Heathen was their altar, where in they ſacrificed to their Idols.

Anſ. Firſt, a table is one thing, an altar another: and very vnproperly is an altar called a table: this place in any wiſe mans iudgement maketh more againſt them then with them. Secondly, Saint Paul ſpeaketh not here of the ſacrifices of the Heathen nor of their altars, but of the feaſts which they made in their Idolatrous Temples, which was done vpon tables, of ſuch ſacrifices as had been offered to Idols: vnto the which feaſts S. Paul forbiddeth Chriſtians to come, as it appeareth in the reſt of the chapter, and more plainly, chap. 8. 10.

Argum. 2. Heb. 13. 10. We haue an altar, of which they haue no power to eate that ſerue at the Tabernacle: That is, the altar whereon Chriſts bodie is offered, Beſarm. Rheniſt. in hunc locum.

Anſ. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh expreſſely of participation of the ſacrifice of Chriſts death, (as it is manifeſt in the two verſes next following) which is by a Chriſtian faith, and not in the Sacrament onely, whereof none can be partakers that remaine in the ceremoniall obſeruations of the Leuiticall ſacrifices: For the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly, verſ. 12. of the ſuffering of Chriſt without the gate: Chriſt therefore is the altar, yea our Prielt and ſacrifice too. Further, you abuſe this place to proue your materiall popiſh altars, which are many: but the Apoſtle ſaith, we haue an altar, ſpeaking of one. This expoſition Richard Woodman holy Martyr hath ſealed, that Chriſt is the true altar wheron euery true Chriſtian ought to come and offer, he proueth by the conference of theſe two places of the Goſpell, Mat. 23. 3. If thou bringeſt thy gift to the altar, and remember that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, &c. Likewiſe, Mat. 18. 20. Where two or three are gathered in my name, I am in the miſt: whereſoeuer then people are gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the miſt; and where he is, there is the Altar; ſo that wee may bee bolde to come and offer our gifts, Fox pag. 1991. col. 2.

The Proteſtants.

The Churches of Chriſtians are the houſes of prayer, made to that end, that they ſhould come together to heare the word of God read and preached, receiue the Sacraments, and offer vp their ſpiritual ſacrifices of praife and thankſgiuing: other externall ſacrifices, or Altars wee acknowledge none.

Argum. 1. The temple of the Iewes was called an houſe of prayer, that is, principally for prayer, Marke 11. 17. Moſes was read and preached in their Synagogues, Act. 13. 21. Much more are the Churches of Chriſtians appointed for preaching and praier, Act. 20. 7. The firſt day of the weeke, which is the Lords day, they came together to breake bread, and Paul preached vnto them: Ergo, the adminiſtration of the word and Sacraments with prayer, is the chiefe and onely cauſe of the holie aſſemblies of Chriſtians.

Argum. 2. Altars we haue none in our Churches: Saint Paul calleth it the Lords table, 1. Corinth. 10. 21. where we receiue the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt. And he calleth it bread, which is broken, 1. Cor. 11. 26. But bread is ſet vpon tables, not ſacrificed vpon altars.

Auguſtine alſo calleth it, Menſam Domini, the Lords table, Epiſt. 59. and Epiſt. 50. He ſheweth how cruelly the Donatiſts handled Maximian a Catholike Biſhop, beating him with clubs, euen in the Church, lignis altaris offraſtis immaniter ceciderunt, and wounded him with the wood of the Altar, which they had broken downe. Where though he improperly call it an Altar, yet was it a Communion table framed of wood, and made to be remoued, not fastened to the wall, as their popish altars were.

Damasus epistol. 4. Chorepiscopi ministerio presbyterorum contenti sint, atque mensa Domini participes tammodo existant: Let the locall Bishops be content to minister as Priests, and to be partakers onely of the Lords table: He saith the Lords table, not the Lords Altar.

And that Churches are ordeined for the word of God, prayer, and the sacraments, wee haue euident testimony of Councils. Synod. Moguntin. cap. 40. Templum orationis, diuini cultus & Sacramentorum officina, &c. They call our Temples or Churches, the shops of prayer, the diuine worship, and the Sacraments.

Coloniens. part. 9. cap. 13. Consecratur templum, &c. ut ab omnibus pariter conuenientibus Deo laudes solantur, diuinum verbum audiantur, ac ecclesiastica sacramenta ministrantur: The Church is consecrate, that of all men assebled together, praise should be rendred to God, the word of God heard, and the Sacraments of the Church ministred.

Yet further we haue the testimonie of their owne law, decret. p. 1. distict. 43. c. 5. Oratorium hoc sit, quod dicitur, &c. Let the Oratorie be that, which it is called; neither let any thing els be there done, then that which agreeth to the diuine Ministerie: and in the same place cap. 6. In Oratorio prater vnde & psallendi cultum, &c. In the Oratorie beside singing and praying, let nothing be done, &c. decret. part. 3. distict. 1. c. 21. Ioannes: Ecclesias Arrianorum, &c. The Churches of the Arrians, wherfoeuer you finde them, Diuinis precibus & operibus consecrate: Consecrate to diuine prayers, and workes. By these Canons it appeareth, that Churches are especially consecrated and ordayned for prayer.

Master George Wiseheart holy Martyr: Churches should be sustained and vpholden, that the people should be congregate vnto them, there to heare of God: for wherfoeuer is true preaching of the words of God, and lawfull vse of the Sacraments, vndoubtedly there is God himselfe. Fox. pag. 1270. col. 2. This then is the right and proper vse of Churches, as we haue seene.

THE SECOND ARTICLE, WHETHER CHVRCHES are more holy places in themselves.

The Papists.

God (they say) rather dwelleth and is present in Churches, then else where: and therefore it is ss. Error. more auailable for a man, euen to make his priuate prayer in the Church.

Argum. 1. The Temple of Salomon was ordained euen for the prayers of priuate men: and Salomon prayeth vnto God, that they might be heard, 1. King. 8. 38. So Anna prayed in the Tabernacle, 1. Sam. 1. And the Apostles went vp to the Temple to pray, Act. 3. 1. Ergo, prayers made in the Temple are more auailable, Bellarmin. cap. 4.

Ans. 1. See what Iewish arguments here are: because the Lord gaue an especiall blessing to his Temple amongst the Iewes, that was the onely place for sacrifices, and also a peculiar priuiledged place for prayer: therefore he will bind and tye himselfe to some certaine place now. But our Saviour saith cleane contrary vnto the woman of Samaria, The house commeth, when ye shall neither in this mountaine, nor in Ierusalem worship my Father, Iohn 4. 21. The prayers and sacrifices of Christians are now no more tyed and limited to places. 2. That was but a type vnto the Iewes, that as then God would be onely heard in his Temple: so his name is now onely truly inuocated and called vpon in his Church.

3. It is falsly alleadged that the Apostles went vp, onely to pray, to the Temple: they went vp at the ninth houre of prayer, when the people were accustomed to goe vnto the Temple, that they might preach the Gospell vnto them.

Argum. 2. Daniel praied with his window open Eastward to Ierusalem, where the Temple was, Dan. 6. Anna departed not out of the Temple, but gaue her selfe to continuall fasting and prayer: Ergo, priuate prayers are more auailable in the Church; Bellarmin. cap. 4.

Ans. 1. First, the argument followeth not from the vse of the Iewish Temple, to the practise of Christians now: for we denie not, but that there was an especiall blessing promised to those that prayed in the Temple of Salomon, according to the request which he made at the dedication of the Temple: If any man pray in this place, then bears thou in heauen. 1. Reg. 8. 31. But now the prophesie of Malachie is fulfilled, Malachie 1. 11. that incense should vnder Christ be euery where offered vnto God: this difference betweene the Temple of the Iewes, and of Christians, Origen maketh, irail. 35. in Matth. Vir quidam Iudaicus non dubitat de huiusmodi, &c. A Jew doth nothing doubt of this, that is, that one place is more holy for prayer then another, but he that is departed from Iewish fables to Christs doctrine, doth say that the place doth not make one prayer better then another.

Secondly, Daniel openeth not his window to Ierusalem, in respect of the holinesse of the place, place, but to make it knowne, that he prayed to God, that was there worshipped, and to shew his confidence in Gods promises for their returne thither: Anna also continued in the Temple, as being the fittest place for her widowes state, and solitarie life, being sequestred from all humane encumbrances, and in respect of the helpes of religion by the sacrifices and common prayers; not in regard of any inherent holinesse there.

The Protestants.

WE preferre publike prayers made by the congregation in the Church, before priuate prayers, not because of the place, but in respect of the congregation, whose prayers ioynly altogether are more feruent and effectuell, then the prayer of one man: But if wee compare publike prayer with publike, and priuate with priuate, wee doubt not but that the one and the other being made in faith, may as well be heard out of the Church, as in it.

Argum. 1. The promise of our Sauour is generall, Wheresoeuer two or three are gathered together, I am in the midst amongst them, Matth. 18. 20. So Saint Paul, I will that men euery where lift up pure hands, 1. Timoth. 2. Ergo, they may be heard praying in faith in any place.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Apostle speaketh of publike prayer, which is done in the Church, as it may appeare by the beginning of the chapter, vers. 1. I exhort, that supplications, prayers, intercessions be made, &c. which is vnderstood of common and publike prayer, Bellar. cap. 4.

Ans. The Apostle speaketh not onely of publike, but of priuate prayer also: first, because Kings, for whom the Apostle would haue intercessions made, are not onely publicly, but also privately to be praied for. Secondly, the Apostle would haue the pray euery where: but in euery place there is not a Church to pray in. Thirdly, it is the same, with that the Apostle saith elsewhere, 1. Thessal. vers. 17. Pray continually: which is vnderstood of priuate prayer.

Argum. 2. So our Sauour saith, When thou prayest, enter into thy chamber: he saith not go to the Church. Bellarmino saith, he entereth into his chamber, that prayeth without vaine glorie, whether he doe pray secretly or openly.

Ans. Our Sauours words are plaine without allegorie, for he speaketh of shutting the doore of the chamber: and there is a manifest opposition betweene the Pharisees praying in the corners of the streets, and the frequence of people, and the others praying in secret. And whereas Bellarmino obiectioneth, that the shutting of the doore cannot literally be vnderstood, because that Christ himselfe prayed in the mountaines often, but in his chamber wee doe not read, that he praied: the answer is readie: first, by shutting of the doore Christ vnderstandeth praying in secret, as it is in the text, God, which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly: Secondly, no man need, if Christ is not read to shut the doore, for he had no house, nor place, where to rest his head: Thirdly, in that Christ praied in the mountaine, but in the Temple he prayed not, but preached, Lukas. 37. it teacheth vs, that euery where our praers are acceptable vnto God.

Argum. 3. Our Sauour Christ saith, that vnder the Gospell, neither in that mountaine, nor in Ierusalem God will be worshipped, but in spirit and truth, Iohn 4. 21. Ergo, the worship of God is not tied to any place.

Bellarmino answereth, Christ speaketh not of the place, but of the manner of worship: that is, that henceforth God would not be worshipped, after the manner of the Samaritanes and Iews: for afterward the Apostles praied in the temple at Ierusalem, Bellar. cap. 4.

Contra. First, our Sauour speaketh both of the place and manner: for so the woman proposeth the question of the place of worship, vers. 20. Our Fathers worshipped in the mountaine, and say that in Ierusalem, &c. And our Sauour answereth her accordingly, fitly, and appertinently to the matter: for otherwise the answer should not be fitting, if the woman should aske one thing, and Christ answer another. Secondly, Bellarmino ignorantly distinguisheth that, which is not to be distinguished, for to be addicted to a certaine place of praier, is of, or belonging to the manner of praier: wherefore, Christ comprehendeth both in one speech, that though praier afterward might be made both in the mountaine, and at Ierusalem, yet they should not pray, with that opinion of holines in the place, as before; as the Iewes and Samaritanes did.

Augustine saith, Quid supplicaturus Deo locum sanctum requiris? volens in Templo orare, in terra: & ita age semper, ut Dei Templum sis, ibi enim Deus exaudis ubi habitat: When thou art about to pray, what needest thou to go to any sacred place? wouldst thou pray in the Temple or Church? see that thou be the Temple of God, and there the Lord will soonest heare where he dwelleth.

Bernard hath an excellent speech of this matter: Habens sanctis aatem, sed propter corpora vestra, &c. Your Churches are holie, because of your bodies: as your soules are holie, because of the spirit that dwelleth in you; your bodies holie, because of your soules; so this house is holie because of your bodies: not in themselves therefore are they holie, &c.

Council. Constantin. 6. cap. 7. Singulis diebus quisque duobus vicibus oret, &c. Euery day let euery man pray twice, in morning and euening; in the Church, if he be in the Church: but he that is in his iourney, or vpon any occasion in the woods or fields, wheresoeuer the morning or euening season season findeth him, let him pray there, knowing that God is every where present. Every place therefore hath Gods presence, and therefore is alike in it selfe sanctified for prayer.

Gaugres. Concil. in subscriptione. Omnem locum edificatum in nomine Dei honoramus, & congregationem in Ecclesia factam ob utilitatem communem recipimus: We do honour every place built in the name of the Lord, and do reuerence or receiue the congregation or assembly made in the Church, for the common vtilitie. Churches then are holy places and to be reuerenced, because of their holiness, and for the holy assemblies there made: the people assembled for diuine exercises make the place holy, not the place the people. As it is said of the Israelites, Non propter locum gentem, sed propter gentem Dominus locum elegit: God did not choose the nation for the place, but the place for the nations sake; Concil. Aquisgran. lib. 2. cap. 24.

Likewise, Cod. lib. 2. tit. 43. leg. 2. Locum, in quo sepelitur corpus, efficitur religiosus: The place is made religious, or holy for the buriall of the dead. If the presence of the dead make the place holy, much more the assemblies of the liuing: wherefore the place is not holy of it selfe, but because of the presence.

Deut. 32. 2. an. 1. 2. 3. 15. Iuxta altare, vltimo sepeliatur, That no man should bee buried neere to the Altar. But if there were an inherent holines in the Altar, it were an iniurie to the dead to barre them from the more holy place.

I cannot here omit the notable sentence of Origen: Locum sanctum in terris non requiro possum, sed in corde. I doe not seeke an holy place in the earth, but in the heart: the holy place is rather so to be taken, quam si putemus structuram lapidum, &c. then to thinke, that the building of insensible stones is the holy place, Hom. 5. in Leuit.

Master Tindall holy Martyr hath sealed this truth: Christ taking away the difference of places, will be worshipped in every place: Neither is there in his kingdome one place holy, another profane, but all places are indifferent, neither canst thou more heartely and better beleue, trust, and loue God in the Temple at the Altar, in the Churchyard, then in thy barne, kitchen, vineyard, bed, &c. And to be short, the Martyrs of Christ haue honoured him in darke dungeons and prisons. For pag. 12, 4. col. 1.

THE THIRD ARTICLE, WHETHER CHVRCHES and Temples may be dedicated to Saints.

The Papists, holding off

They nothing doubt, but as Churches may bee consecrated, and dedicated to the honour of 6. Error God, they may be also vnto Saints.

Argum. 1. The Temple of Salomon was not only built for sacrifices and prayer, but for the Arke of God also: as Dauid saith to Nathan: Now I dwell in an house of Cedar trees, and the Arke of God remaineth within curtaines, 2. Sam. 7. 2. But there is as great honour, yea and greater, due to the reliques of Saintes: Ergo, it is lawfull to build Temples vnto them; Bellarmine capite 1. 1.

Ans. 1. When you haue a commaundement to build Churches for reliques, as they had to build a Temple for the Arke, ye may be bold to doe it.

2. To build a Temple for the Arke, was all one as to build an house for the Lord: for it was the Mercie seate of God: it pleased the Lord to dwell betweene the Cherubims, there to shew euident tokens of his presence. And whereas Dauid consulted to build an house for the Arke, the Lord doth thus answere him by his Prophet: Shalt thou build me an house for my dwelling, ver. y. So the Temple was made in the honour of God, being made for the Arke. It was all one, for the Arke to dwell there, and the Lord himselfe to dwell there: This argument therefore maketh nothing for them.

The Protestants, holding off

To build Churches and religious houses in the name and honour of Saintes, and to make them Patrones and protectors of those places, and there to call vpon them, and make prayers vnto them, all which is defended by our aduersaries, we hold it vterly vnlawfull, as tending to manifest impietie, and idolatrie.

Argum. 1. No diuine worship is to be giuen to Saintes, therefore no Churches to be made in their names: for it is part of the diuine worship to haue Temples.

Augustine saith, Non Martyribus Temples, sacerdotia aut sacra constituimus, quoniam non ipsi, sed Deus eorum nobis Datus est: We doe not ordaine Temples, Priesthoods, or sacrifices for Martyrs: for not they, but their God, is both their God and ours. None therefore is to haue a Temple but God. But marke I pray you their distinction: They say, that Religious houses as they are Temples, we onely consecrate to God, but as they are Basilicae, palaces, sumptuous buildings, the selfe same Churches may be dedicate to Saintes. Like as (saith he) one and the same altar of stone, as it is an altar

Dei, lib. 8. cap.
vlt.

De ciuitate
Dei, lib. 8. cap.

altar is consecrated to God: and it may be also the tombe of some Martyr, and so also dedicate to the remembrance of the Martyr, Bellarmin. cap. 4.

Ans. If one and the same Church may be consecrate both to God, and to some Saint beside, I pray you who is the principall patrone of that Church; God or the Saint? You will say, I am sure, God is. But I will prooue the contrarie, because it hath the name of the Saint: It is called by the name of Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or some other, not by the name of God. Thus they are not contented to make Saints Gods fellowes, but will euen thrust him out of place, giuing vnto Saints the honour of Gods house.

Secondly, the instance or example of the altar, which he alleageth, cannot serue his turne. First, such altars of stone to be sacrificed vpon are not agreeable to the times of the Gospell, the Church hauing alwaies of ancient time vsed tables, not altars, as I haue shewed before out of Saint Augustine. error. 54. And Origen thus witnesseth of his times, Veniens principio sacerdotum, &c. The prince of priests being come, the priest in figure ceased, &c. the temple made of stones is destroyed, to giue place to the temple made of liuely stones: effusum est altare, quod erat deorsum, &c. the altar below was broken downe, because the heavenly altar had appeared, Tract. 11. in Matth. Wherefore if Communion tables were in vse, not altars, they could not serue for Tombes or Sepulchers. Secondly, the vse of altars being admitted, yet they ought not to be made places of buriall: Dier. par. 2. caus. 13. qu. 2. c. 15. Prohibendum est secundum maiorum instituta, &c. We forbid according to the decrees of our elders, that none be buried in the Church, prope altare verò, but neere vnto the altar in no case. Thirdly, though it were a lawfull place for buriall vnder the altar, yet cannot the same place be consecrate to the honour both of God and the Martyr; seeing God will not part stakes with any, or deuide his honour.

Thirdly, this ridiculous distinction, betweene a Temple, and a Basilica, or palace, is contrarie to antiquitie: Cod. lib. 8. tit. 12. leg. 20. Basilicam inauratam nullius imaginis obumbratione fustari, &c. We forbid, that the Basilica be obscured with the shadowing forth of any image. This law admitteth not the image of any in the Church; how then can the Church be consecrate to any Martyr, as patrone, whose image is not suffered to be there? Here then, Basilica, is taken for a temple dedicate to the honour of God. And in the Councell of Wormes, Can. 48. it is forbidden, ut in basilica, that no Basilica, that is, Church, be dedicate in the name of the dead: Ergo, not of Saints departed.

See also what one of your owne writers saith; Loca publica, &c. oratoria, sunt Dominica Locus, sunt basilica & ecclesia Græcis: The publike places of prayer are called Oratories and the Lords house of the Latines, of the Greekes Basilica, &c. So that the one name of Temple is the Latine, the other of Basilica is the Greeke, Effene. in 1. Timoth. 39. b. Thus doth it appeare how full of error the Iesuite is in his sophisticall distinctions.

Argum. 1. How names are to be giuen to places, wee cannot better learne, then of those ancient founders of names, the holy Patriarkes: As Abraham, Genes. 22. 14. calleth the mountaine Iebonab-jireh. The Lord hath scene. So Jacob giueth holy names to the place where he met the Angels, Genes. 32. 2. and where he wrestled with the Angell, vers. 31. They, as wee see, gaue holy and reuerent names vnto places, not made peculiar for Gods seruice, but onely for ciuill vse for the places to be called and knowne by: how much more ought Churches and houses of God to be called by his names.

We therefore conclude, that Churches ought not to be erected in Saints names, to worships them thereby, and make them our Patrones, Mediators, and presenters of our prayers: for this were great Idolatrie: Euen like as the Heathen called their Temples by the names of their Idols, Veneramus, Iupiter, Diana, and the like: Yet we refuse not to call our Churches by the names of Saints, as they haue been called, of olde, because wee are not inuentors of names and termes, which inured by continuall custome can hardly bee left. We vse them onely as ciuill termes to distinguish places by: if any otherwise vse them, for any religious purpose, they doe amisse. And yet we denie not, but that the names of holie men may be safely remembred, by thankesgiuing vnto God for such excellent instruments, and setting before our eyes their good example. And concerning the names which haue been superstitiously giuen in times past vnto Churches and other places (though it were to be wished, that they neuer had been so giuen) yet now we vse them (setting apart all superstition) as ciuill names of difference, as S. Luke describeth the ship of Alexandria, wherein they were carried, whose badge (saith he) was Castor and Pollux, Act. 28. 11. In a ciuill matter of description, he refuseth not to vse the names of the Heathen Gods. Augustinus also giueth a good rule concerning such names. He speaketh of the names of daies, which were called after the names of Heathenish Idols, as the 4. day in the weeke, which wee call Wednesday, was then called, and is yet in the Latine tongue, Dies Mercurij, Mercurie his day. Sic dicitur a pagano & a multis Christianis, sed volumus ut dicant, & utinam corrigantur: melius de ore Christiano res loquendi ecclesiasticis procedit: So is it called of the Heathen, and of many Christians, but I would not have them called so, and I wish they were amended: For a Christian kind of speaking best becometh a Christian. Sed si quem forte consuevit contraxerit, &c. sciat illos omnes homines fuisse: But if custome preuaile with a man so to speake, let him vnderstand that all they were but men whom the Heathen take for Gods.

So say we, it were to be wished, that we had names void of all shew of superstition: but seeing for our speaking we must be ruled by custome, let vs know that those Saints, by whose names places are called, are no Gods, nor Gods fellowes, nor patrones, or Mediators for vs, nor any way to be worshipped: but they are the fellow-seruants of all faithfull Christians, to be reuerenced with a Christian dutie of loue, not a religious worship of seruice.

Let vs see the consent of antiquitie: Council. Gangren. can. 5. Ecclesia domus Dei, &c. The Church is called the house of God: Ergo, not of any Saint. And in the subscription of the Council. Quoniam in nomine Dei edificatum honoramus: Wee doe honour euery place built in the name of God: It was the generall vse of those times, onely to build Churches to the honour, and in the name of God.

Council. Vermanen. can. 48. Vt nulla basilica sub defunctorum constructa nomine dedicetur: That no Church built in the name of the dead, or departed this life, should bee dedicated. But the Saints were sometime liuing, and now are dead to the world, &c.

The holy Martyrs haue sealed this truth: Iohn Lamberti allegeth out of Augustine, that the Angels will not we should build any Churches in reuerence of them, but would that with them wee should honour the originall maker and performer of all. Fox pag. 1108.

Master Tindall holy Martyr: To build a Church in the honour of our Ladie, or any other Saint is in vaine, they cannot helpe vs. Fox pag. 1247. col. 2. artic. 10.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE ADOR- ning and beautifying of Churches.

The Papists.

The Temples and Churches of Christians, they would haue built in the most sumptuous and costly manner; yea, in beautie to exceede the palaces of Princes, with silver, gold, silke, velvet, to be decked and adorned, Bellarmin. cap. 6. 57. Error.

Argum. 1. The Tabernacle of the Iewes was of exceeding beautie: the curtaines thereof, of silke; the vessels, euen to the snuffers for the Lampes, were of gold; the Priests garment had a brightness of gold, set about with precious stones: Therefore why should not the Temples of Christians be in like sort adorned, and set forth? as Isay prophesieth, that the Glorie of Lebanon shall come, the Firre, Oliue, and Boxe tree to beautifie my Sanctuary, Isay 60. 13. which is literally to be vnderstood, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, if the Iesuite had turned his argument and reasoned thus: the Temple of the Iewes was gorgeous, and sumptuous, and beautifull to the eye: therefore Churches of Christians ought not to be so now; he had reasoned much better: for their seruing of God was externally; now God will be worshipped in spirit. All things were done vnto them, in types and figures: the outward glorie of their Temple was a liuely figure of the spirituall beautie of the Church of Christ. Secondly, where you would haue the prophetic of Isay to bee literally vnderstood, you haue made a good argument for the Iewes: for then they shall haue their Sanctuary restored againe, which the Prophet speaketh of by name. Thirdly, if that place of Isay haue a literall sense, why not that also, Isa. 54. 10. I will lay thy stones with Carbuncle, and thy foundation with the Saphires: I will make thy windowes of Emeraulds, and thy gates shining stones: Say also that this shall be literally performed: and so according to this grosse sense, the prophetic of Haggai shall also be fulfilled; The glorie of the last house shall bee greater then the first, Hagg. 2. vers. 18. But I thinke you neuer saw Church built in this goodly manner, in beautie surpassing the Iewish Temple; nor neuer shall.

Argum. 2. The widow is commended for casting into the offerings of God all shee had, Luk. 21. 3. The woman that bestowed the precious ointment vpon Christ, is said to haue done a good worke: Ergo, by the same reason it is a good worke to bestow sumptuously vpon Churches, which are the houses of God, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, the argument doth not follow, for the bodie of Christ is more worth then stones, and the offerings of the Altar of more value, then the tiles of the Church: if extraordinarie cost be fitt to be bestowed vpon the one, it is not seemely for the other. Secondly, the widow cast in all shee had, and would ye haue men also to bestow all they haue vpon stone walles? Christs example is extraordinarie, and it was once done for his buriall: how then can you draw an extraordinarie President to an ordinarie practise?

The Protestants.

That the Churches of Christians, and places of prayer, ought decently to be kept; yea, and with convenient cost and seemly beautie to be built and repaired, and Church vessels with other necessarie furniture, to be of the best, not of the worst sort, we doe both commend, and practise it: the Ciuill law saith, Ornare sepulchrum, non est prohibitum: It is not forbidden to adorne a sepulcher. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 43. leg. 7. much lesse a Church. And we learne by the example of our Sauiour (that cast out of the Temple sellers of doves and money changers, and would not suffer them to carrie vessels through it, Marke 11.15.16.) that the house of prayer ought to be reverently regarded: but yet it followeth not, that such immoderate and excessive cost should be bestowed vpon the walles of the Church and Idols, to garnish and beautifie Idolatrie, and poore people in the meane time to want. A Matrone ought to go comely and decently apparelled, though not tricked vp with the jewels and ornaments of an harlot.

Argum. 1. Our Sauiour Christ reproveth the Scribes and Pharisees, because they drew the people to be good vnto the Altar, and to bestow largely vpon them, and so leaue their parents helpelesse, Matth. 15.5. And he often doth inculcate that golden saying, I will haue mercie and not sacrifice: it is better to succour the liuing temples of God, which are the bodies of his poore children, then to bestow superfluous cost vpon dead temples of stone.

Argum. 2. Christ also doth rebuke them, because like hypocrites they did garnish the sepulchres of the prophets, and yet persecuted their doctrine, Matth. 23.29. So all popish Pharisees are worthie of blame, that take greater care in garnishing the temples and tombes of the holy Apostles and Martyres, then they doe in setting forth their holy doctrine, and preaching the Gospel, nay they doe contemne, persecute, and hate that doctrine, for the which those holy men dyed: so that this prouerbe was very well deuised of them; In times past we had golden Priests and wooden Cuppes, now we haue wooden Priests and golden Cuppes.

Argum. 3. Christ in the day of iudgement shal condemne the wicked, for omitting the works of mercie, as Matth. 25. because they did not feed and cloath the poore, &c. he saith not, because they did not bestow gold and siluer vpon Churches.

Bellarmin answereth, that the lesse sinners are there remembered, whereby it is gathered that the greater sinners shall be much more punished: Christ saith not, Go into hel fire because oppressed the poore, but because ye did not cherish them: yet if this be a sinne, the other much more, so if he be damned, that gaue no almes, much more he that did not build, or reparaire the Church cap. 6. in fine.

Contra. First, Is it true then in popish diuinitie, that hee that buildeth not a Church, that is able, shall be damned? if this were so, or men could be so perswaded, wee should haue Churches ynow, and too many: and I thinke many a pope Catholike man amongst themselves, hath not bin a builder of Churches. Againe, it is most absurd to say or thinke, that not to reparaire a Church with superfluous cost, is a greater sinne, then not to refresh a man readie to die: for the one is a liuing member of Christ, the other is but a dead stone: he may be ashamed to broach such stuffe. Thirdly, it is no signe at all not to bestow princely cost in garnishing of a Church (for modest and seemly cost, we speake not against) much lesse a greater sinne.

Augustine exhorting the people to be liberall to their Bishops and Pastors, thus writeth further: Fortis ecclesiam fabricat, fortis vitile aliquid in domo Dei molitur, expellat ut attendat, expellat ut intelligat super egenum. Perhaps he is in building a Church, and doing some profitable worke in the house of God, he looketh that thou shouldest attend, and consider of his neede. By this appeareth, that Churches were not superfluous costly in Augustines time: for nothing was done, but what was thought necessarie and profitable: and the builders (which were then for the most part their Bishops) were not of any great abilitie, to bestow superfluous cost: nay they were not able to finish the necessarie workes, without the beneuolence and contribution of the people.

Bernard in his time much complained of the superfluous cost that was bestowed vpon Churches: Domum Dei decet sanctitudo, qua non tam politis marmoribus, quam ornatis moribus decoratur: & pharai, & idoli delicta mentes; quum superauratur parietes: Holiness becommeth Gods house, which is rather delighted with vnpolluted manners, then polished marble; with pure wits rather, then painted and gilded walles: ad milites templi cap. 5. Againe saith he: Omissio orationum immensa inordinatio, immoderata longitudo, &c. I omitte to speake of the excessive height of their canopies, the vnrasonable length, the superfluous breadth, the curious paintings: Qua domo orationis inordinata, & consequenter aspersum, impediunt affectum, & multi quodammodo representant antiquum ritum Indorum. Which while they draw vnto the sight or aspect of him that prayeth, do hinder his affection, and do seeme to me to represent the old rite of the Jewes: &c. If Bernard had liued in these late popish times, I thinke, he should haue been talked withall for this speech: he saith contrarie to Bellarmino, who vntruely affirmeth, that the gorgeous ornaments of Churches do sturre vp deuotion, and not hinder it: whereas S. Paul also saith, We walke by faub, not by sight. 2. Cor. 5.7. Whereupon upon it may bee inferred, that the sight of the eye doth hinder the faith of the heart.

Zacharius Bishop of Rome thought he had done enough, when he brought glasse vessels into the Church for the vse of the Sacrament, in stead of wooden. But when Urbanus after him, for glasse vessels gaue them siluer, it was then thought, that nothing could be added: but now gold vpon gold, pearles, precious stones, and all the costlines that may be, is thought too little to adorne the popish Masse: Wherein they forget the auncient decree of Ensebinus Bishop of Rome, Nam si serice pannus aut vitello, sed puro lineo sacrificium altaris consecratur. That the sacrifice of the Altar, (for so significantly they called the Sacrament of the Lords bodie) should not be consecrate in silke, or stained or coloured cloth, but in pure and plaine linnen.

Col. 3. 17. leg. 17. Iust. It is made lawfull for the redeeming of captiues, to sel the ornaments, vessels and vestments of the Church: & this reason is giuen, Quia non absurdum est, animas hominum quibusque vestimentis preferri: It is not absurd to preferre the soules of men before vessels & vestments whatsoever: Erge, it is a better worke to cloth the naked, then to hang a Church, &c.

Likewise decret. part. 2. can. 12. q. 2. cap. 70. Aurum sacramenta non querunt: The Sacraments need no gold. Against superfluous ornaments there is extant the decree of Clement 5. Clementin. lib. 5. tit. 1. c. 1. Dona ad animum sibi intusfructum respicit principaliter, non ad manum: God chiefly respecteth the mind of him that ministreth, not his hand: neither will he be serued with such vessels and instruments, as are not agreeable to the condition of those, which serue him, &c. Superfluitie, costlines, or curiositie in Church vessels is not seemely, &c. Likewise extrau. com. lib. 1. tit. 5. c. 1. Iam. 12. decreed against the begging Friers, Quod plures campanas, because they had many bells in their Churches, that from henceforth, they should haue but one: yet of all other superfluous ornaments, some superfluous cost in a ring of bells seemeth to be more tolerable.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE DEDICATION OF Churches.

The Papists.

The superstitious dedication of their Churches, with the Annual memories thereof, they would warrant by the example of our Sauour Christ, who was present at the feast of the dedication, which was instituted by Iudas Mac. Ioh. 10. 22. and by his presence allowed it, Rhem. in eum loc.

And also consecrated the Altar with oyle, before the times of the law; and called it the house of God: vnder the law Moses did consecrate the Tabernacle, & the altar with oyle. Exo. 14. Bell. c. 5.

The Protestants.

First, a thanksgiving to God for the restitution of the temple after the horrible prophannation thereof, is a thing approued by Gods lawe, but it is not necessarie to keepe a yearly memorie thereof: for neither was there any such instituted by Ezechias, after the prophannation of the Temple by Achaz and Vrias; nor by Iosias, after the same had been most horribly polluted by Manasses and Amon; nor by Zorobabel, Esgias or Nehemiab, after it was reedified, when it had been vtterly destroyed by the Chaldees.

Again it is most absurd, that by the example of Jacob, and Moses, he pleadeth for the restitution of Iewish ceremonies: for S. Paul saith, these were shadowes of things to come, but the bodie in Christ, Coloss. 2. 17. The bodie therefore being come, the shadow vanisheth: hee might by the same reason as well bring in Iewish sacrifices, because Jacob before the Law, and Moses vnder the law offered sacrifices: but herein I refuse not the triall of your owne law, decret. part. 2. can. 12. q. 2. cap. 71. Tunc hac probabantur a Domino, &c. Then these things were allowed of God (speaking of the ornaments of the Tabernacle) when as the Priests offered sacrifice, &c. all these things went before in figure, &c. So may we say, of oyle, salt, oyntment, hyssope, with other ceremonies of the Iewes: what haue we to do with them now? they were as handmaids to waite vpon the externall sacrifices, which being abolished, they also should cease.

3. Your popish hallowing of Churches hath nothing like vnto it, but y name: for you vse a number of foolish ceremonies, & many of them grosse superstitions, in y dedication of your Churches.

First, there are twelue Crosses painted round about in the Church, and twelue burning Lampes set ouer against euery one of them, one against one: hereby (say they) the twelue Apostles are signified, that by the preaching of the Crosse gaue light to the whole world. 2. They vse oyle in anointing their altar, & other vessels, shewing hereby that they are consecrate to holy vses. 3. They sprinkle water, burne incense, set vp Taper light: this sheweth (saith the Iesuiste) that the place is consecrate to prayer, & other holy actions. 4. They sprinkle ashes round about the Church, and write in the floore the Greeke & Latine Alphabet from one side of the Church to the other. This betokeneth (say they) the preaching of faith, which is the foundation and ground of al righteousness, which was first taught in the Greeke & Latine tongue. 5. They beat vpon the Church doore, and call vpon Saints and Angels: that is, (say they) to command Sathan to depart, Bellar. cap. 5.

First, they offend in the number of their foolish ceremonies, exceeding herein the manner of the Jewiſh dedication : ſo that vnto them it may be ſaid, as Paul to the Galatians ; How turne you againe to impotent and beggerly rudiments? 4.9.

Secondly, they haue no warrant for their friuolous ſhadowes and ſignifications : Coloſſ. 2. 17 which are but ſhadowes of things to come, but the bodie is in Chriſt : we haue the bodie, what need any more ſhadowes? Chriſt will not now be worſhipped with Croſſes, aſhes, characters, candle light, and ſuch a piſh toyes.

Thurdly, ſome of theſe ceremonies are impious, and ſacrilegious : the inuocation of Angels and Saints, is a robbing of God of his honour, who onely is to be prayed vnto.

Epistol. 119.

Auguſtine ſaith of ſuch inuentors of newe rites and ceremonies, Ipsam religionem, quam Deus pauciſſimis ſacramentis liberam eſſe voluit, oneribus premunt : They cumber religion with burdeſome ceremonies, which the Lorde hath made free with a fewe Sacraments.

Neither hath this ceremonious rite of dedicating Churches, any ſuch ſignification as the Leſuite ſetteth downe, to be applied to the materiall Church: but as Bernard ſaith: In nobis ſpiritualiter impleri neceſſe eſt, qua in parietibus viſibiliter praeceſſerunt, It muſt neceſſarily be in vs ſpiritually fulfilled, which viſibly is done to the walles : de dedicat. eccleſ. ſerm. 1.

Concil. Coloniens. part. 9. cap. 11. Docendus eſt populus dedicatione eccleſia ſignificari dedicationem Eccleſie catholice, ac cuiuſlibet hominis Chriſtiani, qua dedicatur Deo. The people muſt be taught, that by dedication of the Church is ſignified the dedication of the whole Catholike Church, and of euery Chriſtian man, whereby he is conſecrate to God.

THE FIFT PART, OF THINGS HALLOWED and conſecrate for Churches.

The Popiſts.

39. Error.

They maintaine their ſuperſtitious and popiſh bleſſing with the Croſſe, the hallowing of wine, fire, palmes, aſhes, holy bread, holy water, ſalt, oyle, and ſuch like : which haue power, as they would beare vs in hand, to driue away diſeaſes and euill ſpirits, Rhem. auot. 2. Tim. 4. ſ. 11. Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Argum. 1. Firſt, for the hallowing of theſe creatures to holy vſes, and making of them ſpecially holy, they alleadge that ſaying of S. Paul, 1. Tim. 4. 5. Euery creature of God is good, and is ſanctified by the word of God and prayer : Ergo, theſe creatures may be ſanctified to holy vſes, as water alſo in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Eucharift : for the Apoſtle ſpeaketh not onely of the common benediction of meates, but of a more high and exact applying of graces, to holy vſes, Rhem. iſt.

Anſw. S. Paul here ſpeaketh onely of the common and ordinary vſe of Gods creatures, and meates and drinckes for euery mans priuate vſe : and he ſheweth how they are ſanctified by the word of God, which permitteth vnto the faithfull the free vſe of them ; and by prayer : not that they are vnclane by nature, but by pollution of ſin ; and by theſe meanes are made holy and cleane. Secondly, we confeſſe alſo, that ſome things ſet apart for the ſeruice of God, are more ſpecially called holy, as the Arke, Altar, and Temple: but it is not lawfull to ſeuer what creatures we will from the common vſe, and conſecrate them to the ſeruice of God, but ſuch as are appoynted by his word ; as water in Baptiſme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper haue the warrant of Gods word, as none of your popiſh trumperie haue : neither are theſe creatures ſo conſecrate holy in themſelues, to conferre or impart their holineſſe to other things, but are ſo called in reſpect of the holy vſe, for the which out of the word of God they are appoynted.

Argum. 2. For the efficacie and power of theſe hallowed things, they thus reaſon. The bitter water giuen to the adulterous woman cauſed her thigh to rot, if ſhe were guiltie, otherwiſe it made her fruitfull, Numb. 5. Eliſam healed the bitter water with caſting in ſalt : the Apoſtles healed the ſicke with annoynting them with oyle, Rhem. iſt. Bellarm. ibid. Ergo, theſe ſanctified creatures may doe the like.

Anſw. Firſt, the bitter water of it ſelfe had not that power, but by vertue of that oth, with the which the woman was charged. Againe, it hath the warrant of the word, as yours haue not. Secondly, Eliſam and the Apoſtles had the ſpirit to worke miracles, ſo haue not you: and they might haue done that they did without any ſuch meanes. Againe, it was common ſalt, and ordinary oyle which they vſed, not bleſſed before, after your popiſh manner.

The Proſtants.

Firſt, we hold that no ſuch things ought to be ſeparated for holy vſes, becauſe they haue not the warrant of the word of God: for all things that are ſanctified, are ſo ſanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1. Timoth. 4. 5. But they haue not the word of God for their warrant, neither doe they vſe any prayer of faith, but a ſuperſtitious kind of croſſing. Nadab and Abihu were conſumed with fire, becauſe they offered ſtraunge fire, not taken from the Altar : that is, they preſumed of their owne authoritie, without Gods commandement, to consecrate a strange element to Gods service, and were punished, Leuit. 10. Ergo, it is dangerous without Gods word, to consecrate any such things.

Insuper, Casarea in prefation. thus wee reade: Si quid in ceremonijs succreueris, ex quo superstitio conseri possit, illud tollatur: If any thing haue growne by the ceremonies of the Church, which may giue occasion of superstition, let it bee remoued. But such are popish rites and ceremonies: Er- go, &c.

See the confession of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Fortune, being asked what he said to the ceremonies of the Church: answered by the words of our Saviour Christ, All things that are not planted by my heavenly father, shall be plucked up, Matth. 15. And againe, In vaine doe men worship me with mens traditions and commandements. Christ openly rebuked the Scribes, Pharisees, Priests, for making Gods commandement of none effect, to support their owne tradition. The Bishop of Norwich replied; Thou liest, there is not such a word in all the Scriptures, Fox pag. 1919. So cunning were these popish Bishops in Scripture.

Concerning the sprinkling and washing with holy water, Augustine thus writeth of the same or like custome of washing: Ne ad ipsum baptismi sacramentum videretur pertinere, multi hoc in con- Epistol. 119. secutione recipere noluimus: nonnulli de consuetudine auferre non dubitauerunt: Many would not re- cap. 18. ceive that custome, least it should seeme to bee another baptisme: and some haue not doubted cleane to take it away.

I will object against them a conceit of one of their Popes: Innocent. 3. who decreed, that, Oleum non consecratum, &c. Oyle not hallowed or consecrated may be mingled with hallowed oyle, in the dedication of Churches; Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 40. c. 3. Thus wee see that they themselves hold not alwaies the consecrating of these toys necessarie.

Secondly, though such things were rightly hallowed, yet haue they no such power: Christ sheweth the way, whereby euill spirits are chased away; by prayer and fasting, Mark. 9. 29. And therefore to cure creatures, to expell Satan, without the word of God, is no better then a kinde of Magicke and enchantment.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 39. Pastores sedulo doceant, effectus, qui inde petuntur, non ipsarum rerum efficacia, sed diuina virtutis operationi, per fortissimi nominis Domini inuocationem tribuendos esse: Let the pastors diligently teach, that the effects (of these ceremonies of holie bread, holie water, &c.) are not ascribed to the efficacie of the things themselves, but to the working of the diuine power, by calling vpon the most powerfull name of God: Ergo, these hallowed things haue no such power of themselves.

Thomas Hooker holy Martyr hath put to his seale: who vpon these words, Act. 19. God so wrought by the hands of Paul, that there went parietes and napkins from him, &c. which gaue health; inferreth, that it was God that wrought, not the ceremonies, Fox pag. 1588. If these ceremonies wrought not themselves warranted by the Apostles, much lesse such as are inuented by men.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, OF PILGRIMAGES and Processions.

The Papists.

First, they hold that pilgrimages made to Ierusalem and the holy land, as they call it, to Rome, 60. Error. and to the memories of Saints in other places, to aske and obtaine their helpe, are godly and religious, and to bee much vsed of Christians, Council. Trident. sess. 25. Bellarm. cap. 8. The halt and lame went vp to Ierusalem to be healed in the poole of Bethesda, Iohn 5. Certaine Greekes came vp to worship at the feast, Iohn 12. 20. The Eunuch went vp in pilgrimage to Ierusalem, Act. 8. Ergo, it is lawfull and requisite, Rhemist. Bellarm. cap. 8.

Ans. First, when you can proue that such miracles are wrought at the memories of Saints, as the Scripture testifieth of this poole, men may be bold to goe vnto them for their bodily health, as we see there is resort vnto Bathes; but not for any religion. Secondly, the Grecians, that visited Ierusalem, were Iewes that dwelt amongst the Gentiles, or Proselytes, which were bound to visite the Temple at Ierusalem. Thirdly, the Eunuch went not vp in pilgrimage to Ierusalem, but to worship: for there was yet no other knowne place of the world, where God was worshipped.

Secondly, their solemne processions, especially vpon Palme Sunday, with carying the Sacra- 61. Error. ment about, strawing of rushes, bearing of Palmes, setting vp of boughes, hanging vp rich clothes, the Quere and Queristers singing: they would warrant by that action of our Saviour Christ, Mat. 21. 8. when he came riding to Ierusalem, and the people strawed their garments in the way, Rhemist. comment. Mat. 21. fel. 1.

First, your processions are horrible abusings and prophanations of the Lords institution, who ordained his Supper to bee eaten and drunke, not to bee caried about in procession like an heathenish Idol. Secondly, that which the people and Christs disciples did, they had warrant for out of the Scripture: but who required this theatricall pompe at your hands? The riding of Christ vpon an asse was before prophecied of, Zachar. 9. and the childrens crying out in the temple, Psalm. 8. The cutting downe of Palme branches was a ceremonie belonging to the feast of Tabernacles, truly accomplished by our delinuerance in Christ. But you haue turned the holy mysterie of Christs riding to Ierusalem, to a Maygame, and Pageant play.

The Protestants.

First, that no places ought to be frequented, or resorted vnto for religions sake, or more holines, or for the health of the soule: we proue it out of the word of God.

S. Peter saith, That in euery nation he that feareth God is accepted with him, Act. 10. 35. Ergo, one nation is as holy as another. And now our Sauour saith, That God will not be worshipped at Ierusalem, or in Mount Garrizin, but in spirit, and truth, Ioh. 4. He therefore that seeketh places to worship God in, as though he were rather to be found in one place then another, hath left the spirituall worship.

Augustine thus writeth concerning pilgrimage: He wissheth men to seeke them teachers and instructors, by whom they might be taught: Deerat in ea terra, quam incolebas? qua causa conuinceret peregrinari? But is there no teacher in the Countrey where thou dwellest? what better canst thou haue to trauaile, and goe in pilgrimage to seeke one in other countries? De uilit. or. dend. cap. 7.

Thus he would haue men to play the pilgrims, not to runne gadding to reliques and Images, but to seeke for teachers and instructors.

Against this superstitious vse of pilgrimages it was thus decreed: Conc. Cabilonens. sub Carolo, can. 44. 45. Sunt presbyteri, qui negligenter viuentes, in eo se purgari a peccatis putant, si praesentibus astant, Romam scilicet seu Turonem: sunt quidam laici qui se impuni peccato putant, &c. There be priests, who liuing dissolutely, do thinke themselues purged from their sinnes, by going to Rome or Turraine: there be certaine lay men, which thinke they may sinne without controuention by resorting to these places to pray: some mightie men, which vnder the pretence of going in pilgrimage do oppresse the poore: some poore men which do it, ut maiorem habeant mendaciorum teriam, to begge more freely: Non attendentes quod ait B. Hieronymus, Non Hierosolymam uisite, sed Hierosolymis bene uixisse, laudandum est: They marke not what Hierome saith, it is not prayfullnes to haue seene Ierusalem, but to haue liued well at Ierusalem: which sentence of S. Hierome is approued in their decrees. par. 2. caus. 12. c. 71. We see then much hurt, but litle good to comely pilgrimages.

Let vs heare the determination of one of their Popes: Innocent. 3. decret. Gregor. lib. 7. c. 12. gloss. Quia iam impletum est verbum Dei dicentis, &c. Because now the word of Christ is fulfilled, saying, The house shall come, and now is, when neither in this mountain, nor at Ierusalem, yeshu shall see the father, &c. Videri poterat, quod non minus in ecclesia tua, quam Orientali terra profumum orationibus: It might seeme, that you might as much profite by your prayers in your owne Church at home, as in the East Countrey: meaning, that which they call the holy land. Here we haue the determination of a Pope against the necessitie of pilgrimages, and that warranted by Scripture.

See the confession of holy Martyrs: William Sweeting persecuted to death, for saying to his wife, that it were better for her to keepe at home, and attend vpon her businesse, then to go in pilgrimage, For pag. 818. Isabel Morwin, for saying, she would go no more on pilgrimage while she liued, for all Saints (said she) are in heauen, pag. 827. col. 2. Thomas Gessrey persecuted for saying, That true pilgrimage was barefoot to go and visit the poore, weake, and sicke: for they are the true Images of God, pag. 827. col. 1. Mistresse Cotismore, for speaking these words, That if she went to her chamber and prayed there, shee should haue as much merite, as though she went to Walsingham in pilgrimage: and that folkes go on pilgrimage more for the greene way, then any deuotion, pag. 845. col. 2.

Secondly, as touching the popish pompous processions, they are both superstitious, in renewing and renewing the Iewish ceremonies, such as the feast of Tabernacles was, which are all now abolished as shadowes by the comming of Christ: and they are plainely idolatrous, for they carue about their bready god in procession, and make an Idoll of a peece of baked wheat: but Paul saith, The Sacrament ought to be receiued with thankgiuing in the Churches and congregations of Christians, 1. Cor. 11. 33. not to be caried about to be gazed vpon in the fields. Seemly processions, void of superstition, which are vsed for ciuill purposes, as to maintaine the limits and boundes of townships, and withall by the sight of Gods blessing vpon the creatures to be stirred vnto thankfulness, we neither millike nor condemne.

Conc. Colon. part. 9. cap. 8. Pro processiones per agros & campos amplius non peragantur, &c. That processions should be no longer made through the fields, because that by occasion of such walking, which which was instituted for the appeasing of God, many finnes are committed: Wherefore it seemeth better to vs, that these and such like supplications from henceforth should be made within the compass of the Church. Popish processions, as we see, are heere by a popish Countell abridged. This also hath been the iudgment of the holy Martyrs: Thomas Spicer, Iohn Dey put to death for refusing to follow the Crosse in procession, p. 1912. col. 2. artic. 6. Ralfe Allerton for refusing to carry the Crosse in procession, p. 2018. col. 1.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE HOLY

Land, and holy warres for the same, as they were called.

The Papists.

They which are but a little acquainted with ancient stories, shall find, that there were neuer in Christendome such bloody warres, and for so long a time, as those, which were at the instigation of the Popes, taken in hand by christian Princes for the recovery of the holy land, in so much that they were made to beleue, that it was a meritorious worke: Whereupon King Ricbard the first, calling to minde his rebellion and disobedience to his father, in part of satisfaction, purposed a voyage into the Holy land, as it was called, to redeeme Christs patrimonie from the Infidels, For pag. 235. Bellarm. de laicis. lib. 3. cap. 16. For why? they say, it is an Holy land: for if the places of Gods apparition are counted holy, Exod. 3. 5. Ios. 5. 5. much more the places of Christs nation, buriall, passion, and resurrection. Saint Peter calleth the place where Christ was transfigured, The holy mount, Rhemist. 1. Tim. 4. 8. 10.

The places where God appeared in times past, were holy for that time onely of Gods presence, not for euer after: and the mount is called holy in respect of the time, wherein the transfiguration was, not that the holinesse of the place doth alwayes continue: for that place which Iacob called Bethel, the house of God, Genes. 28. is by the Prophet called Bethaven, the house of wickednesse, Ose. 4. 15. because of the idolatries there committed: What was now begun of the holinesse of the place? So the mount of Oliues, which for the fruitfulness thereof was called Mons Miscebe, the mount of oyle; was afterward termed Mons Masebe, the mountaine of corruption, because of the idolatrie there committed, 2. Reg. 23. 3.

This also is Origens iudgement of the holinesse of places, Nec ipsa Ierico locus erat sanctus, &c. Neither was Ierico an holy place, but because the Prince of Gods warfare was there, it was called holy: The place also where Moses stood, was not holy of it selfe, but because the Lord stood with Moses, Transiuit Domini sanctificauerat locum: The presence of the Lord did sanctifie the place. If then the holy presence made those places holie, they were no longer holy, then they had that presence.

Noma. action. 4. ex Leontio: Sion tanquam illius civitatem, &c. We reuerence Sion, as hul doe: Nazareth, as his cuntry: Iordane, as his laner: not worshipping the region it selfe, or the stones, but him that there appeared, and was conuerfant, euen Christ our Lord. The land therefore is not holy in it selfe, but it was holy because of Christ, while hee was conuerfant there.

The Protestants.

To warre against the Turkes vpon iust cause, as to seeke to defend our selues from their incursions, and to maintaine the confines and bounds of Christendome, to deliuer Christians violently and cruelly kept in slauerie vnder him, we hold it lawfull: but to wage battaile with him, onely for a superstitious deuotion to the land of Palestina, to recouer it out of his hand, we see no warrant at all for it.

Argum. 1. The euill successe that Christians haue had against them, and the shamefull overthrowes that they haue sustained at their hands, doe euidently shewe, that God was not pleased with those superstitious warres. While Princes had a good quarrell, seeking onely to maintaine their owne, and to deliuer Christian countries from the thraldome of the Turkes, God prospered them, as the famous victories of Scanderbegus, and Iohannes Huniades obtayned against Amurat the 8. Turkish Emperour, doe notably testifie: but those superstitious and pope-holy warres, though sometimes they had good successe, yet in the end al went to wracke. And as their cause was not good, so neither were the means that they vsed: for they brought S. George, and S. Duns into the field against the Turkes, and left Christ at home. If the Israelites could not be deliuered from the Philistines by the presence of the Arke, but thirtie thousand fell before them, and all because of their finnes: let not men thinke that popish Saints can defend them, while their liues remaine vireformed at home.

Argum. 2. That the heathen are not to be prouoked to warre, but vpon iust cause, that is, when they prouoke vs; it appeareth by the example of the Israelites, who as they came from Egypt, sent vnto the King of Edom and Moab, that they might haue leaue to walke through their land:

De Ciuitat.
Dei lib. 19.
cap. 7.

but they not granting so much, yet the people of God offered them no violence, but went a longer journey about, Iudg. 11. 17.

Augustine saith, Sapiens gesturus est iusta bella: sed multo magis dolebit iustorum necessitatem esse bellorum: A wise man will take iust warre in hand: but it more grieueth him that he hath iust cause to warre. And what he meaneth by iust warre, he further sheweth: Iniquitas partis aduersa iusta bella ingerit gerenda sapienti. The iniquitie or iniuries of the aduerser part, doth giue vnto a wise man occasion of iust warre. Iust warre therefore ariseth, when men are prouoked by iniuries.

In the Ciuill law, the citie of Rome is called sacra Urbs, the holy citie, and that vnder the heathen Emperors: Cod. lib. 4. tit. 33. leg. 2. Diocletian. Wherefore this title is not onely proper to Ierusalem.

Looke your owne decrees, part. 1. distinct. 40. c. 9. there you shall finde, that Gratia, non locus, saluat animam: Grace, and not the place, doth saue the soule: Extra Paradisum saluus, &c. Man made without Paradise in an inferior place, was found better: and the woman made in Paradise in a better place, was found worse. Wherefore it is in vaine so much to contend for the holinesse of the place.

Lateranens. sub Iulio. 2. ex oration. Egidij Viterbians. episcopi: Fretis initio suis armis ecclesia Africanam cepit, Europam obtinuit, &c. The Church in the beginning vsing her owne weapons, obtayned Africa, Europa, Asia, not by violence, or by sword, but by religious actes: But since the Church hath changed the golden robe of the spirit, for the Iron weapon of madde Ajax, shee hath lost Asia, Ierusalem, Africa, Egypt. Thus he spake in the hearing of the Pope, insinuating thus much, that rather by religious actes the Turke might be wonne, then by forceable warre subdued.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, CONCERNING holy and festiuall dayes.

This question hath diuers parts. First, of holy dayes in generall. Secondly, of the Lords day. Thirdly, of the festiuall dayes of Christ and the holy Ghost. Fourthly, of kinde-holy dayes.

THE FIRST PART, OF HOLY dayes in generall.

The Papiſts.

First, they hold that holy and festiuall dayes, are in themselves, and properly and truly, more sacred and holy, then other dayes are, Bellarmin. cap. 10. proposit. 2. Apocal. 1. 10. I was in the spirit (saith the Apostle) on the Lords day: God reuealeth such great things to Prophets upon holy dayes, then prophane dayes: Ergo, some dayes holier then other, Rhemist. Apocal. 1. 10.

Ans. God giueth not his graces in respect of times, but according to his owne pleasure. Times of prayer he chuseth often, and of other godly exercises, not for the worthines or holines of the times, but for the better disposition of his seruants in such exercises, to receiue them: yet this was not perpetually obserued; for God appeared to Moses keeping of sheepe, Exod. 3. to Amos following his heard, Amos 7.

Argum. 2. If holy dayes were not in themselves holier then other dayes, then it would follow, that all festiuall dayes should be of the like holinesse, not one more holy then another: but so are they not, for the Lords day is the chiefe of all the rest: Ergo. Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 10.

Ans. First, we grant, that as festiuall dayes in themselves are not holier then other dayes, but in respect of the vse, so neyther are they in the nature of the day more holy one then another, yet in respect of the institution one festiuall may be preferred before another: as the Lords day is more holy, because it was instituted of God, the other festiualls of the Church; and in respect of the religious vse and obseruation thereof, being more strictly to be kept, then any other festiuall whatsoeuer; but not in the nature of the day is it more excellent, for then it could not haue been changed: wherefore first the argument followeth not, as I haue shewed.

Secondly, I am glad, that he giueth the Lords day the preeminence; yet their popish practise is contrarie: for whereas they diuide their feasts, into duplex festum, & simplex: double feasts, and single feasts: they make 4. kinds of duplex festum, principall double, more double, lesse double, inferior double; yet the Lords dayes are none of this number, as may be seene in the Calendar of their Masse booke according to the vse of Sarum.

Argum. 3. Christ in his Birth consecrated the manger, where he lay; in his death the Crosse whereon he suffered; rising againe the Sepulcher, where he was buried: why should not the dayes as well of his birth, passion, resurrection, be consecrated, and before other dayes preferred: Bellarmino Ans.

First, we denie not, but that these Festivals of our Saviour are to be preferred before other dayes, but not as in their nature more holy, but in respect of the use, and commemoration of the holy actes of Christ. Secondly, the places of Christs birth, passion, resurrection, were holy, not by any inherent or naturall holinesse, but in respect onely, and during the presence of Christ: so are the Festivals of Christ holy in regard of the commemoration of the holy actions of Christ, and not otherwise: Wherefore Bellarmino hath gained nothing by these reasons.

The Protestants.

WE graunt that the Lords day being commanded of God, and so discerned from other dayes, may be said to be holier then the rest, in respect of the present use, but not in the nature of the day: for then could it not have been chaunged from the last day in the weeke to the first: as water in Baptisme is holier then other waters, because of the sacred use, not in it selfe, as by a qualitie of holines inherent. And as for other festiuall daies, which haue not the like institution, they are appointed onely of the Church, for Christian policie and orders sake, for the exercise of religion: but this now Popish, and before time Iewish distinction of daies, as being by their nature holier then other, is flatly against the Apostles rule, Rom. 14. 5. One putteth difference betweene day and day.

Ans. Bellarmino answereth first, that the Apostle speaketh of those, whereof some thought good to fast every day, some onely certaine daies, and both of them did well: and this is the iudging betweene day and day, whereof the Apostle speaketh.

Contra. First, the Apostle maketh no mention at all of fasting, but of eating: wherefore this discerning of daies was not in any such respect of fasting, or not fasting. Secondly, ver. 6. the Apostle maketh the obseruing, and not obseruing of daies, and eating or not eating, to be two seuerall things, and he bringeth them in as diuers instances: wherefore it is not agreeable to the Apostles meaning to confound them into one, as Bellarmino doth. Thirdly, the Apostle, saying, He that obserueth, or obserueth not the day, obserueth, and obserueth not unto the Lord, ver. 6. approueth not the obseruation of daies: But first we must consider the times, when as yet some ceremonies of the Iewes remained, which the Apostles did for some while beare with, for feare to offend the weakes. Secondly, the persons must be respected, of whom the Apostle treateth, not such as obstinately maintained Iewish rites, but the weakes in faith, ver. 1. that did all of conscience, whom the Apostle would haue gently and charitably dealt with, and not rigorously to bee condemned: as ver. 1. Destroy not by thy meate, for whom Christ died: But what is this to these times, when as all Iewish ceremonies ought long agoe to be buried: or to the persons of our aduersaries, who not of weaknes and conscience, but professedly and purposely maintaine the difference of daies? Thirdly, the Apostle saying, he obserueth to the Lord, &c. he saith none other thing, then before ver. 4. Whom will thou rather make seruant? be thou obedient to faith, or to his own master: he obserueth, or not obserueth to the Lord, that is, he is left to Gods iudgement.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, You obserue daies and monthes, times, and yeeres, I am afraid of you, least I have laboured in vain: Galath. 4. 10. 11. And againe, Coloss. 2. 16. Let no man condemn you in respect of an holy day, or of the new moone, or of the Sabbath, which are but a shadow of things to come, but the bodie is in Christ. From hence we reason thus, out of the first place, That which hindereth, and destroyeth the faith of the Gospell, is to bee auoided: but the obseruation of daies causeth the Apostles labour to be in vaine, and so destroyeth the preaching of the Gospell: Ergo, Again, all figures ought to cease, the bodie being come, obseruation of daies was in figure, Christ is the bodie. Ergo.

Bellarmino answereth: first, that the Apostle speaketh of the Iewish obseruation of daies, and not of the festiualls of Christians: for S. Paul himselfe obseruing the feasts of Christians, as of Pentecost, Act. 20. did make difference of daies.

Contra. First, the feast of Pentecost, which Paul obserued at Ierusalem, was a feast of the Iewes: for as yet the Iewish festiualls were not abolished, as it may appeare. 1. By the name, it being called the feast of Pentecost, that is the feast of fiftie daies, or the feast of weekes: which was a feast appointed in the law. 2. Because it is kept at Ierusalem, whereas it was not necessarie to keepe the Christian festiualls there. 3. Saint Paul coming to Ierusalem, did other things according to the law, as he parished himselfe, Act. 21. 24. 4. The festiualls of Christians were not yet established. Secondly, though wee graunt it was a feast of the Christians, yet the Apostle made no such difference of daies, but onely for the holy use. Thirdly, these places serue as well against popish, as Iewish obseruation of daies, for there is no difference.

Bellarmino would seeme to make a treble difference, betweene the Iewish festiualls and theirs, First, the Iewish festiualls after Christ haue a false signification, but ours haue a true.

Contra. First, the Iewish Sabbath hath a true signification yet in remembering the creation of the the world. Secondly, some of yours haue a false signification, as the feast of the assumption of Mary, which is a fable.

Secondly, the chiefe end of their Sabbath, was to signifie things to come; but the end of ours is to acknowledge Gods benefits.

Contra. 1. So also the Sabbath now is a symbole of our euermlasting rest, Hebr. 4. as there was a type of our rest in Christ. 2. The Iewes also vpon the Sabbath remembred Gods benefits, as of the creation, Exod. 31. 17.

Thirdly, the chiefe part of their festiual, was to abstaine from bodily labour: but the chiefe part of ours is to be occupied in diuine seruice. Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. First, their Sabbath consisted not onely in bodily rest, but spirituall duties also, as in not doing their owne will, nor speaking a vaine word, Isay. 58. 13. Secondly, your Sabbath hath no spirituall duties, but a superstitious and idolatrous seruice, in worshipping of Idols, invocation of Saints, and such like: So then in the obseruation of daies there is no difference betweene the Iewes and Papists.

Augustine saith, Nos dominicum diem et pascha celebramus, sed quia intelligimus, quod pertinet, non tempora obseruamus, sed quia illis significantur temporibus. Cont. Adimant. cap. 16. We keepe the Lords day and the feast of Easter, not obseruing the times, but remembring what is signified by these times: that is, for what cause they were ordained: Ergo, obseruers of times are reproofed.

Leonis Epistol. 4. cap. 4. Notum sit dilectioni vestrae vniuersos dies Christi, &c. Be it knowne to your brotherhood, that all the daies of Christ are consecrate with innumerable vertues: yet if we should indifferently honour the memorie of all his acts, all daies should bee holy, because every one of them is full of his miracles. Hence I gather, that daies in themselves are not one holier then another, in as much as they all and euery of them were beautified and adorned with some miracle of Christ.

The scrupulous obseruation of daies is forbidden by the Imperiall law of Theodosius Capit. 6. tit. 30. leg. 17. and by the Canon law, part. 2. caus. 26. qu. 7. c. 17. Ad animae periculum pertinet superstitiosa temporum obseruationes: Superstitious obseruation of daies bringeth daunger to the soule, as the Apostle saith, I feare I haue laboured in vaine amongst you.

The Papists.

64 Error.

2. They affirme the keeping and sanctification of holy daies to bee necessarie, Rom. 14. Galath. 4. sec. 5. and that we are bound in conscience to keepe the holy daies appointed of the Church, although no offence or scandale might follow and ensue vpon the neglecting of the Esther 9. Mardocheus and Esther appoint a new festiual day, not instituted of God, and binde every one to the obseruing thereof, that none should faile to obserue it, vers. 27. Ergo, may be bound in conscience to keepe festiual daies. Bellarmin. cap. 10.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, though we refuse not some other festiual daies, yet we acknowledge none such, more then are of the holie Ghosts appointing in the Scripture. Secondly, wee denie that the constitutions of the Church for holy daies doe binde Christians, in respect of the daies themselves, in conscience to keepe them, otherwise then they may giue offence by their contempt and disobedience to the holisome decrees of the Church: for it selfe in it owne nature is indifferent: neither can the Church make a thing necessarie in nature, which God hath left indifferent: nothing bindeth absolutely in conscience, but that which is necessarie by nature: wherefore keeping of holy daies, being not inioyned but left indifferent in the word, bindeth no otherwise then we haue said. Thirdly, the example of Esther sheweth that the Church hath authoritie to appointe ciuill vses, daies of reioicing: that festiual day then begun did not binde the obseruers in conscience, no otherwise then they were bound in all lawfull things to obey their gouernours, for their consent was required, and they promised both for themselves and their seede to keepe the day, Esth. 9. 27. Whereby it appeareth that they were not bound absolutely in conscience to obserue it.

Argum. If Christians were bound in conscience to keepe all holy daies which are enioyned them in the popish Church, their burden should be greater then the Iewes was (seeing they haue a great number of holy daies more) yet the Iewes yoke was such, as neither they, nor their fathers were able to beare. Act. 15. 10.

Bellarmin. answereth: first, that the yoke of the Iewes is heavier, in respect of the hard obseruances, as that it was not lawfull to seeth meate, to kindle a fire on the Lords day, thrice a yeere they went vp to Ierusalem, they were enioyned to eate vnleavened bread: it was not lawfull in respect of the multitude of their feasts, but of other ceremonious rites, cap. 10.

Contra. First, the popish yoke euen in respect of their hard iniunctions is more intolerable then the Iewes was: your pilgrimages to Rome, to Ierusalem, to other remote places, are more then their going vp to Ierusalem: your prescription to fast bread and water is harder, then to eate vnleavened thinned bread, and yet you vse that to : not to eate an egge in Lent is more, then not to dresse meate vpon the Lords. Secondly, the heauines of the Iewish yoke did much stand in the multitude of their feasts, as Isay. 1. 14. if they were a burden to the Lord, much more vnto men : and therefore the popish yoke inioyning the keeping of many more holie daies, is much more grievous.

latinarum : This is the day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and bee glad therein, Psal. Sermon. 36.

118. 14. This onely holy day, he saith, is of the Lords making, and therefore of all other necessary to be kept.

Synod. Moguntin. cap. 61. Sanctorum celebritates in diem dominicum incidentes, censemus submouendas.
 We think it meete, that holy daies falling within the Lords day should be remoued, and transferred to the day before, or after, that the solemnitie of them all may bee referred and referred to their Lords day. The Lords day we see, is preferred before the rest, as being of necessitie onely to be kept, and the rest to giue place to it.

This truth also hath been sealed : Iuane Iohn, the wife of Lewis Iohn, persecuted for saying, That God commanded no holy daies to be kept but the Sabbath day, Fox pag. 803. col. 2.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Lords day.

The Papists.

Concerning the Lords day, our aduersaries doe graunt : first, that it is the most ancient of all Christian festiuals, Bellar. cap. 11. Secondly, that it was instituted by the Apostles, ibid. Thirdly, that it succeeded in stead of the Iewish Sabbath, ibid. Fourthly, that it is the most excellent, and to be preferred before all other holy daies, Bellar. cap. 10. These points are on both sides condescended vnto, and whatsoeuer else is affirmed agreeable to Scripture.

The severall points wherein our aduersaries and wee doe differ about the Christian Sabbath, are these :

First, the principall exercise of the Sabbath, say they, is for the people to come to the Church and heare Masse, which their abominable and idolatrous sacrifice they make the proper worke of the Sabbath, Catechism. Roman. pag. 649.

The Protestants.

The Sabbath was ordained for the people to assemble together to heare the word read, Act. 15 vers. 21. and preached; and to receiue the Sacraments, Act. 20. 7 and to offer vp their prayers: these were the proper exercises of the Sabbath : as for the popish sacrifice of the Masse, wee finde no mention at all thereof in Scripture.

Council. Moguntin. can. 34. Nunquam desit diebus dominicis, aut festiuitatibus qui verbum Dei prædicant: Let there bee neuer wanting, vpon the Lords daies and other festiuities, one that should preach the word of God.

Concil. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies dominicus id temporibus Apostolorum celebris, ut in vnum omnes pariter conuenerint, ad audiendum verbum domini, ad audiendum quoque sacramentum & communicandum, &c. The Lords day hath been obserued since the Apostles time, that all might meete together to heare Gods word, to heare also and receiue the Sacraments. These then are the principall exercises of the Lords day. And yet more euidently it was thus decreed, Synod. Augusten. cap. 18. Euangelia & epistola diebus dominicis lingua Germanica exponantur, eo quod temporis illius uisus, ne populum ab audientia detrahi contingeret, celebratur: Let the Gospels and the Epistles bee expounded vpon the Lords daies in the Germane tongue, and at that instant let no Masse bee celebrated, least the people be drawne away from hearing. From hence wee reason thus : That whereunto other exercises giue place, is the chiefe exercise of the Lords day; but other giue place, as the saying of Masse, to preaching and expounding of Scripture: Ergo, &c.

The Papists.

We differ about the rest of the Sabbath : they allow such workes to bee done vpon the Sabbath, as shall be permitted by the Prelates and Ordinaries, and such as by long custome haue been vsed, Bellar. cap. 10.

The Protestants.

We hold, that as the Lords day was instituted of God, so the manner of celebrating and keeping it holy, is to bee learned out of the word, and neither custome nor authoritie ought to giue libertie for such workes vpon the Lords day, as are not warranted by the word.

First, we graunt that we are not so necessarily tyed to the rest of the Sabbath as the Iewes were, for those things are abolished which appertained to the Iewish Sabbath : First, the prescript of the day. Secondly, the ceremonious exercises of the Sabbath in the sacrifices and other rites of the Law.

Law. Thirdly, the typicall shadowes and significations of their Sabbath, as first it betokened their rest in Canaan; then the rest and peace of the Church by Christ, Hebr. 4. 3. 5. Fourthly, the strict and precise rest, wherein Christians haue more libertie then the Iewes had: and againe, they obserued their rest, as being properly and simply, and in it selfe a Sabbath dayes duty; but we doe consider it, as being referred to a more principall end: as making of vs more fit for spirituall exercises.

Secondly, we allow these workes to be done: First, opera religiosa or pietatis, the religious workes, and conferring to pietie: as the Priests did lay the sacrifices vpon the Sabbath, and yet brake not the rest of the Sabbath, Matth. 12. 5. so the people may walke to their parish Church, though somewhat farre off: the Pastor and Minister may goe forth to preach; yea, and preaching is of it selfe a labour of the body, to study also and meditate of his sermon, to ring the bells to call the people to the Church: all these are lawfull, as being helpe for the exercises of religion. Secondly, opera charitatis, the workes of mercie are permitted, as to visite the sicke, the Physicion to resort to his patient; yea, to shew compassion to brute beasts, as to helpe the sheepe out of a pit, Matth. 12. 11. Thirdly, opera necessitatis, the workes of necessitie, as the dressing of meate and such like, Matth. 12. 1. 3. Our Sauour excuseth his Apostles for plucking the eares of Corne, when they were hungry. As for opera voluntaria, workes of pleasure and recreation, we haue no other permission to vse them, then as they shall be no lets or impediments vnto spirituall exercises, as the hearing of the worde, and meditating therein, and such other: Otherwise they are not to be vsed.

Augustine saith, speaking of the Iewes, who did greatly prophane their Sabbath, in sporting and dalliance: Melius toto die foderent, quam toto die saltarent: It were better for them to digge all day, then to daunce all day: euen so verily it were better for many poore ignorant people that vpon the Sabbath giue themselves to drinking, and quaffing, and gaming, if they should goe to plough or cart all the day. But as for other seruile workes, as to keepe Faires and Markes vpon the Lords day, to trauell themselves, their seruants, and beasts vpon the Sabbath, it is flat contrary to the commandement of God, and the practise of the Church, Nehem. 13. 16. where there is an extreame and vrgent necessitie: so that it is not to be doubted, but that as the keeping of the Lords day is a morall commandement; so also the manner of the obseruing thereof in sanctifying it, and resting therein, is morall: the ceremonies of the rest being abolished, that is, the Iewish stricktnes thereof, and the opinion which they had of their rest, as being simply a part of the sanctifying of the Sabbath. But we do consider it, as referred vnto more principall duties, and obserue it, not as of it selfe pleasing God, but as making vs more fit for spirituall exercises. Conserue to these rules, we acknowledge neither power in ordinaries, nor priuledge in custome, to dispense with the Sanctification of the Sabbath.

Decret. part. 1. distict. 86. cap. 24. Gregor. writeth sharply to one Iuanarius an old Bishop, because he presumed vpon the Lords day, exarare alterius messum, to enter vpon another, harued, in spoyle it: By this we may see what great discretion popish Ordinaries haue, in preserving Sabbath day workes.

Concerning such sanctification of the Sabbath as we speake of, which consisteth partly in abstaining from all corporall labors, and worldly affaires, partly and chiefly in giuing our selues in spirituall exercises, we haue the full consent of antiquitie.

Concerning the first: Concil. Arel. 3. can. 27. Die dominico cum caballis, bobus, uel iumentis non debere: That none ought to trauell with horse, oxen, carts vpon the Lords day. Canon. can. 18. Rurales opera nimis facere presumpat: Let no man vpon this day presume to do any country work, as to sow, to reape, to plough. Matiscens. 3. can. 1. Nullus canisum actiones exerceat: That no man should goe to law. Coloniens. part. 9. cap. 10. Markets and Faires are forbidden to be kept. Morim. cap. 61. Tripudia saltationes, profana spectacula non permittenda: Dauncing, and leaping, and all prophane playes and sights must be forbidden.

As touching the affirmatiue part of this sanctification, in sequestering our selues to spirituall exercises, thus also it hath been decreed: Trullam. can. 19. Vi omnibus diebus sed principaliter dominico populum doceant pietatis eloquia: That vpon all dayes, but chiefly on the Lords dayes the pastors instruct the people: preaching of the word is one chiefe worke of the Lords day: the receiving of the Sacraments is another, Coloniens. part. 9. cap. 9. Populus conueniat ad communicandum, the people must come together to communicate. Prayer is another Sabbath worke: Matiscens. 3. cap. 1. Die dominico quisque seipsum precibus et iacturinis afficiat: Vpon the Lords day let every man giue himselfe to prayer and teares. Giuing of thanks and praying of God is proper also for the Lords day: Synod. Colapiens. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies illa tantum orationibus, hymnis, Psalmis et annis fiat: Let that day onely be spent in prayer, Hymnes and Psalmes, and spirituall songs. Arel. can. 30. Puncti in carceribus &c. Let the Bishops visite those on the Lords dayes that are bound in prison. Constantin. 6. cap. 8. tantummodo vacandum est orationi et celebrationi elemosynarum: Vpon this day they they must give themselves only to prayer, and celebrating of almes. Here be other exercises of the Lords day. And thus, as we see, the auncient Canons doe testifie with vs for the sanctification of the Lords day.

To these Canons agree the imperiall lawes : which bid, Omnium Iudicium & artium officia cessare. &c. Both the offices of Iudges, and artificers shops to cease and be shut vp vpon the Lordes day, Calich. 3. sit. 12. leg. 3. Theod. and that no playes or enterludes should be kept vpon that day, or any such games, ibid. leg. 10. Leo. 1. Antihem. Yet workes of necessitie are excepted, as in time of harvest and seede time, leg. 3. and causa pistoria. Bakers causes, as touching the making of bread, are excepted, leg. 5. Valentin. Likewise workes of charitie, as in according and reconciling men, are tolerated, leg. 10. as also manumitting and setting bond-men at libertie, leg. 8. Valentin. Thirdly, workes of pietie are excepted, as doing of Iustice in executing of malefactors and offenders, leg. 9. Honor. Theodof.

The Papists.

They affirme that the Apostles altered the Sabbath day, from the seuenth day to the eight, <sup>67. Error.</sup> counting from the creation ; and they did it without Scripture, or any commandement of Christ : such power (say they) hath God left to his Church. This then they hold, that the Sabbath was changed by the ordinarie power and authoritie of the Church, not by any especiall direction from Christ : thereupon it followeth, that the Church, which (they say) cannot erre, may also change the Sabbath to any other day in the weeke, Rhemist. & Apoc. 1. scilicet. 6.

The Protestants.

1. The Apostles did not abrogate the Iewish Sabbath, but Christ himselfe by his death, as he did also other ceremonies of the Lawe: and this the Apostles knew both by the Scriptures, the word of Christ and his holy spirit.

2. They did not appoint a new Sabbath of their owne authoritie : for first they knew by the Scripture, that one day of seuen was to be obserued for euer, for the seruice of God and exercise of religion, although the prescript day according to the Law were abrogat: for the Lord before the morall law was written, euen immediately after the creation, sanctified the seuenth day, shewing thereby, that one of the seuen must be obserued so long as the world endured. Secondly, they knew there was the same reason of sanctifying the day of Christs resurrection, and the restitution of the world thereby, as of sanctifying the day of the Lords rest, after the creation of the world. Thirdly, they did it by the direction of the Spirit of God, whereby they were so directed and governed, that although they were fraile men by nature, and subiect to error: yet they could not decline in their writings and ordinances of the Church, from the truth, which assurance of Gods spirit in the like measure the Church hath not now ; but so farre forth is promised to be led into all truth, as she followeth the rule of truth expressed in the Scriptures. Wherefore the Church hath no authoritie to change the Lords day, and to keepe it vpon Monday or Tuesday, or any other day ; seeing it is not a matter of indifferencie, but a necessary prescription of Christ himselfe, deliuered by the Apostles : for the Lords day began in the Apostles time, and no doubt by their Apostolike authoritie directed by the spirit of Christ, was instituted, Act. 20. 7. Apocal. 1. vers. 10. Neither can there come, so long as the world continueth, so great a cause of changing the Sabbath, as the Apostles had by the resurrection of Christ. Wherefore the lawe of the Sabbath, as it is now kept and obserued, is perpetuall.

Constantin. 6. can. 8. Diei dominici, quia in eo Deus lucem condidit, in eo Manna in eremo pluit, &c. tanta debet esse reuerentia, &c. The Lords day must be had in great reuerence, because vpon this day God created the Light, it rained Manna in the Wildernesse : Christ then vouchsafed to be borne : on this day the starre appeared to the Wise men : Christ fed five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes : on this day he was baptized, rose againe, sent downe the holy spirit vpon his disciples, &c. these are the reasons why we doe now keepe the Lords day vpon the first in the weeke : but greater reasons than these, shall neuer fall out vpon any other day : Ergo, the Lordes day cannot be remoued to any other day of the weeke.

The Papists.

4. They affirme that the keeping of the Lords day, in stead of the Iewish Sabbath, is a tradition of the Apostles, and not warranted by Scripture, Rhemist. Mat. 15. scilicet. 3. <sup>68. Error.</sup>

The Protestants.

The obseruation of the Lords day is not deliuered by blinde tradition, but hath testimonie of holy Scriptures, 1. Corinth. 16. 2. Act. 20. 7. Apocal. 1. 10. and the obseruation thereof is according to Gods commaundement, not after the doctrine of men, Fulk. ibid. Bellarmine out of these three places proueth the Lords day to be instituted in the Scripture : de cultu. sanctior. lib. 3. c. 11.

Lam. apocal. 79. cap. 1. In hac mundus sumpsit exordium, in hac per resurrectionem Christi mors interitum, vita accipit initium, &c. On this day the world tooke beginning by the resurrection of Christ, death death was destroyed, and life entred: on this day the Apostles received commission to preach; Christ entred in to his disciples, the doores being shut, &c. Ergo, the Lords day is no humane tradition, but a diuine institution: These workes, whereby the Lords day is sanctified, were the workes of the Trinitie, and set forth in Scripture: Ergo, the Lords day is instituted of God and grounded vpon Scripture.

Decret. part. 1. dist. 76. c. 5. Leo, Quod die dominica ordinationes Sacerdotum celebrentur, &c. These orders must be celebrated vpon the Lords day, it is not grounded onely vpon custome, but on the Apostles doctrine in Scripture, &c. and he proueth it out of the 13. of the Actes: But this can not be shewed out of Scripture, that Orders should be kept vpon the Lordes day, but that the Scripture euidently testifieth for the Lords day it selfe.

The Papiſts.

69. Error.

5. They teach that the Lords day is commanded, and likewise kept for some mysticall signification, not onely for the remembrance of benefites already accomplished; as of the resurrection of Christ, and the Aduent or coming downe of the holy spirite: but also to betoken vnto vs things to come, as our rest and glorie in the kingdome of God, Bellarmin. de cultu sacell. lib. 3. cap. 11.

The Protestants.

August. de

1. WE graunt, that the Sabboth may be so applyed, both to call to remembrance things already, as vpon that day done: as the resurrection of Christ, and the descending of the holy Ghost. Some thinke also that Christ vpon that day was baptized, vpon that day turned water into wine, fed five thousand with a few loaves, came vnto his Apostles after his resurrection the doores being shut, and that as vpon this day he shall appeare to iudgement: but vpon the ground I know not. Certaine it is, that vpon this day Christ rose againe, and that the holy Ghost came downe then vpon his Apostles: We deny not but that the keeping of the Lords day, may fitly bring vnto our remembrance these things: yea and that it may be a type and symbol vnto vs in some sort, both of things spirituall, as to betoken our ceasing and resting from the workes of sinne, Heb. 4. 10. and 1. Pet. 4. 1. as also of things to come, as the kingdome of heauen is called a Sabboth, Isai. 66. 23.

But we dare not, neither will affirme, that the Sabboth was ordayned and constituted for any such end: for the commandement of the Sabboth now to vs is onely morall, not typicall or ceremoniall, as the Iewish Sabboth was; but looke wherein the Sabboth was morall to the Iewes, so it is kept still: As in these two poynts it was morall to them; first, to be a signe betwene them and the Lord, and to distinguish them from other people, Exod. 31. 17. And so also the keeping of the Lords day is a notable outward marke of difference betwene the Church of God and all others. Secondly, that vpon the Sabboth they should resort together, and heare the law read and preached, Act. 15. 21. And for this cause, namely, the exercise of religion, are Christians chiefly bound to the Sabboth. It may (I say) fitly be drawne to resemble heauenly and spirituall things: but that is not any end of the institution. The Iewes had two kinds of types, typus factor, and typus destinatus, types made and applyed, and types appointed and ordayned of God to shadow forth some notable thing: as the Paschall Lambe, was typus destinatus, of our Saviour Christ, as they were not to breake a bone of the Lambe; so was it accordingly performed in Christ. They had also many types beside, that were not destined to signifie any certaine thing: of such S. Paul speaketh, 1. Corinth. 10. 6. 11. So we say of the Sabboth, that it is not typus destinatus, it is not instituted for any shadow or signification, though it may be fitly applied to such an vse.

Matiscenens. 2. can. 1. Ipse est dies requietis perpetuus, ipse nobis per septimi diei umbram infans nescitur in lege & Prophetis: This is a day of rest for euer, this is knowne to haue been infinited by the shadow of the seuenth day in the law: so then the Lords day was rather shadowed forth, then it doth shadowe; it had shadowes, it selfe is no shadowe.

Coloniens. part. 9. cap. 9. Dies dominicus a temporibus Apostolorum semper in ecclesia celebratus, et tum in vniuersis omnes pariter conueniens: The Lords day hath been alwaies celebrated in the Church since the Apostles time, that the people might come together to heare the word of God, &c. For this end then the Lords day was appoynted principally, not to be a shadow of things to come.

The Papiſts.

70. Error.

6. They say that we are not bound vpon the Sabboth by any peculiar commandement to abstaine from sinne, more then vpon any other day: neither that the internall act of religion appertaineth to the keeping of the Sabboth, but the externall: that any sinne committed vpon the Sabboth is not thereby the greater: neither that we are more bound vpon the Sabboth to seeke for internall grace then vpon any other day, Bellarmin. lib. 3. cap. 10. propos. 4.

Argum. 1. Bellarmine reasoneth thus, the internall act of religion is the end of this commandement, but the meanes tending to the end, not the end it selfe, are commaunded.

Secondly,

Secondly, the internall worship is prescribed in the first commandment: for this is the order: In the first precept, the worship of the heart; in the second, the worship of the mouth; in the third, the worship or service of God in our workes is prescribed.

Thirdly, it were dangerous to appoint so many holy dayes, for this were but to entangle mens consciences, if sinne be more grievous committed vpon festiuals, cap. 10.

Aske. To the first we answer: First, that it is vntrue, that the meane onely; and not the end is commanded: for loue is the end of the commandment; 1. Timothy. 2. 15. and yet is commanded, and one of the greatest commandments, Matthe. 22. 39. So in the 7. Commandment the end is, not to commit adulterie; the meane tending to adulterie, as chambering and wantonness are likewise prohibited, Rom. 13. 13. Shall we say therefore that adulterie it selfe is not forbidden: so aduise that the internall sanctification of the Sabbath is the end; yet it may be and is commanded. Secondly, though it be the end, in respect of the meanes tending vnto it, as the corporall rest, and the externall exercises of religion; yet it is also as a meane referred to the principall end of all; which is the glory of God; and therefore may be commanded; according to Bel. larmius owne rule.

To the second, we answer: First, though some internall act of religion be prescribed in the first Commandment; Thou shalt haue no other gods; and as to loue God, and feare him; yet that internall act, which is peculiar for the Lords day, is onely prescribed in the fourth commandment. Secondly, he very fondly deuiceth the first table into 3. precepts, whereas it containeth four; as Origen sheweth by this reason: some men thinke, saith he, that these two are one Commandment: Quod si ita putetur, &c. which if it be so, then are there not ten commandments, what is become then of the Decalogue? therefore the first Commandment is, Thou shalt haue no other Gods: the second; Thou shalt make no grauen image, &c. thus saith Origen. lib. 8. in Exod. Thirdly, to make a grauen image to worship it, is an externall act of religion; yet this is forbidden in the second commandment, which Beellarmino ioyneth to the first, therefore his diuision is not good, referring all externall actes of religion to this fourth, or as he maketh it, the third Commandment.

To the third we answer: First, that other holy dayes are not enioyned with the like strict precept of sanctification, as the Lords day is, which is of Gods institution onely, the other were ordained by the Church, some are the meere inventions of men, as popish holy dayes: but the speciall sanctifying of a day to an holy vey, dependeth vpon Gods commandment and institution.

Secondly, as Beellarmino owne position, that men are bound in conscience to keepe the Festiuals of the Church, cap. 10. prop. 3. whereas we do not so affirme, therefore it is he himselfe; and not we, that do lay snares by the superstitious obseruation of holy daies, to entangle mens soules and consciences. Thirdly, we yeeld vnto him, that it is very hurtfull to appoint so many holy dayes, as they do, which in deed is nothing els but to clogge mens consciences with a multitude of ceremonies, which are burdensome to the Church.

Ad. Thist. we graunt that all sinne, as of thesedulterie, and the like, are in their owne nature alike, at what time soeuer they are committed; yet they may be made more heynous by the circumstances: as of the place, as sacriledge is greater than common theft, so why not of the time?

Secondly, if that which is no sinne vpon the worke-day, be a sinne vpon the Sabbath, as to digge, to plough, to cart; then that which is a sinne of it selfe, as to steale, to commit adulterie, need not be greater and more hainous being done vpon the Sabbath: for beside the sinne, hee also prophane the Sabbath, which is the breach of another commandment. Thirdly, the internall act of religion, is properly commaunded in the sanctifying of the Sabbath: for it cannot be sanctified by the externall act of going to Church, and hearing the worde, vntill a man be inwardly in the deuotion of his heart prepared for those holy exercises. So inward grace is more sought for vpon the Sabbath, not in respect of that inward desire which we haue vnto them, which ought alwayes to be alike frequent in vs, if it were possible; but because of those outward meanes, of hearing the word, publike prayer, receiuing the Sacraments, which are vpon the Sabbath: for the which we ought more especially to prepare & examine our selues, Eccles. 1. 17. 1. Cor. 14. 8. The Prophet Esay doth teach vs, how the Sabbath must be kept, Chap. 58. vers. 13. If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy will on my holy day, &c. will I blot thy name out of the Lord, nor doing thine owne wayes, nor seeking thine owne will, nor speaking a vaine word, &c. Abstinence from sinne then is chiefly required vpon the Lords day: wee must not doe our owne waies, so is it decreed, Colours. part. 9. cap. 10. Blasphemys are peruerse women Dominus profanatur, ac Sabbathum, quod non aduocatur, in quiescamus peruerse agere, & benefacere discimus, contumaciter. By blasphemies and peruerse the name of God is prophaned; and the Sabbath, which teacheth vs to leane doing patiently, and to learne to doe well, is polluted.

Augustine saith, speaking of the Iewish women: Quanto melius femine. coram laudis sumus, quam illi in neomagus saltantibus: spiritualiter obseruat Sabbatum. Christianus abstinentia se deponit, nisi id est, a peccato: Tract. 3. in Ioban. Their women might be better occupied in spinning or bawling than in dauncing vpon this day: for a Christian doth spiritually keepe the Sabbath, in abstaining from all seruile worke, that is, from sinne. They then that doe obserue the Sabbath onely in eternall acts, doe but carnally keepe it.

Council. Matifon. 2. can. 1. Etsi omnes in hymnis & laudib. Dei corpore & animo intenti, deo dantibus, quisque seipsum lacrymis & precibus offerat: Let every man bodie and soule be occupied in serving forth the praise of God: vpon the Lords day let euerie man giue himselfe in his affection to mutes and prayers. Here is more than the externall act of religion required: intention and affection, inward things. Again in the same Canon, Exhibeamus deo liberam seruitutem, non quia hoc vult Deus: expetit, ut corporali abstinentia diem Dominicum celebremus, sed quia obediensiam, per quam in celestis terris altissim ad eulum usque misericorditer prouehat: Let vs yeeld vnto God our free seruice: for God requirerh vs not by bodily abstinence to keepe the Lords day, but he looketh for our obedience, by the which we should tread vnder our feet all earthly and carnall acts, and be lifted vp in meditation euen vnto heauen: Obedience then is especially required vpon the Lords day.

The Papists.

7. They hold it a thing vnlawfull for Christians to fast vpon the Lords day, Bellarm. lib. 3. de cultu sanctior. cap. 11.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, we graunt that this opinion is very auncient, and that in Tertullians time it was received in many Churches: and they thought it as vnlawfull to bow the knee vpon the Lords day, Tertul. lib. de coron. Militu. Dis dominico ieiunare nefas ducimus, & de geniculis adorare: We count it vnlawfull to fast vpon the Lords day, and to pray kneeling.

So likewise, Trullan. Synod. can. 90. Ne dominicus laudibus genua flectamus: that wee bow our knees vpon the Lords day: but the Papists obserue not the one, why then should they bind themselves to the other? Ignatius maketh fasting vpon the Sabbath as great an offence, as the killing of Christ himselfe, Epistol. ad Philip. But, I trust, they will not say so.

Secondly, the reasons why fasting is not to be vsed vpon the Lords day, because the Lord setteth downe none, I will supply out of Augustine: first, Sentia (saith hee) ad significandum simpliciter unum (ubi est verum) Sabbathum relaxationem, quoniam constitutionem ieiunij aptius conuenit, libet that to signifie the eternall rest, which is the true Sabbath, libertie rather, than the vying of fasting doth most fitly agree. But to this we answere, that this signification of eternall rest, is no essentiall part of sanctifying the Sabbath, nor no end of the institution, as we haue shewed aboue, though it may haue such an application: and therefore this reason prouoeth not such a necessity of not fasting vpon the Sabbath. Secondly, Dis dominico ieiunare magnum est scandalum: it is a great offence to fast on the Lords day, because the Manichees made choice of that day to fast in. Per quod factum est, ut ieiunium Sabbathi horribilium haberetur: By the which (saith hee) it came to passe, that the fast of the Sabbath was more abhorred, Augustin. ibid. But this reason now bindeth not vs, because the name and heresie of the Manichees is now worne out, and therefore there is no feare of any scandale to arise that way.

Thirdly, we graunt that the Lords day is not the fittest time for publike fasts: first, because it is a day of reioycing: so wee read that the people in Nehemiah his time, were forbidden to mourne and weepe, after the lawe was read vnto them by Ezra, because it was a day of ioy and mirth, Nehem. 8. 11. Secondly, the day of solempne and publike fasting ought to be set apart from other daies, and to be proclaimed solempne, and to be spent wholly in spirituall exercises, euen as the Sabbath, with vacation and rest from other bodily labours, as we may read, 2. Chron. 20. 3. Nehem. 9. 1. And therefore any day is more fit than the Sabbath, because that is a holy day already vnto the Lord: but when we will humble our selues before the Lord by fasting and prayer, some day would only for that purpose be consecrate vnto God: that may be as a voluntarie sacrifice: whereas we are bound of necessitie to keepe the Lords day.

But concerning priuate and particular fasts, when men by themselves haue occasion to giue themselves to prayer, whereof S. Paul speaketh, 1. Cor. 7. 5. Such priuate exercises may bee better performed vpon the Sabbath, because of the ordinarie exercises of the word, which are notable meanes to kindle and stire vp true deuotion in him, which at that time will humble himselfe, yea and publike fasts, though not ordinarily, yet when there is iust occasion, may bee kept vpon the Sabbath: as we read Act. 20. 7. how that Paul continued his preaching till midnight: whereof Augustine writeth thus, Necessarius sermo reficiendi corporis causa interruptus esse non visus est profecto. Apostolo: The necessarie preaching of the Apostle, he thought not good, for the refreshing of their bodies to breake off, being readie to depart. We conclude therefore, that it is lawfull to fast vpon upon the Lords day, though it bee not alwaies expedient. And Augustine very well determineth this matter: Ego in Evangelicis, & Apostolicis literis video preceptum esse ieiunium: quibus autem illud non oportet ieiunare, & quibus oportet, precepto domini, vel Apostolorum non imperio definitum: I finde both in the Evangelicall and Apostolicall writings, that fasting is commanded: but upon what daies we ought to fast, upon what wee ought not, I do not finde it defined, Epist. 86. Wherefore to fast or not to fast upon the Lords day, or upon any other, being not determined in Scripture, is left as a thing indifferent to the Church of God.

Council Gangren. can. 18. Si quis tanquam hoc continentia commendare indicans die dominico ieiunaverit, ad inusum dei contemptum, anathema sit: If any man doe fast upon the Lords day, as iudging it more agreeable to a continent life, or in contempt of the day, let him be accursed. The Council doth not simply forbid fasting upon this day, but that it should not bee done superstitiously, with an opinion of greater holines, nor in contempt of the day, which is to Christians a day of rejoycing.

So likewise Carthaginiens. 4. can. 64. Qui dominico die studiose ieiunant, credatur non catholicis: He that of purpose doth fast on the Lords day, let him bee counted not Catholike. A man may fast then upon the Lords day, so it be not of a superstitious or wilfull purpose.

In their owne decrees it standeth thus: Decret. par. 1. dist. 76. cap. Primam omni die ieiunare possumus, &c. I would we might fast every day, which in the Acts of the Apostles wee reade, that S. Paul did, and the rest of the faithfull with him in the daies of Pentecost, and upon the Lords day.

The Papists.

The name Sunday, is an heathenish calling, as all other weeke-daies in our language: some 71. Error. imposed after the names of Planets, as in the Romanes time: some by the name of certaine Idols, which the Saxons did worship: which names the Church vseth not, but hath appointed to call the first day the Dominick, after the Apostle, Apocal. 1. 10. the other by the name Feris, until the last of the weeke, which she calleth by the old name Sabbath, because that was of God, not by imposition of the Heathen, Rhemist. annot. Apocal. 1. sect. 6.

The Protestants.

First, as the name of Sunday, and the rest, is of the heathenish beginning, and therefore were better to be otherwise termed, as the first, second, or third from the Lords day, as the Jewes called their daies from the Sabbath: so your terme of Feris, is no lesse heathenish, derived from the word feria, or feria, which were so called, a ferendus victimis, of striking the heathenish sacrifices, as Sextus Pompeius saith, Fulsius.

2. We have other names also that might be reformed, as of our moneths: as March is so called of Mars, June of Iuno, January of Ianus, which were Heathen Gods: Iuly and August doe beare the names of men: yea, and if we might be inventors of new names, the termes of Christmas, Michaelmas, Candlemas, should not stand in force, nor any more bee vsed, which are as offensive as the rest: for as for the names of Heathen Idols, the most part are ignorant of them; but the vulgar terme of Masse, is too well knowne, and too much loved of many of our countrie men. Now for the name Sunday, which is so great a mote in your eye, if there were no more but that, Augustine saith, how it might be fauourably expounded, Dies magni solis celebramus, illum solis, de quo dominus ait, orientur vobis sol iustitiae: Wee doe keepe Sunday holy, namely, of that great Sunne, whereof the Scripture speaketh, the Sunne of righteousness shall arise. So in the Ciuill law, Calid. 1. tit. 1. leg. 3. it is called, dies solis, Sunday: though the other name, dies Dominicus, the Lords day, be preferred; as ibid. leg. 7. Valentin. Dies solis Dominicus rursus dicitur maioris, the Sundaies, our ancestors rightly called the Lords dayes.

3. We wish that all these termes might be laid downe, as Augustine saith, Nolumus, ut dicantur & vitiis corrigantur ut non dicant: Wee would not haue men so to speake, and I wish they were reformed. But seeing by continuall custome mens tongues are inured to such termes, let them know, that they are vsed onely as ciuill names, to call things by, not for any religion or mystrie in them contained, or signified.

And here I doe commend Hieromes two rules concerning heathenish names: the first, where he saith, Liber de vitis sacerdotalis in Job, Arcturum & Orionem, &c. In Job we reade of Arcturus, and Orion, and other names of the starres, not that the Hebraei doe so call them: sed quia non possunt, nisi consensu vocibus intelligere, but because wee cannot vnderstand what is said, but vnder the common termes. So then, where vsed and custome hath obtained to haue things called by such names, and they are knowne by no other, there necessitie doth dispense with heathenish names.

His other rule is this, that such Pagan termes, which haue no necessarie vse, but proceed of profanities or wantonnes, should bee left: Abster, ut de deo Christiano sonet, &c. God forbid, that a Christian mouth should sound, Impiter, Hercules, &c. qua portenta sunt magis, quam nomina, which are monstres rather, then names. This is a good cauate for young Students, that they should in their exercises, as declamations, disputations, Comedies, Tragedies, and other such trifles, as were called by the names of the gods, which yet are too rife among them.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE FESTIVAL dayes of Christ and the holy Ghost.

73. Error.

The feasts of Easter and Whitsontide, and other solemnities of Christ, were prescribed (they say) by the Apostles, Rhemist. Maith. 15. fest. 2. to be kept vpon certaine daies, and the Lord did appoint that Easter should not be kept the 14. day of the first Moone, as the Iewes obserued, but the Lords day after. And of the feast of Pentecost mention is made, 1. Corinth. 16. 8. Ergo these feasts were instituted of the Apostles, Bellarmin. cap. 12. 13.

Bellarmin to proue the celebration of Easter, as it is now obserued in the Latine Church, to be Apostolicall, alleageth the 8. Canon of the Apostles, which decreeth, That he which obserueth Easter before the vernall Equinoctium, whether Bishop or priest, should be deposed.

Ans. It is a cleere case, that those Canons are forged and falsely ascribed to the Apostles. In the last Canon the Gospell of S. Iohn is counted among the Canonick bookes of the new Testament, which was not at that time written, when these Canons are said to have been made by the Apostles assembled together: for Saint Peter, a principall composer of these Canons, is brought in speaking, Can. 2. 8. who was put to death before S. Iohn writ his Gospell. 2. Of what value these Canons be, it appeareth in the Trullane Council, Can. 12. where they forbid Bishops their consecration to haue societie with their wives, directly contrarie to the 5. Canon of the Apostles: and they giue a reason thereof, Statum ecclesiasticum in pulchorem ordinem reducere. Their meaning was to bring the state ecclesiasticall to a more beautifull order, whereas the Apostles in the beginning of the Gospell, ad fidelium imbecillitatem se demittebant, did submit themselues to the imbecillitie of the weake. But if they were the Canons of the Apostles indeed, what boldnes had this been, so lightly to reuerse their decrees? 3. In the last Canon there are three bookes of the Macchabees made Canonick, whereas the Papists themselues receiue them not: then doe they themselues transgresse the Apostles Canons? 4. Gelasius, decret. de Apostol. lib. 1. in direct termes make, Librum canonum Apostolorum, the booke of the Canons of the Apostles, a cryphal. The authoritie therefore of these forged Canons doth little moue vs.

Againe, Bellarmin vrgeth a diuine testimonie, as he calleth it, how that Paschasius reported that in Pope Zacharys time there being a question about the time of the celebration of Easter, the Pope with the West Church appointing the 25. of March, the East Church the 22. of April, it fell out, that in a certaine Church in Sicilie, a certaine fountaine, that vsed euery yeere to runne against Easter day for those that should bee baptized, was emptie vpon the 25. of March, but full the 22. of April: whereby the Pope and the West Church, did perceiue themselves to be in error, and the East Church in the right, Bellarmin. cap. 12.

Ans. First, of this tale beare any credit, it sheweth, that the East Church was founder, concerning the celebration of Easter, than the Pope. Secondly, this miracle alloweth that Easter should be kept after the 10. day of April, contrary to the decree of the Nicene Council, which limited the time for Easter from the 10. of March to the 20. of April, and no further. Thirdly, this famed miracle is of like credit to that vision, which Pope Pius affirmeth to haue been shewed to one Hermes: how that an Angell appeared vnto him, commaunding him to keepe Easter vpon the Lords day, decret. p. 1. dist. 3. cap. 21. But if the celebration of Easter were grounded vpon the institution of the Apostles, they neede not bring such beggerly stuffe, by lying miracles and visions, to make prooue of their matter.

Ans. First, we graunt that it is expedient for the Church to keepe the memoriall of the Nativity, Passion, Resurrection, Ascension of Christ, and of the coming of the holy Ghost, and the daies instituted for the remembrance thereof, no doubt, ought to bee had in greater account, than any other holy daies instituted by the Church. Secondly, it cannot bee prooued, that they were prescribed by the Apostles; or if they were, but as indifferent ceremonies, which are subiect to alteration, and in the which the religion or worship of God doth not consist. Certaine it is, that before the time of Constantine the great, there were not many festiuall daies kept, in so much, that the feasts of the Nativity of Christ, Easter, Pentecost, were not vniuersally obserued for many yeeres after, as appeareth by diuers Councils. And before Constantines time, there was great contention betweene the Bishop of Rome and the Bishops of the East, about the celebration of Easter, they alleaging the constitution of Saint Iohn, the other of Saint Peter: wherefore it is like that the Apostles appointed no such certaine daies: for then the Church would not haue broken them.

4. cap. 1.

Tolet. 10. c. 1.

Thirdly,

daits to holy men living, therefore neither to Saints departed for one and the same kind is due to them both.

Let it be said, as I have said, that the miracles of Christ are more foretold, or be unknown to your brotherhood, that all the days of Christ are con-innumerable years ago; yet if we should indifferently honour all the works of days should be holy days, for they are all full of the miracle of Christ. From hence these two arguments against Saints days. The miracles of Christ are more forethese two arguments against Saints dayes. The miracles of Christ are more forcible for as holy day, then the acts of Saints: but all his miracles make not holy dayes: In the firste reason, that all Christs acts have got their festiuitie, because then all dayes must finally, we doe also exclude Saints dayes, because that if all Saints should haue their memoriation, the dayes of the yere would not suffice thereto: and we should haue no festiuitie. I should not to vniu. I should not to vniu. I should not to vniu. I should not to vniu.

3. Calixtus the 12. In 4 a law was made by Calixtus the Emperour; that none but should, ferias canere, erect daies of recreation for the people. If ciuill holy daies must be only by the Emperour the Lord of the earth; in the Church holy daies should be growe the institution of Christ Lord and King of his Church.

75. Error.

They maintain, that there may be holy days and commemorations of all Saints, provided there should be of Mary Magdalene, Revist. March 15, fol. 1.

Ex Tileman.
Loc. 18.

THis is another principall fault, which we finde and complaine of in their holy they have pestered the Church with such a number of Saints and Saints dayes. First partly shewed before, they appoynted a severall Saint almost for every purpose, as the feet downe.

|--|---|
| Saint Leonard for captives.                         | Saint Andrew for women in trouble.       |
| Saint Rock for the pusillence.                      | Saint Lawrence keepeth from the heat.    |
| Saint George for wars.                              | Saint Catherine giveth wit and learn.    |
| Saint James giveth riches.                          | Saint John against poyson.               |
| Saint Nicholas and Christopher for the feck. | Saint Quintin for the fittill.           |
| Saint Anthony for the poe-chake.                    | Saint Stephen and Cornelius helpe |

And thus it is true of them, as Jeremie complained of the Idolatrous Israelites: that were after the number of their crimes, Ieremie 2. 28. In like manner also haue they made Saints dayes: for beside the festiuals of Christ, the holy Ghost, and of the Apostles, they add their befitting.

The Protestants.

The Christians in time of perfection had their antelucani hymnes, their early and timely songs and hymnes: they met together to worship God, before the Sunne rise, because they could not safely neither were suffered to assemble in the day time. But that is no reason, why now the Church should use vigiles or nocturnes, seeing we now have free exercise of religion in the day time: more then Pauls example is to be urged, that prayed by the rivers side with the people, and there preached vnto them, because in idolatrous cities they could haue no places of meeting, therefore we now ought to doe the like, hauing Churches and Oratories to assemble in. Augustine if the sermon be his, thus witnesseth: Inbente Ambrosio cessabant vigilia Mediolani, quia cum vigilas per uictorem ad ecclesiam ludenda et chorizanda conueniebant: At Milaine by Ambrosius commandement the vigiles ceased, because the people, when they watched, did come by night, dancing and sporting and playing, to the Church.

Small Colonienf. sub Adulpho. part. 1. cap. 7. Ne Canonici & Vicarij Clerici nostri Colonienfis vigilijs deficiamus, &c. Lett that the Canons and Vicars of our Clergie at Colen, should be hindered from frequenting more necessarie lessons by the vigils of the dead, which they were wont to performe in the morning; we will, that from henceforth vigils shall begin at two in the afternoone, that they may bee finished before euening prayer. Here vigils and night watches are cleane cut off, and turned to day-exercises.

And how well they kept their vigils may appeare by that decree of Innocentius, decr. Greg. 116. 3. Volentes referimus, &c. Wee speake it with griefe, that certaine, not onely interioir priors, but relates, spend the time in eating and drinking vntill midnight, &c.

The Papists.

They haue also another superstitious custome, to set vp waxe candles, and Taber-light before Images, and vpon the Altar, to carrie them about in procession, and euen at quidday, and at noone: And Bellarmino would authorise this custome by the continuall burning of the Lampes day and night, as he saith, in the Tabernacle among the Iewes.

78. Error.

The Protestants.

As we say of this, as we did of the vigiles of the Church before: that Christians in those times in their night assemblies used candle light, as S. Hierome saith, answering thus to Psalmist Ephej non clara luce accendimus; Wee doe not burne candles at noone day: as you doe lately: but thereby to temper, or qualifie the darknes of the night, &c. But it followeth not, that vigiles being now left, wee should burne candles at noone day: and that this was their custome to burne their Lampes onely in the night, Augustine sheweth, where he speaketh of that he did vow ceram ad luminaria uellit, waxe candles for the lights of the Church in the

Secondly, it is vtterly vntue, that the Lampes in the Tabernacle burned all day: the contrary is proved, that they were lighted in the euening, and so burned all night, for those that kept the watch in the Temple, 2. Chron. 13. 11. and that in the morning againe they were put out, 1. Sam. 3. 1. ver. 3. The Priests shall set the Lampes on fire, inter duas uesperas; betweene the two twilightes, that is the euening and morning, Exod. 30. 8. And he shall dresse them to burne from the euening to the morning, Leuit. 24. 3. And S. Hierome vpon those words, 1. Sam. 3. before the lampe of Gabaon out, &c. thus writeth: Intellegi oportet, antequam lux diurna fieret: It must be vnderstood before day, when the lampe was put out. That therefore which the Iesuite made for an argument for himselfe, wee will urge against him: that seeing the lampes amongst the Iewes, who abound in types and ceremonies, were burnt onely in the night, and not vpon the day: it is therefore those that would bee counted Christians, in superstitious customes, to exceede and goe beyond them.

THE NINTH QUESTION, CONCERNING the Virgine Marie.

This question standeth of many parts. First, whether the blessed Virgine Mari were conceived without sinne. Secondly, whether she vowed virginie before the Angell was sent vnto her. Thirdly, of the assumption of her bodie into heauen. Fourthly, of the dignitie and preeminence that she hath (as they affirme) aboue all other Saints, yea, and the Angelles too. Fifthly, of the honours of the Virgine Mari and of the Ann Mari.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE VIRGIN

Marie, were voyd of originall and actuall sinne.

The Papists.

79. Error.

1. All men are borne in sinne, Christ only excepted, and his mother for his honour: Rom. 5. 12.

1. 1. 1. 1.

Ans. It is no more dishonour for Christ to be borne of a sinner, than to haue taken his flesh, and lineally descended, according to his humanitie, of Thamar that committed incest with Isaiah, and Rahab which was an harlot, Matth. 1. 3, 5. Secondly, it maketh more for the honour of God that Christ was borne without sinne of a woman which was a sinner, and more setteth forth his power, than otherwise, least he should be thought to haue deriued his puritie from his mother.

80. Error.

2. They hold, that there was no actuall sinne in the Virgin Marie, no not in the least and smallest sinnes, which they call veniall, Rhemist. 1. Iohn. 1. 1. 5. Shee was especially protected, and preferred from sinning by the grace of God.

Ans. That God is able cleerely to ridde his children from sinne, and to preferue them from falling thereinto, we denie not: but, seeing you haue no scripture for this priuiledge, that should be bestowed onely vpon Marie, to be free from sinne: but rather the contrarie is proued out of scripture, That all haue sinned, Rom. 3. 23. it is too rash and bold an assertion, contrarie to the will of God, to ascribe any thing to his power. He is as able to exempt all from sinning as onerlesse therefore you can shewe some especiall warrant out of Gods word, for Maries freedom, by your reason, all the children of God shall be freed from sinne as well as Marie, because God is able to doe it.

Let vs heare Bellarmines opinion: he saith that men are stained three waies with originall sin. First, the whole posteritie of Adam may be said to haue sinned potentially in Adam, beeing at that time in his loynes. Secondly, as soone as the bodie beginneth to haue any being in the wombe. Thirdly, when as the soule is inspired into the bodie: hee confesseth, that the Virgine Mary was conceiued as all other are, after the two first waies: that is, if we either respect her being in Adams loynes, or the first conception of her flesh: but concerning the third, her soule was without spot of originall sinne, in the verie instant of the infusion thereof into her bodie. And this he saith as a godly and probable opinion, though it be not yet determined in their Church as a point of faith: De amission. graui. lib. 4. cap. 16.

Ans. This distinction, which the Iesuite hath coyned, concerning these three kinds of conception in sinne, is both verie friuolous and vntrue: for the first is none at all: if all that were in Adams loynes, when he sinned, may be said to be conceived in sinne, then our Sauour Christ, which were blasphemie to affirme. The other two kinds make indeed but one: for to be conceived in originall sinne, implyeth a pollution both of bodie and soule: And the time of the conception is more properly referred to the beginning of the knitting of the flesh in the wombe, than to the instant of the infusion of the soule: as David in the Psalm. 51. 5. saith, In sinne hath my mother conceiued me: But the mother conceiueth onely the flesh: the soule is infused and imbled of God, as the Iesuite also thinketh. Wherefore in graunting that the virgine Marie was in her flesh conceiued in originall sinne, he affirmeth in a maner the same that we doe: for how can she remaine vnspotted, comming into a bodie already infected with originall sinne? But let vs examine some of his reasons.

Argum. 1. Adam was a figure, as S. Paul saith, of him that was to come, that is, of Christ: but Adam was created of the earth, before it was cursed: Ergo, Christ also must be borne of the Virgin Marie void of curse, and so free from originall sinne: Bellar. cap. 15.

Ans. First, the Iesuit knoweth that these are but weak arguments, that are drawn from types and allegories, and conclude not. Secondly, Adam was a forme or figure of Christ, but not in all things, neither in this, which the Iesuit vrgeth: but Augustine shall speake for vs both, when he saith, Adam was a figure: Adam forma futuri est, i. Christi, &c. Adam was a figure of Christ to come, because, as he was cause of death by eating the forbidden meat, euen vnto those of his linage, which did not eat of the tree: so Christ vnto those, which are of him, although they haue done nothing righteously in themselves, hath giuen righteousnes by his troffe. Conr. Iulian. lib. 1. The word also of the Apostle doe carrie the same sense: for in the same verse he saith, That death hath reigned euen ouer those, that sinned not after the manner of the transgression of Adam, vers. 14. that is, ouer children: so that this must be the meaning: That as Adams sinne extended to those that committed it not, so Christs righteousness is applied to those that wrought it not: herein then is Adam a figure of Christ. 3. And yet if we stretch this allegorie to this point, which the Iesuit vrgeth, it will onely enforce the virginite of Marie, not her freedome from sinne: as Augustine likewise maketh this allusion: Adam de terra virginis natus, Christus de Maria virgine procreatus: Ad Adam was made of the earth, being yet a virgin that had brought forth none before; so Christ also was borne of the virgin Mary, who was without spot, Behar. ibid.

Argum. Thou art all faire my loue, and there is no spot in thee, Cantic. 4. 7. this is vnderstood of the virgin Mary: Ergo, she was without spot, Behar. ibid. First, S. Paul I thinke vnderstood this place better than the Iesuit doth: the Apostle applyeth it to the Church of Christ, That he might make it to himselfe a glorious Church, without wrinkle, Ephes. 5. 27. Secondly, Christ maketh it without spot by sanctifying it and washing it in his blood: this place therefore serueth not for any originall purenesse by nature.

The Protestants.

That the virgin Mary was both conceived in sinne, and was also subiect to aduall sinnes in her life, as other of the children of God: thus out of the scripture we doe declare it.

Howe else can the word of God be true, that saith, All haue sinned, Rom. 3. 23. and 5. 12 They will answer, that Mary had an especiall priuiledge: then let them shew it out of the word of God, and we will beleue it: otherwise the generall conclusion must stand, that All haue sinned. Againe, Marke her selfe in her song, calleth Christ her Saviour, Luk. 1. 47. Ergo, she was a sinner: for how else could she be saued from her sinnes which she had not? If they answer as they do, that Christ was her Saviour only, because he preferred her from sinne: we doe thus reply. First, that a Saviour in scripture is defined to be hee that saueth the people from their sinnes; Matth. 1. 21. not that preferreth onely. Secondly, if Mary were free from originall sinne, as they say she was, she need not haue a Saviour to keepe her from sinne, for she might haue preferred her selfe.

Argum. Mary died: Ergo, she was a sinner: for sinne brought death into the world, Rom. 5. 12. If she had had no sinne, shee had not died. Christ indeed, though he were no sinner, yet hee bore our sinnes, and therefore dyed for vs. Tick places also may be vnyed: In whome, that is, in Adam, all haue sinned, Rom. 5. 12. As in Adam, so in Christ we shall be made aliue, 1. Cor. 15. 22. and Christ died for all, 2. Corin. 5. 14. Before the virginitie Mary also sinned, and was dead in Adam, and Christ died for her: Ergo, she was sinner.

Ans. Mary sinned potentially in Adams loynes: and in that respect wee confesse shee was sinned by the blood of Christ: and though by nature she had an abilitie to sinne, yet was shee preserved by grace, Behar. cap. 16.

Cont. 1. If she sinned onely as she was in Adams loynes, then all that were in Adams loynes sinned, so Christ shall be counted in the number of sinners. 2. As we sinned in Adam, so we are made righteous by Christ: but we are not potentially made righteous, but verily and indeed: Ergo, if Mary haue life and righteousness in Christ, she sinned more then potentially in Adam: 3. She was preuented, you say, by grace, and kept from sinne, Ve simul esse, & esse esse incipere: That she began to haue her being, and to be iust at one time. How then is it true, as you confesse; that Mary was redeemed by the blood of Christ, and that Christ dyed for her? For Christ dyed for sinners, Rom. 5. 8. and reconciled vs being enemies, vers. 10. Ergo, Mary was sinne both a sinner, and an enimie to God; if she haue any benefite by Christs death: for redemption and freedome purchased, betokeneth bondage and slaueerie before. Christ checked and rebuked his mother, Ioh. 2. 4. Woman what haue I to doe with thee? Ergo, it toucheth shee was not without fault. Rhemist. Answ. It was rather a doctrine to others, to teach them how to doe any thing for respect of kinned, against reason, then a reprehension to Mary. We reply: But I pray you, how could the Apostles learne to beware of that fault, if it had been no fault in Mary? How could they be admonished in her, if she were not first her selfe admonished? Another manner of speech sheweth, it was a rebuke, Christ saluting her by no other name, when if he had spoken to any other woman.

Argum. 3. The Papiests themselves are in a stagger, and dare not constantly affirme, that Mary was conceived without sinne, but put in this clause (as many godly doubt men iudge) Rhemist. Rom. 5. 12. 9. And Barlaamius saith, In maior parte Ecclesiasticis: That the greater part of the Church doth so godly beleue, yet he dare not determine vpon it himselfe, De cult. sanct. Ioh. 3. 16. But why are they afraid to hold it as an vndoubted truth, seeing Pope Sixtus hath cleerly determined that it was so, forbidding the Dominicke Friars to preach the contrary, and hereupon erected a holy day of her Conception? Here then they are driven to a great strait: for either they must absolutely hold, that shee was not conceived in sinne, against the Master of sentience, and Thomas Aquinas, with other Schoolemen; or else hold the contrarie, and so confesse the Pope to haue been in error.

Immaile, that the Iesuite is not ashamed to say, that Pope Sixtus the fourth left this question of Marys conception vndetermined; seeing he erected a holy day in memorie of her Conception: and tooke part with the Franciscanes, that held her pure and vndefiled conception, against the Dominickes that maintained the contrary: yea and the same Pope vpon this occasion caſon added this claule to the Ave Maria: Et benedicta ſis fructus mater tua; de qua ſine macula non proceſſit caru virginis: And bleſſed be Anna thy mother, of whom thy virgin ſleſh proceeded without blot or originall ſinne: granting alſo great Indulgence; and releaſe of ſinnes, to all thoſe that would inuocate the bleſſed Virgine with the ſame addition. For all theſe euident and ſubſtantiall proues, which make this matter as cleere as noone day: yet Bellarmin would haue downe, that this Pope holy father concluded no ſuch thing, but left it as a matter indifferent, cap. 13. It was alſo thus determined, Concil. Baſilienſ. ſeſſ. 36. Doctrinam illam differentem glorioſam virginem ſemper immaculatam fuiſſe ab omni originali & actuali peccato, tanquam piam & catholicam ſententiam deſinitum, nullique de catero licitum eſſe contrarium predicare aut docere: This doctrine, that the glorious Virgine was free from all ſinne originall and actual, we define to be a godly doctrine and conſonant to the faith, and that no man teach the contrary. And extraneay. commun. lib. 3. in c. 21. Sicutus 4. decreeth all thoſe to be heretikes, which affirme the Virgin Maria to haue been conceived in originall ſinne. How then is this matter left yndetermined?

ginit. cap. 4.

Auguſtine ſaith, Beatior Maria percipiendo fidem Chriſti; quam concipiendo carnem Chriſti: propinquius enim illi Maria profuiſſet, niſi felicius Chriſtum corde, quam carne geſtaſſet. Maria was more happie in perceiuing the faith of Chriſt, then in conceiuing the fleſh of Chriſt: neither had he purſued her to be the mother of Chriſt, if ſhe had not more happily borne him in her heart, than he did in her wombe. But what neede had Maria to belecue in Chriſt, if ſhe had been pure from her natiuitie, and had no ſinnes to be forgiuen her?

Auguſtine yet more plainly ſaith, Maria ex Adam mortua propter peccatum Adæ: Adam mortuus propter peccatum, & caro domini ex Maria mortua eſt propter delenda peccata: Maria dyed being borne of Adam, becauſe of the ſinne of Adam: Adam dyed becauſe of his owne ſinne: Chriſt dyed in the fleſh to take away our ſinnes: Ergo, Maria by his ſentence was borne in the ſinne of Adam.

Auguſtine further ſaith, Nullus exiſtit homo, de quo in hac vita conſtituto veraciter dici poſſit, nullum habere peccatum excepto viuo mediatore: There is no man liuing of whom it may be truly ſaid, that he hath no ſinne, our Mediator onely excepted: Contr. Pelag. lib. 2. 29. What now ſhall we ſay of the Virgine Maria? ſhe is found to be a ſinner with the reſt.

Leueeſ. 91. cap. 9. thus writeth againſt the Præſciliianiſt that ſaid, the children of promiſe were borne of women, but conceiued of the holy Ghoſt: Quod catholica fidei repugnans, atque inuoluntaria eſt, &c. Which aſſertion, ſaith he, is repugnant and contrarie to the Catholike faith, which confeſſeth that euery man receiuerh life in his mothers wombe, that contagion of ſinne and nature remainyng, which is ſtrjned into the offspring from the firſt parent: but they are regenerate and made the children of promiſe by the holy Ghoſt in the Sacrament of Regeneration, not in the wombe of fleſh: but in the efficacie of Baptiſme. Here this Catholike Biſhop concludeth all men vnder originall ſinne in the wombe, there is no exception made of the Virgine Maria.

Origen ſaith, Salus Chriſtus ſine macula eſt, &c. Onely Chriſt is without ſpoe, who did no ſinne, &c. ſen. 1. in Leuitic. and S. Hieronim. Concluſit Deus omnes ſub peccato, &c. God hath put vpon all vnder ſinne, to haue mercie vpon all, onely he is excepted, which did no ſinne, neither any guile found in his mouth, Algaſquæſt. 8. If onely Chriſt be excepted, then not the virgine Maria.

See the Teſtimonie of Maſter Philipp holy Martyr: Praiſed be God, that hath giuen you this ſorrowfull heart in reſpect of righteouſneſſe, and I pray you let me be partaker of theſe ſorrowes for ſinne, which be the teſtimonie of the preſence of the holy Ghoſt: did not the ſword of ſorrow pierce the heart of the elect and bleſſed mother of our Lord? did not Peter weep bitterly for his ſinnes? &c. pag. 1833. Epistol. ad Ioan. Careſſ. This holy Martyr confeſſeth, that the virgine Mary was a ſinner, and that ſhe ſorrowed for her ſinne.

61. Error.

The Papists. They would gather and conlude ſo much out of the anſwere of Maria to the Angel, who told her, ſhe ſhould conceiue and beare a ſonne: How canſt thou be ſaith ſhe ſaying I know no man. That is, ſhe plainly declareth, ſhe could haue no child by knowing a man; becauſe of her vow; for otherwiſe ſhe needed not haue asked ſuch a queſtion, how a woman might haue a ſonne promiſed her, if ſhe had married to haue carnall copulation. Rhemif. Luke 1. ſect. 13. Bellarm. de Almachis cap. 23. Anſw. Firſt, Origen thinketh, that this queſtion of the Virgine Maria ( ſen. can. 1. 1. 1. ) proceeded from doubtfullneſſe and ſome incredulitie or hardnes of belief: as thus he writeth, ſen. 1. 1. 1. Genes. Si dixiſſet Scriptura, creſcite, &c. If the Scripture had ſaid, increaſe and multiply, not ſaying ding further, he made them male and female, he might haue beene incredulous of this blessing, as the virgin *Mari*e was of the Angels blessing, saying, how can this be? Wherefore Belarmine needed not so to take vp Caluine, as deuiler of a new fantasie, in imputing some doubting to the Virgin; seeing this ancient father before him long agoe so affirmed.

Secondly, Ambrose maketh this to be the cause why *Mari*e so answered, she had read the Prophecie of Isay, that a Virgin should conceaue and bring forth a sonne, and therefore knew very well that this holy child should be otherwise conceaued, then by the knowledge or helpe of man, Isay 7.14. Thirdly, as also the Angell deliuering at once his whole message, and shewing what manner of childe it should be, euen the sonne of the most High, who should sit on the throne of David, and of his kingdome there should be no end: that is, that the child should be the Sonne of God: the straightwayes conceived that such a holy seede could not be borne of man, and therefore wondred, How without man he might be borne. See Caluine. Beza.

Belarmine replieth, First, that it is like the Virgin *Mari*e was ignorant of the Prophecie of Isay, that Christ should be borne of a Virgin; Isay 7.14. de uenue cap. 22.

Conra. First, it is a wonder, that they which do in other things aduance the Virgin *Mari*e above the state of a woman or creature, making her equall to the Angels, should now so much depresse her, imputing vnto the mother of Christ so grosse ignorance, as not to know the most manifest Prophecies of Christ. Secondly, it is untrue, that shee knew not the Prophecie, as may appear by her song, Luk. 2. vers. 55. As he hath spoken to our forefathers, to Abraham, and his seeds.

Secondly, saith he, she was a most humble Virgine, and therefore would not curiously search after the manner, how this child should be borne, Isay 7.14.

Conra. First, it is no curiositie, to desire to be further instructed for the confirmation of our faith, by godly simplicitie: as it was no curiositie in Godolus to desire to be confirmed in his calling by the signe of the fleece, Iudg. 6.36. Secondly, it proceedeth rather of pride and curiositie, when wee seeke to be confirmed, or to refuse the meanes of our further strengthening, as Abax is reproved, because hee would not aske a signe of the Lorde for his further confirmation, Isay 7.11.

The Protestants.

That *Mari*e, as she was an entire virgin before the birth of Christ, so that she continued also a virgin all her life after, we doe verely thinke, and condemne their opinion that hold the contrarie: but that she vowed or purposed virginitie, before the message of the Angell was brought vnto her, is rashly without Scripture, nay rather against it, affirmed.

Argum. 1. The text is plaine, that they had a purpose to consummate their mariage: when *Mari*e was betroched to Ioseph, before they came together, Matth. 1. 18. Ergo, there was a meaning to come together, if she had not in the meane time been found to be with childe of the holie Ghost: for otherwise, it should seeme to haue beene a mockerie on *Mari*e's behalfe, to promise mariage to Ioseph, without any purpose to performe the dutie of mariage. But if it were done with both their consents, then mocked they with God, who instituted mariage for some end and purpose, which could not be attained out of mariage: for they should haue married neither for auoyding fornication, nor for procreation, which are the two chiefe ends of mariage: as for the third, which is mutuall comfort, it ariseth of the former.

Belarmine answereth, that this vow of *Mari*e was no hinderance to their mariage, in as much as she knew by reuelation, that Ioseph would neuer exact mariage duties of her: Belarmine lib. 2. de uenue cap. 22.

Conra. 1. Thus they build their fantasies vpon deuised dreames and speculations, Scripture they haue none for *Mari*e's vow, and therefore they ground it vpon their owne conceits. 2. If *Mari*e had any such reuelation, it is like also it was reuealed vnto her, for what cause Ioseph should forbeare her companie; but this is contrarie to the Scripture: for it appeareth by the annunciation of the Angell vnto *Mari*e, when she mused with her selfe, what manner of salutation that should bee, Luk. 1. vers. 28. that she was not vsed or accustomed to such reuelations and visions. 3. Your Master of Sentences thinketh that Ioseph also purposed virginitie, lib. 4. distict. 30. b. If they both purposed virginitie, and yet contracted mariage, how was it not a kinde of mockerie, or deceit in them? 4. Your owne Doctors are vncertaine what to hold: Thomas Aquinas thinketh that *Mari*e made not an absolute vow before the espousals; Scotus affirmeth she did: wherefore agree first among your selues, and let vs know your mind, and you shal haue our answer.

Argum. 2. It was not the manner among the Iewes to vow virginitie, but it was rather a shame and reproch to remaine and die a virgin: and therefore Iephtas daughter lamented her virginitie, Iudg. 11. 38. How then could *Mari*e bee induced contrarie to the custome of the Church, to vow virginitie? Yea Augustine confesseth as much: Hec uxor Israelitarum recusabat: The manner of the Israelites did not suffer it, de Virginit. cap. 4. though he himselfe elswhere, and in the same place seemeth to incline to the contrarie opinion.

Rr

Againe,

Again, if Mary vowed virginity, she vowed also against the bearing of children, and so her vow should haue hindred the accomplishment of that message, which the Angell brought vnto her: for she vowed not to bee a mother, if she vowed any thing, then had she vowed against her selfe, who was chosen then to be the mother of our Lord.

The Arausicane Councell saith: Council. can. 11. Nemo quicquam veli Deo vouerit, nisi ab ipso acceperit, sicut legitur, quia de manu tua accepimus, datus tibi. 1. Chron. 29. No man can rightly vow anything to God, vnlesse he haue receiued it of God, as wee reade, that which we haue receiued in thy hands we giue vnto thee: Mary therefore should not haue done well to haue vowed virginity, hauing not at that time receiued the gift, when she espoused her selfe to Ioseph. It is sufficient for vs to know, that Mary was both before Christs natiuitie, and after so continued an vnblood virgin: As Ambrose saith; Synod. Telens. Quasi illa porta; quicquid clausa, & nemo pertransiit, sed solus Deus Israel, Exech. 44. Iammi hac porta Maria est; per quam in hunc mundum redemptor intrauit. What is that gate which remaineth shut, and no man shall passe thorough it but only the God of Israel? is not the Virgin Mary this gate, by the which the Redeemer came into this world?

Let vs see their owne decrees: Part. 2. can. 27. qu. 2. cap. 44. Inuenta est habens in utero, &c. Mary was found to be with childe, of Ioseph, who though he did not touch her, yet knew almost all the secrets, & uxoris fatura, of her that was to be his wife. And cap. 40. Licentia maritali. By the right and power of an husband Ioseph found her to bee with childe, &c. This then being knowne to Ioseph, that she was with childe, and not to others, sheweth, that she was in subiection to Ioseph, as an espoused wife: and therefore no such vowed virginities.

Saint Ambrose also thus writeth: Ecce ancilla, apparuit tibi offerre, contingat tibi, concepit tibi. Behold thy handmaid, here is the yeelding of her dutie and obedience; be it vnto me according to thy word, here is the conceiuing of her vow, lib. 2. in Luc. Saint Ambrose maketh this to be her vow, namely, that she might beare this holy childe without the seede of man: and thus becometh beginning after the annunciation, not before, which was long after the espousals.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE ASSUMPTION OF THE VIRGIN MARIE.

¶ 1. Error.

The Papists. They report the storie of the death and departure of the Virgin Mary, after this manner: At the time of her death after she had liued fixtie three yeeres, all the Apostles, being dispersed into diuers nations, were miraculously brought together to Ierusalem, to solemnize her funeral. They buried her in Gethsemani: and for three daies together the Angels were heard to sing melodious songs: At three daies end also Saint Thomas came; who being desirous to see her body, and not finding it in the graue, they thereupon assuredly deemed that her body was assumed into heauen, Rhemist. Al. 1. vers. 14.

Argum. 1. It is best agreeable to the priuiledge of the mother of God; not to see corruption, Rhemist. ibid. Seeing also her sonne was exempted from corruption, & natura Mariae corporis, the nature of Mariae must be excepted: caro enim Iesu est caro Mariae, the flesh of Iesus is the flesh of Mariae. And seeing Christ came to fulfill the law, which saith, Honor thy parents: it is very like, eum in morte speciali gratia eam honorasse, that he did honor her by speciall grace in her death. These reasons and other are to be read in a forged booke amongst Augustines workes, bearing title, De assumptione Mariae.

Ans. First, there is no credit to bee giuen to the forged writings which passe vnder the name of Saint Denis, and Athanasius, out of whom they doe report the assumption of Mary, nay their owne lesson, which they reade vpon the Assumption day, doth controll and confute the other. First, that storie saith, that without doubt she was taken vp in bodie: but your lesson leaueth it as vncertaine, whether she were raised vp in bodie or not. Secondly, the forged storie saith, she was buried in Gethsemani, which was in Mount Oliuet: your lesson saith, that the place of her buriall is in the midst of the valley of Iehosaphat, which is betweene Mount Oliuet and the citie, Rhemist. ibid.

Secondly, it followeth not because Christ tooke flesh of the Virgin, that therefore she should also as well be exempted from corruption: for he tooke flesh also of Dauid, and other his progenitors, who by the same reason should be made immortall. And if she were priuiledged by being the mother of Christ, from seeing corruption; why not also from hauing any sinne? for her sonne after the flesh saw neither.

Thirdly, Christ also both did and might honour his mother as he was man, though so great a priuiledge be not graunted vnto her. The reuerence which was to be done to his mother, was in regard of his manhood, and so was he obedient vnto them, Luk. 2. 51. and so long as he liued in the flesh: and therefore he did care for her euen vpon the crosse, commending her to the disciple whom whom he loued. But he neither was to honour her as he was God, and therefore not to free her from corruption, which had bin a worke of his Godhead : and the naturall affection and honour due vnto parents ceaseth after this life. It were then too grosse a conceit, to thinke that Christ had such regard now of the Virgin Mary in heauen, as he had of her, being his mother, in the daies of his flesh : for Christ, as he is not now knowne after the flesh, 2. Corinth. 5. 16. so neither knoweth he any after the flesh.

The Protestants.

This vncertaine report of the assumption of Mary, with other circumstances thereof, wee hold to be a very counterfeite storie, and worthie of no credit.

Argum. 1. If it were a matter of such waight, as they make it, who haue erected a new found holy day of the assumption of Mary, surely the Scriptures would not haue been silent therein : especially Saint Iohn (as Augustine saith) to whose charge she was committed, would haue left somewhat in writing of that matter : for (saith he) Nullus fidelius id narrare poterit, for no man could more truly and faithfully make relation thereof.

Argum. 2. That generall sentence pronounced vpon Adam and all Adams seede, must needs also take place in the Virgin Mary, Thou art dust, and to dust shalt thou returne, Genes. 3. 19. Christ only is excepted, and that by the testimonie of the word of God : wherefore, vnlesse this privilege of the Virgin could bee proued out of Scripture, as Christ is, wee must needs hold her subject to that generall law of corruption.

Augustine saith, Assumptio eius in apocrypha non in catholica reperitur historia: The assumption of Mary is found in an Apocryphal, that is, an obscure and vncertaine, not a Catholike or authenticall storie.

Galasius de Apocryphis: Liber qui appellatur transitus seu assumptio Mariæ, Apocryphus: The booke called the passage, or assumption of Mary, is Apocryphall : And in the end of the decree, he doth anathematize this booke and other the like, cum suis authoribus hæreticis, with heretikes the authors thereof. Galasius thought some heretike to bee the inuentor of this fable of Mary her assumption.

There is a booke intituled, Of the assumption of Mary, bearing S. Hieromes name, the author thereof seemeth to be more reasonable concerning this point, than our new Masters of poperie : first, whereas the tombe, where Mary is said to haue been buried, was found empty; the like (saith the author) many doe report of Saint Iohn the Euangelists graue, that there was nothing, but Manus found therein : Veruntamen, quid horum verius censetur, ambigimus, Wee are in doubt, which of these should bee most true. Secondly, after the same manner diuers learned doe thinke (saith he) that they rose for euer, that were seene in the citie, out of their graues, at the resurrection of Christ, and Dauid amongst the rest : and therefore Saint Peter durst not say, whose bodie, but whose graue is with vs, Act. 2. for his bodie being risen, the graue was empty. Like to this fassie he thinke the storie of Maries assumption to be. Thirdly, he thus concludeth, Melius Deo totum, mundum impossibile commissimus &c. It is better to leaue this matter to God, to whom nothing is impossible, then to define of our owne authoritie, that which wee cannot prooue. Thus farre that and worship of the Virgin Mary.

The Papists.

They doe ascribe vnto her a kinde of religious honor, more then to any of the Saints beside : 83. Error. For whereas they call the worship of Saints, seruice; the honour of the Virgin, they call it a higher kinde of seruice, Bellar. de Sanct. lib. 2. cap. 15. They call her Regina mundi, sedes throni Dei, ianua paradisi, The Queene of the world, the ladder of heauen, the throne of God, and gate of paradise : yea, they giue her iurisdiction ouer her sonne, Iube natum, command thy sonne, Iura matris impera filio, commaund thy sonne by the right of a mother : Coge Deum, compell God to be mercifull to sinners, annos. Fulk. 1. 15.

Again, they say, she is to be honoured with the feasts of her Natiuitie, Assumption, and Conception : for the other two, of her Purification, and Annunciation, are not proper to the Virgin, but concerne Christ : the one his Conception, the other his Presentation, Rhemist. alior. 1. fol. 7.

Argum. She her selfe prophesieth of all Catholike generations, that they should blesse her in keeping her festiuities and memorials : but if these festiuities of her Conception and Assumption be neglected, she should haue none at all : and so bee thought worthie of lesse remembrance, than any other Saint, Galas. 4. fol. 5. Rhemist.

The Protestants.

1. WE doe not celebrate any feſtiuall daies in the honour of creatures, neither of the Virgine Mari, nor any other Saint, but onely to the honor of God: and therefore the feaſts of the Annuntiation, and Purification, may much better be receiued, becauſe they belong and are referred vnto Chriſt, then the other feſtiuities of the aſſumption and conception of Mari, the inſtitution whereof was moſt ſuperſtitious: the one for the fayned aſſumption of her body, which your owne writers are vncertaine of; the other to maintaine the hereſie of the Franciscanes, that ſhe was conceived and borne without ſinne. As for the memorie of the Virgine Mari, it may better be kept, then by ſuch feſtiuities: as our Sauour Chriſt taught to keepe the remembrance of Mari Magdalen, by preaching the Goſpell, Matth. 26. 13. Fulk. annus. Ali. 1.7 And if they onely are Catholike generations, that call her bleſſed in keeping theſe feſtiuities in her memorill: then there were no Catholike generations for many hundred yeeres after, and ſo doe you condemne the age of the Apoſtles: for neither then, nor many yeeres after were theſe ſuperſtitious feſtiuities heard of. But Mari ſaith in her ſong, From henceforth, euen from this time forward, ſhall all generations call me bleſſed: ſo that, if her bleſſednes had conſiſted in the memorie of thoſe dayes, they ſhould immediately haue been kept, eſpecially the day of her natiuitie.

2. We doe allow all praife giuen vnto the virgine, without the diſhonor of God and her Sonne and Sauour Chriſt: we doe acknowledge the honour that God vouchſafed her, not to be meritorious or principall efficient cauſe of our redemption, but onely an holy veſſell, and inſtrumentall cauſe of the conception and birth of Chriſt, by whole only merit and worthines our redemption is perſited, as by a proper and principall, and onely meritorious efficient cauſe themſelues. And therefore, thoſe are blaſphemous titles which are giuen vnto her, to call her the ladder of eſcaies, and gate of Paradife, and ſuch like: and ſo in a manner to make her our redeemer. Auguſtine ſaith, Shee was more happie, in that ſhee conceived the faith of Chriſt, than in conceiuing the beſt of Chriſt. If then theſe titles be vnmeeet for her, in reſpect that ſhe receiued the faith of Chriſt, which is common to all the children of God, then are they more ynfit, in that ſhe conceived the beſt of Chriſt.

3. It is great preſumption to thinke, that the virgine Mari may commaund her Sonne heauen, ſeeing ſhe had no authoritie to commaund him vpon earth, in any thing pertaining to his office, Ioh. 2. 4. And now likewiſe that carnall reſpect of children to their parents ceaſeth in the kingdome of God.

As for that ſuperioritie and higher kind of honour which ſhe hath aboue all the Saints heaue, wee find no warrant out of ſcripture. Shee is reſpected now in heauen, not as ſhe bare the beſt of Chriſt, but as ſhee liued by faith in Chriſt: ſhe alſo reioyced in God her Sauour. The Saints therefore maketh one condition and eſtate of all that ſhall be ſaued: and ſaith generally of all, of others as well as the virgine Chriſts mother, That they ſhall be as the Angels in heauen, Matth. 22. 30. Yea, our Sauour ſheweth, that Whoſoeuer doth the will of God, is his ſiſter, brother, and mother, Matth. 12. 50. By the which we learne, that other the faithfull ſeruants of God by their faith in Chriſt, be as well accepted of God as if they had borne Chriſt in the beſt. When then is that high dignitie which ſhee hath, as the mother of Chriſt, aboue all Saints? Auguſtine ſaith: Tu concinſa ſine ſine choris conuinſa, Angelis & Archangelis ſociata: Thou (O Virgine) doeſt reioyce being ioyned vnto the heauenly quire, being aſſociated to Angels and Archangels. He maketh her not Lady or Queene of heauen, but onely a fellow companion of the Saints and Angels.

Synod Moguntin. cap. 45. ſancti qui vita huius curſum beato ſine claſſerunt, &c. The Saints departed, as the moſt noble members of Chriſt, muſt be honored of vs with that dutie and worſhip of loue and fellowſhip, which the Saints liuing are to be worſhipped withall. If then the moſt noble members of Chriſt are no otherwiſe to be adored, then holy men vpon earth, the Virgine Mari can haue no greater honour: for more ſhe cannot be, then a moſt noble member of Chriſt.

This truth hath been ſealed: Helen Strike perſecuted, becauſe lying in childe bedde, ſhe reſuſed to call vpon the name of the Virgine Mari, being thereto exhorted by her neighbours, but onely vpon God, for Ieſus Chriſts ſake, Fax. pag. 1267.

Saint Hierome hath this ſentence writing againſt Heluidius: Inuocandus eſt Spiritus ſanctus, in Maria virginitate ſuo ſenſu, ore meo deſudat, &c. The holy Spirit muſt be called vpon, to defend the virginie of Mari by my tongue, &c. the Lord Ieſus muſt be inuocated, to deliuer from all ſuſpition the ſacred wombe, &c. God the father muſt be prayed vnto, to declare the mother of his Sonne to be a Virgin. And why, I pray you, doe he not alſo call vpon the virgin Mari to defend her owne virginie, if ſhe be to be prayed vnto?

And concerning the feſtiuities of Mari, if you would indeed haue them ſo ſolemnely kept aboue other holy dayes, what meaneth then your owne darling Boniſace 8. to preferre the feſts, not only of the Apostles and Euangelists, but of the foure Doctours of the Latine Church, making mention at all of Maries festiuals: for these are the words of the decree, Sext. decretal. lib. 2. cap. 1. Meritis promissis, Apostolos, Euangelistas et confessores in vniuersali ecclesia honorificis maioris impendendi attollendos, &c. This Sea hath worthily provided that the Apostles, Euangelists and Confessors, should through the vniuersall Church be more highly extolled, that they may be so much the more honoured of the Church, as they haue more, then others, lightened the time. This decree preferreth the commemorations of S. Ambrose, Gregorie, Hierome, Augustine, before the memorie of the virgine Mariæ.

De ſanct. virgine, cap. 3.

Serm. 35. de aſſump. Mariæ.

AN APPENDIX OR FIFT PART, OF THE

merites of the Virgine, and of the Aue Maria:

The Papists.

They doe teach and holde, that shee onely amongst all women deserued to beare the redeemer of the world, and so by her merites obtayned that fauour to be the mother of Christ. 84. Error.

The Angell saluteth her, and calleth her, Full of grace, which sheweth the prerogative shee had aboue other women, and the worthinesse that was in her, Rhemist. Luc. 1. 28.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge that herein she was blessed aboue all other women, in that she was chosen to be the mother of our Saviour, and that she was indued fully with the graces of the holy Ghost: but those graces she had not of her selfe, but of the free gift of God, without her merites: and S. Hierome sheweth how she was full of grace, Santa Maria, quia concipimus, &c. Holy Mariæ, because she conceived him, in whom the Godhead dwelled bodily, is full of grace, tom. 4. ad Principium; shee was full of grace, because shee was filled with Christ: as S. Ambrose saith, quia gratia replebatur auctore, because she was replenished with the Author of grace, lib. 2. in Luc. It was not then her owne grace, but the grace of Christ.

The word plena, signifieth freely beloued, not full of grace, as it is likewise taken, Ephes. 1. 6. He hath made vs accepted in his beloued Sonne.

She herselfe confesseth her selfe in her song, to be of a low degree, poore in spirit, and hungry, when God in mercy looked vpon, Luk. 1. 50. whereas God sent away the proud and rich: as the word placuisse that thought himselfe rich of good workes, obtayned nothing of God, Luk. 18. Where if she had stooode vpon her owne deserts, she had made her selfe rich, not poore: neither should she haue magnified the mercy of God, but his iustice: for when a reward is giuen according to desert, it is of his iustice and not mercy.

Ambrosius thus concludeth, Simul ancillam dicendo, nullam sibi prerogatiuam tanta gratia vendidisse, and in calling her selfe handmaid, shee challengeth no prerogative of so great grace, for to bring forth one, that was humble and meeke, it became her also to be humble.

Hierome vpon those words, Luk. 1. 48. Eram henceforth shall they call me blessed: Animaduersum, quod beatam se esse dicit, non proprio merito, aut virtute, &c. Marke, that shee calleth her selfe blessed, not by her owne merite or vertue, but by the mercie of God dwelling in her, de dialog. 1.

Augustine thus commenteth vpon the words of her song, Magnificat anima mea Dominum, &c. De sancta. quomodo nullis suis precedens meritis, sed sola dei bonitate sit ab iniquitate saluata: Let my virginie, soule praise the Lord, and remember, how that not by any merites going before, but through the Seru. 35. onely gracious goodnes of God, it is deliuered from sinne.

Bernard saith, Regina misericordia dicitur, ut soli tribuamus diuina misericordia non meritis, quod super creaturam precellens, &c. She is called the Queene of mercy, that we should ascribe it onely to Gods mercy, not her merites, that she is exalted aboue all other creatures, Serm. super salu. Re- uerentia Mariæ not faued by her merites, nor consequently the mother of Christ, by her merites, but only by the meere fauour of God.

There is also wanteth not the scale, Helen Stork persecuted because she affirmed in effect, that there was no merites in the Virgine, which procured her that honour, to be the mother of Christ, and to be preferred before other women; but Gods free mercy only exalted her to that estate. 1267.

The Papists.

They much commend the often sining of the Aue Maria, which is done (say they) to the honour of Christ and our Lady. 85. Error.

They be the very summe and abridgement of the whole Gospell: and therefore to be used, Rhemist. Luc. 1. 28. 11.

1. You do shamefully abuse those words, in making a prayer of them, which was but a forme of salutation vſed by the Angell: neither can you ſay them in that ſenſe they were vſed in by the Angell. Alſo you offend in the vaine repetition of them vpon your beades, as the heathen did; Matth. 6. 7. and in committing idolatry, in the inuocating of the Virgine, and praying vnto her in theſe words: who is a creature, and not a God to be called vpon.

2. What myſterie ſoeyer be contained in theſe words, yet the people vnderſtand nothing at all. And though we denie not but that the words are holy and myſticall, yet it followeth not that they ſhould be vſed for a prayer.

3. What great account they make of the Aue Marie, it may appeare by this: that they thinke they may alter and change it, and adde to it at their pleaſure: as by Pope Sixtus the fourth, there was a claufe more added vnto the common Aue Marie, in this manner: Haile Marie full of grace, the Lord is with thee, bleſſed art thou amongſt women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy wombe Ieſu Chriſt, and bleſſed is Anna thy mother, of whom thy virginity ſaith haſt proceeded without blotte of original ſinne. What a fearefull thing is this, that they ſhould thus dare to adde vnto the Scriptures? How can they now eſcape that iudgement that is threatned againſt al thoſe that doe adde, or take, ought or from the word of God? Apocal. 22. 18.

That the Aue Marie is no prayer, nor to be vſed as a prayer, we haue the glorious teſtimonie of the holy martyrs, Claudius Menerius Martyr, being asked whether it were not good to ſalute the Bleſſed Virgine with the Aue Marie, made this anſwere: When ſhe was on earth, ſhe had then neede of the Angels greeting, for then ſhe had neede of ſaluation, as well as an other: but now ſhe is bleſſed, that no more bleſſing can be wiſhed to her, ſax. pag. 905. col. 1.

Maſter Latimer B. Martyr, moleſted and troubled for affirming, that the Aue Marie was ſalutation onely and no prayer, pag. 1736. col. 2.

Thus farre of ſuch queſtions and controuerſies, as concerne the kingdome of Chriſt, which is his Church: of the which we haue now entreated at large: firſt in generall of the whole, and then of the ſeueral parts and members thereof in order. Now follow thoſe controuerſies, which belong vnto the Prieſthood of Chriſt, the third excellent and glorious office of our Sauour (which his Prieſthod is partly ſeene in his interceſſion and mediation for vs, partly in his ſacrifice, where we are to handle the great and waightie controuerſies of the Sacraments, by the which the ſacrifice of his death is applied vnto vs.

THE TENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE INTERCESSION AND MEDIAtion of Chriſt, whether he be only our Mediator and Interceſſor.

The Papiſts.

26. Error.

They ſeeme in theſe very words to confeſſe, that Chriſt is the only ſingular advocate and patron of mankind, that by himſelfe alone, and by his own merites procureth all grace and mercie, none aſking or obtaining either grace in this life, or glory in the next, but by him. But this leaue not, but that there may be other inferior mediators, though not in the ſingular ſenſe, Rhemif. ann. 1. Tit. 2. ſect. 4.

Argum. Chriſt is the only Sauour and Redeemer of the world, yet the name of Sauour and Redeemer is given to men in the Scriptures, as Iudg. 3. 9. Othniel is called a Sauour: Act. 7. 35. Moſes a Deliuerer or Redeemer: and all this without derogation to him, that in more excellent manner is the onely Sauour of the world: Ergo, there may be many mediators, in an inferior degree to that ſingular mediator, to offer vp our prayers, Rhemif. ibid.

Argum. 1. If Christ be sufficient to procure all grace and mercy vnto vs, what need then the mediation or intercession of Saints? for we must either doubt of his power, in ioyning other helpes with him, or make question of his good will and readines to helpe vs, in making other mediators necessary.

They make other mediators and intercessors beside Christ, euen in that high and singular degree: for not onely Christ by their doctrine, by his merites procureth grace, but other Saints also by their merites, are our mediators: as it is plaine to see in that popish prayer, Tu per Thomam intercedis. By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did spend, make vs, Christ, to cleaue; as when Thomas did offer. In this blasphemous prayer and a thousand such, they pray onely to Christ as God, not as Mediator; men departed, and many of them no Saints, they make their onely Mediators by their owne proper merites. See Fuller ibid.

Again, their Saints are not onely intercessors for grace, but conferrers of grace and helpe, which is the highest degree of Mediation. They appoint severall Patronages amongst the Saints for all purposes: S. Apollonia for the toothach: Saint Roke for the pestilence: Saint Petrus for the ague. Saint Gregory for Schollers: Saint Martin for Souldiers: Saint Luke for Painter: Saint Crispian for Shoemakers: Saint Nicholas for the sea: Saint Iohann for come of wine. Urbanus for wine. And thodo they not onely (as they heard vs in hand) pray for these graces and blessings, but they haue power themselves to bestow them.

Argum. 2. Concerning the name and title of Sauour and Redeemer, we answere: first, they are called in the Scripture Deliuerers and Sauours, in respect of some temporall deliuerance, not of eternall redemption, which belongeth onely to Christ: but you make your Saints mediators of eternall redemption. Secondly, they whom the Scripture calleth Redeemers and Sauours, were appointed by God for such temporall deliuerance: but you cannot show the like appointment for Saints to be mediators of eternall saluation; though in an inferiour degree to Christ. Thirdly, seeing the name of God and Christ is giuen to men in the scriptures, as to Priests and Prophets: why may you not as well say, that there may be many Gods and Christs properly, though in an inferiour degree to him which is onely God and Christ, as to appoint other inferior Redeemers, Sauours and Mediators?

See more of their arguments for the mediation of Saints against the onely mediation of Christ.

con. 9. qu. 3. par. 2.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge but one onely Mediatour as well of intercession as redemption, euen Iesus Christ our Lord: to whom and through whom all our prayers and supplications ought to be made: to him we onely pray, as being one God with the Father and the holy Ghost: by him and through him we onely pray, as being the onely Mediatour betweene God and man.

Argum. 1. S. Paul saith, There is one Mediatour of God and men, the man Iesus Christ, 1. Tim. 2. 5. Hence to frame this argument: The Mediatour betweene God and men, must himselfe be both God and man: but so is none but Christ: Ergo, he is the onely Mediatour. Replie. There is no need making a distinction of Mediators, whom at large with his sophistical distinction see con. 9. qu. 3. par. 2. argum. Protestan. 3.

Argum. 2. He is onely the Advocate and Mediatour for our finnes, that is the propitiation for our finnes, 1. Iohn 2. 1. Christ onely is the propitiation for our finnes: Ergo, the onely Mediatour.

I will adioyne other arguments for the sole mediation of Christ out of the fathers, grounded vpon the Scriptures.

Argum. 3. If any were ioyned with Christ in the office of mediation, the Angels are most like, being the next in dignitie to the Trinitie of all Gods creatures: but the Angels are not our mediators: for S. Paul saith, Galath. 3. The law was giuen by the Angels in the hand of a Mediator. Therefore Angels are not mediators. Saint Augustine saith: Quid inquit, qui nos reconciliat? ibi, mendum mibi ad angelos? Whom should I finde to reconcile me vnto thee? should I goe to the Angels, &c. ibi. confel. 10. cap. 42.

Argum. 4. There is one and the same Mediatour, both of the Law and Gospell, as the Apostle saith, The law was giuen in the hand of a Mediator, habuit Christum, Galat. 3. 19. Thus Origen, Chrysostom, with most of the Greeke interpreters, expound this place: but the Saints could not be mediators of the law, being not yet borne: Ergo, neither are they Mediators of the Gospell.

Argum. 5. There is the same Mediatour of the creation of man, and redemption, which was of the creation: as Athanasius saith, Ps. creator a existerent, opus fuit mediator: A mediator was necessary, that the creatures might haue a being, Epist. de synod. Nicen. decret. But Christ only was the Mediatour of the creation of man, Heb. 1. 2. by him he made the world: Ergo, onely of him is the mediation of man.

Argum. 6. He is the onely true Mediatour, as Augustine saith, Pro quo datus hic populus, sed ipse pro omnibus: For whom no man prayeth, but he prayeth, for all. But the Saints had one neede of an others prayers, Christ onely needeth the intercession of none: Ergo he is the only Mediatour.

men. lib. 2. c. 8.

Augustinus thus further writeth vpon this place: Si Apostolus ita dixerit, &c. If the Apostle had said thus: If any man sinne, you haue me a mediatur with the Father, and I doe by my prayer ob- taine pardon for your sinnes (as Praxianus in a certaine place maketh the Bishop a mediatur betweene the people and God:) Quis, scilicet Apostolum Christi, & non sicut Antichristum in uerbo? Who would behold him as an Apostle of Christ, and not as Antichrist? It is then Antichristian doctrine, in Augustinus iudgement, to make any other mediators or intercessors beside Christ.

Discretus. Gay. Licet in conspectu Domini pretiosa mors iustorum, nullius tamen in suis occisio redemptio sit mundi: Although in the sight of God, precious be the death of his Saints; yet the buying of no Innocent (but Christ) is the redemption of the world. Againe, Non est redemptio captiuitatis hominum, nisi in sanguine eius qui dedit se redemptionem pro omnibus, ibidem: There is no redemption of mans captiuitie, but in his blood, that gaue himselfe a redemption for all: Ergo, there are no more Saviours, Redeemers, or Mediators, but Christ.

Edwif. Extrin. commun. lib. 3. tit. 11. c. 1. Ioanni. 21. Expeditus timore necessarium est ut unusquisque illorum, qui ad dextram patris residet in extelsis, &c. We thinke it expedient, yea necessarie, that he that sitteth at the right hand in the highest, whom both the windes and Sea obey, wee lift vp our heart with our hands, &c. This Canon maketh no mention of any inuocation of Saints, but of praying vnto Christ, as not onely expedient, but necessarie.

I will adde also the testimonie of a learned Papist of their owne side: Mansi inquit sum Christi mediatoris, &c. Wherefore the title of Mediatour betweene God and man, reconciling and appeasing, doth remaine vnto Christ, as proper vnto him, and not communicable with any creature, either man or Angell: Esperus in 2. Timoth. 2. 202. d.

This doctrine hath been sealed: Richard Fournus a French Martyr; I beleue, as in the worke of God is testified, Iesus Christ to be y only mediatur, and aduocate for al sinners: albeit the Virgin Mary be a blessed woman, yet the office of an aduocate belongeth not vnto her, Fox pag. 111. m.

John Lamberts holy Martyr: The Scripture vseth to speake but of one Mediatour, which signifieth a maker of peace or attonement betwixt God the Father and man, 1. Tim. 2. there is one God and one Mediatour, &c. Fox pag. 1109. respons. ad artic. 15.

HERE FOLLOW SVCH CONTROVERSIES,

as concerne the Sacraments of the Church.

Of the Sacraments then, we must first intreate in generall, and afterward handle them in particular.

THE ELEVENTH GENERALL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENTS IN GENERAL.

This Controversie containeth diuers questions: first, of the nature and definition of a Sacrament. Secondly, of the efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the number and order of the Sacraments, the difference and preeminence amongst them. They shal follow in their order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE NAME, nature, and definition of a Sacrament.

FIRST, OF THE NAME OF a Sacrament.

The Papists.

By Error.

First, concerning the name, Sacrament, they doe enforce it, as necessarie, and would germe the word taken in this speciall signification for the mysticall rites of the Church, out of the Scriptures, Beherus lib. 1. de Sacram. sup. 7.

Argum. Ephes. 5. vers. 31. Saint Paul calleth Matrimonie a Sacrament, This is a great Sacrament.

Ans. First, the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, This is a great myserie, but I speake concerning Christ and his Church: So then this myserie is not in the coniunction of man and woman, but in the spirituall vniing of Christ and his Church; as S. Ambrose also expoundeth this place: Sacramentum grande in unitate viri & femina. He signifieth that there is a great Sacrament, or myserie, in the vniing of man and woman: then it followeth, Nec hoc prodit, sed aliam causam flagitat, &c. But the Apostle alleageth not this, but requireth a greater cause, that is of Christ and his Church. Secondly, if it shall be answered, that the spirituall vniing of Christ and his Church, is signified in Matrimonie, which is the externall signe or sacrament thereof: Wee graunt, that there is such a mysticall signification in Matrimonie; but it followeth not, that it is therefore a Sacrament, as Baptisme and the Eucharist are: for it being instituted in Paradise, cannot be a Sacrament of the Gospel. Thirdly, they doe not well to translate, Sacrament, seeing the Greeke word is mysterium, which signifieth a secret and mysticall thing, which name, as they well know, is giuen to many things in Scripture, which are no Sacraments. Wherefore this place sheweth no such speciall vse of the word Sacrament.

The Protestants.

The word Sacrament, being the Latine of the Greeke word, μυστήριον, wee refuse not to vse, being fitly applied to the mysteries of Baptisme and the Lords Supper, though in this speciall sense and signification, it cannot be found vsed in Scripture: the name (myserie) is diuerly read in the Scripture, taken sometime in the good part, as Rom. 16. 25. 1. Tim. 3. 16. the Gospel is called a myserie: sometime in the euill, as 2. Thess. 2. 7. The myserie of iniquitie: Apoc. 17. 5. the whore of Babylon is called a myserie; yet as a speciall name for the Sacraments of the Church, we finde it not expressed in Scripture: yet notwithstanding we doe receiue it as a fit terme, to signifie the mysteries of religion.

Argum. Like as the Church of God in the diuision of Arrius, vsed the name, homoianism, though it were not read or found in Scripture, to expresse one and the selfe same substance of the Trinitie: the Arrians objected, that the word was not to bee vsed, because the Scriptures had it not: Saint Ambrose answereth, Quare si ita credi liceat, si nominari non liceat: I aske, if it be not lawfull so to believe, though not to vse that name: If we may beleue so, why not also professe, or name it for deus verus deus, cap. 3. So we say, that this word Sacrament being agreeable to the Scriptures in this sense, which we vse it, wee stand not so much vpon the very acceptance of the word in Scriptures. But as S. Hierome saith, Non est nobis cura de vocabulo, cum sensus sit in tuto: Wee care not much for the word, agreeing vpon the sense: aduers. Lucifer.

SECONDLY, OF THE DEFINITION of a Sacrament.

We thus define a Sacrament, to be an outward visible signe, representing an holy, inward, spirituall grace, instituted of Christ, to be vsed in that manner he hath appointed, to seale vs in the promises of God, and to assure vs of the remission of sinnes, by the righteousness of faith in Christ, Rom. 4. 11.

Some things there be in this definition, that are agreed vpon betweene vs and our aduersaries: as that the Sacraments are outward signes of spirituall and holie graces, and that there must be a conueniencie and agreement betweene the signe and the thing signified: that not euery thing may be represented by a Sacrament, but an holy and spirituall grace: that a Sacrament ought to be instituted by a diuine not an humane authoritie, Beilerm. de Sacram. in gener. lib. 1. cap. 9.

The severall points then wherein wee dissent from them, and which they mislike in this definition, are these: First, concerning the authoritie of instituting a Sacrament, which wee affirme to be deuised onely from Christ, and manifestly to be proued out of the Scriptures. Secondly, of the forme and matter of the Sacraments. Thirdly, of the instrumentall or ministeriall cause, which is the Minister. Fourthly, of the vse and end of a Sacrament, whether it be a seale of the promises of God, and instituted for that end.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE EFFICIENT CAUSE, that is, the author or institutor of a Sacrament.

The Papists.

They doe willingly graunt, that neither the Apostles then had, nor the Church now hath authoritie to institute Sacraments: but that this power is onely in Christ, and that the Apostles did but declare and deliuer that which they receiued of Christ: yet for the triall of this, they refuse use to be iudged by the expresse word of God, but flie vnto their traditions, which they call the word of God not written, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 14. & 23.

Argum. The sacrament of Baptisme, and of the Eucharist, were instituted without expresse warrant of Scripture: for at that time the new Testament was not written, when Christ ordained those mysteries: Ergo, for the other Sacraments we neede not the expresse commaundment of Scripture, Bellarm. lib. 1. cap. 14.

Ans. First, the traditions of our Sauour giuen vnto the Apostles concerning those two Sacraments, were afterward written by the Apostles, and expressely set downe in Scripture: and therefore we doubt not, but that they were of Christs institution. But your traditions being not committed to writing, concerning your other forged sacraments, are iustly suspected, seeing the Apostles should haue as well been charged with all the Sacraments, if Christ had instituted them, as with onely two. Secondly, how followeth it, the word of God was sometime vnwritten, therefore it is so still? or Christ, who was the author of the word written, might institute Sacraments without expresse Scripture: Ergo, the testimonie of Scripture is not necessarie now?

The Protestants.

WE hold no Sacraments to bee of Christs institution, but those onely which the Scripture testifieth to haue been commaunded by Christ, as Baptisme, Matth. 28. 19. the Lords Supper, Luk. 22. 20. The other which haue no testimonie of Scripture, were not appointed by Christ.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, That the Scriptures are able to make the man of God absolute and perfect to euery good worke, 1. Timoth. 3. 17. But how can the Minister of God bee perfectly furnished and prepared for the worke of the Ministerie, if he haue not sufficient direction out of the Scriptures concerning the Sacraments of the Church? for how can he absolutely execute euery part of his office, if he faile in the right vse of the Sacraments? Ergo, seeing the Scriptures are able to make him perfect, from thence he receiueth sufficient instruction for the Sacraments.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, speaking of the Sacrament, I haue receiued of the Lord, that which I haue also deliuered vnto you, 1. Cor. 11. 23. wherefore no Sacraments ought to bee deliuered to the Church, but such as haue bene receiued of Christ: and what is receiued of Christ, cannot bee shewed but out of the Scripture. Wherefore their opinion is more reasonable amongst the Papists, that denie all the Sacraments to haue been instituted of Christ, as Hugo, and Peter Lombard, with other, because they cannot finde all their Sacraments in Scripture, than Bellarminus affirmeth is, who graunteth, that all the Sacraments are of Christs institution: but for the prooffe thereof he runneth from Scripture to tradition.

Augustine saith, Christus sacramenti: numero paucissimis, obseruatione facilis, &c. Christ hath inuened his people together by the Sacraments, few in number, easie in obseruation: such are Baptisme, and the partaking of his bodie and blood. Then it followeth: Es si quid aliud in scriptis canonicis commendatur: And if any other Sacrament be commaunded in the Canonically Scripture, Epist. 118. Ergo, we must attend vpon the Scripture and written word of God, if we wil be instructed aright concerning the Sacraments.

Council. Florentin. sess. 7. Andreas Colossens. Velini a vobis simplicissimi patres doceri, &c. I would gladly learne of you (honourable fathers) whether the most sacred Gospell doe not containe the most certaine doctrine of our religion: I thinke, you will not (such is your godlines) make other answer, then that the most absolute knowledge of our faith is there comprehended. If the Gospell then doe teach the perfect rule of faith, and religion, then it must needes instruct vs concerning the Sacraments, without the which our religion is not perfect.

S. Hierome saith, Ergo vs ad institutionis plenitudinem, verbum Domini, hoc est Euangelium, &c. For the fuller institution, I pray you diligently reade the word of the Lord, that is the Gospell: let vs in no wise rest vpon our owne iudgement, &c.

Master Philpos holy Martyr: Our Sauour saith, Verbum quod locutus sum, &c. The word that I haue spoken shall iudge you in the latter day; if the word shall iudge vs then, much more ought it to be a iudge of our doings now: For pag. 1805. Ergo, wee ought to enterprise nothing in religion, without the warrant of Gods word in Scripture.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE FORME OF A Sacrament, and the manner of consecration; and of the matter: first of the forme.

The Papists.

90. Error.

THe Sacrament is not consecrated (say they) by all the words of the institution, but by a certaine forme of speech to be vsed ouer the elements: as these words to be said ouer the bread, This is my bodie: and the like ouer the wine, This cup is the new testament, &c. And in Baptisme these:

In the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghost. These are the formes of the Sacrament, and very words of consecration, though spoken in a straunge tongue, without further inuocation of the name of God, or giuing of thanks, or without a sermon, which we require (as they say) as necessary to the essence of a Sacrament, Rhemist. 1. Corinth. 11. sect. 11. 13. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Sacrament. cap. 19.

Argum. Saint Paul saith, The cup of blessing which wee blesse, 1. Corinth. 10. 16. The Apostle referred the benediction or blessing to the cup or Chalice, which is nothing else but the consecration thereof, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. First, we deny not, but that to blesse here doth signifie to sanctifie or consecrate: but that is not done by a magicall murmuration of words ouer the Sacrament, but by the whole action according to Christs institution, in distributing, receiuing, giuing of thanks: as the Apostle afterwards saith in the same verse, the bread which we breake, &c. which we breake, saith he, as before of the cup, which we blesse, shewing thus much, that the benediction consisteth not onely in the pronouncing of the words, but in the whole action, of taking, receiuing, breaking, distributing, giuing of thanks, &c. Secondly, as for the words which Christ vttered in the institution, we rehearse them not, as a magicall charme to bee said ouer the bread and wine to conuert their substance: but to declare what they are made to vs by force of Christs institution, namelie, his bodie and blood.

Bellarmin also affirmeth, that the words of the institution doe not serue at all for the instruction of the people, but onely to consecrate the elements; and therefore they may be as well repeated in Latine, saith he, as in the vulgar tongue, because God vnderstandeth all languages, cap. 19.

Argum. The words to be vsed in Baptisme: In the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, are words of inuocation or benediction, not of instruction. Ergo.

Ans. First, and doth he thinke, that in these words there is no instruction? how then saith the Apostle, what soeuer is written, is written for our learning and instruction, Rom. 15. 4. If these words then be written in Scripture, they are for our learning: Againe, when the whole Trinitie is named, is it no part of instruction to the people to know in whose name they are baptized? which certaine disciples of Ephesus were ignorant of, that had not heard, whether there were an holie Ghost, Act. 19. 12.

Secondly, it is no good reason, that the Sacraments may bee celebrated in any tongue, because God vnderstandeth: for so it should not be necessarie to vse any tongue, because God vnderstandeth the thoughts: the priests intention then by this reason might serue without any words at all. Againe, if the words containe a prayer and inuocation, it is fit the people should vnderstand it, that they may giue consent and say Amen to the prayer.

The Protestants.

Bellarmin chargeth vs with three great vntuths: first, that we hold, that the words of institution are not necessarie in euery Sacrament, but Baptisme onely. Secondly, that wee say, a sermon is of the essence of the Sacrament. Thirdly, that the words of institution doe not serue at all towards consecration, or benediction of the elements: but our opinion is this; We doe not hold, that is an essentiall part of the Sacrament, alwaies to haue a sermon before it, as they vnderstand a sermon; which notwithstanding were most conuenient, and alwaies to bee wished: but this wee affirme, that the sacrament cannot be rightly ministred, vlesse there bee a declaration; and shewing forth of the Lords death, not onely in the visible action of breaking and distributing the elements; but also in setting forth the end of the Lords death out of the word of God, with an exhortation to thankfulness, which is alwaies obserued amongst vs in the daily celebration and receiuing of the Sacrament. Concerning the words of the institution, wee also graunt, that they are necessarily to be vsed in the celebration of the Sacrament; but not as the Papiests vse them: For first, they make them not all of one value, but out of the whole institution, picke out certaine consecratorie words, as they call them: as, This is my bodie, This is the cup; whereas the other words, Take ye, eate ye, drinke ye, doe this in remembrance: doe as well belong to the institution, as the other. Secondly, they say, that the words of institution doe not serue any thing at all for the instruction of the people, to shew them the right vse of the Sacrament, but onely for benediction and consecration of the elements, Bellarmin. cap. 19. Thirdly, they doe hold, that onely by the pronouncing of those words, the elements are consecrated: whereas by the whole action, and celebration of the Sacrament, the giuing, receiuing, inuocation, thanksgiuing, according to Christs institution, the consecration is performed vpon the elements: Fulk. 1. Corint. 10. sect. 4.

Argum. 1. That the words of institution rehearsed, doe helpe as well to admonish and stirre vp the people to a thankfull remembrance of the death of Christ, as to consecrate and blesse the elements, it is manifest: whereas Christ saith, as the words are vsually rehearsed, Doe this in remembrance of me: And S. Paul saith, That by receiuing the Sacrament, wee doe shew forth the Lords Lords death, 1. Cor. 11. 26. Ergo, the people are by the words pronounced, instructed and aduised, and taught the right vse of the Sacrament.

Argum. 2. That the words of institution doe helpe toward the benediction or consecration of the elements, wee denie not; but not by them alone, but prayer also and thanksgiving, and the whole action beside of receiuing. To the consecration or sanctifying of any creature, two things are required: the word of God, and prayer, 1. Timoth. 4. 5. Neither the word sanctifieth without prayer, nor prayer without the word: Ergo, to the sanctifying and consecrating of the Sacrament, the bare rehearfall of the institution sufficeth not, without inuocation and prayer.

Augustine saith, Accedat verbum ad elementum, & fiet Sacramentum: Let the word be added to the element, and it is become a Sacrament. And in another place, he sheweth what word is meant: Faciens verbum, non quia dicitur, sed quia creditur, hoc est verbum fidei, quod predicamus. The word effecteth this, not because it is spoken or vttered, but because it is beleued: this is the word of faith, saith the Apostle, which we preach: Thus farre Augustine traile in Iohan. 80. Wherein it is not the muttering of a few words in a strange tongue, after the manner of inchaunters, but by any secret force giuen vnto them hath power to consecrate: but the vnderstanding, hearing, and beleueing the institution of Christ, with calling vpon the name of God, and thanksgiving before him.

Also one of your great Masters Innocent. 3. thus decreeth: That two things are required in Baptisme, the word and the element; Iuxta quod de verbo veritas ait &c. Out of the word the truth thus saith, Go and preach the Gospell to every creature, baptizing them. Here he vnderstandeth by the word, the word preached: Decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 5.

15. Math.

Origen thus writeth: Quod sanctificatur per verbum Dei & obsecrationem, non suapte natura, sed fiat vtemem, &c. That which is sanctified by the word of God, doth not of it selfe sanctifie the vser, or receiuer: for so it should sanctifie him, that eateth vnworthily, &c. therefore then the bread of the Lord is profitable to him that eateth, when with a pure conscience, and vnpolluted minde he is made partaker, &c. We see then that consecration and benediction consisteth in the whole action of prayer, thanksgiving, and faithfull receiuing, not in the pronouncing of certaine words.

Synod. Augusten. c. 15. Volumus populum, quid in cuiusque sacramenti collatione agatur in scripturis & sacramentorum administratione frequenter doceri: We would haue the people, when any sacrament is conferred to be taught in Sermons, and in the administration of the Sacraments, what is there done. We see then that the words vsed in the distribution of the Sacraments, serue not onely to consecrate, but to teach and instruct the people.

AN APPENDIX OF THIS PART, WHETHER THE forme of words in the institution of the Sacraments may not be by some addition, or other alteration changed.

The Papists.

THe words of institution may be changed two manner of wayes: either substantially, when the sense is also altered with the words; or accidentally, when the elements, or substances are only changed, but the sense remaineth the same. If there be a change in the substance of the words, the Sacrament is imperfect: if the alteration be of the forme onely of words, and not of the sense, the Sacrament is not destroyed: but he sinneth that doth so alter them. Wherefore it is unlawful any way at all to alter or change the forme of words, Bellarm. cap. 21. lib. 1.

Argum. 1. It is not lawfull to adde or take, to or from the words of Scripture, much lesse to change the words appointed to be vsed in the Sacrament, Bellarum. ibid.

Ans. To adde or detract to or from the word of God, with a purpose and intent, to wrete it to a contrary meaning, and destroy the true sense thereof, cannot be done without great impiety: and such is the manner of all heretikes: But to alleadge Scripture, in keeping still the full sense, though we misse of the words, is not to be counted so heynous a sinne: we see the holy Apostles in citing textes of Scripture, doe not alwayes bind themselves to the very words, as Act. 7. 43. Heb. 10. 5. The Apostle saith, A body thou hast giuen me: In the Psalme we reade, Psalm. 40. 6. Mene oares hast thou opened: diuers words, yet the same sense: and in other such places many.

De doctrin.
Christian. lib.
4. cap. 5.

Augustine saith very well, they that vnderstand the Scripture, though they keepe not alwayes the words, are better then they that reade and vnderstand not: Sed virisque ille melior, qui & cum vult, eas dicit, & sicut oportet, intelligit: But he is better then both, that both remembreth the words, and keepeth the sense too: yet he also deserueth prayse, that beareth the sense in minde, though he cannot the words.

Argum. 2. To change the matter of the Sacrament, as the water in Baptisme, &c. is unlawfull, for thus were to destroy the Sacrament: Ergo, neither are the words to be changed. Bellarum. ibid.

Ans. First, how then can your selues be excused, that in the Eucharist, take away the one part part of the matter, namely the Wine, and when you vse it, you mingle it with water, what is this else but to change the matter of the Sacrament. Secondly, there is not the like reason of the words and the matter, for the element cannot be altered or changed without corruption of it, but some alteration in the words may be, and yet the sense remaine whole and sound still: wherefore from the change of words, to the change of the things, the argument followeth not.

The Protestants.

NO substantiall change (we confesse) is to be admitted in the forme of institution, which may alter the sense: neither is any particular man by himselfe to make any accidentall change, and change the sense of words, but the publike and vniforme order of the Church must be kept; yea, and the Church likewise is bound both to retein the true sense, and, as pueras may be, the very words: but where occasion forceth, to make some small accidentall change of the words, the sense being nothing diminished, it is not condemned as an unlawfull and sinfull act.

Argum. The Euangelists report not all the same forme of words, which should be vnderstood by the same: neither yet S. Paul fully accordeth with them, in the precise and strickt forme of institution: why comparing of them together, it may be seen,

*It had bene a sinne, to haue missed in some termes and syllables, no doubt the spirit of God would not haue suffered these holy writers to haue made the least scape. Is it to be thought a sinne in the Church, which in steade of Take ye eate ye, in the plurall number, hath appointed the Sacrament to be ministred particularly in the singular number, to euery of the communicants, saying, Take thou, eate thou, drinke thou? Wherefore all accidentall change of words carieth not with it a guilt of sinne.*

Argum. In the other sacrament of Baptisme, the prescript words are to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, Matth. 28. yet your owne Canons allow some change, and alteration in them: as decret. part. 3. dist. 4. c. 24. Nicolas alloweth Baptisme pronounced onely in the name of Christ: cap. 30. Pelagius approueth Baptisme celebrated onely in the name of the Lord: cap. 86. Zacharius determineth the Baptisme of a certaine Priest, that he spake late Latine, saying, in nomine patris, filii & spiritus sancti, to be good Baptisme: the Master of sentents also alloweth of Baptisme onely in the name of Christ, lib. 4. dist. 3. b. wherefore in their ordinance the words may be altered.

Augus. indeede saith, Certa sunt verba euangelica, &c. The words of the Gospell are certaine, whereby baptisme is consecrated. But yet he saith elsewhere, In ipso verbo aliud est sonus transiens, aliud significatio. In the word spoken, the sound which passeth, is one thing, the vertue or sense of the word which abideth, is another. It is then the sense of the words, not the sound or syllables, that endure and permanent.

Augus. Augus. saith, Si non sanctificatur aqua, &c. If the water be not sanctified, when some words vnskillfully are pronounced, many as wel good, as bad men should not baptize at all, &c. and this sentence is rehearsed in the decrees, part. 3. dist. 4. c. 72. If a change proceeding of error may be tolerated, much more a change tending to edifying may be admitted, as when for, Take ye, eate ye, we say in the singular, Take and eate.

Dominicus Soto, their owne darling, is of opinion, that the Greekes do truly baptize, saying thou baptizatur seruus, let the seruant of Christ be baptized in this water: and yet the Latine Church useth to say: Ego baptizo, I baptize thee: Wee see then that there may be some alteration.

Contr. Donat. de baptis. lib. 6. cap. 25. Tractat. in Iohan. 80.

Qu. 1. art. 8.

OF THE MATTER OF the Sacraments.

The Papists.

FOR the matter of the Sacraments, they hold it not necessarie to be a visibill and palpable element, but it is sufficient, say they, if it be any way sensible, as to the eares if it be but audible onely: thus in penance, they haue no materiall part, but the sound of the words: Bellarmin. cap. 14.

93. Error.

Argum. The sense of hearing in the Sacraments ought not to be excluded, seeing they are the most excellent signes, that are perceived of that sense. Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. First, which is the most excellent, and fittest sense for the Sacraments, it is not left to determine, but therein we must follow the institution of Christ. Secondly, the sense of hearing is not permitted in the use of the Sacraments, seeing that hearing is of the word, Rom. 10. 17. which accompanieth the Sacraments. Thirdly, though hearing be the most excellent sense for instruction, for faith cometh by hearing, Rom. 10. yet the sight of the eyes serveth mainly to confirme the weak, as it may appeare in Thomas, John 20. 25. And that which we have by hearing say, is made more evident by sight; as Iob saith, Job 42. 5. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ears, but now mine eyes see thee.

WE define a Sacrament onely to be a visible and tractable signe, object to the eye, taste, and feeling, not to the ear, or any other sense.

Argum. Our reason is this, Christ hath instituted onely two Sacraments, Baptisme and the Eucharist: the scripture in the new Testament maketh mention of no more: but the nature of these Sacramentes is onely object to the senses of seeing, tasting, handling: Ergo to this purpose S. Iohn, That which our ears have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, and our hands have handled of the word of life, 1. John 1. 1. These are the three senses, wherewith Christ is received, and perceived of vs; the word we do heare with our eares; with our eyes and hands, wee see Christ, and feeble him in the Sacraments.

Hinge a popish writer, thus also defineth a Sacrament, Sacramentum est materiale, vel aliud circumstantia, &c. A Sacrament is a materiall, or corporall element; Id. 1. part. 9. cap. 1. but a hand is not a materiall, or corporall element: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE INSTRUMENTAL cause of the Sacraments, that is, the lawfull Minister.

SOME things are yielded vnto of both sides: First, that no man ought to take vpon him to administer the Sacraments, vnlesse he be thereunto lawfully called and ordained by the Church, sauing that they make exception of Baptisme, which in case of necessitie, as they teach, may be given by the hands of lay-men or women: but of this matter we shall haue siter occasion afterward to consider. Secondly, it is agreed, that the efficacy or vertue of the Sacrament, dependeth not of the faith or honesty of the Minister: but a faithfull man may receive the Sacrament worthily, euen at the hands of an vnworthy Minister.

The Papists.

THe point of difference betweene vs, is this: They doe teach that the efficacy, perfection, and being of the Sacrament, doth necessarily depend of the intencion of the Minister, Id. ibid. hold it to be no Sacrament, if the Minister haue not, Intentionem faciendi, quod facit ulla, Id. ibid. purpose and intent in ministring the Sacrament, to do that which the Church doth, that is, to consecrate the elements, & to make a Sacrament, Trid. Conc. sess. 7. can. 11. Bellarm. 2. 7. So that by this, if the Ministers intencion be not wholly vpon the busines he hath in hand, it shal be no Sacrament.

Argum. If the Ministers intencion were not necessary to make a Sacrament, when a church that the Gospell is read at the table by a Minister, there being both bread and wine set before him, and he in reading saith, This is my body, and This is my blood, straightwayes all that bread and wine should be consecrate, and become a Sacrament; but because his intencion is wanting, it is none, Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. 1. But what if the Minister should haue a fantastick conceit and intent, as he reacheth, to consecrate all the bread and wine vpon the table, then it should seeme by your rule, that it needes be a Sacrament, which were euen as absurd a thing as the other? Secondly, there are other lets and impediments, from hauing a Sacrament at the table, then the intencion of the Minister being wanting or kept backe: for the elements are not consecrated, nor the Sacrament made by the bare pronouncing of the words; but the whole institution ought to be obserued: there must be eating, drinking, taking, and doing, all in the remembrance of the death of Christ: there must be distributing, receiuing, inuocation, thanksgiuing: the whole action in the Sacrament, is the consecration thereof: these things then being wanting, there can be no Sacrament.

The Protestants.

IF the Sacrament be administred aright according to the institution of Christ, whatsoever the Minister be, howsoever affected, be he neuer so prophane in his heart, without any godly purpose or intencion; yet to the worthie receiuer it ceaseth not to be a Sacrament, Calu. in institutione concil. Tridentini sess. 7. can. 11.

Argum. 1. The word of God, with what intencion soeuer it be preached, yet may haue his effect, and worke faith in the hearer. So Christ be preached (saith S. Paul) whether vnder pretence or sincerely, I therein say, Philip. 1. 8. Ergo, the Sacraments also may have their efficacy without the intent of the Minister, Argum. Luberi.

He allegeth also how Alexander B. of Alexandria ratified and confirmed the baptisme, which was given being a child, conferred in sport upon other children.

Answer answereth to the first: 1. that there is not the same reason of the word and the Sacrament: for the word hath not a sacramentall effect, neither doe the Sacraments serve to beget faith, as the word doth; and therefore the word may profite without an intention, so cannot the Sacraments.

Concl. Though the word and the Sacraments worke not the same particulare effect, because in the Sacraments our senses are possibly touched, yet they tend both to the same generall end; that as the word preached begetteth faith; so the Sacraments increase and nourish it (as it followeth in the next section to be proved:) wherefore if the word, though the preachers intention be wanting, may beget faith, why may not the Sacraments likewise without the Ministers intention nourish faith?

The Jesuite distinguisheth, Aliud est intendere non concionari, aliud intendere concionari, sed ad finem. That it is one thing to intend not to preach; an other to have an intention to preach, but for an euill end: of the latter (saith he) speaketh S. Paul: and so he truly is said to baptize, that hath intention so to doe, though to an euill end: cap. 8. respon. ad argum. 1.

Concl. 1. It is not likely that a man that is sober minded, of discretion and well in his wittes, should intend to doe that thing which he doth: what intention then call you this, when a man preaches, or ministrereth the Sacraments, to intend not to doe it, whereas the action proceedeth from his intention: and therefore this distinction is frivolous. 2. The Minister must haue an intention to doe that, which the Church doth: but the Church doth baptize to a good end, therefore his intention by their owne learning, will not serue to baptize, vnlesse it be for the right end. Wherefore he answereth, that Athanasius had an intent to baptize indeede, though for a wrong end, namely for sport: it is both false, that he had such an intent to make a Sacrament; for a child, and sporting himselfe among his companions; and if he had, it should haue beene euill, because he propounded not to himselfe the right end. Wherefore no such intention is seruile.

Concl. 2. If the effect of the Sacrament consisteth vpon the intention of the Minister, then his intention may be vncertaine whether any thing be wrought in him, or he haue receiued any benefit by the Sacrament, because he knoweth not the intent of another mans heart, and so should be deuioued of the spirituall comfort, which he might reape by the Sacrament, Calu.

Answer answereth, that we may haue a certaine morall and humane, that is, a coniecturall certaintie of the Sacrament, though it depend of the Ministers intention, ibid.

Concl. The Sacraments must worke not a coniecturall, but an infallible certitude in vs: as it is answered: To haue Christ dwelling in vs is a sacramentall worke, Ioh. 6. 56. as the Papists vn- derstand that place of the sacramentall eating, but we ought to be sure of Christs dwelling in vs: 1. Cor. 11. 5. Know ye not your selues how that Christ Iesus is in you, &c. Ergo, we must be sure of the sa- cramentall worke.

Answer faith: Sacramentum Baptismi tam sacrum est, ut nec homicida vel ebrius ministrante pol- luitur. The Sacrament of Baptisme is so holy, that it cannot, either by a murderer or drunken person ministring it, be defiled. And I pray you, is it not like to be a good intention, that should come into the hearts of such lewd and wicked men? Therefore without any good intention, euen by the hands of such, may the Sacraments be giuen.

Tractat. 5. in Iohan.

Synod. Colonienf. Gratia sacramentorum non ex ipsa externarum rerum virtute, nec ex merito ministris, sed ex diuina operationis virtute estimanda est. The grace of the Sacraments must not bee ascribed by the vertue of things externall, or the worthines of the Minister, but by the inward vertue of the diuine operation. But the intention of the Minister is no diuine thing: Ergo, &c.

We haue further euidence from their owne writings, Innocent. 4. cap. Si quis puerum, &c. affirmed, that it is a Sacrament, etiamsi non gerat in mens facere, quod facit ecclesia, although the priest do not intend in his minde to doe that, which the Church doth.

Dioc. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 4. cap. 7. Innocentius decreeth against those, qui suppressis verbis, which sup- pressing the words of consecration, per hoc, quod intendis, &c. doth thinke, by that, which he inten- deth, not to prouoke God, &c. From whence we may reason thus; Intention being present maketh not a Sacrament; therefore being absent, it destroyeth it not.

Calu. a learned Papist holdeth no such intention to be requisite, Opuscul. de intentione Mi- nistri: and he allegeth Thomas in 4. distict. 6. qu. 1. art. 2. q. 1. Non requiritur mentalis intentionem Mi- nistri, sed sufficit expressio verborum, &c. That an intention of the minde is not necessarie in the Minister, but only an expressing of the words, wherein is contained the intention of the Church. Of the same minde also is the Master of Sentences, lib. 4. dist. 13. b.

This doctrine alſo is ſealed: Maſter Bland holy Martyr: It is a great abſurditie that the intent of the Miniſter conſecrateth, and not the word of God: for ſo ſhould mans intent bee ſtronger then Gods word. Again, becauſe the Sacrament is not the ſame to an vnbeleeuer, which it is to a beleeuer, the beleeuer muſt needes haue ſome what to doe in the conſecration, ſo that all is not in the Miniſters intention: Fax. pag. 1671. col. 2.

Nicholas Sheterden Martyr: Thus it ſhould bee euer doubtfull, whether the people worſhip Chriſt or bread, becauſe it is doubtfull what the Priests doe intend. Again, if the minde of the Priest, and not the words, doe make the bread Chriſts bodie, as they ſay, if the Priest do then miſlead his harlot, or any other vaine thing, that thing ſo minded was there made, and ſo the people ſhould worſhip the Priests harlot in ſtead of Chriſts blood: Fax pag. 1673. col. 2.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER THE SACRAMENTS be ſcales of the promiſes of God.

The Papists.

95. Error

They utterly denie, that the Sacraments be pledges and ſcales vnto vs of the promiſes of God, or that thereby our faith is nourished and confirmed, and wee assured of free remiſſion of finnes by the death of Chriſt: neither that the Sacraments were ordained for any ſuch end, Idem. lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 14.

Argum. 1. If the Sacraments confirme vnto vs the promiſes of God in his word, then muſt they of neceſſitie be more euident, and better knowne vnto vs, then is the word of God: for the which is leſſe knowne, and not ſo notorious, cannot perſwade vs of that, which wee haue better knowledge of. But ſuch are the Sacraments, which are not ſo euident, being called myſteries of religion, as are the words of God: Ergo, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, it is ſtrange to ſee, that you ſhould now contend for the euidence, and plainneſſe of Scripture, which you haue locked vp from the people, with no other pretence, then becauſe they are hard and obſcure, and dangerous to be read of the ſimple. Secondly, you doe not well in comparing the word and the Sacraments together: for they cannot be diuorced or ſeparated: for the word giueth life to the Sacraments, the Sacraments againe giue liuely teſtimonie and witness to the truth of the word. But let this bee the queſtion, not whether the writing by it ſelfe, and the ſcale by it ſelfe are of greateſt force; but whether an inſtrument with a ſcale be not of greater euidence and ſtrength, then without it: So the word of God, which doth but beate vpon the ſenſe hearing, muſt of neceſſitie, not in it ſelfe, but in reſpect of vs, worke more effectually, being ſealed by the Sacraments, where wee receiue inſtruction by two other ſenſes of ours, the ſight, and the taſte.

Argum. 2. If the Sacraments are appointed to be ſcales of the promiſes of God, for the increaſe and ſtrengthening of our faith, then children ſhould not be baptized at all, becauſe they haue no faith to be ſtrengthened, Bellarm. cap. 14. argum. 4.

Contra. 1. This argument taketh away onely this vſe of the Sacraments in children, ſo that it holdeth notwithstanding in all other. Secondly, although in children the ſcale goeth before, and righteouſneſſe of faith followeth after, as Circumciſion was to Iſaac, as Auguſtine ſheweth, and they as yet, when they are baptized, haue no faith to make preſent vſe of the Sacrament, yet when they come to yeeres of diſcretion, they are prouoked and ſtirred vp, by the remembrance of the ſcale of faith giuen in Baptiſme: which was indeede receiued but once, but the vſe and benefit thereof remaineth all the life long: ſo that this notwithstanding the Sacraments are ſcales of faith, whether the ſcale goe before faith, or follow after.

Argum. 3. If the Sacraments bee ſcales of the grace of God, to euery one that receiue them, then they ſhould many times bee falſe ſignes, when as many vnworthie receiuers are not made partakers of grace, nor of the promiſes of God, Bellarm. ibid.

Anſ. Firſt, yet notwithstanding are the Sacraments true and certaine ſcales on Gods behalf, the obſtacle and impediment is in thoſe that beleue not: The Sun is a true light to the world, yet to him that wilfully ſhutteth his eyes, it giueth no light; yet it is a true light notwithstanding. Secondly, by this reaſon, they may make Chriſt a falſe redeemer of the world, as they make the Sacraments falſe ſcales: for euery one is not redeemed by the death of Chriſt, but only thoſe which beleue: wherefore faith is required in them, which by the Sacraments will be assured of Gods promiſes.

Bellarmino replieth, Fides eſſe debet certa, Faith muſt bee certaine, and dependeth not of this condition, ſi homo credat, if a man beleue: faith muſt be absolute, not conditionall.

Contra. Firſt, he ſpeaketh moſt abſurdly, that faith muſt not haue any ſuch condition, if a man beleue: as though faith could bee without beleefe: for what is beleefe, but an act of faith? Secondly, faith indeede is not conditionall, but absolute: but faith is the condition it ſelfe, for ſalu-nation is not promised in Christ to any,  nisi sub conditione fidei, but vnder the condition of faith: As Philip answereth to the Eunuch, who said, What letteth me to be baptized? If thou believest (saith he) with all thy heart, thou maist, Act. 8. vers. 37. Here Baptisme is graunted with the condition of faith.
uation

The Protestants.

That the Sacraments are ordained of God, to be pledges and seales of his promises made vnto Christ, that as verely as the externall elements are applied to the outward man; so our soules spiritually are refreshed with an assured hope of the remission of our sinnes in Christ; and so the Sacraments to be seales only of the righteousness of faith, and not giuers or workers of grace in vs: it is euident out of the Scripture.

Argum. 1. Abraham receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. Circumcision then was to Abraham a seale of the righteousness of faith; that is, that he was iustified by faith: Ergo, so are all other Sacraments.

Respons. Indeeed Circumcision was a seale to Abraham, for he was iust before, and receiued this Sacrament, as a seale thereof afterward. But it followeth not, that it was so in all: for in Isaac his sonne, and so consequently in the rest, the Sacrament went before, and iustice followed, Aug. Rom. 4. vers. 8. So answereth Bellarmine also, that vnto Abraham onely circumcision was a seale of the righteousness of faith, Lib. 1. de Sacram. cap. 17. And he further saith, that the seale of the righteousness of faith, and of Gods promise or covenant, are not all one.

Ad. First, the promise of God, and the righteousness of faith, in effect are all one: for on Gods behalfe, it is a promise or covenant, on our part it is called the righteousness of faith: and thus the Apostle taketh them for the same, Rom. 4. 13. The promise was made to Abraham through the righteousness of faith. And vers. 14. If they, which are of the law, be better, faith is made void, and the promise of void: the nullitie of faith, and of the promise is all one.

Secondly, the Apostle setteth forth the example of Abraham, to shew how all men are iustified before God, and what is the vse of the Sacraments in all men: and therefore it is no extraordinarie or exempt case, but the common case of all the faithfull, that righteousness (saith the Apostle) shall be imputed to them also, Rom. 4. 11.

Thirdly, although Isaac with many other, were first circumcised, and after iustified: yet this is peremiall, they were no more iustified by circumcision, then Abraham, who was iustified before he was circumcised, but by faith onely: and therefore the Sacraments are seales of the iustice of faith, whether the iustice of faith goe before, or follow after.

So Augustine (saith, In Isaac, qui octavo die circumcisius fuit, processit signaculum iustitie fidei, et postea signaculum iustitie imitatus est. secuta est in crescentia ipsa iustitia, cuius signaculum in infante processerat: In Isaac, who was circumcised the eight day, the seale of the righteousness of faith went before: and because he did follow his fathers faith, as he grewe, iustice likewise followed; the seale whereof went before in his infancie: Ergo, circumcision was a seale as well to Isaac as to Abraham, and so consequently to all.

De Baptif.
contr. Donatist lib. 4. c. 24.

Argum. 2. Genes. 17. 11. Circumcision is called the signe of the covenant betwene God and Abraham: but Baptisme is succeeded in the place of Circumcision: Ergo, it also is a signe of Gods covenant.

Respons. It was a commemorative, not a confirmative signe: it brought to their memorie the covenant of God, it confirmed not their faith.

Contra. First, vers. 9. The Lord saith, Thou shalt keep my covenant, thou, and thy seed after thee. Circumcision then was a signe of keeping Gods covenant: but the covenant is not kept by mere hope by faith: wherefore Circumcision was not a signe to stirre vp the memorie onely, but also to helpe their faith. Secondly, the Apostle expounding this place, Rom. 4. 11. saith, It was a seale of the righteousness of faith: Ergo, it serued not for memorie, but for faith. Your owne Master also doubteth not to call Circumcision, signaculum iustitie fidei, the seale of the righteousness of faith, 4. vers. 11.

Argum. 3. Saint Peter saith, that in Baptisme the stipulation or taking to witness of a good conscience before God, saucth vs by the resurrection of Christ, 1. Pet. 3. 21. Whereby we doe gather, that Baptisme is a seale vnto vs of Gods promises in Christ, being a lively representation of his resurrection, and a pledge vnto vs and assurance of the remission of sinnes, without the which our conscience cannot be quieted before God, as here the Apostle affirmeth.

Belarmine replieth: first, that there is great difference betwene the testimonie and covenant of God, and the testimonie of a good conscience: Baptisme is here said onely to seale or confirme the testimonie of our conscience, cap. 17. responsus ad argum. 3.

Contra. To seale vnto vs the promise of God, and to seale or confirme the peace of conscience, tend both to the same end: for we cannot be at peace with God, vntill we bee iustified by faith, Rom. 5. 1. and faith is an apprehension of Gods promises. Wherefore in Baptisme we cannot haue peace of conscience by the inward worke of the spirit, vnsleife by faith wee bee assured of Gods promises.

Secondly, Baptisme is here said, not to seale vnto vs our iustification, but actually indeede to saue and iustifie vs, as the Arke did actually saue Noah from the deluge.

Ephes. 1. 13.

Contra. First, if he will so strictly vrge the figure of the Arke, then it must follow, as then Noah was not in hope onely, but in act saued from the waters; so wee already are not onely assured by faith in Baptisme, but actually saued indeede from euertlasting destruction, which is contrary to the Scriptures, which teach, that the spirit of promise, wherewith we are sealed, is the earnest paiment of inheritance, vntill the redemption: so that our deliuerance and redemption is not yet accomplished, but onely in hope and assurance. Secondly, Baptisme is said to saue vs by the resurrection of Christ, because by faith confirmed in Baptisme, wee haue an infallible assurance in the death of Christ, of our saluation: as our Sauour saith, Ioh. 5. 24. He that beleeueth is passed from death to life: he is as sure thereof by faith, as if it were already done. Wherefore this place of S. Peter, notwithstanding his obiections, doth prooue directly that remission of sinnes is sealed vnto vs in Baptisme: first, because it is a liuely representation of the death and resurrection of Christ, whereby we haue remission of sinnes. Secondly, because wee haue peace of conscience before God, as the Iesuite expoundeth this place, which cannot be without remission of sinnes.

Synod. Colonienf. part. 7. cap. 2. Excitanda est fidelium fides & deuotio in Deum, vt credentes, in diuinum mysterium intelligentes, ad Dei ac Saluatoris nostri gratiam participandam accendant: The faith of the faithfull and their loue toward God must be stirred vp, that beleeuing, and vnderstanding the diuine mysterie, they may come to bee partakers of the grace of God our Sauour. Here wee see that by occasion of celebrating the Sacraments, our faith is more liuely stirred vp.

This truth also is sealed: Iohn Careless Martyr: A Sacrament being ministrif according to Christs institution, is a visible signe of an inuisible grace, and hath the promise of Gods mercie annexed to it, Fax. p. 1928. The Sacraments then of the Gospell are seales of Gods promise.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE efficacie and vertue of the Sacraments.

This question also hath diuers parts: First, whether the Sacraments doe giue or conferre grace by the worke wrought. Secondly, of the difference of the Sacraments of the old and new Testament. Thirdly, whether the Sacraments of the new law doe imprint a signe or character in the soule, that can neuer be put out. Fourthly, of the necessitie of the Sacraments.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE SACRAMENTS OF THEMSELVES DOE GIUE OR CONFERRER GRACE.

The Papists.

96. Error.

The Sacraments giue grace, ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, that is, by force and vertue of the worke and word done and said in the Sacrament, Rhemist. Alt. 22. sect. 1. So that our faith onely iustifieth, but the Sacraments also, and other workes of religion, Rhemist. Rom. 6. 13. 5. The Sacraments then are immediate instruments and efficient causes of our iustification, not mediately, as they nourish and increase our faith, but properly and in themselves: Faith in the receiver giueth no efficacie to the Sacrament, but onely taketh away the lets and impediments which might hinder the efficacie of the Sacrament: as the drines of the wood maketh it to burne the better, yet is it no efficient cause of the burning, which is the fire onely, but onely a helpe. Thus they compare the Sacrament working of it selfe, to fire that burneth, and faith is as the drying of the wood, but a disposing and preparing of the heart, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Sacram. cap. 1.

Argum. 1. Be baptized and wash away thy sinnes, in calling on the name of the Lord, Act. 22. ver. 16. The Sacrament of Baptisme doth of it selfe wash away sinnes, Rhemist. And wee see in S. Iames, that remission of sinnes is annexed to the vnction with oyle, Rhemist. 1. Timoth. 4. 14. Ergo, the Sacraments giue and conferre grace.

Answ. 1. To the first we answer, that the text ioyneth with the Sacrament, the invocation of the name of God, to the which saluation is promised, Rom. 10. 13. Whosoener shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved: Wherefore that place maketh nothing for your purpose. Secondly, in the other place health of body is promised by the gift of miracles, but remission of sinnes is said to be obtained by the prayer of the Elders. The prayer of faith shall saue the sicke, Iam. 5. 15.

Argum. 2. S. Paul saith, He hath cleansed his Church, by the lauer of water in the word, Ephes. 5. 26. Ergo, Baptisme is an instrumental cause of our iustification; Bellarmino.

Answ. 1. It is not vnusuall in the Scripture to call the signe or Sacrament by the thing signified: as Exod. 12. 11. the Paschall Lambe is called the Passe-ouer, whereas it was but a signe and memoriall morall thereof. So Baptisme is called, The lauer of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. because it is a sure signe of our regeneration by the holy Ghost. Secondly, the Apostle in this place expoundeth himselfe: for he saith, that we are washed by water in the word: that is, the outward element doth send and referre vs to the word and promise of God, whereof it is a seale.

Argum. 3. Marke 16. 16. He that shall beleue, and be baptized, shall be saved. Here saluation is ascribed to Baptisme: and not to faith sealed or confirmed by Baptisme, for it were very preposterous, to put the effect before, and the cause after. Beiler. lib. 2. cap. 3. argum. 2.

Ans. First, beleife is set before Baptisme, because they, which were then to be baptized, were adult men of sufficient yeeres, in whom faith and confession of their sinnes was first required: as Marke 16. 7. They were baptized, confessing their sinnes. Secondly, that saluation dependeth of faith, not of Baptisme, it may appeare, Iohn 5. 24. Hee that beleueth, is passed from death to life: hee that belieueth shall be saved: and it followeth, in this place, Hee that will not beleue, shall be damned. Hee saith not, hee that will not be baptized: Baptisme is ioyned notwithstanding to beleife, that no man should neglect or despise the ordinance of God.

Argum. 4. Our Sauour Christ saith: Except a man be borne of water and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdome of heauen. Iohn 3. 3. Here water in Baptisme is made the cause of regeneration and newncile of life. Beiler. ibid.

Ans. Though it be admitted, that by water here we may vnderstand the Sacrament of Baptisme, which notwithstanding doth receiue a more fit and proper interpretation, as shall afterward be declared more fitly in the question of the necessitie of Baptisme; yet this place enforeth nothing for the element, seeing that the spirit is ioyned, which giueth the efficacie to the water: as Augustine saith, to whom the Master of sentences subscribeth: Visibilis sanctificatio, qua fit Sacramentum, sine invisibili predeste non potest, cum illa sit omnis illius utilitas. The visible sanctification, which is in the Sacrament onely, doth not profite without the invisible, wherein consisteth all the utilitie of the other. Mag. lib. 4. dist. 1. 4. d.

The Protestants.

The Sacraments haue no power to giue or conferre grace to the receiuer: neither are they immediate instruments of our iustification: instrumentall meanes they are to encrease and confirme our faith in the promises of God: of themselves they haue no operation, but as the spirit of God worketh by them, our internall senses being moued and quickened by those externall objects. Neither doe we say, that the Sacraments are bare and naked signes of spirituall graces: but they doe verily exhibite and represent Christ to as many, as by faith are able and meete to apprehend him. So to conclude, looke how the word of God worketh being preached, so doe the Sacraments; but the word doth no otherwise iustifie vs, but by working faith at the hearing thereof: So Sacraments doe serue for the encrease of our faith: faith is not a seruant and handmaide to the Sacraments; (as the Iesuite declared by the homely similitude of the fire and drie wood) but faith is the more principall, and the Sacraments haue no other vse or end, then as they are helpe for the strengthening of our faith. Grace of themselves they can giue or conferre none.

Argum. 1. Rom. 1. 17. The iust shall liue by faith: Ergo, he liueth not, that is, he is not iustified by worke wrought, as by the Sacraments, but onely by faith: faith therefore giueth life and entrance to the Sacraments.

Bellesmine answereth, that the Apostle saith not, the iust onely liueth by faith; wherefore, although he liue by faith, he may also liue by the Sacraments, and other workes.

Contra. First, if life be by faith, and beside the life of the soule, other things are superfluous; then all other meanes to life are superfluous beside faith: for what els is to be desired but to liue? but life is by faith, therefore faith is of it selfe sufficient, because the effect of faith, which is life, is sufficient: wherefore no other helps are requisite vnto life. Secondly, to liue by faith, and for Christ to liue in vs, are all one, as Galat. 2. 20. Thus I liue, not I now, but Christ liueth in me; and that I now live in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, &c. We reason thus: The iust liueth onely by Christ; but Christ liueth in vs onely by faith: for the Apostle saith, To that I liue, I liue by faith. Ergo, there is no life but by faith.

Argum. 2. The Apostle sheweth, Rom. 4. 10. 11. that righteousness was imputed to Abraham by faith, before he was circumcised, and that circumcision was added afterward as a seale of the righteousness of faith: Ergo, as Abraham was not iustified by circumcision, but by faith, no more are we by the Sacraments.

Bellesmine hath nothing els to answer, but that this onely was a priuiledge granted to Abraham, to haue circumcision as a seale and testimonie of his faith, resp. ad argum. 3.

Contra. The Apostle saith contrary, vers. 12. that he should be the father of them that beleue, not being circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed to them also: the father and the sonnes are iustified one and the same way: Abraham was not iustified by circumcision, but by faith: Ergo. And vers. 13. it was not written for him onely, &c. but for vs, &c.

Argum. 3. Saint Peter ſaith, Baptiſme ſaueth vs, not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience maketh requeſt vnto God, by the reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Ergo, it is faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which worketh in vs peace of conſcience, and not the outward waſhing, that ſaueth or iuſtifieth.

Bellarmino answereth, that by the reſurrection is not vnderſtood faith in the reſurrection, but mention is made thereof, becauſe when we are baptized, we doe repreſent the reſurrection of Chriſt, and by Baptiſme do riſe vp to newneſſe of life.

Contra. Firſt, if by the reſurrection of Chriſt, nothing els were ſignified, but the repreſentation of Chriſts reſurrection in Baptiſme; it were an improper ſpeech to ſay, Baptiſme ſaueth by the reſurrection, that is, Baptiſme ſaueth by Baptiſme: wherefore ſeeing that the reſurrection of Chriſt giueth life and efficacie to Baptiſme, it is our faith in the reſurrection of Chriſt, which ſaueth vs in Baptiſme. Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, not the waſhing of the fleſh ſaueth; Ergo, not the externall act of the Sacrament, but the teſtimonie of a good conſcience; what is that els, but the aſſurance of faith, whereby the conſcience is ſetled as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Rom. 5. 11.

Argum. 4. The Apoſtle ſaith, Ephes. 5. 26. That he might cleaſe it and ſanctifie it, by the waſhing of water through the word. Here our cleaſing and ſanctifying is not aſcribed to the water, but to the word of God, that is, his gracious promiſe in Chriſt, apprehended by faith, which els where the Apoſtle calleth the word of faith, Rom. 10. 8.

Bellarmino answereth, that by the word here is not vnderſtood the word preached, that begetteth faith, but the word of conſecration in the Sacrament, reſp. ad argum. 5.

Contra. Firſt, neither do we vnderſtand in this place, the word preached, as though there could be no Baptiſme without a ſermon, nor yet the word of conſecration: for though the conſecration word ioyned to the element doth make it a ſacrament, yet doth it not make it alwayes a cleaſing and ſanctifying ſacrament to preſent the receiuer without ſpot and blameles, as it followeth in the ſame place, but onely in the faithfull and beleeuers. Secondly, the word therefore that cleaſeth, is the word of faith, whereby our hearts are purified: Act. 15. 9. which is begotten in vs by the preaching of the word, and confirmed by the Sacraments.

Auguſtine thus writeth: Aliud eſt aqua ſacramenti, aliud aqua, qua ſignificat ſpiritus dei: aqua ſubſtilis eſt, & abſoluti corpus, & ſignificat, quid ſit in anima, per illum ſpiritus anima mundatur & ſanctatur. The water of the Sacrament is one thing, the water which ſignifieth the ſpirit is another: the one is viſible, and waſheth the fleſh, and ſignifieth what is done in the ſoule: but by the ſpirit the ſoule is cleaſed. The Sacrament of Baptiſme then, by this fathers ſentence, and ſo all other Sacraments, doe not giue grace, but ſignifie onely and repreſent grace.

Synod. Colonienſ. part. 9. cap. 13. Quod præter preces, aſperſiones, & vniſiones, altarumq; rerum ſolam adhibentur, &c. In that beſide prayer, we uſe ſprinkling, annoynting, with other externall rites, therein lyeth a myſterie, not that theſe dead things are capable of grace, but when theſe things are viſibly done, Chriſtians are admoniſhed, that God worketh by the inuiſible vertue of his ſpirit. The externall things therefore worke not, but are ſignes of the inward working of the ſpirit.

We want not the witneſſe of their owne decrees: Decret. part. 3. diſtinct. 4. c. 145. Melior Conſuetudo baptizatus, Simone baptizato, &c. The Centurion being not yet baptized was better, than Simon baptized: for he before Baptiſme was replenished with the holy ſpirit; the other after Baptiſme was poſſeſſed with an vncleane ſpirit. How then is grace annexed to the Sacrament, when as both he that wanteth the Sacrament, may haue grace; and he that hath the Sacrament, wanteth grace?

Hear alſo an euident teſtimonie of one of your owne writers: Conſtat in omni ſcriptura, inueniſſe & languidum operam noſtram, etiam Apoſtolicam, etiam Chriſti, &c. It is apparant throughout the whole Scripture, that our outward endeauour is weake, and of no force, yea the labour of the Apoſtles, and of Chriſt himſelfe, vnleſſe it bee helped by the inward worke of the ſpirit, &c. Ephes. 2. 7. 1 Timoth. 3. 9.

This doctrine hath the ſeale of Martyrs: George Carpenter gaue his life in teſtimonie thereof, that the very element of water in Baptiſme doth not giue grace, pag. 884. Biſhop Ridley holy Martyr: That the Sacrament is but an inſtrument, but the inward vertue of Chriſt giueth grace to the Sacrament, pag. 1454.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE DIFFERENCE OF THE OLDE AND NEW SACRAMENTS.

The Papiſts. The ſacrifices and ceremonies of the old law were ſo farre from giuing ſpirit, grace, remiſſion, iuſtification; and thereupon the entrance into the ioyes of heauen, that they were but meere ſhadowes, obſcurely repreſenting the graces of the new Teſtament: whereas the Sacraments inſtituted by Chriſt, containe and giue grace, and iuſtification, Rhem. 10. 10. 11. 12.

Argum. 1. They were but shadowes of good things, not the image of the things themselves, Heb. 10. 1. They were but shadowes and representations of the Sacraments of the new Testament: Ergo, they had not the same efficacy or power, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. Their Sacraments were onely shadowes of Christs sacrifice, not of our Sacraments, though these come in the place of the other, and are answerable and correspondent vnto them. Secondly, neither doe the Sacraments of the new testament giue grace or iustification, but are onely lively testimonies of grace and reconciliation wrought by the death of Christ. Thirdly, their Sacraments were as effectual to assure the Fathers of grace and remission of sinnes by Christ, as our Sacraments are to vs.

Argum. 2. The Sacraments of the new law or Gospell doe giue grace and iustification, so did not the Sacraments of the old law: Ergo, there is not the same efficacy of them both. Againe, Saint Paul calleth them impotent and beggerly rudiments, Galath. 4. 9. so are not the Sacraments of the Gospell: Ergo: Bellarm. lib. 2. de Sacram. cap. 14. argum. 4.

Ans. 1. The Sacraments of the new law are no more able by any efficacy in themselves to iustifie vs, then the Sacraments of the old: It is the propertie of faith onely to iustifie vs, Rom. 3. 28. and cap. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith, we are at peace with God: Where it cannot be answered, that faith iustifieth but in part, for that is perfect iustification which worketh peace of conscience in vs, but faith bringeth such iustification: Ergo, it iustifieth perfectly. Therefore in this respect, the Sacraments differ not, because neither of them iustifie, but are scales onely of the righteousnes of faith, Rom. 11. 4.

To the second place we answer: first, that the Apostle speaketh not of the Sacraments of the law, but of other ceremonious rites, as the obseruation of dayes, moneths, yeeres. Secondly, he respecteth that present time, when such ceremonies ought of right to haue ceased and giuen place, the Gospell being now reuealed, and therefore he calleth them beggerly, because of the superstitious vse of them, not hauing in this speech any relation to the originall and first institution. Thirdly, they are said to be impotent, not in respect of our Sacraments (and yet we deny not, but that our Sacraments haue a more cleere signification, and liuely representation of holy things; so the other being herein compared, may be called more impotent) but as they are set against iustifying faith: in respect whereof our Sacraments are weake and impotent: as S. Paul saith, That neither circumcision is any thing, nor vncircumcision, but faith working by love, Galat. 5. 6. where faith is set against all other things whatsoever, as being of no value, that is weake and impotent to iustifie, whether appertaining to the circumcised or vncircumcised (as there are no Sacraments but belonging to either of these orders.) Wherefore onely faith is auailable and strong to iustifie, all other things impotent and weake.

Argum. 3. Coloss. 2. 11. In whom (saith the Apostle) ye are circumcised with circumcision made without hands, &c. through the circumcision of Christ, in that you are buried with him through Baptisme, where circumcision made with hands is opposed to circumcision made without hands, that is Baptisme: so that which could not bee wrought by circumcision, is wrought by Baptisme: Ergo, there is not the same effect of circumcision and Baptisme, Bellarm. loc. 7.

Ans. First, Baptisme is not the circumcision made without hands, for as much as in Baptisme there is the ministrie of the hands of men, as well as in circumcision: but by circumcision without hands the Apostle vnderstandeth, the spirituall circumcision of Christ, as he himselfe expoundeth it. Secondly, as the externall circumcision of it selfe profited not, so also the Apostle saith of Baptisme, that, we are buried with him in Baptisme, &c. through the faith of the operation of God, &c. So it is faith by the operation of God, not the outward act of Baptisme; wherefore out of this place no difference can be gathered.

Argum. 4. Bellarmine heapeth vp many places together; as Isay. 1. 11. What haue I to doe with the multitude of your sacrifices: Rom. 4. 10. Abraham was counted iust being vncircumcised: Galat. 4. they are called beggerly elements: Coloss. 2. the shadowes of things to come: Ergo, the Sacraments of the old law did not conferre grace.

Ans. First, the Prophets did not simply, condemne the sacrifices, but because they were offered in sinne and hypocrisie: and therefore the Prophet saith, Isay. 1. 16. wash you, make you cleane. Secondly, the Apostle speaketh of the times of Christ, when as the old sacrifices and ceremonies were out of date: the figures were to cease, the bodie being come. Thirdly, they are called impotent and weake, not in respect of the Sacraments of the Gospell, but being compared to faith, which is the complement both of their Sacraments and ours. Fourthly, we graunt, that the sacrifices of the law did not conferre grace, no more doe the Sacraments of the Gospell: wherefore he hath said nothing, vnlesse he had proued, that our Sacraments doe conferre grace, which theirs did not.

The Protestants.

WE doe holde and constantly affirme and teach, that the Fathers in the law receiued lesse the truth and substance of Christ by faith in their Sacraments, then we doe in ours: although in respect of more cleere and lightſome ſignification, our Sacraments doe farre exceed theirs, and ſo alſo may more liuely ſtirre vp our faith: yet the ſubſtance and effect both of their Sacraments and ours, was all one and the very ſame.

Argum. 1. S. Paul ſpeaketh plainly, that the Iſraelites did all eate the ſame ſpiritual meate, and all drinke of the ſame ſpiritual rocke, and the rocke was Chriſt, 1. Cor. 10. 3. 4. Therefore Chriſt was exhibited as well to them in their Sacraments, as he is in ours.

Bellarmino answereth: Firſt, they did all eate the ſame ſpiritual meate amongſt themſelves, not the ſame together with vs: So alſo ſay the Rhemiſts, that they amongſt themſelves did all eate of one bread, and drinke of the ſame rocke. The Apoſtle ſaith not, that they and we doe eate and drinke of the ſelfeſame meate and drinke, Rhemiſt in hunc locum.

Anſwer. Yes the Apoſtle ſaith ſo in effect, that there is one and the ſelfe ſame ſpiritual meate and drinke to vs all, both to them and vs: for what doe we eate and drinke but Chriſt? and ſo doe they: The rocke, ſaith the Apoſtle, was Chriſt. Secondly, Auguſtine ſaith ſo expreſly, that they did eate the ſame ſpiritual meate, and drinke the ſame ſpiritual cup that wee doe: Quemadmodum Manna Chriſtum intellexerunt, eundem quem nos cibum ſpiritualem manducauerunt: De vitula, qui uisus e. 2. They which in the eating of Manna did vnderſtand Chriſt, did eate the ſame ſpiritual meate that wee doe: Ergo, Chriſt was as well preſent by faith to them in their Sacraments, as he is to vs in ours.

Bellarmino answereth, that Auguſtine's meaning is, that their Sacraments and ours had not the ſame efficacie, but the ſame ſignification onely, becauſe both theirs and ours doe ſignifie Chriſt.

Contra. 1. He hath not answered to this place of Auguſtine, wherein he affirmeth, that they did eate the ſame ſpiritual meate with vs: and if they did eate the ſame ſpiritual meate, then not in ſignification onely, but in vertue and efficacie their Sacraments are equall with ours. 2. That Chriſt gaue the ſame vertue and efficacie to both Sacraments, Bernard plainly affirmeth, Sermones Domini, or whoſe vnder his name: Chriſtus pro ſalute mundi ſemel factus eſt hoſtia ſanctificans: his ſacramentis tam precedentibus quam ſubſequentibus uirtutem dedit & efficaciam, ut tam & illi hoſtia ſanctificarentur omnes liberandi per ſuam: Chriſt to ſaue the world was once made an acceptable ſacrifice: to all the Sacraments both going before and following after he gaue vertue and efficacie, that all might be ſanctified with this worthie ſacrifice, for whoſe deliuerance it was appointed.

Secondly, Bellarmino answereth, that the Manna is called a ſpiritual meate, either in reſpect of the cauſe, which was heavenly and ſpiritual, it being wrought by a miracle; and ſo alſo the water; and therefore the rocke is ſaid to be Chriſt, not becauſe Chriſt was the author, or the efficient cauſe to bring the water out of the rocke: or elſe in reſpect of the ſignification onely, not becauſe it had any ſpiritual effect. His reaſons are theſe:

First, the beaſts and birds did drinke of the ſame water, therefore it was not ſpiritual. Secondly, we reade of no ſpiritual promiſe made to thoſe, that did eate Manna, or drinke of the rocke: ſuch as are annexed to the Sacraments. Thirdly, our Sauour ſaith, your fathers did eate Manna, and are dead, and Moſes did not giue you bread from heauen, Ioh. 6. wherefore it was a corporall food onely, not ſpiritual.

Contra. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith they did all eate the ſame ſpiritual meate, that is both amongſt themſelves and with vs, as we haue ſhewed: but to vs it is ſpiritual meate, not in reſpect of the author onely, but in regard of the ſpiritual efficacie; therefore it was ſo vnto them: And in that the Apoſtle ſaith, they did drinke Chriſt ſpiritually, this betokeneth not the ſignifying onely, but the exhibiting alſo of Chriſt vnto them: for this were a ſlender eating and drinking of Chriſt, to haue him ſignified onely and ſhadowed forth, vnleſſe they ſhould verely bee made partakers of him.

Secondly, wee anſwere to his reaſons: to the firſt, that it letteth not the rocke to bee ſpiritual drinke, becauſe the cattell alſo did drinke thereof: for your ſelues denie not, but that your conſecrated hoſt may be deuoured of myce and dogs: And againe, the cattell alſo and beaſts went thorough the red ſea as well as the Iſraelites, yet was it a Baptiſme to the Iſraelites, though not to the other: and Sacraments are ordained for men, and not for beaſts.

To the ſecond: the Apoſtle ſaith, they drinke of the ſpiritual rocke, which rocke is Chriſt; they therefore did ſpiritually drinke Chriſt: but to thoſe that eate and drinke Chriſt, ſpiritual promiſes are made, as Ioh. 6. 54. Whoſeuer eateth my fleſh, &c. hath eternall life, &c. wherefore ſo many of them, as by faith did ſpiritually in Manna eate Chriſt, and in the rocke drinke Chriſt, were made partakers of this ſpiritual promiſe.

To the third we anſwere: that Moſes indeede gaue but the materiall Manna, but Chriſt con-conferreth Moses outward ministerie, gaue himselfe the true bread from heauen: likewise in the Eucharist, the Minister giueth the externall element, Christ working together giueth the spirituall. Wherefore our Saviour saith not, that the Israelites had not the true bread, for else-where he testifieth, that Moses wrote of him, Ioh. 6. 46. but that beside the materiall Manna, where- of their fathers did eate, and yet died, there was another spiritual and heavenly bread exhibited to both of the old and new Testament: for vntill they also vnder the law, had eaten of Christ and drinke his blood, they could not haue had life, as our Saviour saith, ver. 53. but those of them had life: Ergo, they did eate the true bread of heauen.

Argum. In Circumcision, which was a Sacrament of the old law, there was promise of remission of finnes and of life euertlasting, as there is in Baptisme: Ergo, there is the same verdee and efficacy both of the old and new Sacraments.

Ans. Circumcision was annexed the promise of life euertlasting: first, it appeareth Genes. 17. 7. where the Lord maketh this covenant with Abraham, whereof circumcision was signe, shall be thy God, and the God of thy seede: that is, thy God for euer, not onely in this world, but also here: for our Saviour expoundeth it, Matth. 23. 35. I was the God of Abraham, Isaac, Iacob: he is not God of the dead, but of the liuing. Secondly, Ephes. 1. 12. the Apostle saith, that the Gentiles being vnder the law, were separated from the covenant of promise, and had no hope, and were without God in this world: therefore circumcision was a covenant of Gods euertlasting promises.

Belarmine answereth: first, that Abraham was reputed righteous and iust before Circumcision: Ergo, to him in Circumcision there was no promise made of remission of finnes, which he had before.

Contra. We say not, that Circumcision caused remission of finnes: for then the effect could not be before the cause; but that it was a scale of the righteousness of faith, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 4. 10. and of remission of finnes: and so it may be, whether righteousness goe before circum- cision, with Abraham, or follow after, as in Isaac. So wee reade, Act. 10. 47. that the holy Ghost was there, and then Baptisme followed: the thing signified appeared first, and then the signe or signe was added: Cau any man forbid water (saith S. Peter) that these should not be baptized, which haue received the holy Ghost, as well as we?

Secondly, saith Belarmine, the Lord, in saying, I will be thy God, and of thy seede, maketh no promise of euertlasting saluation, but of temporall protection peculiar to that people, both to the good and bad: and the saying of Christ, he is not God of the dead, &c. doth but imphie that God is God of those that are not, but of those that are, whether they be good or bad.

Contra. First, the Apostle by feede vnderstandeth Christ: who saith not, to thy feedes, as speak- ing of many, but to thy feede, as of one, even Christ, Galath. 3. 16. wherefore this promise, I will be thy God, and of thy seede, hath a spirituall relation to Christ. Secondly, this covenant appertain- eth not to the wicked, but is applied onely by the Apostle to the faithfull, Heb. 13. 3. My blood hath I drunk, I will loue thee, nor forsake thee. Thirdly, to bee God of Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, is to bee God not onely of those which are, but, that are liuing with God: for if God be not God of the dead, in this life, how much lesse of those that are dead euertlastly: and the Apostle speaketh euertlastly, Ephes. 2. 13. of whom it was said, the whole familie in heauen, and earth, that God doth onely call and call himselfe by those, whether liuing or departed, that are of his familie.

Thirdly, it was not the want of Circumcision, but the want of faith, that made the Gentiles strangers from the covenant: for Iob and Corneilius were not circumcised, Belarmine saith, 1. 1. 1.

Contra. So may it bee said of Baptisme, that many which haue it not among the Turkes and Iewes, if they contemne it not, may by Gods extraordinarie mercie be saved, if they beleoue; yet Baptisme hath the promise of life euertlastly: so though some vncircumcised might beleoue, yet ordi- narily the circumcision had the promise of life and saluation in Christ.

Argum. Leuitic. 17. 12. 13. He shall bring his offering, the Priest, &c. who shall make attonement for him, as touching his sinne, and it shall be forgiven him: Ergo, the sacrifices of the law had promise of remission of finnes by the force of Christs death repretented in the same.

Belarmine answereth, that the sacrifices did purge the offerers finnes onely in respect of the temporall punishment, and some legall vncleanness: but they did not cleanse them simply be- fore God in respect of euertlasting punishment: and this may appeare, for that the sacrifices were not ordained for all finnes, but of ignorance onely committed against the ceremonies of the law.

Contra. First, it is false, that the sacrifices serued onely to purge finnes of ignorance, for Leuitic. 6. 2. 3. there are sacrifices prescribed for the finnes of deceite, robbrie, oppression, false swea- ring, which were voluntarie finnes, and not of ignorance.

Secondly, it is also vntrue, that the temporall punishment was onely pardoned, and not the sinne truly remitted. First, where the Priest is said to make attonement, the word is aspilam which signifieth to reconcile, to remove wrath: and it is vsed, Psal. 79. 9. Be mercifull vnto our sinne, finnes, &c. will he now say, that the Church here prayeth onely for the mitigation of temporall punishment: wherefore, if the Priest made attonement for them, and Gods wrath was appeased in their sinne, then was it verily remitted. Secondly, there is confession of the sinne required, Levitic. 5. and restitution, Levitic. 6. 4. but where there is confession, and restitution, there is repentance; and where repentance is, there is remission of the sinne it selfe before God.

Argum. 4. Coloss. 2. 11. S. Paul saith, In whom ye are circumcised by circumcision made without hands, by putting off the sinful bodie of the flesh through the circumcision of Christ, &c. Here the Apostle affirmeth, that the spirituall circumcision, which did accompany the sacramentall circumcision, in them that did beleue, was effectually to the putting off the bodie of sinne: We say not, that the externall act of circumcision onely had this effect, but the inward grace in the circumcision of the heart in all true Israelites working with the circumcision of the flesh, was available to the remission of sinnes: as the Apostle saith, Rom. 2. 28. He is not a Jew, which is outwardly, but is that circumcision, which is inward in the flesh, &c.

Bellarmin answereth, that in circumcision not the whole bodie, but one part onely was circumcised, and therefore it did not serue to the putting off the whole bodie of sinne.

Contra. Neither when Christ washed Peter, did he wash any thing but his feete, though he would haue had his hands and head also washed: yet was the washing of his feete sufficient, John 13. 10. so though in circumcision the outward signe onely touched one part, yet the inward circumcision thereby represented, was sufficient to purge the whole inward man.

We want not here their owne witness against themselves, decret. part. 3. distinct. 2. cap. 1. hinc Apostoli omnes eandem escam spirituales manducarunt &c. The Apostle saith, they did eat the same spirituall meate: the same spirituall meate indeed, but another corporall, because they did eat Manna, and we some other thing: and hee addeth, and they all dranke the same spirituall drinke; they one thing, and we another: sed specie visibili, but in outward shew; Quodammodo essent virtute spirituali, which is notwithstanding the same in the spirituall vertue: This Camus affirmeth, that they did eat the same spirituall meate, not amongst themselves, but with vs, and though it were in shape diuers, yet in vertue is the same: Ergo, there is the same efficacie and vertue, both of the old and new Sacraments.

The Master of sentences allegeth thus out of Gregorie: Quod apud nos valet aqua Baptismi, hoc agit apud veteres, vel per purpuram, solum fides, &c. That which the water of Baptisme is to vs, that only was in time past to children, and to the elder sort, the vertue of the sacrifices, &c. or the mysterie of Circumcision, lib. 4. distinct. 2. c. 8. If Circumcision was available then, as Baptisme is now, then the vertue and substance of the Sacraments was the same.

Likewise Innocentius 3. thus decreeth, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Originalis culpa remittitur per Circumcisionis mysterium, et damnationis periculum vitatur: Original sinne was remitted by the mysterie of circumcision, and the perill of damnation auoided. Here is an euident testimony of one of their most learned Popes, that remission of sinnes was had by the Sacraments of the old law.

Further, it is the opinion of some of their best schollemen, that circumcision did conferre iustification, ex opere operato, by the very worke that was wrought; which efficacie the rest of them ascribe only to the Sacraments of the new Testament; thus holdeth Alexander, Bonaventura, Soto, Gabriel so that in their opinion, between Circumcision a Sacrament of the old Testament, & the rest of the Sacraments of the new, there was no difference; yea, as Bellarmin confesseth, it is Communis sententia Theologorum, the common sentence of popish diuines, that the old sacraments did onely iustifie ex opere operantis, by the worke of the doer, that is, the faith and deuotion of the receiuer; and the new Sacraments do no more; for though we truely hold, that we are iustified onely by faith, not by the Sacraments, yet by them is iustifying faith confirmed; and without the faith of the receiuer, they are altogether vnpromisable: for S. Paul biddeth euery man to examine himselfe before, 1. Cor. 11. 28. which examination, is to prooue, whether they be in the faith, 2. Cor. 13. 5. Wherefore neither old nor new Sacraments are profitable without faith.

See also this doctrine sealed: Iohn Frish holy Martyr; They did all eat the same spirituall meate, and did drinke the same spirituall drinke, all one spirituall thing, but not all one corporall matter: for they did eat Manna, and we another thing, but the same spirituall thing that we doe. Fox. pag. 1033.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE CHARACTER or badge, which (as they say) is imprinted in the soule by the Sacraments.

The Papists.

98. Error

First, there is a certaine scale, and spirituall marke or badge, imprinted by the Sacraments in the soules of the receiuers, which can neuer bee blotted out, neither by sinne, apostasie, or heresie.

refe. Secondly, but it perpetually remaineth for the cognifance of their Chriftenedome, and diftinction from others, that were neuer of Chrifts fold, by which alfo they are conſecrated and deputed to God. Thirdly, this indeleble Character, is giuen by three Sacraments onely, Baptiſme, Confirmation, Orders; which is the cauſe they are not reiterable, nor euer to be receiued but once. Thom. annotat. 2. Corin. 1. ſell. 7. Trident. Council ſeſſ. 7. can. 9. Bellar. lib. 2. de ſacram. cap. 19.

Argum. 1. 2. Corin. 1. 22. He hath ſealed vs, and giuen the earneſt of the ſpirit into our hearts. Like- wiſe, Ephel. 1. 13. We were ſealed with the holy ſpirit of promiſe. Ephel. 4. 30. Grieve not the ſpirit of God, by which ye are ſealed againſt the day of redemption. This ſealing is nothing elſe, as they ſay, but an imprinting in the ſoule of this indeleble marke or character.

Auſp. Firſt, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh manifeſtly of the ſpiritual and inward ſeale of the ſpirit of God, whereby the promiſes of God are ſealed and aſſured vnto vs, whereof Baptiſme is an outward ſeale in our bodies. Secondly, it is an abſurd thing to holde, that he that hath vtterly and maliciously renounced Chriſtianitie, and blaſphemed Chriſt himſelfe, ſhould ſtill retain this Character of Baptiſme, as cognifance of his Chriftenedome. Thirdly, Baptiſme is not reiterable, that is, it is not iterated or repeated, not becauſe it leaueth an indeleble character in the minde of the baptized; which is but a meere deuife and fanſie: but becauſe, as it ſufficeth once to be borne in the fleſh, ſo once to be borne againe, and to be regenerated by the ſpirit, (of the which regeneration, Baptiſme is a ſeale and pledge) it is ſufficient. As for confirmation, and orders, we acknowledge them to be no Sacraments: and therefore to haue no ſuch indeleble character.

Bellarmin answereth, that theſe places cannot be vnderſtood, of the ſealing or aſſuring of Gods promiſes by his ſpirit in our hearts in the Sacrament: firſt, the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath ſealed vs, not ſealed the promiſes.

Concl. Firſt, in the ſecond place the Apoſtle ſaith, we are ſealed with the ſpirit of promiſe: to bee ſealed with the promiſe, and to haue the promiſe ſealed vnto vs, are all one. Secondly, in the firſt place, where he ſaith, he hath ſealed vs, a little before he ſaid, in him the promiſes of God, are you, and thus, verſ. 10. What is that elſe, but the promiſes are ſealed in him?

Secondly, the Apoſtle ſaith, after you beleueed, ye were ſealed, Ephel. 1. that is, in Baptiſme, which cometh after faith, Bellar. cap. 20.

Concl. Firſt, here Bellarmin leaueth the Vulgar text, which readeth, credentes, beleueing, and preſerue the Greeke word of the preter tence, credentes, hauing beleueed: ſo in conſtant are they, ſometimes uſing the Latin, ſometime the Greeke. Secondly, though Baptiſme came after faith then, it is omitted before faith now. Thirdly, it followeth not: this ſeale was after faith: Ergo, in Baptiſme: for upon their very beleueing they were ſealed. Fourthly, wee denie not, but that Baptiſme is a ſeale of the righteouſnes of faith, as S. Paul ſpeaketh of Circumciſion, becauſe thereby the promiſes are ſealed to vs: yet there is no ſuch character in Baptiſme, as there was not in Circumciſion.

Now further, that theſe places cannot be vnderſtood of any ſuch character, or marke, or inſuſed, inherēt, or imprinted qualitie in the ſoule by their three Sacraments, it may thus appeare.

First, 2. Cor. 1. 22. As we are ſaid to be ſealed, ſo alſo are we annoynted: but our annoynting, or unction, is the holie Ghoſt; 1. Ioh. 3. 30. as the Rhemifts themſelues expound it: Ergo, the ſame is the ſeale.

Secondly, He hath ſealed vs, and giuen the earneſt of his ſpirit into our hearts: the ſame is both the ſeale, and the earneſt, the ſpirit of God is our earneſt vntill the day of redemption: Ergo, alſo the ſeale.

Thirdly, Ephel. 4. 30. We are ſealed to the day of redemption: which is not in Baptiſme, as Bellarmin fondly expoundeth, taking of for in, and redemption for Baptiſme: for this ſeale none haue, but they for whom the inheritance is purchaſed; Ephel. 1. 14. but all that are baptized ſhall not be ſaued: Ergo, there is no ſuch ſeale in Baptiſme.

Fourthly, as we are ſealed, ſo doe wee ſeale: 1. Ioh. 1. 3. He that receiveth his teſtimony, hath ſealed that God is true: If by being ſealed wee receiue a character, then by ſealing wee giue a character: theſe places then ſerue not his turne.

Argum. 2. They which were baptized with Iohans baptiſme, were afterward baptized againe, Aët. 19. 4. 5. And this was the reaſon thereof, becauſe Iohans baptiſme did not imprint an indeleble character in the ſoule, as Chriſts baptiſme did, Bellar. cap. 20. reſpond. 3. variat.

Auſp. Firſt, it cannot be proued, that the Apoſtles baptized thoſe that had receiued Iohans baptiſme, neither hath that place, Aët. 19. 5. any ſuch meaning: ſee the full anſwer ſet forth afterward, Com. 12. of Baptiſme, qu. 7. arg. 2. Papillar. Secondly, though that after Iohans baptiſme they had been baptized againe, it followeth not, that it was becauſe of any ſuch character. Hierome giueth another reaſon: Iohans baptiſma imperſectum, &c. Iohans baptiſme was imperfected, and did not giue remiſſion of ſinnes, therefore they were baptized againe with Iohans baptiſme; aduerſ. Luciferian. Though this be an error alſo, yet it is againſt them.

The Protestants.

That by Baptisme and some other sacraments, there is imprinted in the soule a marke, or character, which can neuer bee blotted out, no not by Apostasie; and that this is the cause why Baptisme cannot be iterated, wee holde it to bee a meere deuise, and inuention of men.

Argum. 1. Where the ende and fruites of Baptisme are vtterly extinguished, there cannot remaine any character or badge, or signe of Baptisme: The fruites of Baptisme are repentance, and regeneration by the spirit: But it is possible for these, in some that are baptized, to bee vtterly lost, as in them that fall away by Apostasie, they cannot be renewed by repentance, Hebr. 6.6. Therefore in such there is not to be found any character, badge or signe of Baptisme, which they haue vtterly renounced: onely the memoriall thereof is kept before God, they being so much worse, then they that were neuer baptized, because they haue wilfully reiected their profession.

Argum. 2. The cause why Baptisme is but once to be giuen is not, as they alleage, because it leaueh such a sure marke behinde, so deeply died in the soule, that it cannot be blotted out. There are other causes that come neerer the truth: First, as God is but one, who maketh a covenant with vs in Baptisme; and the faith but one, into the which we are entred by that Sacrament: so Baptisme is ope and the same, Ephes. 4.5. and as it sufficeth once to be borne in the flesh; so once to be regenerated by the spirit in Baptisme. Secondly, the institution of God is another cause, who hath appointed the other Sacrament often to be receiued, 1. Corinth. 11.25. But for the iteration of Baptisme, wee haue no such commaundement. Thirdly, Baptisme cometh in the place of Circumcision: as that was but once ministred, so likewise it must be in the other. Fourthly, In Baptisme God maketh a perpetuall covenant with vs, which he alwayes remembereth; and therefore neede not to be put in minde, by the often vsing of that Sacrament. These and the like reasons may be alleaged, why baptisme is not often to be required: and not that, which by them without any ground is pretended.

Bellarmine thus objecteth against these reasons: Against the first, that Baptisme is not iterated, because it is our spirituall birth: First saith he, we are also borne by the word, yet sermons are often repeated. Secondly, though our carnall birth cannot be iterated, yet our spirituall may, as in the resurrection: for as the bodily death is but once, the spirituall often; so the spirituall birth may be renewed, as the carnall cannot.

Contra. First, though faith is begotten by the word, Rom. 10.17. and we by faith are made the children of God, yet because Baptisme is a seale and confirmation of this faith, it is properly called in Scripture, the lauacre of regeneration or new birth Tit. 3.5. Secondly, the resurrection is a regeneration of the bodie, not of the soule, and therefore improperly alleaged. Thirdly, as the bodie dieth but once, no more doth the soule, when it finally falleth away from God, wherof the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 6.6. That if they fall away, they cannot be renewed by repentance: but as the bodie once borne, may be in danger of death by sickness, and not die; so the soule may be weakened and decay by sinne, and so be renewed: as the Apostle saith, our inward man is renewed daily, 2. Cor. 4.16. but the soule once begotten vnto God, cannot die by sinne, because his seed remaineth in him, neither can be sinned; that is vnto death, because he is borne of God, 1. Iohn. 3.9. Here the Apostle euidently speaketh, that the spirituall birth cannot be lost.

To the Second he objecteth; that as in Scripture it is not written, that Baptisme should be iterated; so neither it is found, that it should not.

Contra. First, in that the often receiuing of the Eucharist is commaunded, 1. Cor. 11.25. but no such charge giuen of Baptisme, it is euident that the holy Ghost in this respect hath let a difference betweene them: if the Scripture had beene silent as touching both, there had beene some colour in Bellarmines objection, but now there is none. Secondly, it is vntrue that the Scripture forbiddeth not Baptisme to be iterated: for Iohn. 13.10. our Saviour saith, that he which hath his feet washed, that is, is regenerate in his affections, wherof Baptisme is a seale, need not to be washed, but more euidently, Heb. 6.6. He that falleth away cannot be renewed by repentance: that is, as the Rhemists expound it, it is impossible to be baptized againe. Annot. in hunc locum.

Leo also in his decree, proueth thus out of Scripture that Baptisme is not to be iterated: Lauacrum semel initum nulla iteratione violatur: The lauacre once entred vnto must not by any iteration be violated, the Apostle thus saying, one God, one faith, one Baptisme: decr. p. 2. can. 1. q. 4. c. 11.

Thirdly, he objecteth, that circumcision was therefore not repeated, because it left a character, or scarre in the flesh, as Baptisme doth in the soule, which print of circumcision was a cognizance betweene the Jewes and the Gentiles, Bellarmin. sup. 22.

Contra. The outward marke in the flesh by circumcision, was not that mark, whereby the Jewes were discerned, but the circumcision of the heart: First, because circumcision was a signe betweene the Lord and them, Gen. 17.11. But the Lord looketh to the heart. 1. Sam. 16.7. not to the outward appearance. Secondly, the women amongst the Jewes were counted among the circumcised, and and discerned from heathen women: but they were not circumcised in the flesh, therefore it was the inward circumcision, whereby they were sanctified, as by their faith: this your Master confesseth. lib. 4. dist. 3. §. Thirdly, the marke in the flesh, being in the secret parts, and remote from the eye could be no cognizance to know a Jew by: If the fleshy marke were any thing, it should have beene in the hand, or forehead; as the Angell is commanded; 18. marke them in the foreheads, Ezek. 9. 4. Fourthly, the Apostle saith, he is not a Jew, that is one outward: neither is that circumcision which is in the flesh, Rom. 4. 28. wherefore the fleshy mark was no cause of the not iterating of circumcision.

Fourthly, to the first reason he objecteth, that the perpetuities of Gods covenant made in Baptisme can be no cause why it is not iterated: First, because God maketh no covenant in Baptisme: for a covenant is made betweene two consenting: but children in Baptisme being without faith, cannot consent. Secondly, God covenanteth as well with vs in the word, and in the Eucharist; yet that is often preached, the other often received. Thirdly, Gods covenant is alwaies conditionall; so to him that keepeth not the condition it is not perpetuall.

Cum. First, Bellarmine's first reason is ridiculous: for though children in their own person cannot consent, yet are they within the covenant, which God maketh to vs and our seed. Gen. 17. Otherwise Gods covenant should be weaker then the covenant of men; who do make covenants for themselves and their seed: as Dauid and Iouab. 1. Sam. 20. 42. And againe, if circumcision were a signe of Gods covenant, how much more Baptisme which is more excellent; and S. Peter persuadeth the Jewes to be baptized, because the promise was made to them, & their seed. Act. 2. 39. therefore it is a great impudency in him to deny so manifest a truth, that there is no covenant made in Baptisme.

Secondly, there is difference between the writing of a covenant, and the sealing, as Nehem. 9. 38. the people make a covenant with God, they both write it and seale it: so the word of God, is as the writing of the covenant, & therefore is repeated; Baptisme is as the sure seale, that remaineth inuincible: Likewise God covenanteth with vs in the Eucharist: but it is a diuers covenant from that in baptism: for this is the covenant of adoption, which once sufficeth; the other of continual feeding and preservation, and therefore may be often vsed: as in circumcision there was a covenant made, whereby the Israelites became his people; in the pasche a promise and covenant of protection and preservation. Exod. 12. 27.

Thirdly, Gods covenant in it selfe remaineth stedfast, though men be deceitfull: and therefore it is called a covenant of salt. 2. Chro. 13. 5. so that God doth not make a new covenant, when men returne vnto him, but remembreth the old, as Exod. 31. 13. Remember Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, to whom thou swearst. &c. And Saint Paul thus reasoneth, Ephes. 4. 5. One Lord, one faith, one Baptisme: from the constancie of God, to the stableness of Baptisme: wherefore Bellarmino hath babbled much, and said little: other arguments might also be adioyned, as these.

Argum. 3. Circumcision vnder the law was the same in effect, which Baptisme is vnder the gospel: so the Master of Sentences confesseth. lib. 4. dist. 4. §. but circumcision left no indeleble character in the soule, as Bellarmino confesseth. cap. 19. propos. 7. Ergo, neither doth Baptisme.

Argum. 4. There was no character imprinted in the soule of Christ by Baptisme: confessed by Bellarmino cap. 19. propos. 8. but we are baptized with the same baptism, that Christ was baptized with: vnlesse they will say, that the head and members are baptized with diuers baptismes; which were most absurd, and contrarie to the Apostle, who saith, There is one Lord (that is Christ) and one faith (that is in Christ) and one baptism (that is in the name of Christ:) but if Christs baptism were diuers, there should not be one Lord, one baptism.

Ambr. also saith. serm. 41. Ergo fratres in egi debemus eodem fonte, quo Christus, &c. Therefore brethren, we must be dipped in the same fountain with Christ, that we may be the same, that Christ is.

We haue also their own witness against them: Duraudus saith, that this character is but respectus rationis, a relation or respect vnto the minister, no permanent or infused qualitie, in 4. dist. 4. qu. 1. Securus holdeth, that it cannot be proued by any manifest testimonie of Scripture. dist. 6. c. 9. Gabriel doubteth, whether the Church hath defined it. ibid. qu. 2.

Innocent 3. saith, that they which are baptized being made, or asleep, characterem non suscipiunt, do not receiue this character: Ergo, Baptisme doth not alwaies imprint a character. Greg lib. 1. tit. 4. c. 3.

Augustine is still against them, for the iteration of confirmation: Manus impositio non sicut baptismi iterari potest: Quid enim est aliud, nisi oratio super hominem? The imposition of hands is not as Baptisme, neuer to be iterated againe: for what is it else, but prayer ouer a man? de baptis. cont. donat. lib. 3. c. 16. Confirmation in his opinion may be iterated, & therefore imprinteth no such character.

Neither doth Orders leaue any such character behinde it: Council. Agathens. can. 50. Clericus falsum testimonium dicens, &c. A Cleargie man bearing false witness, let him be depoted from his office; Et laicus cum rari animo de communionem accipias: Let him communicate only as a lay man. What is now become of your indeleble character?

See the testimonie of Walter Brute holy confessor: The Pope saith, that in the administration of every Sacrament he doth imprint a certaine character or make into the soule of him that receiue it. &c. I know that in a Sacrament are two things: the sacramentall signe, which is giuen to man of man, & the small grace giuen of Christ.

In giuing of Orders the Bishop doth imprint the corporall markes, but of the spirituall markes I know none, &c. pag. 300. The reason is, that man in the ministry of the Sacrament conferreth only the external things, but this inuisible character is internal, & therefore not conferred by man.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE NECES- sitie of the Sacraments.

They willingly grant, that no Sacraments are absolutely necessary in their nature, but in respect of the institution and commaundement of God; for he is as able to worke without Sacraments, as with them. In this point, we are agreed: the points of difference are these.

The Papists.

1. These three Sacraments are absolutely and simply necessarie, as they are instituted of God: Baptisme vnto all: penance to those that fall after Baptisme: Orders simply necessary to the whole Church. And thus they vnderstand necessarie, that without the which a man cannot be saved: without the rest of the Sacraments men may be saved, so there be no negligence or contempt, Bellarm. lib. 1. de sacram. cap. 22. yea, he is not ashamed to say, that the Sacraments are more necessary then faith: his reason is, because without the Sacraments, as Baptisme, or the desire thereof, none, neither children nor others, can be saved: but without faith children are saved, Bellarm. lib. 1. de sacram. cap. 22.

Answ. First, he may be ashamed so impiously to contradict the Scriptures: for our Saviour saith, One thing is necessary, Luk. 10. 42. speaking of Marias diligent hearing of the word, whereby faith is obtayned, Rom. 10. 17. so that faith coming by the hearing of the word, is the only or chiefe necessary thing. Againe, Mark. 16. 16. our Saviour saith, He that shall beleene and be baptized, shall be saved: but he that beleeneth not, shall be damned: he saith not, he, that is not baptized, but he, that beleeneth not: therefore faith is more necessary then baptisme.

Secondly, it is vnture, that none can be saved, no not children without baptisme: seeing that Dauid's child dying the teuenth day, before it was circumcised, 2. Sam. 12. 18. was saved, as Dauid himselfe saith, verf. 23. I shall goe to him: and there was as great necessitie of circumcision then, as of baptisme now: Likewise the children which Herod slew, from two yeeres and vnder, some of them being but newly born, were neither circumcised, nor baptized, yet we hold the all to be innocents.

Thirdly, children are not capable of faith, as they are of baptisme, and therefore in them there can be no comparison between faith & baptisme: seeing one is required in them, & not the other.

Fourthly, this argument may better be returned vpon his owne head: that seeing children without baptisme may be saved, as they are an holy seed, 1. Cor. 7. 14. and so vnder the covenant, of the which Sacrament they are capable; but none can be saved without faith, that are capable of faith, that therefore faith is more necessary then baptisme.

The Protestants.

Though the Sacraments being appointed for our consort, are necessary & profitable as holystone meanes to be vsed for the increase of our faith, and much to be desired & sought for yet God hath not laid such a necessitie vpon any of them, as that the want of them should cause hazard of saluation. The theefe vpon the crosse was saved both without Baptisme & Penance: pray you what penance did Peter after his thrice denial of Christ, but that he wept bitterly, & earnestly repented him of his fall: as S. Ambrose saith, lacrymas Petri lego satisfactionem non lego: I read of Peter's teares, not of his satisfaction. Such repentance we hold to be necessary, but a Sacrament of penance we acknowledge none. So the ordaining of ministers to preach, is the ordinary meanes to beget men vnto the faith: yet many haue bene called without such preaching: as Paul was conuerted by the voyce of Christ from heauen, Nabuchadnezzar was called by the great miracle of the preservation of the three children in the fiery oven.

So Augustine saith Vndique vocat nos Deus ad penitentiam, vocat per lectionem, vocat per tractatum, vocat per sermonem cogitationem, vocat per flagellum correptionis, vocat per misericordiam consolationis: God calleth vs euery way to repentance; he calleth, by the reader, by the preacher, by the inward thought, by the scourge of correction, by the mercy of consolation: in Psalm. 122. God therefore may call and instruct vs by more waies then one, he is not tyed to any.

The Papists.

2. The Sacraments of the new law are necessary to saluation, that is, it is impossible to obtaine the grace of iustification, by faith alone, without the celebrating of the Sacraments, fine sacramentis, aut eorum voto, or at least, hauing a will, purpose, and desire to celebrate and vie them, Council, Trident. sess. 7. can. 4.

The

The Protestants.

A Necessitie of the Sacraments we graunt, as also of other profitable meanes, as of preaching the word, of prayer, and the like: but no simple or absolute necessitie, as we haue said: neither are the Sacraments necessarie at all to any such purpose (being ordained for no such vse) as to be a meane to apply the grace of iustification vnto vs: but our iustification is onely applied and apprehended by faith, as Saint Paul concludeth, Rom. 3. 28. that a man is iustified by faith onely, without works of the law: yea, all workes whatsoever are excluded, as destroying grace, Rom. 11. ver. 20. The Sacraments are profitable instruments, to stirre vp the gift of faith, and other graces in vs, but not by their proper worke to iustifie vs.

Argument faith: Primo fides catholica Christianis necessaria est, per ipsam renascimur in baptismo, De tempore. Serm. 55: First of all, the Catholike faith is necessarie for a Christian, by the which in Baptisme wee are borne againe, and obtaine eternall saluation. He faith not that Baptisme but that faith is necessarie, and that it is faith which giueth life to the sacrament: it worketh not by it owne proper act: which is contrarie to Bellarmino, who faith, that fides non tribuit vim sacramenti, that faith doth not adde any force to the Sacraments, lib. 1. de sacram. cap. 12. whereas the Apostle faith, that he which eateth the bread, and drinketh the cup of the Lord unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, 1. Cor. 11. 27. so that the worthie receiving consisteth in the examination of our selues, ver. 28. and to examine our selues, is to proue whether we are in the faith, 2. Cor. 13. 5. Wherefore by faith wee are made worthie receivers, and the Sacrament is vnto vs to life, which was before vnto death.

Argument also faith: Nos si sanguinis testimonium non habemus, id est Martyrii, &c. If we haue not the witnesse of blood, that is of Martyrdome, let vs haue the witnesse of the spirit and water: for without the spirit, neither blood, nor water sufficeth: yea, if we haue the spirit without both blood and water, the witnesse thereof is sufficient. Baptisme then is not necessarie, and it is bee not, nor is.

Synod. Trullen. can. 59. In oratorio privato baptismus nullatenus peragatur, sed ad catholicam ecclesiam accedat: si quis contra fecerit, Clericus deponatur, laicus excommunicetur: In a priuate oratorie, Baptisme may in no case be administred; but they must goe to the common Church: if any man doe contrarie, if a Clergie man, he shall be deposed; if a lay man, excommunicate.

It should seeme that Baptisme was not in those dayes counted so necessarie, seeing they forbade it to be kept in priuate houses.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE NUMBER and order of the Sacraments.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE number.

The Papists.

Their generall sentence and opinion is this, that there are seuen Sacraments, neither more of 101. Etrot. The: Baptisme, the Eucharist, Confirmation, Penance, Matrimonic, Orders, extreme Vnctio. If any man say that any of these are not truly and properly Sacraments, or that they are not all of Christs institution, let him be anathema or accursed, Concil. Trident. sess. 7. can. 1.

Argument. 1. The number of seuen is mysticall, propheticall, perfect: the Prophet commaunded Naaman to wash himselfe seuen times, 2. King. 4. The Altar must bee cleansed seuen dayes, Exodus 29. 37. Iob offered seuen bullocks and seuen rammes for his friends, Iob. 42. So in the Apocal: seuen Churches, seuen Angels, seuen Starrs, seuen Candlestickes, seuen Thunders, and the like: And why not also seuen Sacraments? Bellar. lib. 2. cap. 26. Rhemist. annot. Apocal. 1. sess. 3.

Answer. First, the number of seuen is sometime applied, to describe mysteries of wickednesse, as well as of godlinesse: As the beast with seuen heads, Apocalyp. 17. 8. is called a myserie, or as your Vulgar Latine hath it, a sacrament. And with greater reason may wee conclude, that this beast with seuen heads, is Antichrist, with his seuen popish sacraments, than you out of Naamans seuen times washing, can picke out seuen sacraments. But if you will needs make a myserie of seuen: it may as well be a myserie of iniquitie as of godlines, euen the myserie of the beast with seuen heads, as wee haue said. Secondly, what though the number of seuen, and of some other numbers, bee sometime mysticall and significative, when it pleaseth the Lord in his word so to applie and appoynt them? doth it therefore follow, that men vpon their owne heads, may superstitiously applie numbers to sacraments, prayers, fastings, times, as though there were any religion in numbers, or that the Lorde had the rather respect vnto such things, because of the numbers?

Argum. 2. Man hath seven wounds to be healed or cured: Ergo, there ought to be seven sacraments as remedies against the same: Baptisme is a remedie against originall sinne, Penance against actual, extreme Vnction against the reliques of sinne, Confirmation against infirmity of faith, the Eucharist against malice, Matrimonie against concupiscence, Orders against ignorance.

Ans. First, the Sacraments are not properly of themselves remedies against sinne: no other wise than they are tempered with faith, from whence they have their whole strength and vertue. Secondly, if they were such remedies, what neede so many? as though one medicine may not heale diuers diseases. Thirdly, the lesuite hath not well matched the diseases and remedies together: first, the efficacy of Baptisme, which setteth forth our spirituall washing by the blood of Christ, serueth as well against actual, as originall sinne: seeing we are cleansed from both by the blood of Christ. Secondly, if Baptisme serue against originall, and Penance against actual sinne, what other sinne remaineth to bee helped by the other remedies? Thirdly, if Matrimonie be auaileable against concupiscence, why doe ye forbid your lustfull and belly-fed priests to marrye? and if Orders helpe ignorance, how cometh it to passe that you haue so many doltish and ignorant Masse-priests?

Bellarmin hath other arguments, shewing in particular that euerie one of their seven sacraments, which shall be answered in their severall places.

The Protestants.

THis word or name, Sacrament, may be taken two wayes: first, generally for any mysticall signe or symbole, which may represent an holy thing: and so wee will graunt, that there may bee not onely seven Sacraments, but seven and seven; which are more properly symboles and signes, than Sacraments: As the couering of the head in the woman is a symbole of subiection, 1. Cor. 11. 10. the Sabbath day a symbole or sacrament of the heavenly rest, Hebr. 4. In this sense Augustine calleth the mysterie of the Trinitie a sacrament: yea hee saith, the sacrament of fire, because therein in some sort, by the vndeuided and inseparable properties thereof, the heat, light, and shining brightnes; the Trinitie, saith he, is shadowed forth. Wherefore euerie signe or symbole of a holy thing, that hath a spirituall signification, either found in scripture, or deuised by men, is not by and by a sacrament.

Secondly, if wee will take a sacrament in the strict and proper sense, there are especially three things required thereunto. First, that they doe not onely signifie, but exhibite and represent vs after a lively manner, the spirituall things which are signified. Secondly, they must haue the institution and perpetuall commandement of Christ. Thirdly, the sacraments of the new law must succcede in the place of the old. Hereupon wee will inferre, that there are but two sacraments in the new Testament, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper.

Argum. 1. These two alone are not onely signes of heavenly things, but scales and pledges vnto vs thereof, whereby our faith is strengthened, and our hope confirmed in the promises of God: as the remission of sinnes is represented in Baptisme, Act. 2. 38. the death of Christ shewed forth in the Eucharist, 1. Corin. 11. 26. The like commendation is not giuen of any other of their sacraments.

Argum. 2. Christ onely commanded these two sacraments to be vsed for euer in his Church: to such spirituall purposes, as Baptisme is instituted and commanded, Matth. 28. 19. the Lords Supper likewise, Matth. 26. Many other ceremonies Christ vsed himselfe, as lifting vp of hands, the tempering of clay and spittle, his Apostles imposition of hands, and annoynting with oyle: But hee hath not laid his commandement vpon these ceremonies, inioyning vs perpetually to keepe them, as he hath charged vs with the other two.

Argum. 3. The sacraments of the new Testament succcede in the roome of them of the old: Baptisme standeth in stead of Circumcision, the Lordes Supper is come in place of the Paschall Lambe. But they cannot shew what old sacraments, those five other newly inuented, Confirmation, Orders, Penance, Matrimonie, extreme Vnction, doe succcede and supplie: Ergo, they are none. And beside, if all these should bee sacraments, and so seven in all: wee should haue more in number than the Iewes had, which is not to be admitted: for they had but two ordinarie sacraments, Circumcision, and the Paschall Lambe: two extraordinarie, as their baptisme in the red sea and the clowde, and their eating of the Manna, and drinking of the rocke, 1. Cor. 10. 2-3. So they should haue but foure sacraments, for your seven. Other legall rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices they had, and many typicall shadowes and significations, but no more sacraments than wee haue heard.

Other arguments we haue in particular against their five sacraments, which I referre to their severall places, which being prooued to be no sacraments at all, they must needs faile of their seven.

Angeline

Augustine yeeldeth to have no more sacraments than onely two: As Eve was made out of Adam when he was asleeper: Sic ex latere dormientis in cruce manavit sacramentum & quod for water and blood by the which he vnderstandeth the two sacraments.

Tract in Io-han. 119. &
exposit. ad
Plal. 36.

Belarmine answereth, that though Baptisme be fitly vnderstoode by water, and the Eucharist by blood, yet of Christs side, yet are not the other sacraments excluded; as Heb. 6. 2. there is mention onely made of Baptisme and imposition of hands, yet were there more sacraments.

Ans. First, we doe not greatly vtter this analogie, to proue two sacraments: but onely shew what Augustines judgement was herein: neither can the proportion hold, if there should be more sacraments than two: for as out of Adams side onely Eve was made: so out of Christs side, the sacraments issued, whereas the Church consisteth of this collection be good, there can bee no more but two sacraments: unless they can shew, that somewhat else beside water and blood was shed from Christs side. Secondly, that place to the Hebrewes is not like: for the Apostles purpose was not to set downe there all the sacraments of religion, but onely such principles, as young beginners were to learne, who after these beginnings were admitted to the Eucharist.

Now fully in defence of this truth, that Christ hath left onely two sacraments to his Church, many holy Martyrs have giuen their liues: As Thomas White, Bartholomew, with five other, condemned for denying the true popish sacraments, See pag. 1844. Likewise thirteene holy Martyrs beheaded at Stratford the how for the same cause, pag. 1904.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE ORDER, AND DEGREE OF THE SACRAMENTS among themselves.

The Poppe was long, as which vnderstandeth fully & iniqua

If any man shall say, that these seuen sacraments are of equall dignitie, and not one in some respect to be preferred before the other, let him bee accounted, Council. Trident. sess. 13. c. 1. In diuers respects one sacrament may excell another, as Baptisme excelleth the rest, because of remission of sinnes thereby effected, or, as we say, represented. Orders excell, in respect of the Minister, because they are onely, say they, conferred by a Bishop. Matrimonie excelleth, in respect of the signification, the conjunction of Christ and his Church. But simply the Eucharist exceedeth all, because of the substance of the sacrament, the reall and bodily presence of Christ, Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 18.

101. Error.

Ans. First, that Baptisme and the Eucharist exceede all the other, wee doe easily admit: for we hold them to be no sacraments: and therefore wee stand not vpon their seuerall priuiledges. Secondly, neither Baptisme is more excellent than the Lords Supper, because it representeth the remission of sinnes: for that also is insinuated in the other: for how can we shew forth the Lords death, which is done in that sacrament, vnlesse wee call to minde the benefits purchased by his death, as remission of sinnes? Neither doth the Eucharist goe beyond Baptisme, in regarde of a more full presence of Christ: for hee is not otherwise present in one sacrament, than in the other, presenting himselfe in both spiritually to be apprehended of the worthie receiuer: as for that carnall and grosse presence of the bodie of Christ in the sacrament, wee acknowledge none: as afterward it shall more fully appeare, when we come in order to that question.

Augustine sheweth, that Christ is no otherwise present in the Eucharist, than in the preaching of the worde, for the manner of his presence: Eucharistia panis noster quotidianus est, & quod vobis De dines. trahe, panis quotidianus est, & quod in ecclesia lectiones quotidie auditis, panis quotidianus est: The Eucharist or Sacrament of thanksgiuing is our daily bread, that which I handle and preach to you, is our daily bread, that which you heare read daily in the Church, is our daily bread. If Christ then be no more really present in the sacrament than in the word, what is become of the preeminence, that the one sacrament in that respect should haue about the other?

serm.

The Protestants.

That the one sacrament should be so much extolled about the other, namely, the Lords Supper to be preferred before Baptisme, as the more worthie and excellent sacrament, wee finde no such thing in the word of God: but that both of them are of like dignitie in themselves, and to be had equally and indifferently in most high account: thus it is proued.

Argum. 1. They are both commaunded and instituted by the same authoritie of our Lord Iesus Christ: as Baptisme, Matth. 28. 19. the Lords Supper, Luk. 22. 19. Doe this in remembrance of me: neither is one by the first institution aduanced about the other. Secondly, there is the same matter and substance of both sacraments, Christ Iesus with all his benefits, as Baptisme is sayd to saue vs by the resurrection of Christ, 1. Pet. 3. 21. and the cup, and the bread in the Eucharist are a communion of the bodie and blood of Christ, 1. Corinth. 10. 16. Thirdly, one and the same end of them both, which is the increase and strengthening of our faith in the promises of God: as Rom. 6. 4. we are said to be grafted in Baptisme to the similitude of Christs death and resurrection: and 1. Corinth. 11. 26. the receiving of the Communion is a shewing forth of the Lords death: Ergo, they are both of equall dignitie and worthines.

Argum. 2. As Circumcision was vnder the Law to the Paschever, so is Baptisme now vnto the Eucharist: but Circumcision then was equall in dignitie, and commaunded vnder as great a punishment, as the celebration of the Paschever, and eating of the Paschall Lambe: for both are committied vnder the same paine of being cut off from the congregation. Circumcision, Gen. 17. 14. the Paschever, Exod. 12. 19. Ergo, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper are Sacraments of equall dignitie and excellencie.

I might vnto them also with their owne fancies: for by like reason, as Beſarmine would preferre Baptisme before faith; because children are saved without faith, and yet not without Baptisme (in their opinion) so because without Baptisme children cannot be saved, as they hold, and yet may without the other Sacrament: therefore Baptisme is more necessarie, and so consequently more worthie: wherefore they doe contrarie themselves in their owne fancies.

Let them say now, which is the more worthie thing, Baptisme, or the word preached: no doubt they will preferre Baptisme: for they holde that the sacraments doe giue grace by the works wrought, and so doth not the word: yea, they are offended, because wee say, that the sacraments are no otherwaies instruments of our iustification, than the word preached is: but that the one worketh by the hearing, the other by the senses of seeing, handling, tasting: but they all serue to one end, namely, to beget and increate faith in vs. This our assertion they vtterly mislike, Relat. lib. 2. de sacram. cap. 2. Whereby it appeareth, that they prefer Baptisme before the word. Whence thus reason out of Augustine: he thus writeth: Dicite mihi, quid plus videatur vobis, verbum Dei, an corpus Christi respondere debetis, quod non sit minus verbum Dei: Tell me, which is the chiefe in your opinion, the word of God, or the bodie of Christ? (that is the sacrament of his bodie): ye must answer, that the word of God is not inferiour, Hemil. 26.

Hence we frame this argument: The word of God is equivalent to the Sacrament of the Lords bodie: Baptisme is equivalent to the Word of God, by our aduerſaries owne confession: Ergo, also it is of equall value and dignitie with the other Sacrament.

THE TWELFTH GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENT OF BAPTISME.

THis controuersie standeth vpon diuers questions. First, of the name, and definition of Baptisme. Secondly, of the parts of Baptisme. Thirdly, of the necessitie of Baptisme. Fourthly, of the Minister of Baptisme. Fifthly, of the parties which are to be baptized. Sixthly, of the effects of Baptisme. Seuenthly, of the difference of Christs Baptisme and Johns. Eighthly, of the ceremonies of Baptisme.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE NAME and definition of Baptisme.

Concerning the name, there is no question betweene vs, for the name of Baptisme hath the originall and beginning from the Scripture: S. Paul vseth this word, Coloss. 2. vers. 12. We are buried with him through Baptisme. And againe, Heb. 6. 2. All the question is about the definition of Baptisme.

The Papists.

They define Baptisme to be a Sacrament of regeneration by water in the word: that is, not 1. Error. which signifieth and scaleth vnto vs our regeneration, and assureth vs of remission of sinnes; but actually iustificeth and regenerateth vs, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Baptismo. cap. 1.

Argum. Belarmine groundeth his definition vpon those words of our Saviour, Iohn 3. 5. Except a man be borne of water and the spirit: and Ephes. 5. 26. That he might sanctifie us by the washing of water through the word: Hence he would inferre, that we are sanctified by the water in Baptisme, Belarm. ibid.

Ans. It is manifest by those places, where the spirit and the word are ioyned to the outward washing by water; that the efficacie is not in the water, but in the spirit; and the word or promise of God, which is apprehended by faith: these places proue that Baptisme is a Sacrament, sign and scale of regeneration, but no efficient or working cause thereof.

The Protestants.

Wether, according to the Scriptures define Baptisme, to be a signe or scale of our regeneration and new birth, whereby we are assured, that as verily by faith in the blood of Christ we are cleansed from our sinnes, as our bodies are washed with water, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost: So that Baptisme doth not actually bestow remission of sinnes by the water wrought, but is a pledge and scale of the righteousnes of faith, as S. Paul saith of Circumcision, Rom. 4. 11. For it is not the washing of the flesh by water, but the establishing of the inward faith and grace, that saueth vs, 1. Pet. 3. 21. See this poynt handled more at large, Controvers. 11. next before, quest. 2. part. 1.

Augustine saith, Per fidem renascimur in baptismo: by faith we are borne againe in Baptisme, Dominus. Serm. 53. It is then the proper act of faith, to regenerate vs, not of Baptisme; the use and end whereof, is to strengthen and increase our faith.

We haue against this actual iustification, by water in Baptisme, the euident testimonie out of their owne decrees, decret. p. 2. caus. 1. qu. 1. c. 54. Unde ista tanta virtus aquae, &c. From whence is this great vertue of the water, that it toucheth the bodie, and cleanseth the heart, Nisi sciremus vnto vs by the working of the word; Nam quia dicitur, sed quia creditur: not because the word is spoken, but beleueed.

Caus. 2. qu. 2. c. 45. gloss. Fides est causa, quoniam in Baptismo a peccatis mundamur: Faith is the cause, that our sinnes are cleansed in Baptisme.

Dominus. dist. 4. c. 1. Sine Sacramento visibili, et fide invisibili nemo saluatur: Without the visible Sacrament, and invisible faith, no man is saued.

Iude. 1. Per fidem et Baptismum, &c. By faith and Baptisme wee are freed from our sinne. And yet more euidently cap. 39. of the same distinction, vpon those words of our Saviour, Iam vos mundasti, and now you are cleane through the word, that I haue spoken vnto you; Quare non opus est vobis propius Baptismum, &c. Why doth he not say, you are cleane because of Baptisme, where-where with ye are allied, (but because of the word) but because the word cleanseth in the water. We see then, that the vertue of the Sacrament dependeth vpon faith, so that Bellarmine's assertion, That faith addeth no force to the Sacrament, lib. 1. de Sacram. c. 22. is not onely repugnant to Scripture, but contrarie to their owne Canons.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE parts, which are the matter and forme of Baptisme.

As touching the matter: that is, the externall element vsed in Baptisme, there is no question betweene vs, but that it ought to be plaine and common water, Aët. 10. 47. S. Petrus hath Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized? Wherefore we condemn the foolish and vngodly practises and inuentions of heretikes, that either exclude water altogether, as the Manichees, with others; or doe vse any other element, as the Iacobites, that in stead of water burned them that were to be baptized, with a whot yron; or as the Ethiopians, which are called Abissines, that vsed fire in stead of water: misconstruing the words of the Gospell, Matth. 3. 11. That Christ should baptize with the holy Ghost and with fire: which is not literally to be vnderstood, but thereby is signified the internall and forceable working of the spirit, which kindleth zeale and loue in our hearts as fire.

Concerning the forme of Baptisme: we all agree, that no other is to be vsed, then that prescribed by our Saviour Christ: To baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost: that it is neither lawfull to change this forme in sense, as many heretikes haue done, nor yet in words, as to leaue out any of the three persons in Trinitie, and inclsuively to vnderstand them by naming of one: for whereas some alleage that place, Aët. 2. 38. Be ye baptized in the name of Iesus Christ, for remission of sinnes; to proue, that it is lawfull onely in the name of Christ to baptize, we are to vnderstand, that the forme of Baptisme is not in that place expressely set downe, but the scope onely and end of Baptisme, which is to assure vs of remission of sinnes in the name of Christ, as Beza very well noteth vpon that place: Wherefore it is a manifest Error, which is imputed to Pope Nicholas, who defineth Baptisme in the name of Christ onely to be sufficient, de con. i. c. 24. Bezzarum would helpe this matter, and saith, that he bringeth in S. Ambrosius authoritie, but determineth nothing himselfe, whereas the very words of the Pope are these, Quia stat eos deum non esse baptizandos: It is euident, that such are not to be baptized againe, namely, they, that were baptized onely in the name of Christ: what are these els, but definitive words? Wherefore wee allow rather the decree of Alexander 3. decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 1. Si quis non dixerit, ego baptizo: Vnlesse a man say, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, he baptizeth not: this is agreeable to the Scripture, where Christ commandeth his disciples to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, Matthew 28. but the very forme of speech, as whether to say, I baptize, or according to the vse of the Greeke Church, Bee thou baptized, is not of like necessitie, as to vse the name of the Trinitie. The poynt then of difference betweene vs, concerning the forme of Baptisme is this.

2. Error.

The Papists.

They are bolde to affirme, that this forme of Baptisme, to baptize in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, is not fully concluded out of Scripture, but deliuered by tradition: for (say they) the commaundement of Christ, to baptize in the name of the Trinitie, Matth. 28. may be vnderstood thus: to baptize them into the faith of the Trinitie, or by the authoritie of the Trinitie. And it were sufficient, by those words, to doe and performe it in act, without saying the words; were it not, that we haue otherwise learned by tradition, that this very forme of words is to be kept, Bellarm. de baptismo. lib. 1. cap. 3.

The Protestants.

WE neede no tradition for this matter; the very forme which is to be vsed in Baptisme is plainly proued out of the Scriptures: for that commaundement of Christ, Matth. 28. baptize, &c. doth necessarily imply a forme of speech to be vsed. We graunt, that in the Scriptures, this word (name,) is taken for power, vertue, authoritie, as Aët. 3. 6. In the name of Iesus rise and walke. So also, as there is a Baptisme with water, there may be a baptizing with fire, Matth. 3. 11. Wherefore if part of the commaundement be to be taken properly and literally, as this, Go and baptize, why not the rest also, In the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost? If then the whole commaundement be properly and plainly vnderstood: how can they baptize in the name of the Trinitie, vnlesse the Trinitie be spoken and named?

Secondly, it appeareth also out of other places of Scripture, that this forme was vsed in the Apostles time: As Aët. 10. 47. Can any man forbid water, why these should not be baptized, which haue rein the holy Ghost, as well as we? As if S. Peter should haue reasoned thus: these haue received the gifts of the Holy Ghost: Ergo, they may be also baptized in the name of the holy Ghost. Likewise, Ab. 19. 2. When the brethren at Ephesus had answered Paul, that they had not heard, whether there were a holy Ghost: he saith vnto them, Vnto what then were you baptized? By this interrogatorie it appeareth, it was their manner to baptize in the name of the holy Ghost, and so consequently of the whole Trinitie. We haue no cause then to flie vnto tradition, this matter being so plainly decided by the Scripture.

Augustin. tract. in Iohann. 80. Vpon those words of our Saniour, Iohn. 1. 3. You are cleane thorough the word, which I haue spoken vnto you. Detrahe verbum, & quid est aqua nisi aqua? Accide verbum ad elementum, & fit sacramentum: Take away the word, and what remaineth in Baptisme but bare water? Let the word be ioyned to the element, and it maketh a Sacrament. The forme then of Baptisme, is the word, which Christ spake: and where else speaketh Christ, but in the Scriptures? Ergo, the forme of Baptisme, is the word of Christ, prescribed and commanded in the Scriptures. Away therefore with your vncertaine and deceitfull traditions. Our Baptisme is builded vpon a surer foundation: namely, the word of God.

Concil. Florentin. sess. 7. Andreas Colossenf. Velim à vobis amplissimi patres doceri, &c. I would learne of you (reuerend fathers,) whether the most holy Gospell doe containe the most perfect doctrine of our religion: I thinke (such is your godlinesse) that you will not answere otherwise; but that the most absolute knowledge of our faith, is therein contained: Ergo, the perfect doctrine of Baptisme is expresse in the Gospell.

The Master of Sentences thus determineth this matter: lib. 4. distict. 3. 2. Non tunc illum formam Christum, &c. Christ did not first giue that forme of Baptisme to his Apostles, when he sent them to preach to the Gentiles, but before when he sent them to preach to the Iewes: so that the institution of Baptisme may be better said to haue bin made when Christ was baptized of Iohn in Iordan, &c. Tunc ergo inuocato nomine Trinitatis, &c. Then was the Baptisme of Christ instituted, the name of the Trinitie being inuocated, which there appeared in mysterie, &c. Your Master groundeth the forme of Baptisme in the name of the Trinitie, vpon the Baptisme of Christ, where the whole Trinitie appeared in mysterie, the Father spake ffrom heauen, the holy Ghost descended like a Dove, the Sonne himselfe was in the waters: wherefore here is no neede to runne vnto tradition.

Hereunto the holy Martyrs giue consent: The word of God written by the Prophets and Apostles, left and contained in the Canonically bookes of the whole Bible, I doe belecue to containe plentifully all thinges necessarie to saluation, &c. Iohn Bradford, pag. 1626. But the doctrine of Baptisme is necessarie to saluation to be knowen, both concerning the forme & matter; Ergo,

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE necessitie of Baptisme.

The Papists.

They affirme, that Baptisme is simply necessarie to saluation by Gods appointment: so that all which die vn baptized, vnlesse the want of Baptisme be recompensed either by Martyrdome or penance, must needs perish, and be deprived of eternall life, Concil. Trident. sess. 7. can. 7. Beller. lib. de Baptis. cap. 4.

Argum. Ioh. 3. 5. Our Saniour Christ saith, Vnlesse a man be borne of water and the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdome of God: Ergo, it is necessarie to saluation to bee baptized, Bellarmin. ibid. Respond. in hunc locum.

Ans. First, it is not necessarie by water here to vnderstand materiall water, but the purifying grace of Christ, which is called the water of life, Iohn 4. 11. Water then is here added as an Epithete of the spirit, because it clenseth and purgeth as water: as Iohn 7. 38. He that beleueth, out of his bellie shall flow riuers of waters of life: Quid aqua sit (saith Augustine) euangelium interrogat. Inquire of the Gospell, what this water is. Then it followeth, vers. 39. This spake he of the spirit, which they that beleueed in him, should receiue. By water then it is no rare thing, to vnderstand the spirit. Secondly, why may not water bee here figuratiuely taken, to expresse the working of the spirit, as fire is added to the spirit, Matth. 3. 11. He shall baptize with the holy Ghost and with fire? What greater necessitie is there in this place, to vnderstand water literally, than fire in the other?

Obiect. Bellarmin. replieth: that water must needs be here vnderstood literally: first, because the words in Scripture, if there follow not apparent absurditie, must be properly vnderstood. Secondly, if water be not here signified, then it will bee hard to proue, that Baptisme ought to bee ministered only with water: for other places, where mention is made of water, do proue that men may be baptized with water; but they proue not, that they cannot be baptized with other things: Ioh. de Baptis. cap. 4.

Ans. First, it is true that where any absurditie may follow, the words are not to be taken properly: as when Christ said (this is my flesh) because it is an absurd thing and inconuenient to eat mans flesh, wee say the speech is figurative: but it followeth not of the contrarie, that where an absurditie followeth, there the words are properly to be taken, as Matth. 3. where mention is made of Baptisme with fire; it were no very absurd thing, if Christ had so appointed, for children to be somewhat singed with fire, as they were in the law circumcised and cut with a knife: yet fire properly is not there vnderstood. Secondly, if the element of water were here signified, a great absurditie would follow, that for want of a little sprinkling of water, children should be utterly lost. Thirdly, wee haue other places to proue the necessitie of water in Baptisme beside this place: As first, the example of Christ, Matth. chape. 3. who was baptized onely in water. And againe, the commaundement of Christ, Matth. chap. 28. Go and baptize: which worde signifieth properly to wash with water: As also the practise of the Apostles that onely vsed water, Acts. Saint Peter saith Who can forbid water? &c.

Thirdly, as you expound these words of Baptisme, so ye doe applie another place, Ioh. chape. 6. vers. 53. to the other Sacrament: Vnlesse you doe eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, you shall not haue life in you. If this bee spoken of the Sacramentall eating and drinking of Christ, as the Rhemists take it; then belike there is as great necessitie of the Eucharist, as of Baptisme, and so indeede Augustine sometime thought, that the one was as necessarie to saluation as the other: Sine Christi carne & sanguine, nec paruuli vitam habere possunt in semetipsis. Without the flesh and blood of Christ, neither can infants haue life in themselves. And therefore it was the custom of those times, to giue of the Sacrament to children: Paruulis adhuc & infirmis stillatur quidam de Sacramentis. Some part of the Sacrament is instilled and powred into the mouthes of young and tender children.

c. 4. in Psal. 64

But our aduersaries in no wise will admit that the Eucharist is as necessarie as Baptisme: wherefore they doe thus comment vpon our Sauours wordes: That they also doe eate the flesh of Christ and drinke his blood, which ioyned in heart and desire to bee partakers of the Sacrament, and so mystically, and spirituallie doe receiue it, Rhemist. Ioh. 6. sect. 8. And why, I pray you, may there not bee as well a mysticall and spirituall receiuing of Baptisme without the Sacrament, as of the Eucharist or Lordes Supper, seeing this place, Iohn 6. 53. doth as needfully enforce the receiuing of this Sacrament, as that place, Iohn 3. 5. doth lay a necessitie vpon Baptisme?

Fourthly, If this saying of Christ, Except a man bee borne of water, &c. doe implice a necessitie of Baptisme, then Baptisme began to bee necessarie immediatlie vpon this speech of our Sauour: for he saith not, except a man shall bee, but except hee bee, nisi renatus fuerit, in the preter tense. But Bellarmino himselfe saith, that Baptisme began not to bee necessarie, till after Christs death, cap. 5. therefore it is not like, that any such necessitie should bee laid at all vpon Baptisme. For it had been great reason, that Christs Baptisme, which was giuen while he lived in the flesh, should haue been as necessarie as his Apostles Baptisme, which was ministered afterward.

Lastly, the Master of Sentences thus expoundeth this place: Intelligendum est de illis, qui videntur & continentur baptizari. It is to be vnderstood of those, which may, and yet contemne to be baptized: vel ita intelligendum est, &c. or it must be thus vnderstood: Vnlesse a man be borne againe of water and the spirit, &c. that is by that regeneration, which is done by water and the spirit: but that regeneration is not onely by Baptisme, but by repentance, Sec. lib. 4. dist. 4. c. If either of these expiations be receiued, children dying without Baptisme shall not bee condemned: for first, they doe not contemne Baptisme, if they dye without it. Secondly, that regeneration, which others haue by the spirit and water, others by repentance, is supplied vnto them by the couenant of grace.

Or wee refuse not the interpretation of this place, which Innocentius 3. one of your Popes hath in his decree, Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 42. cap. 3. where hauing recited this place of scripture, Vnlesse a man be borne of water and the spirit, &c. with diuers other places, he inferreth thus: Ex vi diuinae patris praeiudicis auctoritates, &c. By the very letter it is apparant, that the foresaid authoritie must onely be vnderstood of those that are of age, which haue a multitude of sinnes, and cannot be vnderstood of little ones, which onely haue originall sinne, and so also is that authoritie to bee resolved, he that belongeth and is baptized, shall be saved. If ye will bee iudged then by your holy father, this place cannot be enforced against infants, that dye vn baptized.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge no greater necessitie in Baptisme, then in the other Sacrament: both which we graunt to be necessarie as helpes and props, and profitable meanes to increase our faith: but not so simplie necessarie, as that without them (there being no neglect, or contemning had of them) it were impossible to be saued.

Argum.

Answer. The children of the faithfull are holie already, even before they bee baptized: for they are within the covenant, and to them also belongeth the promise. The Lord saith, I will be a Father to the fatherless, and the God of the fatherless, Genes. 17. 7. And S. Paul saith, that the children of the faithfull are holie, 1. Corinth. 7. 14. If the Lord then be the God also of children, and if they bee holie, being borne of the righteous seede, how can they possibly perish, although they dye vnapbaptized.

Ballamine answereth. First, that the promises made to Abraham, were temporall, not spirituall.

Answer. Saint Paul sheweth, they were spirituall: by seede (not seedes) vnderstanding Christ; Colos. 3. so that the promises made to Abraham, and his seede, were such, as were to bee accomplished in Christ.

Ballamine. 2. Such spirituall promises, as were made to Abraham, belonged not to the carnal posteritie of Abraham, but to the true sonnes of Abraham, that is, his faithfull seede, cap. 4. v. 1.

Answer. We graunt, that only such as beleue, after they came to yeres capable of faith, were the true sonnes of Abraham, though otherwise both carnally begotten of his stocke, as also outwardly signed with circumcision: but no such condition of faith was required in infants: but they were saved even dying before circumcision by the covenant of grace, which was made to Abraham and his seede, Genes. 17. 7. before circumcision, which is the signe of the covenant, was given.

Ballamine. Thirdly, the children are said to be holie: either after a ciuill kinde of holines, that is to say, they were legitimate: or else because the beleueing parent doth consecrate the children vnto God, and so they are made holy by Baptisme, and are brought vp in godlines: or else, the vnderstanding part is said to be sanctified by the beleueing, in that he is taught the right vse of ma-riage: whereas Infidels doe abuse matrimonie, and vse it immoderately, and at such times, as they ought to abstaine, whereby their children are vnclane, and their marriage polluted, Ballamine did.

Answer. First, no such ciuill sanctification, that is legitimation, can bee here vnderstood: for though both the parents were Infidels, yet are their children legitimate, they being lawfully linked together in marriage: but now the Apostle saying, The vnbeleueing husband is sanctified by his wife, meaneth a further degree of sanctification, then is betwene both being Infidels. Secondly, neither doth the Apostle meane, that the children are holie by any act of holinesse wrought vpon them by the beleueing parent, as by consecrating them vnto God, or bringing them to bee baptized, or seeing them well brought vp: but such an holines, as whereby both the vnbeleueing parent is sanctified, and his seede also: But first, by godly education the children onely are sanctified, it is nothing to the sanctification of the parents. Secondly, neither are all children made ho-lie or virtuous, by their good education, as Esa wanted no good bringing vp, as well as Isach, yet he is called a prophane person, Heb. 12. 16, but the Apostle speaketh of all the children of faith, that they are holie. Thirdly, and again the Apostle meaneth not only such children as are brought in marriage, or of age to be nurtured, but all the children and seede of the faithfull parents: wherefore cannot be so vnderstood. Fourthly, yet further, it is possible that an adulterer may haue a wife the good education of his adulterous seede, as Augustine had for his sonne Adrianus, and yet his vnlawfull copulation is not thereby sanctified.

Thirdly, this sanctification cannot be vnderstood of the right vse of marriage: first, because that though the abuse of marriage in the parents is a pollution to them, yet it extendeth not to their seed. Secondly, it is possible for Infidels to attaine to this ciuill gift, as moderately and soberly to vse their wises, as some of them had the gift of perpetuall continencie, doth it therefore followe, that their seede shall be holie? Thirdly, yea this infirmitie in the immoderate vse of marriage is in-ducent to the marriage of the faithfull: as Augustine saith, Naturalis vicius impudens acris, vitio-lis est inuincibilis. The naturall vse, though it be immoderate, is pardonable in the wife: homo deliciosum habens hunc attrices nuptias, sed deperat attrices. Marriage is not an exhorter therunto, but an interter: de nupt. & concup. c. 11. Shall the children therefore of the faithfull bee vnholie? So then these three expositions, which Ballamine hath brought, can stand.

Wherefore the meaning of the Apostle is this, that the children of parents, where one of them is a believer, are holie, that is within the covenant; and being within the covenant, they are also partakers of the promise: Where we see a difference betwene the law of Christ and the lawes of men: for by the Ciuill law, partus sequitur ventrem, the birth did follow the wombe, the childe did follow the condition of the mother; as Cod lib. 5. tit. 5. leg. 3. Constantin. If the father were a free man, the mother a seruant, so should the childe be: So likewise decreeth Gregor. 9. decr. Greg. 7. lib. 16.
ap. 1. But the rule of Christ is more fauourable, that if either father or mother are free in Christ, that is beleueers, the childe is free also, that is holie: so that the faith of the one of them is more asseable to include the seede within the covenant, then the infidelitie of the other to exclude it. So then the vnbeleuer is sanctified by the beleuer, that is, is made a fit instrument, notwithstanding his infidelitie to conuey the holie seede. And the Ciuill law hath a rule not much unlike the saying of the Apostle here, Vxor conuersat marito: The wife doth increase and grow with her husband, Gen. 2. 24. et. 4. 9. 28. Institution. Like as the wife, though a seruant, being married to a man of honourable order, was partaker of his honor: so likewise faith in either partie, being the true honor of a Christian, doth sanctifie the other in this behalfe.

Arg. 2. Circumcision was as necessarie to the Israelites, as Baptisme is to vs: but their children, which died before the eight day, when they were to be circumcised, perished not: for Dauid begetteth not to say of his childe that died the seventh day, I shall goe to him, he cannot returne to me, 1 Samuel 12. 18. 23. He pronounceth that the childe was saued. And Bellarmine Confesseth, that some of the children that Herod slew were not eight daies old, and so not circumcised; yet they were all saued and are counted innocents, lib. 1. de Baptismo. c. 6. prop. 1. Ergo, neither children dying without Baptisme now are condemned.

The Master of Sentences answereth, that either children dying before circumcision did perish and were damned, or else in case of necessitie they might be circumcised before the eight day, lib. 1. diffinit. 1. 1.

Contra. His first assertion is very cruell and vncharitable, and contrarie to the Scripture: for Dauid's childe was saued dying before the eight day; and some of the children that Herod did slay might be vnder eight daies old, and so not circumcised, and yet they are all held to bee innocents and Saints.

His second assertion hath no ground, seeing that in the institution of circumcision, Gen. 17. it is limited to the eight day: so that they which circumcised before that day, did contrarie to the institution.

Bellarmine answereth: that it is vncertaine, whether the Iewes had any other remedie against sinne for their children dying before circumcision, because the Scripture maketh no mention thereof: but now it is certaine, there is no remedie beside Baptisme for infants, Bellarmine. c. 4.

Arg. 1. First, neither Circumcision then, nor Baptisme now, is a remedie against originall sinne, but a signe onely and seale of our spirituall washing by the blood of Christ. Secondly, if the Iewes had any other remedie for their children, shall we thinke that the Gospell hath laid an burden vpon infants, then the law did? Thirdly, infants then, and now dying before the Sacrament, haue one common remedie to be saued by, namely the covenant of grace, in that the Lord promised to be their God, and the God of their seede: and the children by the Apostle are called holie, 1 Corin. 7. 14.

Argum. 3. The holy Ghost may be giuen without Baptisme, so it be not contemned and neglected, when it may be had: therefore life eternall may be had without Baptisme: for the holy Ghost is able without the Sacrament to regenerate vs, and bring vs to eternall life.

The first is proved, Act. 10. 47. Who can forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which haue receiued the holy Ghost, as well as wee? They had the holy Ghost before and without Baptisme, as Augustine saith, Quibus loquente Petro, non dicitur non datus spiritus sanctus, sed dicitur baptizari. Quare, vultis spiritum sanctum? While Peter yet spake, before he laid on his hand, or baptized them, the holy Ghost came: Ergo, Baptisme not necessarie.

Argum. 4. You your selues make two exceptions, of Martyrs, and them that doe penance, which may be saued without Baptisme: Ergo, Baptisme is not simple necessarie. And if our Saviour speake of Baptisme, Iohn. 3. ver. 5. as ye say he doth; there is no priuiledge for any, no not for Martyrs, for he must be borne of water and the spirit: that is, say you, baptized. Neither in your two exceptions generall enough: for the theefe vpon the crosse was saued, and yet neither dyed a Martyr: for he himselfe confesseth, that he was righteously punished, Luk. 23. 41. neither did he any such penance, or made any such satisfaction, as you require.

Argum. 5. If all children dying without Baptisme are damned, then it would follow, that an infinite number of children should perish without their fault, which were a most cruell and vncharitable thing to asseue.

Bellarmine answereth, that Gods iudgements are most iust, though they be secret, neither are children damned without their fault, because they haue originall sinne: but it is most certaine, that there is no remedie for children without Baptisme, cap. 4.

Contra. First, it is true, that Gods iudgements and decrees are most iust, though wee perceive them not; and so are they full of iudgement: but it is not apparant out of Scripture, that God hath set downe any such decree for the children of the faithfull vn baptized, but the contrary: Mark. 16. 16. they brought little children vnto our Saviour, who said, of such is the Kingdom of heauen: he saith not of little ones baptized, but simply of little ones being the seede of the faithfull, as these were: Secondly, though children haue originall sinne, yet seeing Baptisme is appointed ¶ Early it was the heresie of the Hierarchites, qui regnum celorum parvulis habere negant, which denied that children did goe to heauen, decret. par. 2. caus. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. How farre now are the Protestants from this heresie, that exclude all children out of the kingdome of God, that are not baptized?

Againe in the same place he saith : Vide etiam, ne factus ab hoc. Saluator sum diceres : qui credidit, et baptizatus fuerit, saluus erit, carne & vigilanter non repetieris, qui baptizatus non fueris, sed in tantum, quod credideris, condemnabitur : nimirum intencus solam interdum fidem sufficere ad salutem, & non opus fuisse nobis : See also if our Saviour Christ for this cause, when he had said, he that beleueth and is baptized, shall be saved, did not of purpose in repeating the sentence, omit to say, hee that is not baptized ; but onely, he that beleueth not shall be damned : for he saw, that faith onely was suffice to saluation, but without faith nothing can suffice.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE WANT OF

Baptism may be by any other means supplied.

Our adversaries make three kinds of Baptisme, Baptismum fluminis, Baptismum sanguinis, Baptismum flammis: The Baptisme of water, the Baptisme of blood, which is Martyrdom, and the Baptisme of the spirit, which is contrition and penance: By these two last, say they, may be obtained

But first, it is not necessary to hold all those children to be Murders, and to be be-fallen for Murder; writeth, that one of Herub Temble which was trusted in those parts, was slain among the infants which were slayed, were within the promise, and belonged to the covenant, which could not be lost: their salvation depended on their free election before God; it was not purchased by the very act of their dying.

Many Confessors haue greater charitie, than Martyrs, and yet they had not remission of their finnes, as Martyrs haue: And a man being not yet iust or righteous, yet chooseth rather to dye, than denie Christ; this man cannot deserue any thing, being not iustified, and therefore it is his martyrdome, which by the very act wrought, doth purchase forgiveness of sinne. Belarmus. 2. c. 5.

Ans. First, that Confessors may haue greater charitie, than Martyrs, it is contrarie to the saying of our Sauionr, Iohn 15. No man hath greater loue than this, to giue his life for his friends. Secondly, Confessors dying in the faith of Christ, doe finde forgiveness of sinnes as well as Martyrs: as Reuelat. 14. 13. Blessed are they which dye in the Lord, not onely they which dye for the Lord, but in the Lord, that is in the faith of Iesus. Thirdly, they which giue their liues for Christ, being not first before, are either in that instant conuerted, as the theefe vpon the crosse, and so they are saved by their faith: or else if they dye rather of manlines and stomacke, then of faith, Saint Paul holds case faith, that dying without loue the fruite of faith, their death doth not profit them: 1. Corinth. 13. 3.

The Protestants.

Neither the outward worke of Martyrdome nor contrition doe iustifie, or giue remission of sinnes: but the faith onely of Martyrs and penitent persons, whereby they apprehend Christ.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul faith, 1. Corinth. 13. 3. That if a man giue his bodie to be burned, and haue no loue, it profiteth not: Ergo, it is not the outward act of martyrdome, but an effectually and liuely faith working by loue, which pleaseth God.

Belarmus answereth: first, that this place proueth not, that charitie of necessitie must go before martyrdome, but that there must bee charitie in martyrdome, by the force whereof there is charitie infused into the Martyrs heart; so that it is not possible he should dye without charitie. Secondly, it may be said as well of Baptisme, as of Martyrdome, that it faueth not without charitie, and yet it giueth, or conferreth grace.

Ans. First, neither doe we hold it necessarie, that faith and charitie should alwaies goe before martyrdome in time: for faith may be wrought in an instant, as in the theefe vpon the crosse, but that faith and charitie doth sanctifie the death of the Martyr, which is proued by this place. Secondly, charitie is not infused or effected by martyrdome, for then martyrdome should alwaies bring forth this effect; and then were the Apostles speech needlesse, and his supposition false, if a man giue his bodie to be burned, and haue no loue, &c. for by their saying the bodie cannot be burned without loue, if loue bee the effect of martyrdome: But contrariwise martyrdome is the effect and fruite of faith, and charitie; as Rom. 8. Christ's loue is herein commended, that he died for vs: his loue appeareth by the fruites and effects, namely his dying for vs. Thirdly, neither doth Baptisme conferre grace, but is a scale onely of the righteousness of faith: neither is it true, that it profiteth not without faith, seeing infants haue neither faith nor charitie, to whom Baptisme is profitable by the covenant of grace: Wherefore the instance of Baptisme is not herein like to the other; and yet in those that are of yeeres, and capable of faith, neither Baptisme, or Martyrdome is auailable without faith.

Argum. 2. Neither is the bare worke of sorrow and contrition in it selfe acceptable to God: for there is a worldly repentance that causeth death; there is a godly repentance not to be repented of, which worketh in vs care, zeale, feare, desire, which are the fruites of faith, 2. Cor. 7. 10. 11. Ergo it is faith onely that maketh all our works to be accepted before God: for without faith it is impossible to please him, Heb. 11. 6.

We want not here their owne testimonie: Decret. par. 3. dist. 4. cap. 37. Baptizandus confitetur suam fidem, &c. He that is to be baptized confesseth his faith before the priest, and being asked answereth; the same doth the Martyr before the persecutor, who also confesseth his faith, &c. Wherefore it is the confession of the faith, that maketh martyrdome acceptable.

Dominicus a Soto, and Martinus Ledesinus two archbishops doe holde, that martyrdome doth not conferre grace by the worke wrought, and therein consent with vs in 4. dist. 3. qu. 2. art. 1.

The Papists.

4. Error.

2. Martyrdome and contrition or conuersion of the heart vnto God, though they be sacraments, yet may supplie the lacke of Baptisme. Belarmus. ibid.

Argum. 1. Martyrdome in the Scriptures is rightly called a Baptisme: as Christ speaking of his death, saith, I must bee baptizd with a Baptisme, Luk. 12. 50. And therefore it may seld stand in stead of Baptisme.

Ans. If every thing, that hath the name of Baptisme, may be used in place thereof; then will vnto your number of such deuised supplie, the Phariseall washing of cups, for they were called Baptisma calicium, the Baptismes, or cleansing of cups, Mark. 7. 4.

Argum. 2. Martyrdome hath the same effects, that Baptisme hath; namely the conforming of vs to Christs passion, more liuely than in Baptisme; for the conformation in Baptisme is but sacramentall, the other reall. Likewise it remitteth both sinne and the punishment thereof, as Baptisme doth: Ergo, it is a kinde of Baptisme.

Ans.

Ans. First, that the want of Baptisme may by other meanes be recompensed, as by Martyrdome, by faith in Christ, by the desire and earnest purpose of the heart, we denie not; yet we hold not any of these to be as Baptisme. Secondly, the conforming of vs onely to Christs death and sufferings, maketh not Baptisme; for then we shall haue so many Baptismes as sufferings, because therein we also are made partakers of Christs sufferings, 1. Pet. 4. 13. not onely when we die for Christ, but if we be but rayled vpon. And againe, Baptisme doth graffe vs not onely into the friendship of Christs death, but of his resurrection also, Rom. 6. 5. which Martyrdome doth not. And further, we are two wayes conformed to Christs death, by imitation, as in dying for Christ; by application, as when the righteousness of Christ and the merites of his death, are sealed vnto vs in the Sacraments: the first conformation of vs is in Martyrdome; the second is not, which is sacramentall. Thirdly, neither Baptisme, nor Martyrdome do actually remitte sinne, but declare the same to be remitted, Baptisme as a scale, Martyrdome as an effect and consequent of faith and charitie: so that herein also they are unlike.

The Protestants.

Weneede not any such supplies to make good the want of Baptisme, neither is it safe so to doe.

1. In great presumption and boldnes, without warrant of Gods word, to giue the effect and blessing, which God hath annexed to the Sacraments, to any other externall worke: for what is this but to institute other Sacraments, then Christ left? And shall we not thinke, that God by his gift can better supply the losse and the want of the Sacraments, then we by our owne inuentions can helpe our selues? And whereas Bellarmino saith, that they haue the like institution of Christ for Martyrdome, as for Baptisme; when he can shew it out of the Scriptures, wee will beleeue him: Christ hath instituted Martyrdome, to shew our obedience, but not to be a scale of the righteousness of faith, whereunto he hath appointed Baptisme.

2. Concerning contrition of the heart, if you vnderstand by it true repentance, and withall a vowe and true desire to receiue the Sacrament of Baptisme, which cannot be obtained because of some remediless necessitie; then in such a case it standeth as available, as if a man had been actually baptized: for thus the Rhemists expound themselves, anot. Ioh. 3. 2. I pray you what greater necessitie is there now of Baptisme, then of the other Sacraments? For this true, and we willingly grant: that euery man that shall bee sau'd, must either receiue the Sacraments, or haue a desire vnto them: for the neglect and contempt of the Sacraments without repentance, is a sinne damnable. And thus you overthrow your selues, making Baptisme necessarie without necessitie.

3. Augustine admitteth none of these supplies, but only Martyrdome: Nemo fit membrum Christi, nisi per baptismum Christi, aut morte pro Christo: No man is made the member of Christ, but either by the baptisme of Christ, or in dying for Christ. Here Augustine maketh but one supply of baptism, they make two. When men follow their owne inuentions, there can bee no agreement.

De anima Origin. lib. 1. cap. 9.

Irenaeus speaketh fully for vs: Si martirium vicem baptismi possit implere, quod non facit parua, sed ipsa, quod dare alteri valet, sola non poteris obtinere? aquid enim magnam fortassis deum in corde cupimus in pace morientis inspicit fidem, martyrio quidem non interrogatam, sed martyrio idoneam: If martyrisme may supply the roume of Baptisme, which not the paine maketh, but faith, how commeth it to passe, that it selfe cannot obtaine that, which it giueth to another? for God may finde as great faith in a man that dieth in peace, who is not called to martyrisme, yet fit to be a Martyr: Epist. 77. Hereason is this, that martyrisme of it selfe cannot stand for Baptisme; seeing of it selfe it is nothing; but faith both without baptism and martyrisme is available.

Their owne decrees thus testifie, decret. p. 3. distinct. 4. c. 34. Quibus rebz ostenditur, &c. whereby it is evident, that the Sacrament of Baptisme is one thing, the conuersion of the heart another, &c. but they do both tend to mans saluation: there is not then one and the same effect of both.

THE FOURTH QUESTION, WHETHER women and Lay-men ought to baptize.

The Papists.

They holde, that not onely Lay-men, but Pagans, that are not baptized themselves; yea and Error two women also, may be ministers of Baptisme, in a case of necessitie, Bellarmino. cap. 7.

Argum. Exod. 4. Zipporah circumcised her sonne, and the Lord was pleased therewith, and was angry from Moses, whom he came against to haue slaine him; Ergo, women may as well now minister Baptisme.

Ans. First, there is not the like strict necessitie of Baptisme, as there was then of Circumcision: for if euery man childe were not circumcised the eighth day, the Lord threatned to cut him off from from among the people, Genes. 17. 14. But Baptisme is not tyed or limited to any such time or number of dayes. Secondly, there was great necessitie, which enforced Zipporah to circumcise her childe: for they had neglected the time, and passed the stint of dayes: wherefore the Lord smote Moses with sicknes; and being not able himselfe to performe that dutie, his wife in great haste taketh the childe and cutteth him, to saue her husbands life: but she in great indignation cutteth way the fore-skin from her, knowing that she was constrained to commit an vnwomanly act. There cannot be any such necessitie of Baptisme, as there was then of Circumcision; which was to be done within a certaine compas of dayes. Thirdly, you may as well proue by this example, that a woman may baptize, the Bishop, Priest, or Deacon standing by, (which notwithstanding you hold vtterly vnlawfull) as that it is lawfull for her to baptize: for Zipporah did it in the presence of Moses.

Bellarmino answereth, that God was well pleased with Zipporahs act, in that Moses presently thereupon recouered, and the Angell left him: Ergo, it was lawfully done.

Ans. First, there is great difference betwene the necessitie of Circumcision then, and Baptisme now: for then the childe must not passe eight dayes vncircumcised: and therefore Zipporahs doing herein was, because of the imminent daunger and present necessitie, more tolerable. Secondly, in that God tooke off his hand from Moses, it appeareth that God accepted of that done; but it followeth not, that he approved the manner of the doing: As it cannot be gathered, that because the plague ceased among the Philistines, 1. Sam. 6. after they had sent home the Ark with a gift, that this their offering was perfectly acceptable before God: or that the Samaritans who serued God and their Idols together, did therefore please God, because they were delivered from the Lions, 2. King. 17. But God in mercie accepted this maimed seruice, rather than none at all: So Zipporahs act was rather allowed, then that it should haue been altogether left undone.

Argum. 2. Philip being but a Deacon baptized, Act. 8. and Ananias a meere Lay-man baptized Paul, Act. 9. Therefore other beside Ministers may baptize, Bellarmino cap. 7.

Ans. First, Philip, though at the first a Deacon, yet afterward was called to be an Evangelist, Act. 21. 8. and so admitted both to preach and baptize: Secondly, it is too boldly affirmed that Ananias was but a Lay-man: though the Scripture make no mention of his calling by the Apostles: yet was it sufficient that he was called of God extraordinarily to baptize Paul, as Paul was so called to be an Apostle. It followeth no more that he was a lay man, because he was not called by the Apostles, then that Paul was so for the same cause.

The Protestants.

Neicher Lay-men, of what calling soeuer, nor yet Midwiues, or any other women, ought to be suffered in a well reformed Church to baptize infants: neither are they authorized to do so amongst vs.

Argum. 1. The commission and charge to baptize, was giuen onely by our Sauour Christ to his Apostles, and all lawfull Ministers their successors, Marth. 28. 19. Ergo, Lay-men and women, in baptizing, goe beyond the commission of Christ.

Bellarmino answereth, that when Christ gaue this commission, there were many present beside the Apostles.

Contra. We deny not, but that many beside might be present, but he spake onely to his chosen disciples, who are immediatly named before vers. 17. vnlesse you will say, that he made all Christ (those five hundred whom Saint Paul speaketh of) Apostles also: for he sendeth them into all the world, Mark. 16. 14.

Argum. 2. The preaching of the Word, and administration of the Sacraments, are and ought to be ioyned together. And the care and charge of both is committed to Pastors and Ministers lawfully ordayned: Goe, saith our Sauour, and teach all nations, baptizing them, Marth. 28. 19. But it is not lawfull for women to preach the word, 1. Cor. 14. vers. 35. Ergo, not to baptize.

Bellarmino also would thus returne the argument: that as in case of necessitie it is lawfull both for lay men and women to teach, as Aquila and Priscilla instructed Apollus, Act. 18. so may they also in case of necessitie baptize.

Contra. 1. Priuately to teach and instruct, is a common dutie of all Christians, and not incident onely to the Ministerie: so euery housholder may teach his familie, the mother the children, this dutie lay men and women may performe: But they are not to meddle with publike teaching, nor consequently with the Sacraments, which though they be in priuate places ministred, yet are publike actions: Aquila and Priscilla publikely taught not, but priuately expounded to Apollus the way of God. The like storie hath Theodoret, lib. 3. c. 14. how that a heathen Priest's sonne under Julian the apostata, was conuerted by a woman: and it was the office of the widowers of the Church priuately to prepare, and instruct such of their owne sexe, as were to be baptized.

baptized; to teach them how to answer, when they came to Baptisme, as may appeare, Caribag. cap. 12. but they were neuer admitted to any publike office in the Church. Secondly, it followeth not, though it be granted, that vpon an extraordinary occasion, as in the conuersion of Isle Couthie (as the people Iberi were conuerted, by the preaching of a woman) where there is no set Ministerie, Lay men and women may baptize, that therefore it is lawfull for them to do so in a settled Church, and where there is an ordinarie calling.

3. If it be lawfull for such to baptize, it is onely in the time of necessitie: but there is no such necessitie, as wee haue shewed, of Baptisme: Ergo, it is not at all lawfull for them.

4. Augustine judgement is this: If a Lay-man doe giue Baptisme: Nescio an pie quis dixerit esse reuerendum: I cannot tell whether any man may safely or godly say, that it is to be iterated or repeated: He doth not allow Lay-men to baptize: but is of opinion, that they are not to be baptized againe, that receiue baptisme at their hands. Yet he speaketh vncertainly, (I cannot tell farth he) and so wee will conclude with Augustine: Si Laicus baptismum dederit, nulla cogente necessitate, alieni ministerio usurpato est: If a Lay-man doe baptize, where there is no necessitie, it is an vsurping of Parmen. cap. another mans office. But there is no such necessitie to cause him so to do: Ergo. This testimonie of 13.

Augustine is ratified, decret. part. 2. can. 1. quest. 1. c. 87.

Canon Caribag. 4. can. 99. Mulier quamuis sancta & docta viros in commentu docere non presumat: can. 100. Mulier baptizare non presumat: Let not a woman, though neuer so holy or learned, presume to teach men in an assembly: Let not a woman presume to baptize: this Canon is ratified, decret. 1.

Canon lib. 1. tit. 13. leg. 4. Per mulieres aliena negotia agi non possunt, Businessse not belonging to women, can not be done by them: but to baptize, is not appertaining to women. Leg. 18. Alienam suscipere defensionem, virile est officium, et ultra sexum muliebrem esse constat: To take the defence of an other, is a mans office, and beyond the Sexe of women: so may it be said much more of Baptisme, that it exceedeth their sexe: tit. 56. leg. 6. Mulier non potest esse arbiter: A woman cannot be a Iudge, that is, in her owne person to sit in iudgement, and to receiue the triall of causes; how much lesse can a woman haue the office of a Minister to baptize: for the chiefe ciuill authoritie may rest in a woman, though the execution thereof be put ouer to others; but women can neyther haue authoritie, nor execution to baptize.

See also their owne Canons, decret. part. 3. dist. 12. c. 29. Ne Presbyteri laico vel femina corpus domini tradant deferendum a gratis: That Priests deliuer not the bodie of the Lord to a lay man or woman to be carried to the sick: If women and lay men cannot consecrate the one Sacrament, neither can they minister the other, for they are both of equall dignitie, and of the like necessitie.

Decret. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 14. Gregor. 9. Interdictum laicis, curascunq; ordinis censentur, usurpare officium predicandi: Forbid lay men, of what degree soeuer, to vsurpe the office of preaching: If it be not lawfull for them to preach, much lesse to baptize.

And concerning the Baptisme of Pagans it is decreed thus by Gregor. 2. decret. par. 3. dist. 4. c. 50. Quid Pagani baptizati afferunt, de novo baptizati: Baptize them againe in the name of the Trinity, whom thou affirmest to haue beene baptized by the Pagans: Ergo, the Baptisme of Pagans is no Baptisme, for then it should not be iterated, or repeated.

THE FIFT QUESTION, OF SVCH AS

are to be admitted to Baptisme.

Of the baptisme of Infants. Part. 1.

That infants are to be baptized, it is fully agreed and concluded betweene vs. Which poynt we doe strongly maintayne by the Scriptures against the Anabaptists of our age. But herein we dissent from our aduersaries,

The Papists.

1. They affirme, that the baptisme of children and infants is grounded vpon tradition, and not vpon Scripture, Beilerm. lib. 4. de verbis dei. cap. 9.

7. Error.

The Protestants.

I were very hard, if we had no more certaine ground for the baptizing of infants, then tradition, which is but a feeble weapon to fight against heretickes withall: we haue manifest proofes out of the Scripture for it.

First, they belong vnto the couenant: Genes. 17. I will bethy God, and the God of thy seede: they haue right to the signe of the couenant.

Secondly, they are called holy, which are borne of faithfull parents, 1. Cor. 7. 14. Ergo, are not to be denied Baptisme.

Thirdly, they are redeemed by the blood of Christ, who dyed for all the children of God; Ioh.

Ioh. 1. 12. To them belongeth the kingdome of God, Mark. 16. 14. Ergo, also Baptisme, which is a pledge of remission of sinnes and eternall life.

Fourthly, it is also proued by the practise of the Apostles, who baptized whole families, with all that thereunto belonged, Act. 16. 33. These with other effectually reasons to the same purpose see more at large, Epistol. Ioh. Philop. martyr. pag. 1840. & 41.

Fifthly, Augustine also proueth it out of Scripture, by comparing our Baptisme with the Circumcision of the Iewes: Veraciter conicere possumus, quid valeat in parulis baptisus sacramentum, ex circumcissione carnis, quam prior populus accepit: How anaileable Baptisme is in little ones, we may gather by the circumcision, which the former people in the law receiued: Ergo, not onely by tradition, but chiefly by Scripture the lawfulness of childrens Baptisme is confirmed.

So also Innocentius the 3. one of their most learned Popes, proueth the Baptisme of children by Scripture, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Cum ergo circumcisio tam adultis, quam parulis ex precepto Domini &c. Seeing that Circumcision by the commandement of God, was conferred both vpon children, and the elder sort; Baptisme also, which succeedeth in the place thereof, and is more generall both to men and women, must likewise be conferred to both.

The Papists.

2. Baptisme, they say, giueth grace and faith to the infant that had none before, Rhemist. Gal. 3. vers. 6. This then is their opinion, that infants, though actually and fully they have no faith, as other haue, yet there is a certaine habite of faith and hope infused into them in Baptisme: so that partly they do beleue of themselves, and partly by the faith of others, namely of them that bring them to Baptisme, Bellarm. lib. 1. de baptis. cap. 11.

Argum. Without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11. 6. Rom. 3. 28. We hold that a man is iustified by faith: Ergo, children, if they have no faith, are neither iustified, neither yet doe please God: Ephes. 3. 1. Christ dwelleth in our hearts by faith: but he dwelleth in children; Ergo, they haue faith. Bellarmino.

Answ. First, these places doe as well proue that children haue an absolute, perfect, and actual faith: (for it is a perfect faith that iustifieth vs, and maketh vs acceptable to God) which I am sure our aduersaries will not yeeld vnto. Secondly, the iustification and saluation of children dependeth of the free election of God, Rom. 9. 11. that the purpose of God might remaine according to election, saith the Apostle: And that which faith worketh in those that are of vnderstanding, the spirit of God is able to effect in infants, by some secret way, best knowne to himselfe.

Thirdly, it is manifest, that these places are to be vnderstood of those that are of yeeres, and capable of faith, as it followeth, Ephes. 3. 18. That you may be able to comprehend with all Saints &c. Faith then is of them, that are able to comprehend; but this comprehension, capacitie and vnderstanding is not in children: Thus also one of your principall pillars Innocent. 3. vnderstanding these and the like places, as that, He that beleueth, and is baptized, shall be saved: Hec sacramenta de adultis: all these authorities must be vnderstood of those, that are of yeeres, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 42. c. 3. Fourthly, Christ dwelleth in Infants by his holy spirite, though they haue no faith: then the argument followeth not, Christ dwelleth in them: Ergo, they haue faith, for in the kingdome of heauen faith shall cease, yet then shall we be the habitation of Gods spirite.

Bernard also thus answereth this obiection: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo. & sine fide non facit, qui in fidei testimonium baptisus gratiam perceperunt: Without faith indeed it is impossible to please God: and they are not altogether without faith, which in testimonie of their faith, haue receiued the grace of Baptisme: in Cantic. form. 65. Children then haue no otherwise faith, then as they haue receiued Baptisme the signe and Sacrament of faith.

The Protestants.

That infants neither haue faith in themselves, nor yet are profited or furthered to their salvation by the faith of others, it is thus proued.

Argum. 1. S. Paul saith, Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom. 10. 17. But infants can neither heare nor vnderstand the word of God: Ergo, no faith is wrought in them.

Argum. 2. There is no habituall or potentiall faith that pleaseth God: but the iustifying faith is alwayes actuall, working by loue, Galath. 5. 6. Ergo, children haue either no faith, or it must needs be an actuall or working faith.

Argum. 3. Infants are not iustified, nor reliued or helped forward towards their salvation by the faith of thir parents, or Godfathers, when they are baptized: for the Scripture saith, The iust shall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. that is, by his owne faith, not the faith of another.

Bellarmino answereth, that they do not affirme, that children are iustified, or do liue by the faith of their Parents, and of others, but that their faith is profitable to the Infants, being by this means brought vnto Baptisme, and because they do professe their faith in Baptisme by the mouth of others. Bellarmino. cap. 11. propos. 5.

First, that it is a benefite to be borne of faithfull Parents, who are carefull to bring their children to be baptized, and to see them well brought vp, we graunt: but what is this to the glory of God? Secondly, the confession of their faith by others is profitable, to put them in remembrance of their solemne promise made in Baptisme; but before God, they are more helped, by the confession of anothers mouth, then by the beleefe of anothers heart: for it is not cyther the faith of the Parents, or the confession of the witnesses, that supplieth the lacke of both in Infants, but the grace of God inwardly working, as Augustine well saith, Gratia omnipotentis implere credenda. The grace of the Almighty doth supplie that, which they, by the infirmities of age, cannot beleefe with the heart to righteousnesse, nor confesse with the mouth to saluation.

Augustine denyeth that children are illuminate in their minds, when they are baptized: Si illi non essent in baptismum latius susceperent, aut videmus eos cum magno studio relictos: If they were illuminate, they would ioyfully receiue Baptisme, which we see them to strue against with great crying. And why should the Apostle say, Be ye not children in vnderstanding, 1. Cor. 14. 20. if so be their mindes were illuminate? Wherefore that saying in the Gospell, sayth he, This is the light that lighteth every one that cometh into the world, Iohn 1. 9. whereby they would proue, that children doe receiue light at their very first coming into the world, is thus to be vnderstood: Unusquisque hominum illuminatur, nisi lumine ille veritatis: Because no man is lightened, but only by the light. What now is become of that lumen fidei, the light of faith, which you say is infused into children in Baptisme?

How children are to bee counted beleeuers, Master Philpot holy martyr doth thus testifie: That children are accounted of Christ in the Gospell among the number of such as beleue, it appeareth by these words: He that offendeth one of these little babes, which beleue in mee, &c. Matt. 18. where plainly Christ calleth such, as be not able to confesse their faith, beleeuers, because of his meere grace he reputeth them for beleeuers: pag. 1841. Not that they haue any beleefe in themselves, for they are so reputed by grace: God doth of his meere mercie as well accept of them through grace in Christ, as if actually they did beleue.

Decret. part. 3. distict. 4. c. 76. Infans licet fidei non habet affectum, respondetur fidem habere ab fidei sacramentum. The Infant although he haue not faith in his affection, is said to haue faith, because hee hath the Sacrament of faith. c. 129. Fidem nondum habet in cogitatione, the Infant hath not faith in his mind or cogitation: as before he saith, they haue not faith in affection, so neither in their cogitation, that is, they haue neither the act, nor habite of faith: contrary to the decree of the Tridentine Concl. sess. 6. c. 7. In Baptismo fides infundi, et menti inhaerere: That faith is infused in Baptisme, and fixed in the mind of infants.

Neither are children helped by their Godfathers faith, for what if they bee all vnbeleeuers, by this reason such children should be Baptized in no faith: Richard Woodman Martyr, pag. 1995.

These reasons also to the same effect, may be gathered out of their owne decrees: as first, decret. part. 3. distict. 4. c. 3. Ne parentum illius error impediat, &c. The error of the parents being heretikes doth not hurt or hinder the children. If the error of the parents hinder not, then their faith profiteth not. Secondly, decret. part. 3. distict. 4. c. 114. It is decreed, that the Infant is not baptized, being in his mothers wombe, the mother being at that instant baptized. If the mothers faith doth profit the child, being not yet Anima separatum viuens: A soule liuing by it selfe, while it is in the wombe, as it is said, sa. 139. much lesse when the child is now borne, and made a liuing soule by it selfe.

AN APPENDIX OF THE POPISH vse in baptizing of bells.

The Popists.

They begin now to be ashamed of the blind practises of their superstitious and ignorant forefathers: for Bellarmino flatlie denieth, that bells are baptized amongst them: but they are only consecrated and hallowed for diuine vses, as other Church vessels are, lib. 4. de Roman. pontific.

The Protestants.

It is great shame for them, to deny so manifest a thing. For in the hallowing of bells, first there were Godfathers chosen: Secondly, they gaue names to the bells: Thirdly, the bells had new garments put upon them, as is accustomed to be done to Christians in their Baptisme: Fourthly, the hallowing of bells was onely permitted to the Bishops suffragane, whereas their Priests and Deacons usually baptize infants: all this sheweth, that it was not onely a Baptisme, which they hallowed vpon bells, but in a more principall kind, then common Baptisme was. This was one of the grievances which the princes of Germany complained of in the assembly at Noremberg, that the suffraganes exacted of the people such great summes of money for the baptizing of bells. With what face then can they deny this vngodly custome of theirs, in Christening and baptizing of bells.

An. 971. Pope Iohn. 14. at the coronation of Otho the Emperor, gaue vnto the great bell of the Church of Laterane his own name: the Christening of bells in y<sup>e</sup> popish Church testified by B. Ridley holy martyr pag. 1779. col. 2. Which superstitious vse in baptizing of bells, thereby ascribing vnto them a spirituall power against euill spirits, thunder, lightening, &c. hath been condemned in some of their Councils. Council. Colonienf. part. 9. cap. 14. They correct the error of former times of those that thought, that diuels were frayed away with the sound of bells: Qui potius precibus iustorum abscedant, illisq; submotis fruges, mentes & corpora fidelium seruentur: Diuels rather are frayed away by prayers, vnto which men are called by the bells: and so the euil spirits being remoored, the bodies and soules of men are preferued, and their corne, &c.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, OF THE EFFECTS and fruites of Baptisme.

THe partes of this question are these: first, whether our finnes are wholly remitted and cleane taken away in Baptisme. Secondly, whether Baptisme serueth only for the remission of finnes that are past. Thirdly, of the liberties and priuiledges, which are obtained by Baptisme: which parts are now seuerally to be handled.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER IN BAPTISME our finnes be cleane taken away.

The Papists

10. Error.

Decret. de Original. peccat.

THe sins which are past, they affirme, not onely by the grace of Christ received in Baptisme, to be forgiven and pardoned, and no more imputed, but euen wholly to be rased and rooted out: Et tolli omne illud, quod veram habet & propriam rationem peccati: And al that wholly to be taken away, which hath the nature and qualitie of sinne, Council. Tridentin. sess. 5. For the conscience or originall sinne, remaininge after Baptisme, is now no more to be called sinne. In Infants then newly baptized, there is neither mortall nor venial sin, Rhemist. 1. Iohn. 1. sect. 5.

Argum. 1. The Scripture saith, Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the finnes of the world. Ioh. 1. 29. Christ doth sanctifie and cleanse his Church by the washing of water, through the word, Ephes. 5. 26. Ergo, by remission, finnes are cleane taken away, Rhemist. Roman. 4. sect. 7. Bellarm. cap. 13.

Ans. First, if sinne in Baptisme were wholly remoored, not onely the guilt, but the very sinne and blot of sinne: how commeth it to passe, that many which are baptized, doe fall afterward into deadly finnes; yea there is no man that liueth without sinne? If sinne once haue been verely expelled and banished out of the flesh, how commeth it in againe? If their iustification haue once cleerely rid them from sinne, how can they be subiect to it againe? for the grace of iustification, being once obtained, can neuer be lost: the gifts of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 29.

2. The Scripture is true, that Christ by his blood, cleanseth, washeth, taketh away our finnes: not by actually purging vs from all corruption, but in freely acquitting and discharging of vs before God, both of the guilt and punishment of sinne: so the Scripture saith, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and to whom the Lord imputeth no sinne. Rom. chap. 4. vers. 7. 8. Our finnes therefore may be truly forgiven, though some corruption of sinne doe still remaine in vs.

3. The Apostle saith, Ephes. 5. 27. That he might make it to himselfe a glorious Church, without spot or wrinkle: signifying, that not here, or now, but then and there the Church shall bee perfectly cleane, and without spot, when it shall be made glorious: but now although she bee cleansed by the washing of water in the word; yet she saith truly of her selfe, in respect of her infirmities that remaine, I am blacke, Cantic. 1. 4.

Argum. 2. Rom. 5. 19. As by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous: but in Adam we are verely made sinners: Ergo, by Christ wee are truly made righteous without sinne, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, the Apostle sheweth, that this comparison betweene Adam and Christ is not to be vrged in euery point: as vers. 16. The gift is not so, as the offence: for the guilt is of one offence to condemnation, the gift is of many offences to iustification: The comparison is betweene one, and one; as in one we dye al, so in one we are al made alieue: It holdeth not in the manner: for our corruption from Adam is natural, but our iustification by Christ is supernatural. Secondly, we grant, that in Christ wee are truly made righteous by the imputation of his righteousness; yet it followeth not that we should be void of sinne: for Christs righteousness which is imputed by faith is one thing, thing, our owne righteousness another; that is perfect, and maketh vs righteous before God, the other is imperfect. Thirdly, holding their sense, the comparison may very well stand: for as in Adam though we all are made sinners; yet, they say, there doe remaine, pura natura, certaine pure nature still; notwithstanding the corruption of our nature: so though we be iustified and made righteous by Christ, there may bee found in vs, some impure naturals and dregs of corruption still.

Argum. 3. 2. Cor. 6. 14. What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousnes, light with darkness? Ergo after we are once made righteous, and receiued the light, there remaineth no darknesse or unrighteousnes of sinne; Beilarm. ibid.

Ans. First the Apostles speaketh not of light and darknesse in the same, but in diuers subiects, as ver. 14. What fellowship hath the beleener with the Infidel? Secondly, though in the righteous some imperfections remaine, yet there is no fellowship, but a continuall warre and strife betweene the spirit of God and the corruption of our nature; as Galath. 5. 17. They are contrarie one to the other, so that ye cannot doe the things ye would. Thirdly, though some reliques of sinne remaine in the faithfull, yet they doe not raigne in them, Rom. 6. 12. but as darknesse toward the rising of the Sonne is mixed with the light; yet so, that the light ouercommeth, and chafeth away darknesse: so faith the Apostle, Rom. 7. 25. In my minde I serue the law of God; in my flesh (that is the corruption and darknesse of my nature) the law of sinne.

The Protestants.

There are three things to be considered in sinne: first, the staine or blot, corruption or remnant of sinne in vs. Secondly, the guilt, fault, and offence of sinne. Thirdly, the punishment and spend due vnto it. By our spirituall washing in the blood of Christ, whereof Baptisme is a feale both the guilt, and punishment of our finnes are not onely hid and couered in Gods sight (as our aduersaries doe falsely charge vs to say:) but they are truly forgiven vs for Christs sake, and shall neuer be remembered any more. But yet there is left in vs some remnant of sinne so long as we live in this flesh, which in the end together with the corruption and mortalitie of the bodie, shall be cleane taken away.

Argum. 1. If we say we haue no sinne, we deceive our selues, and the truth is not in vs, 1. Ioh. 1. 8. Ergo there are none living at any time void of sinne, no not in their Baptisme. Saint Paul also exhorteth to be renewed in minde, and to put on the new man, and put off the old, Ephes. 4. 22. Ergo there remaineth some sinne and corruption after Baptisme: what neede else this renewing of the minde, and putting on the new man afterward?

Beilarm. adu. 1. These and such like places must be vnderstood of such finnes as are committed after Baptisme, or else of the mortifying of the senses and corrupt inclinations which may prouoke vnto sinne, but properly are not sinne.

Contra. The Iesuites twofold answer is at once ouerthrowne by that place of the Apostle to the Colossians, chap. 3. ver. 5. Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleannes, &c. Here first appeareth, that the Apostle speaketh not onely of corrupt inclinations, but of the finnes themselves, as fornication, couetousnes, &c. Again, he saith, Let not one to another, seeing you haue put off the old man, with his workes, ver. 9. Here the Apostle sheweth, that though in Baptisme they haue put off the old mans workes, that sinne did no longer raigne in them: yet there remained some corrupt inclination still, which he warneth them to take heede of. The seedes then of sinne and corruption were not vterly extinguished in Baptisme.

Hardly, that the Apostle speaketh not onely of finnes committed after Baptisme, but euen of that corruption, which remaineth in Baptisme, Saint Augustine sheweth, as he is alleaged by Gregorius lib. 3. dist. 4. cap. 146. Nam in baptismo, quamuis plena fiat remissio peccatorum, &c. For in Baptisme though there bee full remission of finnes, yet there is no perfect change, because there remaineth still some corruption not onely in the bodie, but the minde, which is the inner man: which if it were perfectly renewed, the Apostle would not say, that he is renewed from day to day, 2. Cor. 4. ver. 16. Fourthly, if finnes were fully taken away in Baptisme, they could not afterward set vs on fire: for whom God loveth he loveth to the end, 1. Ioh. 3. 19. so that they should not commit sinne after Baptisme: as how followeth to be shewed.

Argum. 2. If sinne be vterly extinguished in Baptisme, then they which are baptized can sinne no more: for sinne being once extinct, remaineth not, neither returneth being abolished, as the Apostle saith, with one offering, shall he be consecrated for ever, whom God hath sanctified, Heb. 10. 14. Wherefore if they be perfectly consecrated in Baptisme by the extinction of sinne, they are for euer consecrated: not to see, that the baptized may afterward commit sinne. Ergo.

Ans. Beilarmus graunteth, that the baptized may lose the grace of God, and so consequently the remission of finnes received in Baptisme: and this grace being lost, they may afterward sinne notwithstanding, sup. 14. propos. 1.

Contra. It is a great question among the Papists themselves, whether finnes received in Baptisme tiſme doe returne againe, ſome holding that they may returne, ſome that they may not. The Maſter of Sentences dare giue no reſolution in ſo doubtfull a queſtion; but leaueth vs in the brier, concluding thus: Alieni parti non prauideamus ſtudioſo lectori iudicium relinquo: Not being preiudiciall to either part, I leaue the iudgement hereof to the reader, lib. 4. diſtinct. 2. 2. b. But others of better account then the Maſter, doe reſolue, that finnes once forgiven, returne not: as Greg. de v. par. 2. can. 33. diſt. 4. c. 14. Qui recedit à Chriſto, &c. non in id quod remiſſio eſt, cecidit, &c. He that departeth from Chriſt, doth not fall againe into that, which is remitted, but he ſhall be condemned to death for his latter finnes, which was due vnto thoſe that were remitted. But yet more plainly Gelaſius, ibid. c. 24. Diuina clementia dimiſſa peccata in ultionem ulterius redire non poſſunt: The diuine clemencie doth not ſuffer finnes once remitted, to returne vnto our puniſhment. And the Maſter of Sentences better remembering himſelfe, alloweth theſe ſayings of Auguſtine: Sacramenta in ſolis electis efficiunt, quod ſignificant: The Sacraments doe onely effect that, which they figure in the elect. And, Communis eſt baptiſmus omnibus baptizatis, ſed non virtus baptiſmi: Baptiſme is common to all that are baptized, but not the vertue of Baptiſme, that is remiſſion of finnes, lib. 2. diſtinct. 1. a. b. Wherefore the elect in Baptiſme finde remiſſion of finnes for euer, ſo that their finnes are no more imputed vnto them; the reſt doe not at all obtaine that grace.

Argum. 3. Originall ſinne is not taken away in Baptiſme, therefore ſome ſinne remaineth ſtill. And that this originall corruption is properly called ſinne, and is ſinne indeede, Saint Paul ſheweth evidently, Rom. 7. verſ. 7, 8. where he nameth luſt and concupiſcence ſinne.

De peccat.
lib. 1. c. 35

Auguſtine thus writeth: Meminiſſe debemus peccatorum omnium plenam remiſſionem fieri in baptiſmo, hominis verò qualitatē non totam continēdū mutari: We muſt remember, that all our finnes are fully remitted in Baptiſme: but the qualitie of man (that is, the corruption, and ſtaine or blot of ſinne) is not wholly changed. This ſentence of Auguſtine is ratified, decret. par. 3. diſtinct. 3. 2. 1. 4.

Council. Mileſitan. cap. 8. Placuit, ut quicumque verba ipſa dominica orationis, ubi dicitur, Dimittis nobis debita noſtra, ita volumus à ſanctis dici, ut humiliter, non veraciter hoc dicatur, anathema ſit: qui non ſeruat orationem, & non hominibus ſed ipſi Deo mentientem: We decree, that whoſoeuer taketh thoſe words of the Lords prayer, where we ſay, forgive vs our debts, ſo to bee ſaid of holie men, that they rather ſay ſo of humilitie, then truly, let him bee accuſed: for ſo he that prayeth, ſhould ſeeme God, not vnto men. But this they muſt needs ſay, which affirme ſinne vtterly to be taken away: for being taken away, it remaineth not: and ſo they haue no cauſe to pray for remiſſion of finnes which are cleane wiped away before.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER BAPTISME ſerue onely for remiſſion of finnes paſt, and not for the finnes alſo to come.

The Papiſts.

11. Error.

Chrifts death applied to man by Baptiſme, wipe away all finnes paſt, for new finnes other remedies be daily requiſite, Rhemuſt. Heb. 10. ſect. 4. The Councell of Trent holdeth them ſcattered, that thinke all finnes to bee forgiven, ſide Baptiſmi ſuſcepti, by faith of Baptiſme received, ſeſſ. 7. can. 10.

Hereupon they ſaying ariſeth, that Baptiſmus eſt prima tabula poſt naufragium: that Baptiſme is the firſt boord of refuge after ſhipwracke: & penitencia eſt ſecunda tabula poſt naufragium: Penitence is the ſecond boord of refuge: So that if a man doe fall after, he muſt vſe other helpe and meanes for the remiſſion of finnes: for Baptiſme is not auailable for finnes afterward committed, Belarm. cap. 18.

Argum. It is impoſſible, ſaith the Apoſtle, for ſuch that haue been once lightened, and taſted of the beaueſty grace, if they ſhall deny, to be renewed by penance, Heb. 6. 6. that is, they which fall away from faith and grace, after Baptiſme, cannot be baptized againe, or be illuminated, or renewed, by ſo eaſie a cleaſing of finnes, as the Sacrament of Baptiſme did yeeld: for to be illuminate, to be renewed, and to crucifie Chriſt, are proper vnto Baptiſme, wherein we are illuminate, renewed and imitate Chriſts death: Ergo, Baptiſme is not auailable for remiſſion of finnes, which men fall into afterward, Belarm. cap. 18.

Auſt. Firſt, he very vnſkilfully here confoundeth Baptiſme and repentance, whereas the Apoſtle doth diſtinguiſh them, verſ. 1. 2. making repentance from dead workes, and the doctrine of Baptiſme two diuers things; and they themſelues ſay, that Baptiſme is the firſt table of reſurrexion, penance the ſecond: how then can they by repentance here enforce Baptiſme? And I marueile, that Belarmus hath ſo ſoone forgotten himſelfe, that whereas he ſaid before, lib. 2. de Sacram. c. 33. reſp. ad 2. ration. ſolid. that it is not found in Scripture, that Baptiſme ſhould not be iterated, he remembered not this place, where after his ſenſe, the Apoſtle denieth repentance the ſecond time by the Sacrament of Baptiſme.

Secondly,

Bellarmino denieth the assumption, that we are iustified formally by the righteousness of Christ, but by our owne righteousness inherent in vs, resp. ad argum. 4.

Contra. This is a great blasphemie, and contrarie to the Apostle, who saith, that I might be found, not having mine owne righteousness, which is by the law, but the righteousness of God through faith, Philip. 3. 9. The righteousness of God by faith, is not our owne righteousness: but wee are iustified by the righteousness of God. Ergo.

So saith Augustine: Eodem lauacro regenerationis, & verbo sanctificationis, omnia prorsus mala hominum regeneratorum sanantur, etiam qua posterius humana ignorantia aut infirmitate committuntur: By the same lauer of regeneration, and word of sanctification, all the finnes in men regenerate are healed; yea euen those, which by humane ignorance afterward are committed: Non ut Baptismus, quoties peccatur, toties repetatur, sed quia ipso, quod semel datur, sit, ut non solum antea, verum etiam postea quorumlibet peccatorum venia fidelibus impetretur: Not that Baptisme, so oft as a man sinneth, is to be repeated; but by vertue of that which is once giuen, it commeth to passe, that the faithfull haue remission of their finnes, not onely before, but also after: Ergo, Baptisme hath it force not onely for the present, but it reacheth vnto the time following.

Bellarmino answereth to this authoritie by a distinction, that Baptisme, though not immediatly, yet mediately serueth to purge finnes done afterward, because he that is baptized, by that grace, which he receiued in Baptisme, obtaineth remission of finnes.

Contra. First, neither doe wee say, that Baptisme worketh immediatly, for the Sacraments are instruments and meanes of grace, and so mediate workers. Secondly, as he confesseth the finnes following to be remitted in Baptisme, no otherwise are the finnes past, but by the grace of Christ sealed vnto him, that is baptized, in Baptisme.

Concil. Viennens. sub Clem. 5. Credimus Baptisma, quod celebratur in aqua, &c. esse tam adultis, quam parvulis communiter perfectum remedium ad salutem: Wee belecue that Baptisme celebrated with water, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost, is both to litle ones, and men of yeeres, a perfect remedie to saluation: If it bee a perfect remedie, then it is auailable against all sinne.

Synod. Mogunt. in cap. 11. Credimus baptismi virtute, omne prorsus peccatum, tam originale quam adultale, remitti: We belecue, that by the vertue of Baptisme, all sinne both originall and adultall is remitted. If all sinne, then none is excluded.

Also wee haue plentifull testimonie from their owne doctrees: Part. 1. dist. 2. 3. c. 2. In baptismo omnia peccata, &c. In Baptisme all finnes whatsoever, not onely originall, but voluntarie, are remitted. Part. 2. dist. 4. c. 1. 36. Regeneratio carnis tantummodo contrahitur, &c. By the generation of the flesh originall sinne onely is contracted, by the regeneration of the spirit, there is not onely remission of originall, but of voluntarie finnes. Clement. in lib. 1. tit. 1. c. 1. Nos attendentes plenam efficaciam mortis Christi: We considering the generall efficacie of Christs death, which by Baptisme is applied to all, that are baptized, doe hold their opinion to be more probable, that sinne, not onely the fault to be remitted in Baptisme, but grace also infused. By this grace infused in Baptisme, euen the finnes afterward are remitted; how could the generall efficacie of Christs death be set forth in Baptisme?

The Master of Sentences also confesseth, that in thole, which come fainedly to Baptisme, postea cum penitentia, baptismus incipit prodesse, Baptisme beginneth to profit them afterward, vpon their repentance, lib. 4. dist. 4. c. Wherefore by their owne sentence Baptisme is effectual for afterward, as well as for the time past.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE LIBERTIE and priuiledges obtained by Baptisme.

The Papists.

12. Error.

1. They haue defined, that a man, by Baptisme, is not onely debitor fidei, sed etiam vniuersa huius Christi implenda, is not onely a debter of the faith, but is made a debter to performe the whole law of Christ, Concil. Trident. sess. 8. can. 7. that is, Baptisme is not onely a signe of free justification by faith, neither doth he which is baptized professe himselfe onely by faith to be iustified, but partly also by his workes, and the keeping of the commandments of Christ, Bellarmino lib. 1. de Baptismo cap. 3. c.

Argum. Matth. 19. 17. Christ saith to the young man, if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandments, 2. Cor. 5. 10. Every man shall receive according to that, which he hath done, whether good or ill. Ergo, we are bound to keepe the law, Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. First, Christ maketh that answer to the young man, to the intent he should know himselfe, who thought, that by his owne workes he might attaine vnto life: for otherwise the doctrine of the Apostle is plaine, that life is not by the law, as he saith, Galath. 3. 11. If there had beene law, which which should have given life, surely righteousness should have been by the Law. Secondly, the Apostle saith, that we shall receive according to our works: but he saith not, for our works sake: for as Bernard saith, our works are viaregni, non causa regnandi, are the way to the kingdome, not the cause of the kingdome. Thirdly, these places alleaged are altogether impertinent, for they onely shew, that we are bound to doe good works, which we denie not, not that wee profess to be saved by our works.

The Protestants.

AN Baptisme wee make profession of our obedience, to die vnto sinne, and rise vnto newnes of life, Rom. 6. 2. yet not thereby to be iustified: but in being baptized wee shew our faith and hope, onely to looke for remission of sinnes and saluation of our soules by the death of Christ.

Argum. 1. Circumcision, in place whereof Baptisme is given to vs, is called by the Apostle a seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. not of the righteousness of works: much more then is Baptisme, which is a Sacrament of the Gospell, a pledge vnto vs of the iustice of faith.

Argum. 2. By Baptisme wee are freed from the curse of the law: for it is a Sacrament of the death of Christ, and of all the benefites thereof: and Christ by his death hath borne for vs the curse of the law, Galath. 3. 13. but if by Baptisme wee binde our selues to the obseruance of the law, to be iustified and finde life thereby, wee must needs fall into the curse, because wee are not able to keepe the commandements. Wherefore seeing Baptisme deliuereth vs from the curse, it also exempteth vs from the workes of the law, to finde life and iustification thereby.

Their owne decrees are for vs: Part. 3. dist. 4. c. 3. Ab ira Dei nullus liberatur nisi per fidem medietatis. No man is deliuered from the wrath of God but by the faith of the Mediatour. But in Baptisme we are deliuered from the wrath of God: Ergo, in Baptisme onely we profess to be saved by the faith of the Mediatour.

Cap. 1. Per fidem & baptismum iustificamur a peccatis: By faith and Baptisme we are iustified from our sinnes: Ergo, nothing else in Baptisme requisite, but faith.

The Papists.

Although Christians are bound by solemne vow in Baptisme to walke in obedientie before God, and to keepe his commandements: yet are they not, therefore freed and exempted from the obseruance of the lawes and ordinances of men, which they are bound in conscience to keepe, and vnder paine of damnation, Bellarm. cap. 16.

The Protestants.

Baptisme onely bindeth vs to keepe the commandements of God; and so farre forth also to obey men, as they commaund things lawfull: but wee must not bee brought in bondage to mens traditions, and obseruations, seeing we are the Lords free men, and by Baptisme consecrated to his seruice.

Argum. Matth. 28. 19. Goe and teach, baptizing them, &c. and teaching them to obserue all that I haue commanded you: Ergo, Baptisme bindeth vs onely to the obseruation of Gods precepts. 1. Cor. 7. 23. Ye are bought with a price, be not the seruants of men: Baptisme is a signe of the death of Christ, the price of our redemption: Ergo, we are freed from all inere humane seruice, in receiuing of Baptisme. For this cause is it called the Baptisme of Christ. Augustine saith, Paulus dixisse legimus Euangelium meum: baptismum autem in Christum Apostolorum in vnguentum offraui, ut aunderet dicere suum: Paul is read to haue said, My Gospell; but neuer any of the Apostles durst call the Baptisme of Christ their Baptisme: Ergo, seeing it is the Baptisme of Christ, and we are onely baptized in his name, not in our owne name, or the name of men: we must onely hope to be saved by faith in him, and become his seruants wholly.

Contr. Petil. lib. 3. 15.

Belarmine answereth, first Christ in bidding his Apostles to obserue all, that he had commanded, doth also implice, what they should teach to bee obserued the lawes of Prelates; for that is one of his commandements also: Luk. 10. 16. He that heareth you, heareth me. Secondly, S. Paul forbiddeth not the seruice of men absolutely, but as it is contrary to the seruice of God: Belarmine cap. 16.

Answer. To the first we reply, 1. To heare the Apostles and Ministers of the Church teaching the same that Christ taught, is to heare Christ himselfe, and so is one of his commandements: but when Prelates do clogge mens consciences with superstitious rites, contrary to the doctrine of Christ, as popish Prelates doe, they are not to be heard, nor obeyed: no; an Angell is not to be received preaching otherwise, then Christ and his Apostles haue laid the foundation, Galath. 1. 8. Secondly, concerning the lawes of Prelates, it must be considered, that they are of three sorts: for either they are as touching faith and doctrine, which, if they be agreeable to the doctrine of the Apostles, are of the same authoritie, and simply to be receiued: either they are of exterrall orders and politike constitutions, which, though obedience must be yeelded vnto; yet they do not simply bind in conscience, as the lawes of God, but onely so farre, as we are bound in conscience generally, generally, do obey our Superiours in all lawfull things; tyther they are the meere deuises, and superstitious inuentions of men, such as the Apostle speaketh of, Coloss. 2. 21. Tamēn non estis sub iugo seruitutis, quod est inuentionis hominum, &c. The first kind wee profess obedience to in Baptisme absolutely, because they are no other but the precepts of Christ; to the second not absolutely, but as we have said, to the third not at all.

To the second we reple, first, that to be a seruant of men, is no sense allowed in the Scriptures as Matth. 6. 24. No man can serue two Masters; and Galath. 1. 10. If I should please (that is serue) men, I should not be the seruant of Christ: so, when we serue men for the Lords sake, in lawfull things, we serue not men, but God. Secondly, to yeeld to the superstitious inuentions of Prelates, such as most in Poperie are, is a meere seruice of men: for such the Apostle calleth the precepts and doctrines of men, Coloss. 2. 22. and therefore obedience to such is contrary to our dutie and seruice to God.

Lastly, as touching the ceremonious rites and obseruations of men, their owne decrees do iustifie for vs, per. 1. disposit. 12. c. 12. Quamuis ne hoc inuenti possit, &c. Although it appeare not, how they are against the faith, yet they do oppresse Religion with seruile burdens, which God in mercie hath left free with most few and manifest Sacraments, so that the condition of the lewes is more tolerable, who were subiect onely to legall prescriptions, not to humane presumptions: if ceremonies not apparantly contrarie to the faith, must be restrained for their multitudes, how much more such as do oppugne the faith.

The Papists.

They hold, that notwithstanding the vow of Christianitie, and obedience made solemnely in Baptisme, yet other vowes made before or after vnto God or Saints, as vowes of single life, to go in pilgrimage, to offer to such a Saint, and such like do stand still in force, and ought to be performed: Bellarm. c. 17. And, whosoeuer shall say, that such vowes made after Baptisme, do derogate to the faith professed in Baptisme, as to Baptisme it selfe, let him be accursed, council. Trident. de Baptismo can. 9.

The Protestants.

That all such vowes being some of them impossible, some of them impious, and superstitious, some superfluous and vnnecessary, are disannulled by the vow of Baptisme, neither can stand in force without great derogation to the same, thus we doe proue it.

Argum. 1. The things which are vowed are either commaunded, or not commaunded: such things, which are commaunded vs of God, wee doe profess and vow to keepe in Baptisme, and forsake the diuell, the world, and the flesh: but such things as are not prescribed of God, but commaunded of men, wee doe not vow in Baptisme to keepe; nay, they are contrarie to our vow in Baptisme, whereby we are made the seruants onely of God, and not of men: Ergo, vowes of such things are contrarie to the vow of Baptisme.

Bellarmino answereth, that wee are bound rather by Baptisme to keepe our vowes, because we vow to keepe all Gods commaundements, whereof this is one, not to bryake our vowes, c. 17.

Contra. All lawfull vowes and promises of obedience are indeede faithfully to be performed vnto God: but vnlawfull vowes, such as are many in Poperie tending to superstition, are not to be made, nor being made are to be kept: neither doth God commaund vs to performe such vowes; but they are like Iephabs vow, and Herods oth, both which might better haue beene reuoked, then performed, as they were.

Argum. 2. If other vowes to be made after Baptisme are requisite, then were the vow in Baptisme insufficient, other vowes being added thereunto: but now it is most sufficient. Ergo.

Bellarmino answereth, that the argument followeth not, for after Baptisme receiued, it is necessarie to heare the word of God, and to celebrate the other Sacraments; yet these doe not make Baptisme insufficient for the proper end thereof, which is the saluation of man: no more then doth the accession of other vowes derogate to the sufficiencie of the vow in Baptisme, Bellarmino.

Contra. First, there is no comparison betweene the word of God and the Eucharist (which is of Gods institution, and therefore to be vsed as necessarie helps of our faith,) and the vnprofitable inuentions of men, which are not ordained of God: they cannot derogate to Baptisme, having all one author; but the other doe, for as much as mans inuentions cannot stand together with Gods institution. Secondly, the word preached; and the Eucharist doe not make Baptisme insufficient, because they haue all their speciall vses and ends; Baptisme to seale vnto vs our new birth, the word to beget faith, and the Eucharist to confirme it: but like as, if another Baptisme should be added to the first, the one were a derogation to the other; so many vowes comming after the vow of Baptisme, must needs make the first insufficient.

Augustines judgement is this: De tempor. serm. 7. Sunt multi, qui vouent, &c. There bee many that vow, one a cloake, another a boyle, another a waxe candle; another, that he will drink no wine; another, that he will fast; another, that he will eate no flesh: this is not the best; nor the perfected kind of of vowing: God neither careth for thy comely apparell, nor for thy oyle, or fasting: but offer that unto him, which he hath redeemed, that is, thy soule.

Likewise Origen thus writeth, homil. 13. in Exod. Non vult Moser ut offeras aliquid quod extra te est. Moser will not haue thee offer any thing without thee: Take (saith he) from among your filkes, and offer vnto God, as euery man hath conceiued in his heart. What, doth siluer or gold grow within me? offer vnto God gold for the Tabernacle, that is, the faith of thy heart: this then is the onely vow, which we offer vnto God, which we promise and professe in Baptisme.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, OF THE DIFFERENCE BETWEENE the Baptisme of our Sauour Christ, and the Baptisme of Iohn.

The Papists.

The Baptisme of Iohn (they say) was of another kind then Christs Baptisme was, neither was it sufficient without Christs Baptisme, nor had the like force or efficacie, as his Baptisme had: and therefore such as had been baptized of Iohn, were afterward admitted to Christs Baptisme, Council Trident. sess. 8. can. 1. Bellarm. lib. 1. de baptis. cap. 20. 21.

Argum. 1. Matth. 3. 11. Iohn himselfe saith, I baptize you with water, but he shall baptize you with the holy Ghost: Ergo, Iohns Baptisme and Christs not all one: for Iohns Baptisme gaue not the holy Ghost, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. Iohn speaketh not of diuers Baptismes, but of diuers operations and ministeries, in one and the same Baptisme: for Iohn, as all other ministers doe, did but giue water; and Christ working together with them, giueth the holy Ghost. But it will be answered, that Iohn saith not, he doth baptize, but he shall baptize: Ergo, Christ did not baptize together with Iohn by his spirit. Bellarmin. cap. 21.

Ans. The same Iohn in another place speaketh of Christ in the present tense, Ioh. 1. 33. This is he which baptizeth with the holy Ghost: Ergo, Christ did both then baptize with his spirit, and afterward also more manifestly, when the gifts of the spirit began to be shed forth more plentifully vpon men. Also he saith, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the finnes of the world, Ioh. 1. 29. he can then, when Iohn baptized, did take away finnes. And againe, Iohn testifieth of him, verf. 1. 6. of his father whom we all receiued: euen then Christ baptized with the spirit, which was to receiue of his finnes.

Bellarmin replieth: first, that Christ is said to baptize with the spirit, not that then hee baptized, but to signifie, that when he baptized, he should not onely baptize with water, but with the spirit. Secondly, Christ did not then take away finnes, but it is signified, that he afterward by his death should take away the finnes of the world. Thirdly, they receiued of his gract and finnes, but by other meanes, than by the baptisme of Iohn. Bellarmin. cap. 21.

Conra. First, if Christ then onely began to baptize with the spirit, when he baptized with water, it would follow, that he neuer baptized with the spirit: for it is certaine that he baptized not with water, Ioh. 4. 2. Again, that he at that instant baptized with the spirit, it is euident by Iohns words, verf. 33. Hee that sent mee to baptize, said vnto mee, upon whom thou shalt see the spirit come, himge baptizeth with the holy Ghost: Christ then immediately at the coming downe of the spirite, baptized with the spirite: vnto those which wil say he receiued the spirite in vaine.

Secondly, it is very grosse and absurd to say that Christ did not take away the finnes of the world before his death; for the Prophet Dauid saith, Psal. 32. 1. Blessed are they whose finnes are forgiven, euen vnder the law by faith in Christ so come they found remission of finnes. Thirdly, that Iohns Baptisme and ministrie was not an instrument of the gract of Christ, it is contrary to the Scripture, 1. Cor. 1. 16. He shall turne many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God.

Lastly, that Christ and Iohn baptized together, the one visibly, the other invisibly, S. Ambrose doth testifieth, vpon these words: I baptize you with water: Christus probauit, &c. He proueth that he is not Christ, because he worketh visibly, &c. The bodie is washed with water, the soule by the spirit: we do one thing; and call vpon another; Sed hoc in se ipso dissoluissimè possunt, &c. But these things cannot be denied; in 3. cap. Luc.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul baptized twelue men at Ephesus with Christs Baptisme that had receiued Iohns before, Act. 19. 4. Ergo, Iohns Baptisme was not the same that Christs was, Bellarmin. cap. 21.

Ans. There can be no such thing gathered out of that place, for those words in the 5. verf. When they had said, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus, are parte of the narration which Paul maketh of Iohns Baptisme: for that the sense is this, they that heard Iohns doctrine, were baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus. It is not so to be read, as though they were baptized againe of Paul but he layeth onely his hands vpon them, that had before receiued the baptisme of Iohn.

Bellarmin.

Belarmine replyeth, that this place cannot be so expounded: for if the fourth and fift verses containe onely a narration of Iohns Baptisme, then were the people baptized twice: for in the fourth verse it is said, Iohn baptized with the Baptisme of repentance. And againe, in the fift verse, where they heard it they were baptized.

Contra. First, it followeth not that they were twice baptized, because the word is here used: for first the Apostle setteth downe Iohns office in whole together, and then proleptically the two parts thereof; first his preaching in the fourth, and then his baptism in the fift verse.

Secondly, but that this is a narration, not of Saint Luke concerning Saint Pauls baptism, but of Saint Luke concerning Iohns baptism; thus it appeareth: first, by the Greeke particles in the fourth verse, and in the fift, which doe one answer to another, and shew a necessary coherence and connexion of both verses together. Secondly, Iohns preaching and his baptism doe best agree together: Iohn preached to the people that they should beleue in Iesus Christ, vers. 4. and then it followeth, they were baptized in the name of Iesus, vers. 5. So then Iohn baptized in his name, whom he preached: but he preached Iesus Christ, therefore he baptized in his name: and if he baptized in Iesus name, then would not Saint Paul have baptized them againe. Thirdly, how is it like, that these men being at Ephesus, so farre off from Iudea, where Iohn baptized, and so long time after, not lesse then 30. yeeres from the death of Iohn Baptist, could have been baptized of Iohn? wherefore they are said to bee baptized to Iohns baptism, not that they were baptized by the hands of Iohn, but had received that baptism, whereof Iohn was the first minister, for Christ baptized not, but Iohn in Christs name. Fourthly, if Saint Paul had baptized them, it is most like he would have baptized them in the name of the holy Ghost, whereof they doubted: but they are baptized in the name of Iesus: that is, the people that heard Iohn, not the twelve men, whom Paul found at Ephesus. Fifthly, the Apostles by laying on of hands without Baptisme conferred the holy Ghost, as it may appeare, Act. 8. 17. where Simon would have given money, that on whomsoever also he laid his hands, they might receive the holy Ghost: neither doe we find, that the imposition of hands, was used in Baptisme. So then as Act. 8. 16. is said, The holy Ghost was then laid upon them, but they were baptized only in the name of the Lord Iesus, and it followeth, Then lay they their hands upon them, and they received the holy Ghost: they were not baptized againe, but onely confirmed with laying on of hands: so in this place, they had received the Baptisme of Iohn, which was nothing else, but to be baptized in the name of Iesus, and then the Apostle layeth on his hands, and they receive the gift of the holy Ghost: they were not more baptized, then the disciples at Samaria, Act. 8. 16. Lastly, S. Ambrose iudgement upon this place is this, lib. 1. de spirit. c. 3. Iohannes in remissionem peccatorum in adiuvantis testimonio in suo baptismo, etc. Iohn did baptize in the name of Christ, not his owne name for the remission of sinnes: but they in the 19. of the Actes had not received Baptisme in the name of Christ, as Iohn used to baptize: and therefore they were baptized in the name of Christ Iesus, neither was Baptisme iterated in them, but renewed, for there is but one Baptisme: S. Ambrose, though he thinketh, that these twelve were baptized by S. Paul, yet so thinketh he, because indeed they had not received Iohns Baptisme, which he holdeth to be one Baptisme, with the Baptisme of Christ.

Argument. The Baptisme of Iohn had not the invocation of the Trinitie, as the Baptisme of Christ hath: Ergo, it was not the same. Belarmine answereth thus, lib. 2. de baptismo c. 1. Ambrosius First Iohannes there was the presence and invocation of the Trinitie in the Baptisme of Iohn, it appeareth Mark. 1. where, when Christ came to Iohn to be baptized, God the father sent him from heaven, God the Sonne was in the water, the holy Ghost descended in the likeness of a Dove: and Ioh. 1. 33. *He that sent me to baptize with water: Here is the authoritie of God the father in Iohns Baptisme: And yet it was upon whom thou shalt see the spirit come downe, etc.* which is the baptism with the Holy Ghost: here is the name and authoritie of God the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. The Master inferences is of this opinion: Tunc invocato nomine Trinitatis, instituitur in Iordane Baptismus. Therein Iordane the name of the Trinitie being invocated, Baptisme was instituted: when the mysterie of the Trinitie appeared: lib. 4. dist. 2. g. Secondly, Iohn used the same forme in baptizing, which the Apostles did: they baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus, Act. 8. 16. and 19. 4. and 22. 5. Ambrose testifieth, that Iohn baptized in the name of Christ, lib. 1. de spirit. c. 3. and therefore it is not unlike, but that Iohn baptized in the name of the Trinitie, as the Apostles did, though the name of Iesus onely be expounded because thereby is signified the end and scope of Baptisme for remission of sinnes, rather then the act, and precise forme of Baptisme.

The Master inferences is of this opinion: Tunc invocato nomine Trinitatis, instituitur in Iordane Baptismus. Therein Iordane the name of the Trinitie being invocated, Baptisme was instituted: when the mysterie of the Trinitie appeared: lib. 4. dist. 2. g. Secondly, Iohn used the same forme in baptizing, which the Apostles did: they baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus, Act. 8. 16. and 19. 4. and 22. 5. Ambrose testifieth, that Iohn baptized in the name of Christ, lib. 1. de spirit. c. 3. and therefore it is not unlike, but that Iohn baptized in the name of the Trinitie, as the Apostles did, though the name of Iesus onely be expounded because thereby is signified the end and scope of Baptisme for remission of sinnes, rather then the act, and precise forme of Baptisme.

Argum. 1. Iobus Baptisme differed not in the matter of the Sacrament, for he baptized with water as Christs Apostles did. There was also the same forme of both, the word of God: for Iobus also taught the people to beleue in Iesus Christ that was to come, Act. 19. 4. There was also the same scope and end of Iobus Baptisme: For he preached the Baptisme of repentance, for remission of finnes, Mark. 1. 4. Ergo, it was the same with the Baptisme of Christ.

Belarmine answereth, that Iobus did not baptize vnto remission of finnes, but vnto repentance: his Baptisme did incite and stirre vp to repentance, and so consequently they which repented, obtained remission of finnes.

Contra. First, Iobus preached the Baptisme of repentance to remission of finnes, Luk. 3. 3. which is all one with the Baptisme which Peter ministred, Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Iesus, for remission of finnes: repentance and remission of finnes is the scope both of Iobus and Peters Baptisme. Belarmine replieth, that repentance went before Peters Baptisme, as a preparation vnto it, but it followed Iobus as the effect. Contra. First, it appeareth, Luk. 3. 12. that the Publicanes which came to be baptized, first confessed their finnes, saying, Master, what shall we doe? and therefore repentance also went before Iobus Baptisme. Secondly, if Iobus Baptisme wrought repentance, then consequently also it assured them of remission of finnes: for where there is true repentance, there is remission. Thirdly, S. Ambrose, as I haue shewed, saith, that Iobus did baptize in remissionem peccatorum: for remission of finnes.

Argum. 2. If the baptisme instituted by Christ were another Baptisme, then Iobus was, and yet he himselfe was Baptized of Iobus: then it would follow, that we are baptized now with another Baptisme, then Christ himselfe was, for he receiued Iobus Baptisme: but this were very absurd to say, that there is not the same Baptisme of the head and the members, of Christ and his Church: Ergo, Iobus Baptisme all one with Christs.

Belarmine answereth, that it was more conuenient for Christ to receiue Iobus Baptisme, then his owne, least he should haue been thought himselfe to stand in neede of regeneration.

Contra. 1. Iobus also baptized for remission of finnes: therefore if there had been any such danger, Christ might haue been thought to neede remission of finnes, by receiuing Iobus Baptisme. 2. Christ was not baptized for any cause in himselfe, but to giue an example to vs: For so it became him to fulfill all righteousnes: not to prescribe lawes to others, whereof he had not been the first practizer himselfe: so was he circumcised, his mother purified: so did he celebrate his last Supper with his Apostles, not for his owne vse, but for our example: In his owne person for our benefit to consecrate these holy institutions.

Again, the Apostles were baptized with none other, then Iobus Baptisme, for Christ baptized none: neither doth the Scripture make mention of any Baptisme that they receiued, saying when he washed their feete, Iohn 13. S. Augustine speaketh doubtfully, as hee is alleaged also, decret. part. 3. dist. 4. c. 147. Apostolos intelligimus iam fuisse baptizatos, &c. We vnderstand that the Apostles were baptized, eyther with the Baptisme of Iobus as some thinke, or which is more credible, with the Baptisme of Christ: but it is contrarie to the Scriptures, that Christ baptized any; Luk. 3. therefore they were baptized with Iobus Baptisme: seeing then that both Christ and his Apostles receiued Iobus Baptisme, it must needs be the same with Christs.

So witnesseth Leo 1. Epistol. cap. 6. and it is rehearsed in the decrees, part. 3. dist. 3. c. 14. Sic voluit Christus baptizari, &c. Christ so was baptized, as it pleased him to be circumcised. And a little after: He did consecrate in himselfe the Sacrament of his owne baptisme, so shewing himselfe, as he is the chiefe, so in all things to be the first: Christ therefore was baptized with his owne Baptisme.

S. Ambrose also thus saith, Serm. 41. Ergo fratres tungi debemus eodem fonte, quo Christus: Wherefore brethren we must be dipped in the same fountaine with Christ, that we may be the same that he is. And the Master of Sentences saith, Institutio facta est baptisimi, &c. Baptisme was instituted, when Christ was baptized in Iordane: Ergo, Christ was baptized with his owne baptisme.

Argum. 3. The Apostle saith, Ephes. 4. 5. One Lord, one faith, one baptisme: but Iobus saith was the same with Christs faith, for he taught the people to beleue in Christ, Act. 19. 4. Ergo, his baptisme was one with Christs.

Belarmine answereth: first, by this reason wee may proue, that Moses and Dauid had also the baptisme of Christ, for they had the same faith, &c.

Contra. First, he answereth very absurdly, seeing the Apostle speaketh manifestly of those times then present: therefore he should haue first shewed that Moses and Dauid had any Baptisme at all, and then wee would also haue answered, what kinde of Baptisme it was. Secondly, and yet that Baptisme wherewith Moses and the Israelites were baptized in the red sea, and the cloud, was spiritually the same that Christs Baptisme is, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Cor. 10. 2.

Secondly, saith he, it would also follow by this reason, that heretikes haue not the Baptisme of Christ, because they haue not the same faith: and therfore the Apostle doth not thus reason, There is one faith, therefore one Baptisme : but exhorteth them to vnitie, because they had all one faith, and one Baptisme.

Contra. First, heretikes haue the Baptisme of Christ, if they baptize in the faith of Christ : otherwise they haue not the same Baptisme : for an heretike baptizing in the name of the Trinity baptizeth in the faith of the Trinitie, howsoeuer he beleue to himselfe : and therefore this objection notwithstanding, there is one faith and one Baptisme. Secondly, how could the Apostles perswade to vnitie, because they had all one Baptisme, writing to the Ephesians, amongst whom there were some, that had receiued onely Iohus Baptisme, Act. 19. 4. 3. if Iohus Baptisme and Christ had not beene all one? Thirdly, S. Ambrose proueth that Iohus Baptisme could not be iterated by this place, unum Baptismum, one Baptisme, Ioh. 1. de spirit. s. 3. And so also Leo enforceth this place, that Baptisme is not to be iterated, because there is but one.

Bellarmine denieth, that the proper end and scope of Iohus Baptisme was for remission of sinnes yet Augustine granteth it, who notwithstanding being carried away with the error of that time, doth elsewhere put some difference betweene the Baptisme of Iohus and Christ : Si quis cum baptizatus in baptismo Iohannis dimissa esse peccata, non ago pugnaciter: If any man wil contend, that remission of sinnes also was giuen in Iohus Baptisme, I will not be against it. There being then the same proper end and scope of both these Baptismes, how can they choose but be all one?

I will lastly vrge against them their owne Master, who thinketh, that they which did not haue power in Baptismo Iohannis, put their trust in Iohus Baptisme were not baptized againe, Ioh. 4. d. 1. but none by him baptized so did; for hee taught them to beleue in Christ. Act. 19. 4. Ergo, in Baptisme was not iterated, and so consequently was the same with Christs Baptisme.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF THE CEREMONIES and rites of Baptisme.

The Papists.

15. Error

They haue brought into the Sacrament of Baptisme a multitude of superstitious ceremonies, whereby they haue greatly polluted the holy sacrament of Baptisme, mixing therewith their owne inuentions.

First before Baptisme, they haue deuised these toyes to be vsed. First, they doe exorcise, crosse, and exufflate the euill spirit from the partie to be baptized. Secondly, they touch the eares and nostrils with spittle, that his eares may be opened to heare the word, and his nostrils, to discern betweene the smell of good and euill. Thirdly, the Priest signeth his eyes, eares, mouth, breast, forehead, nostrils, with the signe of the crosse, that all his senses thereby may be defended. Fourthly, then hallowed salt is put into his mouth, that he may be seasoned with wisdom, and kept from putrifying in sin. Fifthly, the partie is annoynted then with oyle in his breast, that he may be safe from euill suggestions, and betweene the shoulders, which signifieth the receiuing of strength.

Secondly, these ceremonies doe accompany Baptisme it selfe. 1. The font and water therein is consecrated and hallowed, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost. 2. He is then dipped in the water, to signifie the being of Christ 3. dayes in the graue.

Thirdly, after Baptisme, they haue this vse. 1. He is annoynted with holy Chrisme in the top of the head, and thereby is become a Christian. 2. A white garment is put vpon him, to betoken his regeneration. 3. A vaille is put vpon his head, in token that he is now crowned with a royall Diademe. 4. A burning taper is put into his hand, to fulfill that saying in the Gospell, Let your light so shine before men. &c. Bellarm. lib. 1. de Baptismo. 25. 26. 27. Catechism. Rom. p. 310. Catech. Basil. 4. distinct. 6. quest. 3.

The Protestants.

Against these popish ceremonies, which they vse in Baptisme, we doe reason thus.

1. It is contrary to the rule of the Gospell, that there should be such types, shadowes, significations, brought into the seruice of God, as they make in Baptisme : for seeing we haue the body which is Christ, all such shadowes ought to be abolished. Coloss. 2. 17.

2. In one Sacrament they haue forged and found out many, as their chrisme, oyle, salt, spittle : which they make not onely seales of holy things, but giuers and conferrers of grace, which is more then any Sacrament can haue : and it is contrary to the Scripture : for the spirit of God is as the winde that bloweth, where it listeth, Ioh. 3. It is not tied to creatures, elements, externall signes, as they include the spirit (as it were) in these outward things, which haue power (as they affirme) to giue wisdom, strength, power against the diuell, and such like. But S. Paul saith, that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, 2. Cor. 10. 4. The meanes whereby Christians both obtaine spirituall graces and shend them from euil, are spiritual : For if in Christ Circumcision auaile not any thing, which was notwithstanding instituted of God; but faith is all in all, Gal. 6.

last. 4. much more vaine and vnauitable are the deuises and inuentions of men.

This beggerly company of ceremonies doth also deface and impugn the sincere and pure institution of Christ: None of those ceremonies were used when Christ himselfe was baptized, Matth. 3. which notwithstanding had been most fitte, considering the worthines of his person that was baptized: Neither did Christ giue any such thing in charge to his apostles, but biddeth them only much, and baptize in the name of the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, Matth. 28. 19. nor giue any such ceremonies in use in the Apostles time, St. Paul saith, Act. 10. 48. Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized? He calleth not for oyle, salt, spiced, or any such thing, but only for water.

And is not ours thus (I pray you) in the popish Church: for never was Jewish Circumcision the third part of ceremonies, which their Baptisme is defiled withall.

and the superstitious use of force of these ceremonies, as against the free clipping of the curls with water, we have the manifest decree, Concil. Tolosa. c. 10, and it is ratified in 1179.

2nd. Amphib. & reptil. vitandis schismatis scandalum; ut hereticis de quibusdam, singulis in diuitiis non feruerem, &c. To auoid the scandale of schisme, and the vex or falshon of hereticks in a

THE THIRTEENTH
GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, OF THE SACRAMENT OF THE LORDS
SUPPER, OR EUCHARIST.

This Controverſie hath two partes: Firſt, of the Sacrament it ſelfe: Secondly, of the ſacrifice, which they ſay, is offered vp in the Sacrament: which they call the ſacrifice of the Muſt.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SACRAMENT of the Eucharist.

The part of the controverted standeth upon diuers questions: First, whether the body of Christ be really and substantially in the Sacrament. Secondly, whether the elements of bread and wine be changed, conuerted, and transubstantiated into the very body and flesh of Christ. Thirdly, whether the Eucharist remaine a Sacrament after the vse and celebration. Fourthly, of the outward elements in this Sacrament. Fifthly, of the words of consecration. Sixthly, of the proper effect of the Lords Supper. Seuenthly, of the manner of celebrating it. Eightly, whether it ought to be ministred in one kind. Ninthly, whether it is to be adored.

THE FIRST QUESTION, CONCERNING the reall presence of Christ in the Sacrament.

The Papists.

16. Error.

articul. 1. 6.
articul.. 1119. holding the same. 1. 1119.
the same. 1. 1119.

IN the Sacrament of the Eucharist, vnder the formes of bread and wine, by the efficacie of the word of Christ spoken by the Priest, is really, verily, and substantially present, the natural body and blood of Christ, which was conceived of the virgine Maria; the same body, that is now in heauen, Rhemist. Math. 26. 26. 27. 28. yet after another manner: For he is in heauen according to the naturall existence of his bodie in the Sacrament, he is really present in his flesh, yet sacramentally by his omnipotent power, Council Trid. sess. 13. can. 1.

Argument. The figures must be inferiour to the things that are figured and represented: the Sacraments of the law were figures of the Sacraments in the Gospell: therefore they ought to be inferior. But vnlesse the bread and wine should be the verie blood and flesh of Christ in the Sacrament, these Sacraments in the law should not onely not be inferior, but farre superior to ours. As for example, the Paschall Lambe is in nature to be preferred before bread, and the slaying of the Lambe did more liuely represent the death of Christ, then the breaking of bread; the eating of flesh doth also better set forth the spirituall nourishing, then the eating of bread. Wherefore, vnlesse we beleue a reall presence in the Sacrament, their sacrifices, in dignitie and excellencie, should farre exceede and excell ours, Beilarm. lib. 1. de sacram. Eucharist. cap. 3.

Ans. 1. It is not true, that their Sacraments were figures of ours: But S. Paul sheweth, that both their Sacraments and ours doe figure out and represent the same thing; as the spirituall eating and drinking of Christ, 1. Cor. 10. 2. 3. Our Sacraments are indeed figures corresponding and answerable to theirs, and theirs also had a certaine reference and relation to ours: but they were not types of ours: for then our Sacraments should be the body of theirs, whereas Christ is the bodie both of their Sacraments and ours. S. Peter saith, that Baptisme is an antitypon, a figure answerable to the saving of the eight persons in the flood, 1. Pet. 3. 21. They are correspondent one to the other, and had mutuall relation and respect one to the other. But that was not properly a type of Baptisme, but both baptisme and that are figures and signes and lively representations of our salvation in Christ.

2. If the reall presence of Christ onely commendeth the Sacrament, and aduanceth above the rites of the Law, which in all other respects are better: by this argument Baptisme shall remaineth inferior to the Sacraments of the Law: for you affirme no reall presence in Baptisme, as you doe in the Eucharist: and in all other respects it must needs giue place to Circumcision; for the cutting off of the flesh is a more lively representation of regeneration, then is the washing by water: and the flesh of man is in nature more precious then water. So by this reason, though you haue wonne credite for the Eucharist, yet you haue lost it for Baptisme.

3. We answer therefore, that although the reall presence be set apart, yet our Sacraments are more excellent then theirs. First, the price and worth of things in their nature are not to be weighed in a Sacrament, but they must be considered in respect of the vse, to the which they are ordained by the institution. Flesh, you say, is better then bread: so is wine and milke better then water in their nature: but in Baptisme water is better then they, because Christ hath now set it apart for a more holy vse. Secondly, the slaying of the Lambe doth more liuely represent, say you, the death of Christ, then the breaking of bread.

Ans. Wee graunt, that if breaking of bread had been vsed in the Law, it had not been then so significant as the slaying of beasts: but the breaking of bread now in the light of the Gospell, is this abundance of knowledge and instruction, being a signe of a thing alreadye done and finished, must needs be more pregnant and lively in representation, then the killing of sacrifices in the law, which were types of things to come, the mysterie of the Gospell being not yet opened to the world. And againe, the words of institution, and consecration vsed and pronounced in the Sacraments of the new Testament, are clearer and more significant, then any prescribed in the shadowes of the Law, and therefore doe make a more lively and effectually representation in the elements. Wherefore our Sacraments are more excellent then theirs, in respect of the more cleer light and fuller signification, which they haue by the word of God, and the preaching of the Gospell ioyned vnto them: as the Apostle saith, this Gospell was not hid, 2. Cor. 4. 3. and is now Christ, as by his preaching described in their sight, Galath. 3. 1. We neede not deuise any other way of excellencie for our Sacraments, then this, which we haue said, agreeable to the Scriptures.

Beilarmine answereth: First, that it is but an accidentall thing in our Sacraments, that they be token a thing done and past, and therefore for all this essentially the elements of the Sacraments of the Law are better.

Contra. First, as though the excellencie of the accident doth not make the thing, being in substance stance less worthe, more excellent: as wine in the nature and substance thereof is more worthie then water, yet water in Baptisme in respect of the accidentall use is more excellent then wine. Secondly, it is not now a thing accidentall in our Sacraments to represent a thing already done, but it is of, and belonging to the nature of them, which otherwise were no Sacraments.

Secondly, saith he, the Eucharist ordained by Christ, at his last Supper, did represent his death to come; and therefore in this respect, was no more worthe then the Sacraments of the old law, which did shew also things to come, Bellar. cap. 4.

Contra. First, as Iohn Baptyst was greater by the testimonie of our Saviour, than a Prophet, because they did long before prophesie of him; but he did point him out with the finger, being already come: so the last Supper of Christ representing his death, then instant, is more excellent than the Sacraments of the law, shewing it long after to bee fulfilled. Secondly, he hath gained nothing by this reason, but a derogation to Christs last Supper, seeing that our Sacraments now doe demonstrate Christs death already past. But as the Passe-over at the first institution thereof, being eaten the even before their deliverance, was no lesse excellent then the feasts of the Passeover, afterward celebrated in remembrance of their deliverance past: no more is Christs last Supper going before his death, herein inferiour to the celebration of the Lords Supper now since his death.

Thirdly, the words of institution are not of the essence of the Sacrament, which they say make the elements more excellent; the words of consecration are of the essence, which are by them denied, and refused, as words of enchantment, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. First, an accidentall excellencie may make the subject more excellent, as I have shewed; as the accession of honour, being but an accident, yet maketh one man more worthe than another. Secondly, the words of institution doe make a Sacrament, and therefore are of the essence thereof, giving the forme, as the elements yeeld the matter. Thirdly, words of consecration we refuse not simple, but your words of consecration, therein misliking these three things: First, that you make not all the words of institution, consecratorie; but some few of them. Secondly, that by the very syllables of those words pronounced without relation to the prayers of the Church, the elements should be converted. Thirdly, that onely by the words of consecration the Sacrament is made; whereas the whole action, of giving, receiving, distributing, giving of thanks, doth help toward the consecration. Fourthly, you doe then graunt, that the words of consecration do make the Sacraments of the Gospell more excellent: wherefore not the real presence only.

Argum. 2. Ioh. 6. 55. Christ saith, My flesh is meate in deede, and my blood is drinke in deede: he that eats my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

First, this place must be vnderstood not of any spirituall eating or drinking of Christ without the Sacrament, but is properly meant of the manducation and eating of, him in the Sacrament.
Text. vers. 51. The bread (saith Christ) that I will give: he speaketh of a thing to come, for the Sacrament was afterward instituted: but if this bread were to be taken for his word, and the eating denied for beleiving in him; in this sense the bread was given already.

Also Christ also speaketh in the present tense, vers. 32. My father giueth you the true bread from heaven: And, I am the living bread that came downe from heaven: if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever. vers. 51. He saith not, he that shall eat, but he that euen now eateth. And afterward he speaketh of the time to come; The bread that I shall give, because his death and passion was not past: therefore he saith, The bread that I shall give, is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. But he speaketh euery where of the eating of his flesh in the present tense, vers. 35. 50.
51. which cannot be vnderstood of the sacramentall eating, the Sacrament being not yet instituted, but of a spirituall manducation.

Secondly, say they, those words being applied to the Sacrament, must needs also bee vnder-stood properly and literally, for the very eating of the flesh of Christ, and drinking his blood, not tropically or figuratiuely.

The flesh of Christ, which Christ promiseth to giue them to bee eaten, he preferreth before the Manna, which their fathers did eat in the wilderness: the true bread which he giueth them, is more excellent then the bread of Manna. But if the bread in the Sacrament doe but signifie the flesh of Christ, and be not in very deede, it should be no better then Manna, which also did signifie the flesh of Christ, Bellar. cap. 6.

Also first, Christ compareth not the materiall Manna, and the sacramentall bread together, but the true bread, which is himselfe, as vers. 33. The bread of God is he, which com- eth downe from heaven. The Sacrament, neither sacramentall bread was yet given or instituted, where yet could be eaten: but this bread, whereof Christ speaketh, was euen at that time giuen, as vers. 32. My father giueth you the true bread from heaven: and it was euen then to be eaten: vers. 8.
He that eateth of this bread, shall live forever: So then the true bread, that is, Christ is preferred before Manna. Secondly, the sacramentall bread, without any carnall presence, is more excellent then

then Manna, being a more lively and full representation of the spirituall manducation of Christ.

Thirdly, that Christ speaketh of a sacramentall eating and drinking of Christ, Bellarmin the further prooeth: because that the Iewes vnderstood Christ to speake of the very eating of his flesh, and were offended at it: neither doth Christ correct their opinion, as he doth instruct Adams ignorance, Ioh. 3. further expounding himselfe: and if Christ had meant onely, that he should bee spirituallly eaten, they needed not to haue taken any offence, Bellar. cap. 5. argum. 3.

Contra. First, it is false, that our Saviour correcteth not the error of the Capernaïtes, seeing he further thus expoundeth himselfe, vers. 63. The flesh profiteth nothing, the words that I speake are life: shewing, that he must be spirituallly vnderstood. Secondly, it is true, that they needed not to haue taken offence at Christs speech, being altogether of a spirituall eating, if they had rightly conceived him: but because they vnderstoode him grossly of a carnall eating, as the Papists doe, thereof proceeded the offence. This argument he might very well haue concealed, for it maketh most against himselfe.

Fourthly, this distinction of speech vsed by our Saviour Christ, and so often repeated, eat my flesh, and drinke his blood, vers. 54. 56. sheweth, that hee speaketh of the sacramentall eating and drinking vnder the signes of bread and wine: for otherwise in the spirituall receiuing of Christ by faith, it is all one to eate him and drinke him, Bellar. arg. 4.

Contra. First, you your selues also make no difference betweene the sacramentall eating and drinking of Christ, ministring onely vnder one kinde: wherefore you are answered by your own practise. Secondly, the Scripture speaking of the spirituall participation of Christ by faith, doth often vse this distinction of eating and drinking, to shew, that Christ is the absolute food of our soules; as Ioh. 6. vers. 35. He that cometh vnto me shall neuer hunger, and he that believeth in me shall neuer thirst. And Ioh. 4. 14. Whosoever drinketh of this water, shall neuer be more a thirst: which places are onely vnderstood, of the receiuing of Christ spirituallly by faith.

Now on the contrarie side we will proue, that this place contained in the 6. chapter of Ioh., cannot be so vnderstood as they expound it.

First, Christ speaketh not onely of the sacramentall eating of his flesh, and drinking of his blood, but generally of the spirituall participation by faith, whether in the Sacrament or without, which is wrought in vs by the holy Ghost.

Argum. 1. If it be vnderstood of the Sacrament, then it will follow that no man can be saved, vnlesse he doe receiue the Sacrament: for Christ saith, vers. 53. Except you eate my flesh and drinke my blood, you cannot haue life in you. This, I am sure, they wil hardly graunt, that the Eucharist also should be necessaric, as they make Baptisme, to saluation.

Bellarmin answereth: first, by this reason not the sacramentall eating onely of Christ, but the spirituall also, which is by faith, is excluded: for infants haue no faith, whereby they should eate or drinke Christ. Secondly, this place then of necessitie must bee vnderstood of men of yeres, who either in act, or at the least in vow and desire must bee partakers of the Sacrament: which appeareth, because Christ saith, vers. 53. Except ye eate, &c. speaking to those that heard him, by testifying of the necessitie of Baptisme, he saith not, except ye be borne of water, &c. but in general words, except a man be borne of water, &c. And beside Christ speaketh of eating of bread, whereas children are fed with milke, and not bread, cap. 7. res. ad argum. 3.

Contra. First, though infants haue no faith, yet the life of Christ is applied vnto many of them as are saved by the secret operation of Gods spirit: for seeing Christ giueth life vnto the world, and he no otherwise giueth life, then as he is the true bread of God, ver. 33. for it is the propertie of bread to giue life: then infants also, if they haue life and saluation in him, must also haue waies be made partakers of this bread. Secondly, be it graunted, that this place is properly vnderstood, of those that are, adults, of yeres (which we will not much stand vpon) yet it will follow vpon their exposition, that many, which are prevented by death, before they receive the Communion, should be damned: for although they doe much in heart and vow desire it, thinke not sacramentally, but spirituallly by faith to eate Christ: which wee say is the true meaning of this place. Thirdly, why may not also that place of Baptisme, Ioh. 3. Unless a man be borne of water, &c. be expounded of those of perfect age, as well as this? They haue therefore put an answer in our mouths for that place so much vrged for the necessitie of Baptisme. The difference, which Bellarmin pretendeth, is nothing: for in this place also, vers. 54. Christ speaketh in the third person, whosoever eateth my flesh, &c. hath eternal life: so that the contrarie, though pronounced in the second person, except ye eate, &c. vers. 53. appeareth to haue the same meaning. Fourthly, this distinction, that children eate milke, not bread, is nothing: seeing our Saviour speaketh not of materiall, but spirituall bread: and therefore, as men of yeres may be fed with spirituall milke, 1. Corinth. 3. 2. so children in yeres may be nourished with spirituall bread.

Argum. 2. That Christ speaketh of that bread, which is spirituallly eaten by faith, it is evident out of the text, vers. 47. He that believeth in me hath everlasting life. Vers. 48. I am the bread of life. And vers. 50. This is the bread, that cometh downe from heauen, that he that eateth of it, should not dye. By this appeareth, that to beleue in Christ, is to eate Christ.

Belarmine answereth, that Christ indeede speaketh of the true bread, which is himselfe, communicated vnto vs by faith: as also he maketh mention of the sacramentall bread, vers. 51. The bread that I will giue is my flesh.

Contra. It is euident that Christ speaketh in this place of one and the same bread, which is himselfe: first, he saith, I am the living bread, vers. 51. And againe, the bread that I will giue is my flesh: but Christ and his flesh are all one; and therefore Christ and his flesh are one and the same bread. Secondly, vers. 58. Christ speaketh of the bread which came downe from heauen; but the sacramentall bread cometh not from heauen: Ergo, Christ speaketh not of that bread. Thirdly, the effects of the bread are the same, he that eateth Christs flesh, hath eternall life, vers. 54. And, he that eateth the bread that cometh from heauen, shall liue for ever, vers. 58. Wherefore the bread Christ, and the flesh of Christ, are taken for the same.

Argum. 3. Christ saith, He that eateth my flesh shall liue for ever, vers. 54. but every one that eateth Christ sacramentally, is not saved; wherefore Christ speaketh not of a sacramentall eating.

Belarmine answereth, the words of Christ must bee vnderstood conditionally, if they doe eate Christ aright: as in like manner the Scripture saith, Ioel. 2. Whosoever calleth vpon the name of the Lord, shall be saved: and yet it is said Prou. 1. They shall call vpon me, but I will not heare: because they call not aright.

Contra. This condition is sometime requisite to be vnderstood in such things, as may be without it: as in prayer, because all prayer is not in truth: and therefore S. James saith, The prayer of faith (not every prayer) shall save the sick, Iam. 5. But in this case of eating and drinking Christ this condition is superfluous, because it is impossible to eate and drinke Christ, if it bee not done aright: a man may eate the bread, and drinke the cuppe of the Lord vnworthily, as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 11. 27. but he cannot eate or drinke Christ vnworthily: for he either eateth him not at all, or if he doe, it must bee effectually: for Christ himselfe saith, vers. 55. My flesh is meate indeede: wherefore he that eateth Christ, if he doe eate him at all, must needes haue meate indeede, and so consequently be nourished to eternall life.

Argum. 4. These words, vers. 51. The bread that I will giue is my flesh, cannot in their owne sense be vnderstood of the Sacrament, seeing they themselues hold, that the bread, after transubstantiation, is annihilate, and is bread no more.

Belarmine is here driuen to this shift, to say, that bread is not here taken properly, but generally for meate.

Contra. First, he himselfe in his answer to our first argument objected, that infants were not comprehended in this generall speech of Christ, except ye eate, &c. because they eate not bread, but milke: where he taketh bread properly, and not for any meate; for milke also is meate: and forgetting himselfe, he taketh it here improperly. Secondly, if Christ speake not of bread properly, then neither of drinke properly: then not of the Sacrament, which is celebrated not with any meate, but onely with bread.

Argum. 5. If Christ hath relation to the Sacrament, then must it of necessitie be ministrd in both kindes; for in every place he ioyne both these together, the eating of his flesh, and drinking of his blood: but this is contrarie to their practise.

Belarmine answereth, that the flesh and blood of Christ is as fully receiued vnder one kinde as both, as he himselfe saith, vers. 57. He that eateth me, shall liue by me: so that he which eateth Christ doth both eate and drinke him, respons. ad argum. 10.

Contra. First, to eate and drinke Christ spiritually by faith is all one: but sacramentally to eate him, and drinke him, are two diuers things; for otherwise the one element were superfluous. Secondly, Belarmine himselfe, cap. 5. argum. 4. enforceth this distinction of eating and drinking, to be vnderstood of the Sacrament, where Christ is both eaten and drunk vnder the formes of bread and wine, whereas spiritually, saith he, it is all one, to eate and drinke Christ; but now forgetting himselfe, he would take away this distinction: wherefore all this while he hath said nothing.

Augustine also thus writeth vpon these words, Hoc est manducare illum oscam, & illum bibere potum, Tract. in Io. in Chrysostomo, & illum mandentem in se bibere: This it is to eate that flesh, and to drinke that blood, to abide in Christ, and to haue him abiding in vs: But this may be done without the Sacrament: Ergo, it is not necessarie to vnderstand it of the Sacrament.

Secondly, though we should graunt, that this whole treatise Ioh. 6. may fitly be referred to the Sacrament, yet the words must be taken figuratiuely, for the spirituall eating and drinking of Christ in the Sacrament, and not otherwise.

Argum. 1. Vers. 35. Christ so expoundeth his owne words: I am the bread of life, he that cometh is as flesh and hunger, and he that belieueth in me shall not thirst. To eate then, and to drinke Christ, is to beleue in him.

Bellarmino answereth: first, if the bread in the Sacrament be but figuratiuely the flesh of Christ, and not the very flesh it selfe, then Christ should giue no better thing than Moses did, who also gaue them Manna, which was a type and figure of Christ. cap. 6. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, though Manna to the faithfull amongst the Israelites were not onely a materiall, but a spirituall food, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Cor. 10. 3. yet in this place mention is made thereof, as it was a materiall foode: as vers. 35. Moses gave you not bread from heauen; but as Manna represented Christ it was a heauenly bread: wherefore the sacramentall bread compared with the materiall Manna, is much more excellent. Secondly, Manna signified Christ, yet darkly and obscurely; but in the Eucharist he is after a more lively and sensible manner exhibited and represented vnto vs (and therefore in respect of the spirituall vse also it excelleth).

Secondly, saith he, they asked a signe and miracle of Christ, vers. 30. but in the representation of Christs flesh onely there is no miracle, neither in apprehending him by faith, Bellarmino ibid.

Contra. First, the coming of the true bread from heauen, which Christ giueth here as a signe, vers. 32. and the incarnating of the Sonne of God, is the greatest miracle in the world, which the Angels doe wonder at, and desire yet to behold, 1. Pet. 1. 12. Secondly, to beleue in Christ and to apprehend him by faith, is called by the Apostle a great myserie, 1. Timoth. 3. 16. And Augustine saith, Proferius minus hoc dixerim, quam eorum & terra: I say it is a greater worke, than the heauen and the earth, Tract. 71. in Iohan.

Argum. 2. Christ vnderstandeth another manner of eating of his flesh, then the Capernaenites did. But they imagined that Christ would giue his very flesh and blood to be eaten: and therefore they went away offended, and said, This is an hard saying, vers. 60. Therefore Christ correcteth their erroneous conceit, saith vnto them, that His words were spirit and life, that is, spirituall to be vnderstood, vers. 63.

So Augustine interpreteth those words of Christ, as if he had said, Spiritualiter intelligite, quod eduntis sum: You must vnderstand spirituallly, that which I haue said. You shall not eate the body which you see, nor drinke that blood, which shall be shed for you: Sacramentum vobis abunde commendavi, spiritualiter intellectum vinificabit vos: I haue commended a certaine myserie and Sacrament vnto you, which being spirituallly vnderstood, shall quicken you.

Origen thus interpreteth this place, Hom. 7. in Leuit. Propterea caro eius verus cibus, & sanguis eius verus potus, &c. Therefore his flesh is very meate, and his blood very drinke: for by the blood of his word, he nourisheth mankind.

Bernard also thus expoundeth these words: Quid est manducare eius carnem, & bibere sanguinem, nisi communicare passionibus eius, & cum conuersationem imitari, quam gessit in carnis semine in P'salm. What is it to eate his flesh and drinke his blood, but to communicate with his passion, and to imitate his conuersation in the flesh?

Againe, in another place: Qui manducat carnem & bibit sanguinem meum, &c. hoc est, spiritum meum, & exemplo meo mortificat membra sua, quod sunt super terram, habet vitam eternam: id est, diligendo deo: He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood: that is, he which remembereth my death in his minde, and by my example doth mortifie his earthly members, hath eternall life. This father applieth not these words, as we see, to the sacramentall eating.

Lastly, concerning this place enforced out of the sixth of Iohn, diuers of the Papists and of the more learned sort amongst them doe hold, that it is not to be expounded of the Eucharist: in Gabriel. lection. 84. super canon. Missa. Nicolaus Cusanus episc. 7. ad Bohemos. Thomas Cisterciensis 1. part. qu. 8. artic. vltim. Ruardus Tapper in explicat. artic. 15. Leonanius. So that we want not their own testimony against them.

The Papists.

Argum. 3. Christ in the institution of this Sacrament, said vnto his Apostles, after he had giuen thanks and blessed: Hoc est corpus meum: This is my body: that is, that which is contained in this bread, or vnder the formes of this bread, is my very body, Bellarmino cap. 9. So that these words must needs be taken properly, not to be a trope or figure.

1. It is not the manner of the Scriptures to set downe flat precepts and commandements, and directorie rules in obscure termes, or figuratiue speeches, but plainly and evidently: therefore it is not like, that Christ, being now to prescribe vnto his Apostles the perpetuall Lawe and forme of this Sacrament, would speake obscurely.

2. Though he spake by parables and signes to the Pharisees, yet there was no cause why he should so doe, none being present but his Apostles, Bellarmino ibid.

Ans. 1. It is very well, that you will now (though I thinke vnawares) grant vnto vs, that the precepts and rules in Scripture are set downe simply and plainly: wherefore the Scriptures cannot was so hard and obscure, as you would beare vs in hand they are: for if the precepts and rules of faith be evidently in Scripture expressed, as you seeme to confesse, what reason haue you to keepe backe the people from the reading of Scripture?

It is false that the Scriptures vse no figures nor tropes, in the declaration of the Lawes and Sacraments of the Church: for saith not S. Paul, speaking of the Sacraments of the Iewes, Petrus Christus, the rocke was Christ, 1. Cor. 10. 4. that is, signified Christ? Likewise in the 17. verse, We are many, but are one bread: that is, our spirituall vniue and conuention is represented, in that we are partakers of one bread:

Bellarmino answereth, that where the Apostle saith, the rocke was Christ, he speaketh not of the materiall or visible rocke, but of the spirituall, and inuisible: they drinke of the spirituall rocke that followed them, saith the Apostle, vers. 4. and then it followeth, the rocke was Christ. This proueth no trope in the Sacrament, which was the materiall, not the spirituall rocke, Bellarmino cap. 9.

Contra. First, the Apostle calleth the materiall rocke spirituall, as vers. 3. he called the visible Manna, spirituall meate, as Augustine saith, Spirituale aliquid significans, in Psal. 77. Because it had a spirituall signification. Secondly, it may appeare to be so, both because this spirituall rocke, that is, the water out of the rocke, is said to followe them; that is, the water did runne along by them for their continuall vse: but Christ went before them in a pillar of fire, he should improperly be said to followe them. Againe, they all drinke of this spirituall rocke; but of the true spirituall water none but the faithfull drinke.

Sometimes our Saviour would speake darkly, being alone with his Apostles, thereby to draw them vp more diligently to attend vnto his words, as when he biddeth them beware of the leaues of the Pharisees, Mark. 8. 15. Yet this speech of our Saviour Christ vttered in the hearing of his Apostles, This is my bodie; was neither so darke nor obscure, that the apostles neede much be troubled about the vnderstanding. Nay, many things being spoken in borrowed and metaphorical words, are vttered with greater grace, and carrie a fuller sense: When Christ said, I am the doore, Ioh. 10. 9. I am the vine, Ioh. 15. 1. he spake by a figure as he doth here, for neither was he a vine, or a doore, as the bread was not his bodie: yet which of the Apostles was there, that vnderstood him not, when he called himselfe a vine, and a doore? Neither could they doubt of our Saviour Christs meaning here.

Thirdly, these words, saith Bellarmino, This is my bodie, neither any other speech of Scripture is to be taken figuratiuely, vnlesse some other Scripture doe shew it so to bee taken, or it bee repugnant to some article of the faith, as this speech of Christ is not: for whereas they alleage, that it is contrary to the article of Christs ascension, we Catholikes doe beleue the ascension of Christ, and yet hold the reall presence of Christ notwithstanding, Bellarmino cap. 9. argum. 3.

Ans. First, other places of scripture, which must bee vnderstood in a figure, as where Christ saith, I am the doore, the vine, &c. doe also in sinuate how Christ is to be vnderstood here. Secondly, if they did beleue the ascension of Christ aright, as S. Peter doth, Act. 5. 29. saying, whom the heauens must containe vntill &c. they would not containe him in earth vnder the formes of bread and wine, who must yet bee contained in heauen: for if Christ could bee contained in diuers places at once, the Angell had not reasoned soundly, Marth. 28. 6. he is not here, for he is risen.

Bellarmino againe thus reasoneth from the words themselves: first, this article (hoc, this) can signifye bread, which both in Latine, and in Greeke, is of the masculine gender; but the article is of the neuter: therefore by (this) Christ vnderstandeth his bodie contained vnder these formes.

Contra. 1. This article (hoc) is vsed substantiuely, not adiectiuely, and signifieth as much as this thing, and therefore is put in the neuter gender: neither is it so strange or vnusual a thing (as the leuitate taketh it) to demonstrate some thing in sight in such generall termes, not naming the thing: As Ioh. 6. 9. There is a boy which hath five barley loaves and a few fishes, (both in the masculine gender) sed quid hoc sunt, &c. but what are these things, which is put in the neuter? 2. If Christ by (this) did meane his bodie, there should be a tautologie or idle repetition of the same thing, as if he had said, this body is my bodie.

Secondly, he vrgeth these words, my body which is given for you: but his true body, nor the figure of his body, was given for vs: Ergo, he meaneth his true and naturall body.

Contra. As Luke readeth, This cup is the new testament in my blood, shed for you: where the participle shed, agreeeth with the cup, not with (cupum) in my blood; as the Evangelist saith the cup was shed, by a double figure, first taking the cup for the wine, and secondly wine for Christs blood: so this sense may very well hold, this bread is my body, that is, a signe of my body, which is given for you.

Thirdly, if, this is my bodie, be nothing else, but this is a signe of my bodie, why may we not pronounce in like manner of the sacrifices and Sacraments of the Law, which were also signes and symbols of Christ; and likewise of Baptisme, and of the word of Christ, that they are his very bodie die, and flesh, because they are signes thereof: but the Scripture so speaketh not, but onely of the Eucharist: Ergo, it is, not a figurative speech.

Contra. First, although a reason might easily be rendered, why the Sacraments of the law should not haue their denomination of the body & blood of Christ, as the Eucharist hath, because Christs death was not then so plainly described, as at the institution of the Lords Supper: yet we see that this phrase of speech is also vsed of those legall Sacraments: as the rocke is said to be Christ, 1. Cor. 10. 4. being but a type of him: and Christ is called the Pasche-ouer, or Paschall Lambe, 1. Cor. 5. 7. Secondly, though in Baptisme the water in Scripture bee not so euidently called Christs blood, as the cup in the Eucharist (the reason whereof is plaine, because in Baptisme the blood of Christ is set forth as the worker of our regeneration, and new birth; but in the Eucharist it is expounded as our spirituall drinke, and nourishment) yet wee see, that the Scripture is not silent in this behalfe, as Ioh. 7. 38. the water is called the spirit: and Tit. 3. 5. the washing the new birth: and Reuel. 7. 14. They haue made their long robes white in the blood of the Lambe: the washing of water in Baptisme, whereby they are sanctified in the worde, Ephes. 5. 26. is called the blood of Christ. Thirdly, as touching the word of God, it may also in some sense be called the very flesh of Christ: for by hearing of the word Christ commeth in vnto vs, and suppeth with vs, Reuelat. 3. 20. but he dwelleth in vs onely by eating his flesh, and drinking his blood, Ioh. 6. 56. wherefore the hearing of his word, is the very eating of his flesh. And so Origen expoundeth, Carnibus & sanguine verbi, &c. He doth feede vs with the flesh and blood of his word, Hieron. 7. Lentis.

Contra. Now on the other side, we will make it plaine, that these words of Christ are spoken tropically.

Argum. 1. Where Christ saith according to S. Luke, This cup is the new Testament in my blood, Luk. 22. 23. wee must needes admit a double trope or figure: for first, the cup is taken for that which is containd in the cup. Secondly, the wine in the cup was not the new testament, but a signe of the new testament. If then in one part of the Sacrament he spake by a figure, why not also in the other, when he saith, This is my body, that is, a lively signe and seale thereof?

Bellarmine answereth: first, that in these words, this cup is the new testament, &c. a trope needes be admitted; but such a trope, as doth explicate it selfe: for, whereas Christ saith, Drinke ye all of this, and which is shed for you, every man may vnderstand of himselfe, that not the cup is drunk, or shed, but the liquor in the cup. And againe, Matthew and Marke doe thus write, this is my blood, who doe shew vs how Saint Luke is to be expounded, saying, this cup, &c. this is the blood in the cup, &c. 11. resp. ad argum. 8. but all the Euangelists say, this is my body: therefore the like figure can not be admitted in these words.

Contra. First, as men vse not to drinke or shed cups, so neither to eate humane flesh, or men bodies: and therefore common vse will find out a trope in the one speech as well as in the other: as well, when Christ saith, take, eate, this is my body; as when he saith, drinke of this cup. Secondly, every figurative speech in Scripture, though it bee not expounded by another place, yet may be vnderstood to be figurative by the nature and proprietie of the thing spoken of: as S. Paul saying, the rocke is Christ, though he expound not himselfe, yet every man knoweth that a stone cannot be Christ, no more can bread be his bodie, but in signification. Thirdly, yet our Sauioour himselfe expoundeth these words: this is my body, in another place, where he had said, the bread is my flesh, Ioh. 6. 51. and then shewing his meaning he saith, vers. 63. the flesh profiteth nothing, my words are spirit and life: so then he must bee vnderstood spiritually. Fourthly, neither doth Matthew, saying, this is my blood of the new testament, expound S. Luke, this cup is the new testament in my blood: but by the cup, be vnderstood blood; then the meaning should be this, this blood is the new testament in my blood, which were absurd. But Bellarmino would take away this absurditie by a distinction saying, that blood is taken here diuersly; in the first place for the blood in the Sacrament; in the second, for his blood shed vpon the crosse, and he maketh this to bee the meaning: this blood here contained vnder the shew of wine, is my new testament consecrated in my blood vpon the crosse.

Contra. First, thus he will make Christ to haue two diuers bloods, one in the Sacrament, which is the testament; the other shed vpon the crosse, whereof it is a testament. Secondly, he saith, Matthew expoundeth Luke: but S. Matthew speaketh of the blood shed vpon the crosse: which is shed for many, vers. 26. then Luke also saying, this cup, that is my blood in the cup, speaketh of the blood shed vpon the crosse: so that blood in the first and second place, is to be taken for the blood shed vpon the crosse.

Secondly, as he graunteth a figure, in these words (this cup) so he denieth any figure at all in the words following (is the new testament) for the blood of Christ in the Sacrament is the testament it selfe: and a testament (saith hee) is taken two waies, either it signifieth the will of the testator it selfe, or else the authentickall instrument, wherein the will of the testator is contained; and so Circumcision was both a signe of Gods couenant, and the couenant it selfe, that is, the instrument, whereby whereby the covenant was applied: and so is the Eucharist both a signe of the testament made in Christ, and so S. Matthew saith the blood of the testament; and so is the testament it selfe, that is, the authentickall instrument; and so Saint Luke saith, It is the Testament in my blood. Belarmine saith, Id est, in sanguine meo testamento est factum.

Contra. First, the authentickall instrument of a Testament being vnder witness and seale, is not the Testament it selfe, but onely a ratification of it; and so are the Sacraments seales and ratifications vnto vs of Christs Testament. Secondly, there is no Testament without death, Heb. 9. 16. wherefore the Eucharist is not the Testament, vnlesse they will haue Christ dayly to die in the Sacrament. Thirdly, circumcision is called the covenant, because it was the signe onely thereof; and so S. Paul the best expounder of Moses, calleth it the seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. Fourthly, the Euangelists speake all of the same Testament, and S. Luke speaking figuratiuely is to be expounded by Matthew, who saith, The blood of the Testament; which answereth to the figure of the Law, for Moses sprinkling the blood said; This is the blood of the Testament, Heb. 9. 20. So then the blood is not the Testament, but of the Testament, that is, a signe thereof.

Argum. 2. It is no vnusuall phrase in the Scripture to say, (this is) that is, signifieth, as Gen. 17. 10. Circumcision is called the covenant it selfe, where it was a signe onely of it, and so is it called, Exod. 12. 11. the Lambe is called the Lords Pasche, which is betokened onely: and S. Paul calleth the rocke Christ, being onely a figure of him, 1. Cor. 10. 4. In the same sense Christ saith, This is my bodie: that is, exhibiteth and representeth vnto you my bodie.

Belarmine his best answer here is, that in all these examples alleaged, in the same place the trope or figure is expounded; as, where circumcision is called the covenant, it is also said to be the signe of the covenant: and Exod. 12. 11. the Lambe is said to be the Lords Pasche, that is, the sacrifice of the Lords Pasche, verf. 27. and 1. Cor. 10. where the rocke is said to be Christ, the Apostle speaketh of the spirituall not materiall rocke, which followed them; which spirituall rocke indeed is Christ. Belarmine respo. ad argum. 6. cap. 11.

Contra. First, it is sufficient for our purpose to shew in Scripture, that (this is) is taken for (this signifieth) though the explication of the Trope be not inserted straightway in the same place; neither in this manner of figuratiue speech alwayes expounded, as Galat. 4. 25. Agar is thy mountaine Sin in Arabia: that is, signifieth, or figureth that place, where the Law was giuen: which explication, though it be not directly mentioned, yet is necessarily implied. Secondly, this figuratiue speech of Christ notwithstanding (this is my bodie) is as I shewed by himselfe expounded Iohn 6. 51. where hauing said, the bread is my flesh, as here (this is my body) he further openeth his meaning verse 63. My words are spirit and life, that is, spiritually to be understood. Thirdly, the Apostle saying the rocke was Christ, speaketh of the materiall rocke, which was a figure of Christ, not of the inuisible rocke. First, the Apostle saith, the rocke was, not is; but Christ is alwayes the inuisible rocke. Secondly, they did all drinke of this rocke, but they all did not spirituallly receive and drinke Christ: for verse 9. With many of them God was not pleased: but with all the fild he was pleased: wherefore they did drinke all of the materiall, not of the spirituall rocke. Thus, it is called spirituall, as Manna is called spirituall meate, for the spirituall signification: thus, here we haue the very like trope vsed by the Apostle, and yet not expounded. Fourthly, of figuratiue speeches of Scripture, though their interpretation be not expresse, yet is implied by consequence: and so where Christ saith, This is my body, we are forced to vnderstand a signifiy implication, it being an vnwonted and inhumane thing to eate mans flesh.

Argum. 3. Christ in saying, this is my bodie, did demonstrate or shew something in sight: for a thought or inuisible cannot be demonstrated: but Christs body, which they imagine was hid vnder the formes, was not seene: Ergo, it could not be shewen.

Belarmine here runneth, as it were in a maze; one while he saith, (Hoc) non demonstrare accidit: That the word (this) doth not demonstrate the accidents of the bread: and againe he affirmeth, Forma in hac propositione demonstrari species: That formally in this proposition (this is my body) the shewer or outward shapet are demonstrated: and he resolued to say with Sextus, that (hoc) is much to say, as this substance: but with Aquinas, this substance contained vnder the forme of bread: respo. ad argum. 1. 2. 3.

Contra. First, it is pretie sport to see how they busie themselves about the meaning of this word (This) how say it signifieth Christs bodie; but this Belarmine himselfe misliketh: some, as Sextus, expoundeth (hoc est) this thing: neither doth Belarmine agree vnto this, but saith with Thomas, that (hoc) is this thing, or substance contained vnder the forme of bread: thus are they at their wits end, neither vnderstanding what they speake, nor whereof they affirme, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Tim. 1. 7. Secondly, this Pronoun (hoc) neither betokeneth Christs bodie, for that were to say, this, that is, my body, is my body, which were absurd to affirme the same thing of it selfe: nor yet the forme onely of bread, for they will not say, that the shap of the bread is Christs bodie: neither neither yet doth it demonstrat any other substance vnder the shew of bread: because it is insensible, and cannot be demonstrated, neither in their owne learning can there be any new substance before the words of consecration be all vttered: wherefore it remaineth, that this demonstratiue (be) must be referred to the bread, which Christ consecrated to be a figure of his body.

Argum. 4. That which Christ did take, he blessed, that which he blessed, he brake, that which he brake, he gaue to his disciples: but he tooke bread, blessed bread, brake bread: therefore also he gaue bread, and so consequently, the demonstratiue, be, this, sheweth the bread.

Belarmine answereth, that betweene Christs taking and giuing, there cometh blessing: so that he blessed that he tooke, and by blessing changed it, and so gaue it: And they themselves also confesse, that he gaue not the same bread, which he tooke; for he tooke common bread, but gaue sacramentall bread: so as we say, he stroke Peter, slew him, and buried him, and yet Peter was not buried alive, though he were stricken alive; so it followeth not that Christ gaue the same bread he tooke. Belarmine c. 11. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, S. Matthew saith, He blessed, S. Luk. 22. 19: He gaue thanks; so that blessing and giuing thanks is al one, which was an action directed vnto God, not vnto that which was blessed: neither was the bread by this blessing changed into Christs bodie; because the words of consecration were not yet vttered: And againe after he had blessed, he brake it, but hee brake not his bodie; but the bread. Againe, the words are plaine, Matth. 26. 26. Iesus tooke bread, and when he had giuen thanks, he brake and gaue to his disciples: what else now did Christ brake and giue, but bread, that he tooke? for otherwise no confirmation can be made of the words. Secondly, we say there was a sacramental change of the bread, after Christ had blessed it, but it was a change in the qualitie, not in the substance; so that notwithstanding this change, Christ gaue the same thing he took though otherwise qualified. And the example brought in, is not to the people; for the same Peter in substance is buried, that was stricken, though altered in condition, because hee, now dead: but they say there is no bread at all remaining, so that in their meaning Christ liuereth another thing, then he tooke, contrarie to the words of the text. Thus then it appeareth by these reasons alleaged, whatsoeuer is obiected to the contrary, that these words of our Saviour, this is my bodie, cannot be otherwise then figuratidely taken, and so S. Augustine expoundeth. Non dubitatis Dominus dicere, hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui: The Lord doubted not to say, this is my bodie, when he gaue a signe of his bodie: conr. Adimantium cap. 12.

The Papiſts. Other arguments out of the Scriptures are alleaged by them for prooue of the carnall and real presence, which must not here be omitted.

Argum. 4. Belarmine argueth that place 1. Cor. 10. 16. The cuppe of blessing which we bless, is the communion of the blood of Christ: the bread which we brake, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? From this place he draweth three arguments: first, the Apostle maketh mention of benediction, and consecration, whereby the wine is conuerted into Christs blood, which consecration needed not, if there were but a figuratiue consecration, but the first institution would suffice: so therefore we see in Baptisme no such kinde of consecration vsed, cap. 12.

Contra. First, we graunt a consecration necessarie, whereby the elements are sanctified and separated from the common vse to a speciall holy vse in the Sacraments; neither are the bread and wine otherwise consecrated, in the Eucharist, then the water in Baptisme, which is sanctified by the word of God. Secondly, wee graunt also that to this consecration the institution of Christ is his word sufficient: for the word being applied to the element, as Augustine saith, maketh a sacrament: if they require to their consecration any thing more then Christs institution, it is more humane and superstitious inuention: Thirdly, the argument then followeth not, the element is blessed and consecrated, and therefore conuerted into another substance: it is sufficient that they are turned to another vse, as the Past hill Lambe was separated from the flocke, and separated for an holy vse, Exod. 13. 3. yet remained a Lambe still: the vse was altered, the sacramentum rescued.

Secondly, the Apostle saith, the bread which we brake: by breaking he vnderstandeth, the oblation and immolation of the bodie of Christ, as 1. Cor. 11. 26. S. Paul thus rehearseth the words of Christ, this is my bodie, which is broken for you, that is, offered up in sacrifice, but bread is broken, when, or offered in sacrifice: first it is the body of Christ, Belarmine said. And againe, this element, which we brake, must answer to the former, the cuppe which we drinke: that seeing the Apostle speaketh there of consecration, so he doth here of oblation, which is done by the words of consecration.

Contra. First, there is great difference betwene that saying of Christ rehearsed by S. Paul, this is my bodie, which is broken for you, and that of the Apostle, the bread which we brake: for when he speaketh of his bodie, hee speaketh of bread, but bread is not his bodie: these his bodie is broken by the tormentors vpon the crosse, here the bread is broken by believers in the Sacrament. Again, as in the first institution Christ first brake the bread, and then said, this is my bodie, giuen for you: so breaking was one thing, the giuing, or offering his bodie; another: so is it here: Secondly, as the cup is consecrated by blessing and prayer in part, so is the bread consecrated in part by breaking and distributing: for not by the words of benediction onely, but by the whole action of giuing, receiuing, thanksgiuing, are the elements consecrated: so that in this sense, one part of the sentence answereth to the other.

Thirdly, the Apostle saith, the bread is the communion of the bodie of Christ, that is, wee are really and corporally made partakers of the bodie of Christ in the Sacrament: for if there were but a representation of Christs flesh onely, and not his very flesh indeede, the Apostle should haue reasoned but weakly, perswading them from the sacrifices of the Gentiles, and eating of things sacrificed to idols, if he had not also invited them to a more excellent sacrifice and a better table, where the very flesh of Christ is present, and not the figure onely: for this were to offer a silke garment painted onely, in stead of a true silken one.

Contra. First, the Apostle meaneth a spirituall communion of the bodie of Christ, as it followeth, verf. 17. We that are many, are one bread, and one bodie, because we are partakers of one bread: as wee are one body amongst our selues, so are we one bodie with Christ: but we are mystically one body amongst our selues: Ergo. Likewise the Apostle saith, the bread is the communion, and wee are partakers of one bread: if it remaine bread still, then is it not the bodie of Christ. And the Apostle further sheweth how we are ioyned vnto Christ, Ephes. 2. 22. in whom ye are built together, vnto the habitation of God by the spirit: So then by the spirit wee are vnted vnto our head: and following the truth in him grow vp vnto him, Ephes. 4. 13. Secondly, the Apostle reasoneth not, as Belshamius pretendeth, promising one fleshie sacrifice for another: but his reason standeth thus, That as they which communicate in the Sacrament, are partakers of Christ; so they that communicate with the sacrifices of idols, haue fellowship and communion with diuels, to whom they are offered: and therefore saith the Apostle, I would not that ye should haue fellowship with diuels, verf. 20. Thirdly, the Sacrament of Christ being celebrated with bread, is a better banker, then the sacrifices of diuels furnished with flesh: like as the Wiseman saith, Better is a drie morsell, of peace be with it, than a house full of sacrifices with strife, Prou. 17. 1. so to eate bread in the remembrance of Christ with peace of conscience, according to his owne institution, is much better, then to be fattened with the sacrifices of idols, which maketh strife betweene vs and God: and who will not preferre the linnen garment of a chaste matrone, before the silken ornaments of a strumpet?

Argum. 5. Saint Paul saith, 1. Corin. 11. 29. He that eateth and drinketh vnworthily, doth eate and drinke his owne iudgement, not discerning the Lords bodie. And verf. 27. he is guiltie of the bodie and blood of Christ: they cannot be guiltie of that which they receiue not: neither in the vnworthie receiuing of any other Sacrament are they made guiltie of the bodie and blood of Christ, but onely in this: Ergo, the bodie and blood of Christ are really present: Remissio annos, in hunc locum, and Belshamius cap. 13.

Ans. First, it is false that none els but they which prophane the Eucharist are guiltie of the blood of Christ: for as in Baptisme also the faithful are made partakers of the body and blood of Christ, as is confessed out of Augustine in your owne decrees, par. 2. distinct. 4. c. 131. Nulli est aliquatenus obnoxium, &c. No man must doubt, that then euery faithfull one is made partaker of the bodie and blood of our Lord, when in Baptisme he is made a member of Christ: So they which prophane Baptisme, are guiltie of Christs blood, as the Apostle speaketh of such, that they doe tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, and doe count the blood of the testament an vnholie thing, wherewith they were sanctified, Heb. 10. 29. Secondly, as these doe tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, and prophane the blood of the testament, not really or personally, but in the malice and prophanenes of their hearts; so are the wicked guiltie of Christs blood, in as much as they prophane the holy signes thereof: for the defacing of the Kings image or seale redoundeth to the dishonour of the King himselfe; so they are guiltie of the blood of Christ, not which they receiued in substance, but in abusing the signes and seales thereof exhibited vnto them.

Belshamius replieth: first, if the dishonour of the image be the dishonour of the King, how then dare you deface the images of Saints, which tend to their dishonour? Secondly, an iniurie is not done to an image, if it be by chaunce rather than purposed violence defaced: but many may receiue the Eucharist vnworthily, that maliciously doe not contemne it. Thirdly, if it bee such a fault to abuse the image of Christ in the Eucharist, then for such to heare the word also, which is also the image of Christ.

Contra. First, if you can shew, that God hath commaunded Images to be erected for the honor of Saints, as the Kings seale and image is for his honor; then we will graunt also that it is a dishonour to deface them. Secondly, though euery vnworthie receiuer be not malicious against Christ, yet he is a contemner and despiser, seeing that he cannot be ignorant, but that it is the seale and image of Christ, as not the violator onely, but the contemner of the Kings image is an offender. Thirdly, an vnworthie hearer of the word is also a transgressor, as the vnworthie receiuer: and and the Apostle saith of such, as fall away hauing had a taste of the word, they do crucifie the sonne of God, Heb. 6. 6. in the which sense the vnworthie receiuer is here said to be crucifie of Christs blood, and so also doth crucifie Christ to himselfe.

The Protestants say, That Christ is present with all his benefites in the Sacrament, we doe willingly graunt: neither doe we thinke that the elements of bread and wine are bare and naked signes of the body and blood of Christ, but Christ is verily by them exhibited vnto vs, and spiritually by faith, we are truly made partakers of his precious body and blood; not that Christ descended from heauen to vs, but we ascend by faith and in spirit vnto him: yea, we confesse as much as the word saith, whose speech they themselues allow, In sacramenta exhiberi verum carnis Christi substantiam, sed spiritualiter non carnaliter: That the very substance of Christs flesh is exhibited vnto vs, in the Sacrament, but spiritually, not carnally. This Belarmine acknowledgeth to be true, though he would not haue the word (spiritually) to be vsed, least it might be, as he saith, by vs misconfounded. This then is our faith and iudgement, that we are verily in this Sacrament engrafted into the body of Christ, and doe truly eate his flesh and drinke his blood: but all this is done spiritually only and by faith: As for their carnall eating and deuouring of Christ, we vtterly reiect, and condemn it.

Cap. 3. lib. 1.

Argum. 1. In the receiuing of the Sacrament there is a double coniunction, we are ioyned to Christ, and make one body also amongst our selues: so saith S. Paul, 1. Cor. 10. 16. 17. We are made partakers of the body of Christ, and we that are many are one bread, and one body by our participation with the mysticall body of Christ is spirituall: Ergo, also our communion with his naturall body, Falsū in hunc locum.

Argum. 2. If the body of Christ be in the Sacrament, then is it eaten, and torne with the teeth: And what is eaten goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the draught, Mark. 7. 19. I pray you, what is now become of the body of Christ? doth it passe the same way that other meats doe?

Belarmine answereth, lib. 1. cap. 11. ad argum. 5. that they are the accidents of the bread and wine which are eaten, and chawen, or rent by the teeth, and not the body of Christ: and yet the body of Christ goeth downe into the stomacke, but no further: but when the formes of bread and wine begin to be corrupted there, the body of Christ goeth away, Belarm. cap. 14.

Ans. 1. This is new learning, that the accidents of meate are chawen in the mouth, and not the meate it selfe: and that the formes onely, not the substance is altered, and corrupted in the stomacke. Say also that men are nourished with accidents and not with the substance: If the Priest chauce to drinke too deepe of the chalice, and so become drunke, I pray you what is that maketh him so light headed? Is it, thinke you, the accidents onely of wine? Surely a drunken man would not say it. If a Mousse chance to creepe into your pike, and fill her hungry belly with your god-amight, what is it that the Mousse feedeth vpon? trow you they be accidents onely? for you say that the consecrated host goeth no further then the stomacke: and yet it is no more than the housell of Christians should be housed in a mouses belly. These are but ridiculous and light questions, yet such as haue troubled your grauest and sagest heads, and remaine vnsuanswered.

Rhemist 1.
sect. 5.

2. Belarmine denieth, that the body of Christ being eaten, goeth any further then the stomacke: But our Rhemist goe further; they say, that we are made a peece of his body and blood: they should rather haue said that his body and blood is made a peece of vs, being conuerinto our substance. But silly men, wee pittie them: If wee should presse them still with these questions, they would sooner runne mad, then finde out any reasonable and sober answer for vs.

Lib. 4. dist. 12.
b. c. d.

It shall not be amisse to see the iudgement of other Popish doctors of this matter, that it may appeare to the world, how well they agree together.

The Master of sentences rehearseth foure opinions: first, some thinke, that in the Sacrament there is said to be a fraction, breaking, or diuision of Christs bodie, because it seemeth so to be, but is not. Secondly, others thinke, that as there is the outward forme of bread, and yet no bread; so there is a fraction, and yet nothing broken. Thirdly, some are of opinion, that the very body of Christ is sensible handled by the Priest, and verily broken, and rent with the teeth. A fourth opinion there is, that not the bodie of Christ, but the accidents onely are chawed and diuided by the teeth. The first opinion of these is ridiculous, that Christs bodie seemeth to be broken, and is not, and maketh the Eucharist but a kind of iuggling trick: the second is impossible, that there may be a fraction without breaking: the third is grosse and absurd, to thinke that Christs bodie may be deuoured: the fourth is vnreasonable, as I haue shewed, that accidents may be deuoured without a substance: To this opinion subscribeth the Master, as likewise Belarmine; yet is it contrary to the decree of Nicolas, who receiued the confession of Beryngarius vnder this this forthe, Corpus & sanguinem Domini sensualliter non solum Sacramentum, sed et veritate manibus percipiendum trahi, frangi, & fidelium dentibus atteri: That the bodie and blood of Christ is sensible not onely in Sacrament, but verily handled by the Priest, broken and rent with the teeth of the faithful: par. 3. diffinit. 2. c. 42. How then dare they presume to goe against the determination of a Pope, to say the accidents of bread onely are eaten, and not the bodie of Christ selfe?

Another doubt there is, what becommeth of the bodie of Christ, when it is eaten: Belarminus thinketh, it goeth but downe to the stomacke: the Rhemists thinke, as we haue seene, that we are made a peece of his bodie and blood: so also Leo in his decree p. 3. diff. 2. c. 38. In carnem ipsius transfusum est. Taking the heavenly food, let vs be changed or passe into his flesh. Clement 5. determineth the contrary, lib. 3. Clementin. tit. 16. Hic panis sumitur: sed verè non consumitur, immutatur, sed non transmutatur, quia in edentem minimè transformatur: This bread is assumed, not consumed: it is eaten, but not changed nor transformed into the eater: But another decree granted, that the bodie of Christ may be consumed, and mingled with other meates; to say no more: and therefore they which haue eaten the Lords bodie in the morning, are enioyned to fast till the sixth houre, which is noone, Ne patens sancta portio misceri cibum, &c. Least they should mixe with the holy portion the meate, that goeth into the draught, decret. par. 3. diff. 2. c. 23. And another decree punisheth those with 40. dayes penance, that chaunce to vomite vp the Eucharist. ibid. decret. 28. So then by their learning, Christs bodie may be vomited vp: thus are they decided in their foolish imaginations.

A third doubt there is moued: that if a mouse, dogge, or cat chance to eate the Eucharist, what is that they eate? their iudgement in time past, hath bene, that it is the very Sacrifice it selfe, which the mouse eateth: as decret. p. 3. diff. 2. c. 94. Qui bene non custodierit sacrificium, &c. He that keepeth the sacrifice negligently, so that a mouse or other beast chance to eate it, must do penance 40. dayes: but hee that looseth it, that it cannot be found, 30. dayes. Thus they thought, that Christs bodie might both be eaten of beasts, and be in danger to be lost. But the Master of sentences being ashamed of this, asking the question, what it is, that beastes do eate, when they meete with the host, maketh this clarkelike answer, Deus nouit, God knoweth: lib. 4. diff. 13. Thus they were themselves with their restless braineficke fantasies.

Argum. 3. Christ in his flesh is ascended vp to heauen, and there must remaine till his coming againe, Act. 1. 21. Again he saith, The poore you shall haue alwayes, but we alwayes you cannot haue, Mar. 14. Ergo, Christ being now in his humanity in heauen, cannot be present in y<sup>e</sup> Sacrament vpon earth.

Belarminus answereth to the first place, that the carnall presence of Christ dooth not draw him out of heauen: his naturall body remaineth there still: yet by his omnipotent power he can make his body to be in many places at once, cap. 14.

Ad 2. If Christs body be in heauen and in earth, and in many places at once, it must either be his owne naturall body which was borne of the Virgin Mary, or he must euery day creat himselfe a new body: but this were too absurd to be granted, that euery day there should be a new Christ. Neither can the first be admitted: for a naturall body hath a naturall presence; but so hath not Christs body in the Sacrament: for it is not there naturally, being without shape or forme, without visible nor sensible. And how can it stand with the propertie of a true naturall body, to be in 1000. places at once? for so must Christs bodie needes be, and in more too, seeing he is kept and hangd vp in euery popish Church. And further, if totus Christus, whole Christ, be in the Sacrament, both with his bodie & soule; you must either graunt, that there are many whole Christs, seeing he is in many places at once: or else if there be but one whole Christ, his humanitie must be dispersed euery where as his Godhead is: & so are you against your wil become Triquitaries.

Again, if this be not a good argument, Christs bodie is in heauen, and therefore not in the Sacrament; then the Angels reason is not good, Matth. 28. 6. Hee is not here, for hee is risen: but if this be a good consequence in the Angels argument, because Christs bodie was not in more places then one at once, it doth also necessarilie follow in the other.

Belarminus to the second place answereth, that as we alwayes haue the poore, so haue we not Christ, that is visible, to annoynt his bodie, or to doe other such seruices of loue and dutie vnto him: yet this letteth not; but that we may haue his presence inuisible in the Sacrament: so also answereth the Rhemists, Matth. 26. 16 & 3.

Contra. First, we reade in Scripture but of two sorts of Christs presence, one as he is God present in his power and diuinitie, and so he is with his Church alwayes, Mar. 28. 20. the other, as he is man, by which presence he saith, we you cannot haue alwayes with you, Mar. 26. 11. If they can shew vs a third kinde of presence out of Scripture, such as they imagine, we will heare them: Secondly, our Saviour commendeth the woman, that she had wrought a good worke vpon him, verf. 10. and saith they shall not haue him any more in such sort, that is, to worke a good worke vpon: but if Christs bodie were present in the Sacrament, it were a good worke, to adore it, to adorne it with cloth of golde, and to giue all outward reuerence to it: but Christ is not bodily present now, to haue any good worker ministred vnto him: Ergo, he is no waies either visible, or intvisible sent in his bodie. to beend beneuolent and thus: vnto me he should be, to me, he should be

21. Argum. Matth. 23. 12. All that entereth into the mouth, goeth into the bellie and is cast out into the draught; the bodie of Christ is not cast into the draught; But bread onely: Ergo, the bodie of Christ doth not enter in at the mouth.

Rebberme answered, that Christ speaketh onely of such meate, as is receiued to nourish the bodie; for after the resurrection, Christ did verily eate, and yet it was not cast into the draught, that he did eate, because he eate not for nourishment: And whereas we answered, that this example is vnicely alleaged, because Christ speaketh of mortall men, that eate, but he was then immortal: he replyeth, that in like manner Christ speaketh of mortall and corruptible meate, not of immortal and incorruptible, such as his bodie was. Item 2da repp. ad argum.

Secondly, First the words of our Saviour are generally, Whatsoever ye shall eat in this world; and therefore nothing that goeth that way can be excepted: Secondly, the way for immortall and incorruptible foode is not to goe in by the mouth into the bellie; for that which is corruptible is not capable of that, which is incorruptible, and immortall, as S. Prier sheweth: Ton are burnimans of mortall foode but immortall by the word of God, &c. Then it followeth, verſ. 24. All flesh is graſſe, but the word of the Lord endureth for ever: flesh which is graſſe and corruptible is not capable of the immortall foode of the word, no more is it of the immortall foode of Christs bodie: whither they may as well say that mortall foode may goe into the soule, as immortall into the bellie. Thirdly, the same thing that is cast into the draught, first commeth in by the mouth: then I aske of them, what it is that goeth out into the draught? not the accidents of bread; (that were absurd) nor yet Christs bodie, (it were impious onke to thinke it) Ergo, the substance of bread goeth forth, and came in by the mouth before. Bellarmine saith he will not meddle with this question now, what is become of the accidents of bread, being corrupted in the stomacke: yet I would have surely had ſarved him to have resolved this doubt now: but I thinke we must give him a longer day to confute with the Popes chaire, and then tell vs. his mind. The Papists are all here in such a faine, that they know not how to helpe themselves out: for seeing they affirme, the Christs bodie entrench in at the mouth, and somewhat must goe forth againe, they must give, that it is either the accidents of bread, or bread it selfe, or some new substance supplied in the instant, or the verie bodie of Christ, which commeth out of the bodie: but not the first, for it is substance that is cast forth into the draught, and the accidents of bread are corrupted and gone; and where there is corruption, there is necessitie a subject and a substance: It is not bread, for that they say was chafed away before, and annihilated: it is no new substance; for the same thing that commeth in by the mouth, goeth forth againe: therefore it followeth, that it is the substance of Christs bodie: far how can they shift it, seeing Christs bodie being once eaten must remaine? for our Saviour saith, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood remaineth in me; and I in him. John 6. 56. and if Christs flesh remaine, no other substance commeth vnto it, neither of bread, nor any other, (for this is the Lutherans consubstantiation, which the Papists abhorre.) They have therefore but two evasions, one is to say; that Christs flesh goeth from the bodie, as it came into it, as a Popish Priest reasoning with Robert Smith martyr, was not ashamed to graunt, saying further, that it was no greater prerogation to Christ, then to be spit vpon: Fox, pag. 1691. But this so great blasphemie our adversaries seeme in words to milke; yet holding the carnall presence, they are driuen so to say, or else to say nothing. The other way to satisfie all doubts, is to leaue these filchie dregs of error, and with Origene to confesse the truth: Quod si quicquid ingreditur per os, &c. If that whatsoever entrench in by the mouth, goeth into the bellie, &c. even that meate, which is sanctified by the word and prayer, in respect of the materiall part thereof, goeth into the bellie, and so out into the draught: Wherefore it is bread, and not the Lords flesh, that is eaten in the Sacrament, and so deliued againe, as all other meates are.

Hearken what Augustine saith, Cavendum est ne ita divinitatem adfirmamus hominis, ut verum corpus auferamus: We must take heed we doe not so maintaine the divine nature of the man Christ, that we take away the nature of his bodie.

Argum. 5. The fathers in the law did eate the same spirituall meate, and drinke the same spirituall drinke in their Sacraments that we doe, 1. Corin. 10. 2. 3. but they did not eate the flesh of Christ, nor drinke his blood, but onely spirittually by faith: Ergo, no more doe we.

Bellarmino here answers not only the question he did before, but the Apostle meant not that the Israelites did eat the same spiritual meat that we do, but the same meat among themselves, both good and bad, Bellarmino lib. 1 de Euchar. cap. 14. respons. ad loc. 12.

Contra. We have likewise shewed before, that they did spiritually, eate and drinke the same meate and drinke, that wee doe, namely Christ: as the Apostle saith the rocke, whereof they dranke, was Christ, 1. Corin. 10. 4: See also Angulimes iudgement before of this place, and likewise Bernardo, Contrauerſie 11, question 2, part 2.

In cap. I §.
Math.

Ad Dardan.
epist. 57.

Here

Here Belarmine first refuseth Augustines exposition, saying that the Apostle doth evidently shew, that they did eate the same meate onely amongst themselves, because that all both good and bad did eate the same meate; but the good onely amongst them, did eate the same spirituall meate with vs, in our aduersaries iudgement: secondly, he saith, that Augustine did meane, that they did eate the same meate in signification onely, not in vertue and efficacie: Belarm. cap. 14: resp. ad loc. 12.

Contra. First, it is euident by the Apostles words, that he meaneth the same spirituall meate and drinke both among themselves, and together with vs: for the rocke (saith he) was Christ; but Christ is our spirituall foode, as well as theirs. Secondly, his reason, that all both good and bad did eate the same meate, doth make against his exposition, as well as ours: for it was the same spirituall meate whether amongst themselves, or the same with ours: but the wicked did not eate it, as it was spirituall meate: We say then, that it was the same spirituall meate sacramentally to all both good and bad, though effectually onely to the beleuers: as Christ said to all his Apostles, Drinke ye all of this, for this is my blood, &c. Matth. 26. 26. It was sacramentallie Christs blood to them all, amongst whom Origene thinketh that Iudas was one, and that he receiued the Sacrament with the rest, Tract. 35. in Matth. yet it was so effectually onely to his faithfull Apostles. Thirdly, that Augustine meaneth, it was the same spirituall meate with ours, not in signification onely, but in vertue also and efficacie, it is euident by his owne words, rehearsed in the decrees, para. 3. dist. 2. c. 81. ad idem illi, aliud nos, sed specie uisibili, quod tamen idem est uirtute spirituali: They did eate one thing, we another, but in outward shew, which is the same in spirituall vertue.

Argum. 6. There remained wine still after the consecration and distribution amongst the Apostles (for Christ saith, He will drinke none of the fruite of the wine, Matth. 26. 29. So S. Paul calleth the other element bread after the consecration, 1. Cor. 10. 17. We that are many are one bread, because we are partakers of one bread. Likewise, cap. 11. 26. Ergo, there remaineth still bread and wine in the Sacrament. And therefore no bodie of Christ: for they cannot be there both together, as they teach.

Belarmine answereth, first, that Christ saying, I will drinke no wine, &c. meaneth that wine which was vsed in his legall supper, at the eating of the paschall Lamb, before he instituted his last supper: as Luke maketh manifest mention of two cups, which our Sauiour gaue to his disciples before the consecration, the other after: cap. 11. resp. ad argum. 10.

Contra. That Christ spake these words after the institution of his last supper, it appeareth both by S. Matthew and Marke, who both agreeing together report these words as spoken after: S. Luke indeed chap. 22. vers. 17. first speaketh of the cup, and afterwards of the distribution of the bread, and againe of the cup, vers. 20. But as Augustine saith, he speaketh in the first place by way of anticipation, meaning the same cuppe, which was given after Supper. Belarmine answereth here is, that Augustine was deceived, cap. 11. resp. ad argum. 10. But it further may be shewed thus: The Euangelistes set downe three things concerning the cup: First, that Christ gaue thanks. Secondly, that he gaue it to his disciples: Thirdly, he said, This is my blood of the new Testament: Now Matthew and Marke ioyne all these three together: Luke doth report them sundrily: In the first place, he saith, Christ gaue thanks, and said, Take this and drinke it among thyselfe; the other Euangelistes say, drinke ye all of this: and then in the second rehearfall of the cup, he supplieth that which is wanting, namely this clause: This cup is the new testament in my blood, or my blood of the new testament. So then before he spake of the Sacrament, both because of the Eucharistical act, the giuing of thanks, and the words of institution, take, drinke, or deuide.

Belarmine to the second place answereth: first, S. Paul calleth it bread after consecration, because hath the shew, and shape of bread: as the brazen serpent, was called a serpent, and Angels in Scripture are called men, because they so appeared: resp. ad argum. 13.

Contra. First, the Apostle speaketh of such bread as is eaten and broken, 1. Corinth. 11. 26. Ad uosmetipsos sicut edistis hunc panem: and 1. Corinth. 10. 16. The bread, which we breake: but not the shape, but the substance of bread is eaten and broken. Secondly, the Angels did not appeare onely in the shape of men, but had mens bodies indeed, their feete were washe, they did eate and drinke with Abraham and Lot: the brazen serpent was not onely in shew, but in substance and throughout of brasse: these examples helpe you not. Thirdly, the Apostle calling it bread after consecration so many times: thrice in the 10. chapter vers. 16. 17. and thrice chapter 11. vers. 24. 27. 28. must be taken to speake properly, and to call the thing as it is.

Secondly, it is called bread, because it was bread before: as Exod. 7. 12. Aarons rod is said to deuoure the Sorcerers rods, whereas it was then a Serpent, and not a rod; but so called, because it was a rod before, Belarm. ibid.

Contra. First, there is mention made in the text, how Aarons rod was turned into a Serpent; if you can shew the like Scripture for the turning of the bread into Christs body, you shal say somewhat. Secondly, Aarons rod was turned into a Serpent, and then returned to bee a rod againe.

you likewise must shew that the substance of bread returneth againe, or else this example is not like. Thirdly, Aaron's rod was (being turned) a Serpent in shew, and not a rod: but in the Eucharist the shew of bread remaineth still by your own confession: herein also this example is unlike.

Thirdly, saith he, it is called bread, either after the Hebrue phrase, which taketh generally bread for meate; or else because it is the true substantiall bread indeed, as our aduersaries doe expound it, in the sixth of Iohn, where Christ is called the true bread, Bellarmin ibid.

Contra. First, that the Apostle meaneth bread properly, not generally any meate, it thus appeareth, 1. Cor. 10. 16. the bread which we breake, &c. it is proper to bread to bee broken, and not so proper for other meate, which is rather cut and diuided then broken. Again, there is no other meate vsed in the Communion to betoken Christs bodie, but the breaking of bread. Secondly, neither doth the Apostle speake here of spirituall bread, as Ioh. 6. but of materiall bread, as ver. 33. we are one bread, &c. because we are partakers of one bread: this bread is not the flesh of Christ, for the congregatio, though they make one mysticall bodie, cannot be said to be Christs flesh, as they are said to be one bread, and one bodie: they are Christs bodie mysticall, but not his reall and substantiall bodie. Again, the eating of bread, and drinking of the cup, are both taken alike, 1. Cor. 11. 26. but the Apostle speaketh of a materiall cup, yet by a figure comprehending the wine in the cup, therefore he also insinuateth materiall bread.

Argum. 7. Luk. 24. 39. Christ saith, handle me, and see me, a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me haue: but Christs bodie in the Sacrament, can neither bee handled nor seene: Ergo, it is not there.

Bellarmin answereth: The argument followeth very well affirmatiuely, This is seene and felt: Ergo, it is a bodie, and so our Saviour reasoneth: but negatiuely it followeth not, It is not seene, nor felt: Ergo, no bodie: for a bodie may be couered with another bodie, and God may blinde the eyes, that they shall not see, as when Christ passed in the midst amongst them, that would haue throwne him downe headlong, Luk. 4: Bellarmin resp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. First, the argument followeth as well negatiuely, as affirmatiuely, where there is no other impediment: It cannot bee felt or seene: Ergo, no bodie; as in the Sacrament there is no such impediment: neither in the object, for there is the same thing seene and felt, which would be, neither is Christs bodie hid vnder another bodie: nor yet is our sight hindered, or a mistral before our eyes, as he pretendeth there was, when Christ escaped from the Nazarites (and yet the text saith not he passed inuisible, but escaped miraculously, as at other times:) wherefore touching no impediment, the argument followeth strongly. Secondly, our Saviour reasoneth thus: my hands and feete, for it is I: I am here: Ergo, you may see my hands and feete: which were no good reason, if Christs bodie could bee present, and neither hands, nor feete seene. Wherefore the Apostles were perswaded by seeing and handling of Christ, that his bodie was present; so likewise may be so perswaded, we are not bound to beleue Christs bodily presence.

Argum. 8. Ioh. 6. 63. It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing: Ergo, the flesh of Christ is not eaten otherwise then spiritually in the Sacrament.

Bellarmin and the Rhemists likewise answer, that by flesh here is not vnderstood the flesh of Christ, but their fleshly vnderstanding of Christs words: for the Capernaïtes thought grossly, that Christ would diuide his flesh, and giue it amongst them to bee eaten: and they also erred in taking Christs flesh, for the flesh of a meere man: wherefore he onely reproveth their carnall vnderstanding of Christ, whereas he saith, his words were spirit and life, that is spiritually to bee vnderstood: Bellarmin resp. ad argum. 7. Rhemist in hunc locum.

Secondly, he it granted, that Christ speaketh of his flesh, that it profiteth not; yet it followeth not, that it is not in the Sacrament: for by the same reason, there should bee no bread there neither, because of it selfe it also profiteth not, Bellarmin ibid.

Contra. First, we doe not so conclude, the flesh of Christ profiteth not of it selfe: Ergo, it is not in the Sacrament: but by warrant of these words, wee say that Christs flesh is not otherwise, but spiritually to be eaten, and therefore his carnall presence is not requisite at all: for Christ saith not, that the spirit and the flesh quicken, but that the spirit onely quickeneth, which is the spiritual feeding of his flesh: for to all other purposes the flesh of Christ is profitable, as that it was borne, died, and rose againe for vs: but as touching any fleshly eating it profiteth not at all. Secondly, that Christ speaketh of his flesh, it is euident: for Christ remoueth the offence, which they took in his words, saying, ver. 52. How can this man giue vs his flesh to eate? and therefore he telleth them that his flesh would not profit them to bee eaten, otherwise then spiritually. And thus Augustine expoundeth it, as he is alleged in their owne decrees, par. 3. dist. 2. c. 44. Caro non proficit quicquam, sed quomodo illi intellexerunt, &c. The flesh profiteth nothing, but as they vnderstood it: for they so vnderstood flesh, as it is sold, and cut out in the shambles, &c. Here S. Augustine expoundeth this place of the flesh of Christ: But because Bellarmin seemeth to take aduantage of these words of Augustine, as though he should not condemne all carnall eating of Christ, but onely in such grosse manner, manner, as the Capernaïtes imagined : It followeth in the same place, Gratia eius non consumitur in istis : His gracious flesh is not consumed with biting : that is, is not eaten at all. And againe, Donec Iherusalem finiatur, sursum est Dominus : As long as the world endureth, the Lord is above; Corpus Domini, in quo resurrexit uno loco esse oportet : The bodie of the Lord, wherein he rose againe, must be but in one place; but the veritie of his bodie is diffused euery where. Here S. Augustinus affirming, that Christs bodie is no where now, but in heauen, sheweth, that it cannot any kinde of way, either visibly or inuisibly be eaten in the earth. Thirdly, the Papists are the Capernaïtes of these times : for they imagined, that Christs flesh should be eaten with the mouth, whether after a visible or inuisible manner, it is not expressed; and so doe the Papists hold. Againe, the Capernaïtes dreamed of a dead mans flesh without life : and so the Papists doe separate Christs flesh from the spirituall vertue thereof, affirming that wicked men may cate Christs flesh, and yet receive no grace or vertue by it. And this impious distinction betweene the veritie and vertue of Christs flesh, Innocentius 3. seemeth to be the author of : Dee. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 4. c. 6. Distingendum est substantia inter tria, &c. We must subtilly distinguish betweene three things in the Sacrament; the visible forme of the bread and wine; the veritie which is of the flesh of Christ; the vertue in vnitie and charitie : What doe they now else, in diuiding the veritie of Christs flesh from the vertue thereof, but together with the Capernaïtes, make it a meere humane and dead flesh without life or vertue? Fourthly, that this place is to be vnderstood only of the spirituall eating of Christ, I haue shewed before at large, in the answer to the second argument of the Papists for the reall presence, whither I referre the reader.

Argum. 9. Ioh. 12. 26. Our Sauour Christ saith, Where I am, there shall my ministers be, that is, they shall be with him in his glorie. But now Christ is in glorie : Ergo, his Ministers and Saints are with him; but they are not in the Eucharist : Ergo, neither is Christ present bodily there. Wherefore, they must confesse that it is either glorious to Christ to be in the Sacrament, or inglorious : if it be glorie to him, the Saints must be there present to see and be partakers of his glorie : if it be inglorious, it is the greatest sacrilege in the world to deprive Christ of his glorie.

Believing at the first sight maketh light of this argument, (which indeede wee our selues doe not vnderstand, as any of our best reasons) yet it doth so trouble him, that he knoweth not which way to turne himselfe; answering by a distinction, such as it is: for as Christs holy soule, while it is in the Eucharist, doth behold God, so is it in glorie : but to be in the Eucharist vnder the formes of bread and wine, is no glorie to him, and therefore the presence of his Saints is not necessarie there. Secondly, he granteth notwithstanding, that the Angels are there present with Christs bodie, attending vpon him : respons. ad argum. 8.

Contra. First, he hath giuen vs an answerlesse answer : for still wee vrge as before, either it is glorious for Christ to be in the Eucharist, or inglorious : he granteth both, that is partly glorious, partly inglorious, that Christ being there is in his fathers glorie, and is not : if hee bee any way in glorie, then must his Saints bee with him, according to his promise, for they are ever with him, 1. Thes. 4. 17. and they follow the Lambe whither soeuer he goeth, Reuel. 14. 4. If it be in part not glorious for Christ to bee there, they doe more then in part commit blasphemous sacrilege against Christ, to pull him from his glorie in heauen. Secondly, you giue the Angels a good office to attend vpon Christ to see him dishonored : If the Sun withdrew his light in the passion of Christ, &c. could not endure to see the Son of God sacrificed in his own shape; how much lesse can the angels endure to see him offered vp vnder the base formes of bread and wine? The Angels doe not desire to behold Christ in his glorie, 1. Pet. 1. 12. but to see him dishonoured, and vnelothed of his glorie, they haue no will or desire at all. This sillie argument of ours (as he counteth it) doth make this great Rabbin speechlesse, that he is constrained to lay his hand on his mouth.

Argum. 10. Ioh. 16. 28. I leave the world, and goe to the father : Ergo, Christ is no more in his humanity in the world; and so consequently not in the Eucharist. But here it will be, and is answered, that Christ hath left the world, in his visible presence, but yet inuisible his body may be in the world still. We then further say, that therefore Christ sent the holy Ghost to comfort the disciples, and to supplie his absence, and to be in his stead : but if Christ were bodily present still, there needed no such supplie.

Believing answereth: first, that the coming of the holy Ghost did not supplie euery presence of Christ, for he saith, Ioh. 14. 18. I will not leave you comfortlesse, but I will come vnto you : but onely the visible presence of Christ, whom they should no longer see, nor heare, as they did : so that the coming of the spirit doth not take away the inuisible presence of his flesh. Secondly, as the holie Ghost did verely descend, yet remained in heauen still : so Christ verely ascended as hee is man, and yet remaineth still in the Eucharist, resp. ad argum. 9.

Contra. First, the holy Ghost supplieth not the presence of Christs diuine nature, for so Christ and his spirit are one, and the one cannot be present without the other : but it supplieth his whole bodily presence, as may thus appeare : First, there is mention made, Iohn. 14. of two kindes of Christs coming againe to the world: the one is by his spirit, and so he saith, Ioh. 14. vers. 12. I will not leave you comfortlesse, but will come againe vnto you. And vers. 23. If any man loue me, &c. my father and I will come vnto him, &c. Thus Christ in spirit and power is alwaies present, as his father is, and this presence the spirit supplieth not. The other coming is in his body, and so he saith, ver. 3. I will come againe, and receiue you to my selfe, that where I am, there may ye be also. This is his coming in the end of the world: but in the Eucharist Christ doth not receiue vs to glorie to himselfe: Ergo, he cometh not there in bodie.

Secondly, Ioh. 16. 7. If I goe not away, the comforter will not come: but the comforter is come: Ergo, Christ in bodie is gone, not onely after his visible but inuisible manner: for Christs bodie is present, as it was comfortable, is taken away; and therefore he saith he will send another comforter, Ioh. 14. 16. but the inuisible presence of Christs bodie is comfortable: now as he was our comforter in his flesh, he is absent: for what neede a second comforter, if the first be still present? Ergo, in respect of his inuisible bodily presence he is absent.

Thirdly, Ioh. 16. 15. He shall take of mine and shew it vnto you: But if Christ himselfe be present, might he not rather take of his owne himselfe and shew vnto vs?

Secondly, Bellarmino in comparing the holy Ghost and Christs humanitie together, that Christs bodie may be in heauen and earth at once, as the holy Ghost is, is become an vbiquitarie, bringing in an omnipresence of Christs bodie, and so is not farre from the Eutychian heresie, in confounding Christs humane and diuine nature together.

Argum. 11. Our bodies in the resurrection shall be like to Christs bodie, Philip. 3. 11. we shall change our vile bodies, that it may bee fashioned or conformed to his glorious bodie: but our bodies in the resurrection shall haue no such propertie or qualitie, to be in many places at once: Ergo, neither now is Christs bodie at once in many places.

Bellarmino answereth, that Christs bodie is in many places, it doth not arise from any propertie of a glorious bodie, but from Gods infinit power, respons. ad argum. 14. c. 14.

Contra. First, so doth the conforming of our bodies to Christs glorious bodie arise from the power of God: as it followeth in the same place, according to his mighty power, whereby he is able to subdue all things to himselfe: wherefore euen the properties of our transfigured bodies shall be wrought by the mightie power of God: and therefore herein is no difference betwene Christs glorified bodie and ours. Secondly, our Sauour prayeth, Iohn. 17. 21. that as he and his father are one, so we may be one with him: Like as then Christ as he is God, is one with his father; so wee in our glorified bodies shall be one with Christ as he is man. And further he saith, vers. 22. the glorie that thou gauest me, I haue giuen them: It followeth then, that all the properties of Christs glorified bodie shall by his diuine power be communicated to ours: but our bodies shall haue no such omnipresence then, no more hath Christs bodie now.

Argum. 12. Christ is there onely in bodie, where he is to be sought: but he is to be sought onely aboue in heauen, Coloss. 3. 1. Seeke those things that are aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God: Ergo, Christ is bodily onely in heauen, and not in earth.

Bellarmino answereth, to seeke Christ aboue is not vnderstood of the place, but of the eleuating and lifting vp of the affection: for otherwise Astronomers and starre-gazers should be the deuoutest men, that are alwaies looking vpward: so they that seeke Christ in the Sacrament, may haue their heart aboue, cap. 14. respons. ad argum. 15.

Contra. First, neither doe we speake of a seeking of Christ aboue onely in place without eleuating of affection, as the Apostles were rebuked, Act. 1. for gazing after Christ into heauen; but of such a seeking of Christ in the heauenly place, as hath our heart and affection also: as it followeth vers. 2. Set your affection on heauenly things. Secondly, howsoeuer this word, aboue, may otherwhere be referred to the affection, and not to the place; yet it is euident, that the Apostle here meaneth, the heauenly place aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God: but Christs bodie in the Eucharist sitteth not at the right hand of God (for then you must say also that the formes of bread and wine, vnder the which you say Christs bodie is, doe sit there together with Christ): Ergo, Christ is not to be sought aboue in the Eucharist. Thirdly, vers. 2. the Apostle to things aboue opposeth things on the earth, or earthly things: but bread and wine are earthly things: Ergo, for Christ to be vnder earthly things, is not to be aboue.

Argum. 13. Christ saith, Do this in remembrance of me: but we remember onely things absent; Christ is in the Eucharist remembred: Ergo, he is absent.

Bellarmino answereth, the Apostle sheweth what it is, to doe it in remembrance of Christ, that is, so shew the Lords death, till he come. 1. Cor. 11. 26. so then the death of Christ is remembred, which is in deede absent and past, and not present, Bellarmino. cap. 11. resp. ad argum. 9.

Contra. First, if the Eucharist bee a remembrance of Christs death, and so consequently of his sacrifice, then is it not a sacrifice; for it cannot be both the thing it selfe, and a memorie of it to: so though you should gaine here by the reall presence, you haue lost in your sacrifice. Secondly, Christ

Christ's death cannot be remembered without remembrance also of his bodie, for it was his bodie that died: neither is Christ's death, himselfe; but his bodie, that dyed, is himselfe: wherefore in remembrance of us, must be vnderstood of his bodie, that died, which is therefore absent, because it is remembered. Thirdly, if the Eucharist be a shewing of his death till he come, and you say, hee cometh straight vpon the words of consecration: then is the Eucharist byther not at all, or a very short while, a shewing of his death: And thus you confound your selves.

Lastly, we must vnderstand, that this their deuised and forged opinion of the reall presence of Christ, is of no antiquitie in the Church: neither was there any question about it for 1000. yeres after Christ, till the tyme of Berengarius, who liued about Anno 1060, who was sore troubled, for maintaining the truth against the carnall presence; and vnder Pope Leo the 9. and Nicholas the 3. was constrained twice to recant: yet there was no publique law or decree made in the Church concerning transubstantiation, till the Conincell of Largano, which was held vnder Pope Innocent the 3. Anno 1215.

Fox. p. 1152.

And that this grosse opinion fauoureth not a whit of antiquitie, it may appeare by the reformation indgement of Augustine: Sacramenta ex similitudine ipsarum rerum nomina habent, secundum quendam modum sacramentum corporis Christi, corpus Christi est, &c. The Sacraments, because of some likeness, do beare the names of the things themselves: as the Sacrament of the body of Christ is after a certaine manner called his bodie.

Epistol. 13.

Christus corporis sui figuram discipulis commendauit: Christ did commend to his disciples a figure of his bodie. Quid parati dentem & ventrem? Credite, & manducate. Why doe sthe make ready thy teeth and thy belly? Beleeue in Christ, and thou hast eaten him.

Comment. in Psal. 3.

Secundum presentiam maiestatis semper habemus Christum: secundum presentiam carnis recte dicimus of discipulis, Me semper non habebitis: According to the presence of his Maiestie we haue Christ alwayes: according to his carnall presence, it was truly said to his disciples, You cannot haue me alwayes. By these and many such places in this ancient father, it is manifest, that in those dayes there was no such opinion held of the carnall presence.

Bernard also testifieth evidently for this point. Vtque hodie eadem caro nobis, sed spiritualiter non carnaliter exhibetur, &c. The same flesh of Christ euen to this day is exhibited, but spiritually not carnally: we haue the true substance of his flesh, but in spirit and power: we haue Christ, not as the Angels in the presence of his Maiestie, as the Apostles in the sight of his humanitie, but as the Church hath Christ in faith in the Sacraments.

Again, Cibus iste non est ventris, sed mentis: Iste est panis Angelorum qui nescit putrescere, non cadit in solum, sed tendit in excelsum: This foode is of the minde, not of the bellie, this is the bread of Angels, that putrieth not, it goeth not into the draught, but ascendeth aloft: Sermo in cena Domini.

We haue the testimonie also of the 7. generall Council, Constantinop. as it is alleaged. Nice. 2. can. 6. Tom. 3. vpon these words of our Saviour, Hoc est corpus meum: This is my bodie; they misinterprete: Eccc igitur vniuersantis illius corporis imaginem totam, panis scilicet substantiam, quoniam non debet apponi, ne scilicet humana effigie figurata, idolatriam induceretur: Behold therefore the whole or onely image of that quickening body, the substance of bread, which he commanded to be set before them, least if it had had an humane shape, they might haue committed idolatrie to it. They say, the substance of bread, not the forme onely was deliuered the Apostles, and, that it was the image and figure onely of Christ's bodie.

Let vs see, what their owne decrees say for this matter, decret. par. 3. dist. 1. c. 44. Non hoc corpus, non vultu, manducaturus es, &c. You shall not eat this bodie, which you see, nor drinke that blood, which they shall shedde vpon the Crosse, &c. ibid. c. 49. Duplicitur intelligitur caro Christi & sanguis, vel spiritualis illa & diuina, &c. The flesh and blood of Christ is vnderstood two wayes, eyther his diuine and spirituall flesh, whereof he saith, my flesh is meate indeed, &c. or his flesh, which was crucified vpon the Crosse. But Christ's flesh supposed to be in the Eucharist, is neyther spirituall (for a spirituall presence we denie not) and they hold a carnall presence, which is not spirituall: neither is it his flesh or blood vpon the Crosse, for that the former Decree denieth to be eaten, or drunke; Ergo, there is no flesh of Christ present at all.

Again, id. dist. 4. c. 13. Nullus est ambigendum, &c. It is not to be doubted, but that they which are baptized, are made partakers of the bodie and blood of Christ, &c. Again, Origen saith, tract. 33. in Matib. Potuisse, quem Deus sanguinem suum faceret, &c. This drinke, which God calleth his blood, is the word; so then Christ's blood is in Baptisme, it is in the word, but yet there is no carnall presence: Ergo, his bodie and blood may be and are in the Eucharist, and yet no carnall presence. And S. Ambrose speaking of Baptisme, saith, lib. 1. de Sacram. c. 2. Si hoc est corpus Christi, hic et Angeli confiscentur sunt, &c. If the bodie of Christ be here, then the Angels also are present, for where the body is, there will the Eagles be gathered together: The body of Christ is then as well in Baptisme, as in the Eucharist, and yet there is no reall presence.

Ibid. cap. 87. Christum ipse cominus, et communium ipse comedens, et qui comeditur, &c. Christ is both a guest, and the feast; he himselfe eateth, and is eaten: but Christ did not eate his owne flesh; and yet he did eate, that which his Apostles eate: Ergo, his flesh was not in the Eucharist. Wherefore we say with Origen, tract. 35. in Matih. Ipse est panis, et manducat nobiscum panem: He is the bread, and eateth bread with vs: He did eate bread therefore with his disciples, and not his owne flesh, cap. 47. Quid paras dentes & ventrem, &c. What doest thou prepare thy teeth and thy bellie? beleeue, and thou hast eaten Christ: Ergo, Christs flesh is not present in the Eucharist to be eaten with the mouth, and so to goe downe into the bellie. Likewise cap. 76. De hac hostia, &c. Of this host, which is done in remembrance of Christ, it is lawful to eate; but of that host, which Christ offered vpon the Crosse, it is lawfull for none to eate of it selfe: but Christs flesh which they say is in the Eucharist, is the same, that was offered vpon the Crosse: Ergo, it is not to be eaten of any. This euidence and witness against the reall presence we haue from their owne decrees: in hereto I will adioyne one other euident place, decret. par. 3. dist. 2. c. 55. Dicit sacerdos, &c. The Priest or Minister saith, Make this a reasonable and acceptable oblation, Quod est figura corporis et sanguinis Domini, &c. which is a figure of the bodie and blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. If the oblation then be a figure of Christs bodie and blood, it is not the bodie and blood it selfe.

We will adioyne the glorious testimonie of the holy Martyrs, with some of their reasons.

Bishop Ridley holy Martyr: That which Christ did take, on the which he gaue thanks, the which he brake, he gaue to his disciples, he called his body: but he tooke bread, gaue thanks over the bread, brake bread: Ergo, it was very bread which he called his body.

Again, the carnall presence of Christ destroyeth the institution of the Lords Supper, which was commanded to be continued vntill the Lord himselfe should come: if therefore he be now really present in his flesh, then must the Supper cease: for a remembrance is not of a thing present, but of a thing past and absent. See more arguments of this worchie Martyr, Fax. pag. 1443. and 1487.

Master Bradford: The Sacrament is no otherwise Christs body, then Circumcision was the countenance of God, and as Baptisme and the water of Baptisme is regeneration. Here when it was denyed, that no where in the Scriptures it could be shewed, that Baptisme & the Lords Supper were coupled together: The Martyr bringeth forth that place, 1. Cor. 12. As we are baptized into one body, so are we, potati in vno spiritu, we haue drunke of one spirit: then was it answered, that Paul had no such words: vid. plur. p. 1619. col. 1.

M. Bland, disputing with one M. Miller a popish Priest, about the carnall presence, drieth him to confesse, that men were made drunke with the qualities and accident, not the substance of wine, and that mice might liue with the accident of bread, pag. 1672.

R. Smith, compelleth a popish doctor to confesse, that the body of Christ being eaten in the Sacrament, goeth downe into the belly, and so is cast into the draught: saying further, that it was no more a derogation to Christ, then to be spit vpon: to whom the Martyr answereth: if the Jewes being his enemies, did but spit in his face, and wee being his friends throw him into the draught, which of vs haue deserued the greater damnation, Fax. p. 1691. Thus it may appeare how grosse this popish opinion is, the patrones whereof are constrained to fall into so many unreasonable absurdities: for this truth against this carnall and grosse manner of Christs presence, these holy Martyrs, with thousands, yea 10. thousands more, haue not doubted to give their liues

These and many other arguments of the Martyrs, both against the reall presence and transubstantiation I had collected together, and digested them into some order: but committing the copie to a deceitfull messengers hand, to cary it to the presse, by his negligence it was lost: and so I was put to a second trouble, and others deprived of my simple collections: which I had no leasure to frame anew, the presse staying for worke: let this therefore serue for a iust excuse (Christian Reader) if thy minde be not fully satisfied here in this behalfe. And I pray God forgive him his fault, that hath put me to this trouble, and hindred the profit of many, and deliuer me hereafter from the hands of such.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS QUESTION, WHETHER it stand with the power and will of God, that Christs bodie should be carnally present in the Sacrament.

The Papists.

37. Error.

Here are two difficulties or impossibilities, which do hinder the real presence of Christs body in the Sacrament: First, it would follow, that a naturall body, such as Christs is, might be in two places at once: for they say, that it is in heauen, and in the Eucharist all at once. Secondly, that a naturall body may be in a place, and yet not occupie or fill a place: for if Christs body be in in the Sacrament, it taketh place: the compasse of a thinne and round cake is not answerable in the proportion of Christs body: and as this bread cannot yet be divided to every man.

Notwithstanding both these difficulties, it is agreeable both to the power and good pleasure of God, that the body of Christ should be included in the Sacrament, Bellar.

Argum. 1. It is possible for the body of Christ to be in many places at once; and it also standeth with his will: as Act. 9. 4. Christ appeared to Saul, either vpon the earth, or in the ayre neere to the earth: for how could he either heare the voyce of Christ sitting in heauen, or see the light so far off? Paul, Christ was in two places: he appeared to Paul vpon earth, and he was at the same time in heauen, from whence he shall not moue till the day of iudgement, Bellarmin. de sacram. Eucharist. lib. 2. c. 1. Rhem. Act. 9. scilicet 1.

1. The text is plain, that Christ spake from heauen, from whence the light shined, and he was neither in the ayre nor vpon the earth. 2. Doe you make question, whether Paul could see a light, or heare a voyce from so farre; seeing that the Sunne, whose body is so farre distant from vs, doth disperse his beames ouer the face of the earth, and the voyce of the thunder is heard very farre? Will ye deny Christ to haue that power, which we see to be in his creatures? And why was it not as possible, that Christ from heauen should be heard and seen of Paul, as he was seen of Stephen sitting on the right hand of God? Act. 7. 56.

Answer replyeth: first, that it is certaine, that Paul did see Christ in the way to Damascus, for the tenth faith, that the other which were with him, saw no man, Act. 9. 7. Whereby is intimated, that Paul did see: and againe Act. 22. 14. Ananias faith to Saul, God hath appointed thee, &c. that thou shalt see that Paul did see: and heare the voyce of his mouth: and Act. 26. 18. Christ said to Paul, I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, &c. 1. Cor. 9. 1. Have I not seen the Lord? and 1. Cor. 15. 8. last of all he was seene also of me: out of these places he inferreth, that Paul did see Christ.

(Cont.) First, we denie not, but that Paul did see Christ in his humilitie, which might be as well at other times as now, as Act. 22. 18. At Ierusalem he saw Christ speaking vnto him: and 1. Cor. 15. He was taken vp into the third heauen, &c. where no doubt he saw Christ: Secondly, neither doe wee stand vpon it, but that Christ also was seene of Paul, as hee went to Damascus, though it doe not appeare out of the text, but the contrarie rather: for Saul at the very first shining of the light, before he heard any voyce, fell downe to the ground, and was stricken blinde; Act. 9. 1. and ver. 8. the words of the text are; That he saw no man: wherefore it may be doubted whether at this time he saw Christ with the eyes of his flesh: Thirdly, the authorities alleaged may be thus answered: the first, Act. 9. 7. as the men are said to haue seene no man, so ver. 8. it is said of Saul: the second 22. 14. That Paul should see that light one, and heare his voyce, may be vnderstood of the vision that followeth, ver. 18. where Christ was both seene, and heard of Paul: the third Act. 16. 16. That Christ appeared; doth not enforce any sight of his person, as Chrysostom teacheth not, Act. 7. 2. where in the same word God is said to haue appeared to Moses: the fourth and last places prone, that Paul saw Christ, but not at this time: yet we denie not, but that Paul did see Christ in his journey, though neither this place, nor the other Scripture will necessarily conclude it.

Secondly, Bellarmino answered, that Christ was seene of Paul in the earth, for as he saye he were underneath: first, because the light of Christs bodie was so great, that it blinded Paul, which it could not haue done, if Christs bodie had been so farre off. Secondly, the other men saw the light, and heard the voyce, but their eyes and eares could not reach vp to heauen: Thirdly, they heard the voyce, but could not distinctly vnderstand it, as Paul did, therefore Christ was nearer to Paul: but if the voyce had been from heauen, they should all haue heard it alike. Fourthly, if Paul had seene Christ in heauen as Stephen did, he would not haue doubted, who it was, as now suddenly seeing a man stand before him, he asketh, who art thou Lord?

Causes. First was a light passing the brightness of the sunne, Acts 26: 13. If then the sunne be able to dazle the eyes, how much more this exceeding light that came from Christ, though it shined from heaven, as the sunne doth likewise? and if such a brightness came from a cloude, that it gave light to all the host of Israel, how much more this light that came from Christ. Secondly, though their eyes and eares could not reach to heavenly yet Christ by his power could cause the brightness and sound to descend to them. Thirdly, it was not the noynes of the place that caused Paul to understand the voyce, and not the rest, but because it pleased Christ so to dispose their hearing, John 12: 28. There came a voyce, not out of the ayre, but from heaven, which Christ heard and understood, but they that stood by perceived it not, some of them saying it was a bundle to waite in this place. Fourthly, Drusius confessed Christ as soone as he saw him, because hee did so waite, and beleued in him before: but Paul being before a persecutor of Christ, and a stranger from the faith, might very well aske this question (whom sawst thou Lord?) though he saw him not upon the earth: and how could he see Christ before him now, whom he confessed before to have been blinded with the sudden shining of the light? and so that hee (said Drusius) was in such a

Argument.

Argument. The bodie of Christ may be where it pleaseth him, and yet shall not neede any naturall place, or occupie any roome: hee is able to bring a Camell through the eye of a needle, Math. 23. 23. He also came through the doores in to his Apostles; rose out of the sepulchre thorow the stone; was borne, his mothers wombe being shut: therefore he may as well, and is no doubt present vnder the shapen of bread and wine in the Sacrament, Rhem. Math. 26. 28. 11. Bellarm.

Answe. Christ sheweth in that place, that it is as impossible for a rich man, that is high minded, and trusteth in his riches, to enter into heauen, as for a Camell to passe through the eye of a needle: but it is possible with God to giue rich men humble and lowly mindes, and so make them fit for his kingdome, as to make the Camell lesse, and so draw him thorow a needle. It is not proued out of this place, that God can or will draw the huge bodie of a Camell through a needle, remaining still of that bignes: no more then that it is possible for God, to bring a proud, rich, arrogant man to heauen, his affections not altered: both these are impossible to God, not because he cannot in his absolute power doe them, but because they are contrarie to his will and ordinance: The one is against the law of iustice, to bring a wicked man to heauen; the other against the law of nature.

Bellarmino replieth, that it is not impossible with men, for a Camell to goe thorough a needle, if he cease to be a Camell, and be turned into a small threed: ibid.

Contra. First, yet it is impossible to men, for they haue no power to extenuate the bignesse of a Camell bodie, and so to make it passe thorough a needle, as God hath: it is possible with him to draw a threed thorough a needle, but not to turne a Camell into a threed. Secondly, a rich man trusting in his riches cannot without change of his affections goe to heauen, no more can a Camell goe thorough a needle, his bodie not altered. Therefore as it cannot be shewed, that a proud rich man entered into heauen; so neither, that a Camell at any time went thorough a needle: so that this place maketh not for the possibilitie of the reall presence at all.

For the other threed examples: it is not proued out of Scripture, that the bodie of Christ pierced the doores, the graue, stone, or his mothers wombe: although the doores were found thus after Christs entrance, the graue couered, and his mother remained a Virgine still: for all these passages might giue place for a while to the bodie of Christ, and returne againe to their place: as the red Sea was deuided till the Israclites passed, and afterward the waters came together againe. And concerning the last instance of the birth of Christ, it is certaine out of the Scriptures, that Christ opened the wombe of his mother in his birth, Luk. 2. 2. 3. Hitherto therefore they haue proued nothing.

Bellarmino replieth to the first example, that if Christs bodie pierced not the doores, but they gaue way vnto him, it had beene no miracle: and againe, Christ came vnto the Apostles without any noyse, or opening of the house, or creaking of the doores, and therefore it is like, that they opened for him, but he went thorough them.

Contra. First, he may say as well that it was no miracle, that the iron gate opened of it own accord to Peter, Act. 12. 10. how then is he not ashamed to denie a miracle here? or was not a miracle, for the red Sea to deuide it selfe, though it came together againe? Secondly, though the doore gaue place, yet it might be, and was done, without any noyse, as the prison doores were opened to Peter, and yet the keeper not awaked, that keepe the watch, Act. 5. 23. Thirdly, S. Hieron. thinketh, that the doore gaue place to Christs bodie: Quid mirum? &c. What is greater, to hang the huge carth vpon nothing, or for the Lord to passe by the doores being shut, Et creatura non resistit Creatori. And the creature to giue place to the Creator? aduers. error. Ioh. Hieron. So then it is not necessary that Christs bodie should pierce the doore, but that it gaue place vnto his body, eyther by opening, or giuing way.

Secondly, to the second example, if Christ in his birth opened the wombe of the Virgine, and made himselfe a way by the dilatation of the same, then it would follow, that Mari brought forth with payne, neither could she afterward be a Virgine; for this is Virginitie, not to haue the wombe opened. Bellarmino ibid.

Contra. Though Bellarmino here very vnwisely take vpon him to play the midwife, and to discover the secrets of birth, which may better be concealed: yet, so farre as modestie will suffer, we will send him away with his full answer: First, hee that procured to be borne of a Virgine, could also open himselfe a way out of the wombe, without payne to his mother: that as in his conception, there was no touch of carnall pleasure, so neither in his birth, sense of any payne: neither is the payne in the opening of the wombe, but in the place of birth: which he will not denie vnto Christ; as it is said, 1. Reg. 19. 3. The children are come to the birth, and here I am brought to bring forth. Secondly, Virginitie no more consisteth in the opening of the wombe, then in the place and pitch of the birth, through which the holy Child passed, which (I thinke) hee will not denie: and virginitie may be lost, where the wombe is not opened, as in the barren, that are polluted, polluted; and so bring not forth. And againe, the Scripture thus describeth Virginitie, and Virginitie quod habet non ignem mater, Gen. 19. 18. and so saith Maria of her selfe, Luk. 1. 34. I know not man: so herein consisted her virginitie, that she conceived without the companie of man. Thirdly, yet he hath not answered the Scripture, which testifieth, that Christ opened the wombe, Luk. 2. 23. according to the law, Every man child, that first openeth the wombe, shall be called holy to the Lord: Quid ad periculum natiuitatem saluatoris, &c. Which Hierome thinketh is more properly applied to the speciall natiuitie of Christ, then of any other: dialog. 2. aduers. Pelag. And he doubteth not to say, Quod per genitricem virginis natus: That Christ was borne by the ordinarie places of birth. It will add also out of the Synod, Telens. Quid incredibile, &c. Why should it be incredible, that against the naturall vse Maria brought forth, and yet remained a virgine, when against the vse of nature, the Sea saw that and fled? Likethen as the Sea parted and closed againe, so was it in the birth of Christ. Lastly, Durandus a Papiſt thinketh also, that the wombe of the virgine was dilated for the passage of Christ. in 4. dist. 1. 44. q. 6.

Thirdly, concerning the third example, whereas we answered, that the graue might giue place to the bodie of Christ rising againe, and returne to his place againe: Bellarmino replieth, that this is our owne coniecture without any authoritie.

Contra. First, it is rather their bare coniecture, that Christs body went through the stone, contrary to the propertie of a naturall body: We thinke, that Christ had as great power to cause the stone to giue way, and come againe to his place, as the Angell had to make the prison doores open to Peter, and to shut againe, Act. 5. 19. 23. Secondly, wee haue a warrant from your owne decrees: Incult in sepulchro, et reuoluto lapide monumenti, &c. Helay in the graue, and the stone being remoued, his flesh rose againe the third day, decret. Gay. This decree saith, that the stone remoued at the rising of Christ.

Argum. Bellarmino produceth a fourth example of the ascension of Christ, who in his body pierced the heauens, Heb. 4. 14. But the heauens are a solide substance, euen as molten glasse: Job. 37. 18. Therefore it followeth hereupon, that many bodies may be in one place at once: And whereas it is answered, (saith he) that the heauens might open and giue way to Christs bodie, as at the ascension of Christ the heauens are said to open, this is to be vnderstood, because the heauens appeared to open: for the holy Ghost could come downe without the opening of the heauens at the baptizing of Christ. And whereas Stephen saith, he saw the heauens open, Act. 7. 56. the heauens themselves were not deuided, for they being a cleere and transparent substance, S. Stephen might haue seene Christ, without their opening, but Stephens eyes were opened to see that, which appeared not before: cap. 6. loc. 5.

Contra. First, whereas your Latine text readeth, Heb. 4. 14. Penetrauit, he pierced the heauens, the originall is deuoluit, he deuided or dissolued the heauens; and the Rhemists translate, he opened the heauens: so that this place prodeth, not a going through the heauens, without a way made, or giuing of place. Secondly, the heauens are indeed a solide substance; so is the water, the bodie of the ayre, which are apt to giue place to grosser bodies, and to come together againe: and so do the heauens: for how els could the Planets haue their diuers and contrary courses among themselves, and contrary to the fixed starres, if the heauens were not a pliable, and yielding bodie: And let him tell vs, how Eliab was taken vp into heauen in his bodie (as they thinke, affirming that hee liueth still in his body in Paradise) whether hee also pierced the substance of the heauens? Thirdly, the heauens are likened to glasse, not in substance, but for their brightness and cleerenesse, as Reuelat. 4. 6. we read of a Sea of glasse. Fourthly, the holy Ghost being a spirit, can descend without any way made, but seeing at that time the spirit descended in the visible and true shape of a doue, the heauens also visibly and truly were opened: And we are rather to credit Stephens words, then his vaine conceits, who saith, Thut not his eyes, (though wee denie not, but his sight also was quickened) but the heauens were opened: and if Christ might be seene through the cleerenesse of the heauens, how is it, that he hath been so seldome seene, and of so few, since his ascension, the heauens being alike cleere vnto all? Lastly, that the heauens opened at Christs ascension, it is euident by that prophesie, Psalm. 24. 7. Lift vp your heads, ye gates: make ye lift up yee everlasting doores, and the King of glorie shall come in, which the Fathers apply vnto Christs ascension, and when as the Saints shal meete Christ in the cloudes, and be taken vp in the ayre, as S. Paul saith, 1. Thess. 4. 17: it cannot be otherwise deemed, but that the cloudes, and the ayre shall make way for their bodies; and after the same manner the heauens also, like as they did at the ascension of Christ: Thus Bellarmino hath said much but proved nothing.

The Protestants.

Vraduersaries doe falsely charge vs to say, that God can doe more then hee hath done, or will doe, Rhemist. Matth. 26. self. 11. This we say, that Christ is almightie, and yet can doe nothing against his owne will, his word, or glorie: as to dishonour his glorious bodie, and spilling it within the compasse of a piece of bread, that it may be deuoured of cats, dogs, rats, myce, or which which is worse, to be eaten of wicked men, the members of the diuell: although the question bee not so much betweene vs, what Christ is able to doe of his absolute power, but what he will doe according to his word.

Argument 1. It standeth neither with the power or will of God, to doe contrarie to his word: For it is impossible that God should lie, Hebr. 6. vers. 18. And this thing, not to lie, is not a want of power, but a signe of greater power in God. But it is plainly declared in Scripture, that Christ hath a true naturall bodie, and is in all things like vnto vs, Hebr. 2. 17. Therefore neither can his bodie, being a true humane bodie, as ours are, be in many places at once: neither can it chuse but occupie that roome and place where it is. The Angell said, He is risen, he is not here, Math. 28. 6. but it had been no good argument, to say, he is risen and gone to another place, and therefore he is not here, if so be the bodie of Christ might be in many places at once. The Scripture then hath defined it, that Christs bodie is in one certaine place: wherefore to say, that Christ hath a true naturall bodie, and yet retaineth not the naturall properties of a body, is to speake contradictions, that he hath, and hath not a true naturall bodie: and this were to make God a liar.

Bellarmino to the place of Scripture, Math. 28. thus answereth: The Angell reasoneth according to the minde of the women, that sought Christ in the graue, as dead: and so the argument followeth well, he is not dead in the graue, for hee is risen. Secondly, morally the argument is good, because he that riseth from the dead, doth not remaine in the graue; for the graue is the place of the dead, not of the liuing: but simply and absolutely it doth not follow; for Christ might bee there, though he were risen, Bellarmino cap. 4. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, the Angels reason must indeede bee referred to the purpose and disposition of the women who came to seeke Christ: they enquired not, in what state Christ was, whether liuing, or dead; but where Christ was, as the Angell saith, vers. 5. I know that ye seeke Iesus: and therefore the Angell satisfieth them, according to their doubt, that he was not there, because he was risen which not, he is not dead, because he is risen, though that be a good consequent also, but, he is not here. And that this was Marys thought, to know what was become of Christs bodie, it appeared by this, that after the Angell had said thus vnto her, as Matthew reporteth, she asked Christ againe (supposing he had been the gardener) where he had laid him, Ioh. 20. 15. Secondly, the Angell vied two arguments: the one, when he saith, Why seeke ye the liuing among the dead? as S. Luth. remembereth, chap. 24. 5. This argument concludeth morally, as Bellarmino pretendeth, he is liuing therefore not among the dead. The other argument in these words, he is not here, for he is risen, concludeth simply and absolutely: and the reason standeth thus, He that is risen, and so gone to another place, is no longer here, where hee was: but Christ is so risen: Ergo. Bellarmino most impudently denieth the proposition, saying, that Christ might bee elsewhere, and there to, and so maketh the Angell a liar.

Argument 2. It is proper onely to the diuine nature to be euery where, as Ierem. 23. 24. I shall beauen and earth, saith the Lord: but Christs bodie is not of the diuine nature: Ergo, it cannot be euery where.

Bellarmino answereth, that there is great difference betweene the Godhead and the bodie of Christ: first, the Godhead is euery where in fact, but Christs bodie is not euery where, neither euer shall; it is in many places at once, not in all. Secondly, the Deitie cannot be restrained to one place, but the bodie of Christ may bee, as after the end of the world he shall be but in one place, lib. 3. c. 4. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, that Christs bodie is neither actually euery where, neither shall euer be, is nothing to the question in hand: it is sufficient to our purpose, that Christs bodie may bee euery where: for it may as well be in all places, as in many places, and this I thinke they will not deny: Then it will follow, that Christs bodie may be God: for to be euery where is proper onely to the Deitie, and if Christs bodie may be euery where, it may be the Deitie: for no properties of God the creator, either is in act, or can be communicated to a creature. Secondly, Christs bodie now in their iudgement, as long as the world standeth, cannot be tied or restrained to one place, no more then the Godhead: therefore now (whatsoever shall bee afterward) there is no difference betweene the bodie of Christ and the Godhead: and it is very absurd, to limit Christs bodie after the resurrection to one place, more then now, seeing his bodie shall not then be of lesse power or glorie, then it is. Thirdly, that Bellarmino maketh no difference betweene the omnipresence of the Godhead, and Christs bodie, his owne words elsewhere doe testifie: Sicut spiritus sanctus uerba descendit, et cetera in celo mansit in Christo. As the holie spirit did truly descend, and yet remained in heauen; so Christ did truly ascend, and yet remaineth with vs, not onely as God, but as man, lib. 1. de Sacram. Euch. c. 14. resp. ad loc. 9. So Clement 5. most grossly expoundeth these words of our Saviour, I am with you alwaies to the end of the world, of his corporall presence: whereas it is as well peculiar to the Godhead to be alwaies present, and neere, not a farre off, Ierem. 23. 23. as in all places.

According to his corporall presence, cannot bee in the Sunne, the Moone, and vpon the Earth all at one time. Contra Faust. lib. 10. cap. 11.

And concerning the other point hee writeth thus : Spatia locorum tolle corporibus, & nusquam erunt, quia nusquam erunt, nec erunt : Take away space of place from bodies, and they shall be no where, and if they be in no place, then are they not at all. Epistol. 57

3. The reall and carnall presence of Christ in the Sacrament, is a thing superfluous, useless, and vnprofitable : First, Christ saith to his Apostles, Ioh. 16. 7. It is expedient for you, that I go away : therefore Christs corporall presence is not profitable : and if his visible presence were not profitable to his Apostles, whom they both heard and saw, much lesse his inuisible presence in the Sacrament. Secondly, the fauour of God in the remission of sinnes through Christ, is as well sealed vnto vs in Baptisme, as in the Lords Supper ; what neede then the carnall presence in the one more, then in the other ? Thirdly, that Christ is in bodie present in the Sacrament, it is not perceived by any sense : for they neither taste him, see him, nor feele him ; it must be then a worke of faith : but by faith Christ is as well apprehended being absent, as being supposed in this manner to be present : Ergo, this kinde of presence is needles.

Belarmine answereth to the first reason : that therefore it was expedient, that Christ should go away, because his visible presence did worke in his Apostles an humane loue : but the inuisible presence of his flesh in the Eucharist worketh not an humane, but a spirituall loue, and therefore in every way profitable, cap. 9.

Coma. First, the visible presence of Christ after the resurrection, did not worke an humane or carnall loue in the Apostles, but thereby their faith and belife was strengthened : as Thomas by seeing and feeling him beleueed, and said, my Lord and my God, Ioh. 20. 28. Secondly, though the Apostles were somewhat addicted vnto Christs bodily presence, it was not for any carnall affection vnto him, but for that loue they had to his doctrine, and because of the comfort they receiued by him : but his bodily presence in the Eucharist, is neither profitable for doctrine nor comfort, and therefore lesse fruitfull, than his visible presence was. Thirdly, the reason then of Christs bodily departure, was to send another comforter, who needed not to come, as long as he was present personally to comfort them : and if the first comforter bee present still in bodie, the second is superfluous : if the second be not superfluous, the first is, and therefore the bodily presence is not necessarie. Fourthly, Christ promisseth, that after his departure hee would come againe, and wee should see him, Ioh. 16. 16. After a little while, and yete shall see me, and he would see vs, vers. 22. I will see you againe. Christ then as he seeth vs, so is he seene : if he be in the Eucharist, he seeth vs with his bodily eyes, then should he be so seene of vs : but wee see him not, therefore he is not there to be seene : for if he were present, he would both see vs, and bee seene of vs, according to his promise. Wherefore he doeth no otherwise see vs and visite vs, then by his spirit, in the Eucharist ; and so hee writeth him.

To the second he answereth : that there is not the same reason of Baptisme, and the Eucharist : for the Eucharist is not onely a Sacrament of our spirituall refection and nourishing, as Baptisme of our regeneration, but it is also a memoriall and a compendium of Christs life, death, and resurrection. Secondly, it is a testimonie and pledge of Christs loue toward vs. Thirdly, it is as it were the seede of the resurrection of our bodies, by the coniunction of Christs glorious bodie with our mortall bodies. Fourthly, it is the sacrifice of Christians, which cannot be offered in bread alone, for then it should not exceede the sacrifices of the Law : for bread of it selfe is inferiour to the best of calves and rammes, &c. Belarmine ibid.

Coma. First, Baptisme also is a memoriall, and as the Apostle calleth it, a similitude, and representation of the death and resurrection of Christ, Rom. 6. 5. Secondly, it is also as well as the Eucharist a pledge of Christs loue, representing vnto vs the shedding of his blood, and his dying for vs, wherein Christs loue appeared, Rom. 5. 8. Wherefore in neither of these respects is the reall presence more necessarie in the Eucharist, than in Baptisme. Thirdly, it is more proper to Baptisme to seal vnto vs the hope of our resurrection, as S. Paul saith, that by Baptisme wee are grafft into the fellowship of Christs resurrection, Rom. 6. 5. Neither is there any such coniunction of Christs bodie to our bodies in the Eucharist, seeing they themselues affirme, that Christs bodie remaineth not long in the outward shape of bread is vncorrupted : but if it were the seede of our resurrection, it should remaine, as S. Iohn saith, 1. Epist. chap. 3. 9. their seede remaineth in them. And againe, the which also doe eate Christs bodie in the Sacrament, so that by this reason, they also are partakers of Christs resurrection. Fourthly, the Eucharist is no other sacrifice, than of praise and thanksgiving, Hebr. 13. 15. whereof it is named the Eucharist : and yet the sacramentall bread, in respect of the liuely representation is more excellent, than the fleshie sacrifices of the Law : and thus being gaunted, sheweth no difference betweene Baptisme and the Eucharist, but onely betweene the sacrifices of the Law, and the Sacraments of the Gospell.

To the third reason hee answereth, that although Christs bodie in the Eucharist bee not immediately perceiued by any sense, but onely by faith; yet mediately, et in alijs speciebus, and in another shape, is touched by the hands, tongue, eyes, &c. as Physicians minister medicines in such sort qualified, as they are not perceiued, and yet are very profitable.

Contra. First, if the carnall presence in the Eucharist bee an apprehension of faith, then it can not any way be discerned by the sight, or any other sense: for faith is the euidence of things, which are not seene, as it is defined by the Apostle, Heb. 11. 1. And, we walke by faith, and not by sight, 2. Corinth. 5. 7. which were no good disinction, if the same thing at the same instant could be comprehended both by faith, and sight. Secondly, he saith, that Christ is both touched and seene in another shape, that is, vnder the formes of bread and wine: this is to speake contraries: for if it be another shape, that is seene to the eyes, another taste, that is in the mouth; then is it not Christs bodie that is seene or tasted: but that thing must bee both seene and tasted, whose qualities are offered to the senses. Thirdly, the example brought in is nothing like: first, medicines are somewhat allaiued by other mixtures, yet some taste remaineth; but of Christs bodie there is no sense at all. Secondly, Potions, though by arte tempered and compounded, yet appeare to the sense in their own colour and shape; but so doth not (as they say) Christs bodie. Thirdly, the medicine remaineth in the stomacke, till by the heate thereof it be disperfed, and so worketh in the bodie; but if it be immediately cast vp againe it worketh not: but Christs bodie in the first alteration in the stomacke departeth (as they say) and therefore it corporally profiteth not, as a medicinall Potion doth.

Argum. 4. It is an inglorious, vnworthie and vnseemely thing, that the glorious and impassible bodie of Christ should be inclosed in the formes of bread and wine, deuoured and chewed, eaten and gnawen of myce, subiect to mould and rottennes, to be spilt vpon the ground, burnt in the fire: for all these inconueniences must needs follow vpon the carnall presence.

Bellarm. It is no more inglorious or impossible for these things now to happen to the bodie of Christ, then it was for him to be caried in his mothers wombe, to bee swathed in swaddling bands, and to be subiect to iniuries which were done to his bodie vpon earth, lib. 3. cap. 10.

Ans. First, as though there bee the like reason of the passible bodie of Christ, while hee liued in the world, which was buffeted, whipped, pierced with nayles, crucified; and of his glorious and impassible bodie now, that it may in like manner bee rent and diuided. Secondly, neither was it possible that Christs passible bodie should bee subiect to the like infirmities, as to rottennes, corruption, consumption in the fire, as his bodie is now in the Sacrament. If it were then veried in Christ, Thou shalt not suffer thy holy one to see corruption; for his bodie did not putrifie or corrupt in the graue: much more is it true in the glorious bodie of Christ, that it cannot suffer any such things: How then are you not ashamed to affirme, that the bread and wine are made in the sacrament, the very bodie and blood of Christ; seeing those elements, if they bee kept long, will waxe fower and mouldie, and fall to corruption? which things once to thinke of the glorious bodie of Christ, were great impietie. Leau off for shame then these your grosse opinions, so much derogatorie to the glorie and honour of Christ.

Bellarmino answereth againe: first, that they are the accidents of bread and wine, that are corrupted, and doe putrifie, and are eaten and chewed, &c. and not the bodie of Christ. Secondly, as the diuinitie is present euery where, and yet is not burned in the flame, nor yet putrified in things that doe putrifie: so likewise the bodie of Christ, lib. 3. c. 10. respons. 1.

Contra. First, it is most absurd to say, that accidents of wine make men drunke, that accidents of bread doe feede myce, that the accidents waxe fower, and mouldie: for one accident cannot be the subiect of another. Secondly, in comparing Christs Deitie and bodie together, what doth he else but with the Eutychians confound them, or with the Vbiquitaries destroy Christs humanitie?

We haue the glorious testimonie of the Martyrs: Master Philpot holy Martyr; The Scripture saith, that Christ is like to vs in all things, sinne onely excepted: but our humane nature cannot receiue any thing that is contrarie to it selfe, as to bee bodily present, and absent, to bee in heauen and earth at the same time: Ergo, neither can the bodie of Christ without destruction of his humane nature.

Master Denly Martyr alleageth these places of Scripture: Hebr. 9. Christ is not entred into holie places made with hands, but is entred into heauen, &c. Ioh. 17. Now I am not in the world, and they are in the world, &c. Ioh. 16. I went out from the father and came into the world. Again, I leaue the world, and goe to the father: Ergo, Christ is not according to his bodily presence now in the worlde: Far. pag. 1685.

I will hereunto adioyne some testimonie from themselves: Deer par. 3. dist. 2. cap. 44. Deus scilicet finitarius, sursum est Dominus, &c. Till the world be ended, the Lord is aboue, &c. for the body of our Lord, wherein he rose againe, must bee in one place. Again, their Master saith, Quoniam non in se locum: That the diuine nature onely is illocable. But now they make Christs hu-manitie illocable: for if it be in the Eucharist, it is not there as in a spacious place: for what is the composse of a thin wafer-cake to receiue the proportion of a mans bodie? Againe, he saith, Quod circumscribitur erat, &c. That which was in Christ circumscribable, so remaineth: but if Christs bodie be in the bread, it is incircumscribable, whereas it was circumscribable before. For that we call circumscribable, when the place and the thing placed, doe answer, and are correspondent each to other in space and proportion: which is not seene in the placing of Christs bodie in the composse of a thin cake.

THE SECOND QUESTION, CONCERNING Transubstantiation.

The Papists.

If any man shall say, that there remaineth the substance of bread and wine in the Sacrament, 18. Error.
After the words of consecration; or shall denie that the whole substance of bread is chaunged and conuerted into the bodie of Christ, and the whole substance of wine into the blood of Christ, the formes and shewes onely of bread and wine remaining, which singular and miraculous con-uerſion the Church calleth Transubstantiation; let him be accursed, Concil. Trident. sess. 13. can. 2.
Bellarmin. lib. 3. de Sacram. Euchar. cap. 19. Rhemist. Matib. 17. sect. 1.

Argum. 1. Christ transfigured his bodie marueilously in the Mount, as wee reade, Matth. 17.
sect. 1. Ergo, he is able to exhibite his bodie vnder the formes of bread and wine, Rhemist.

Ans. First, your argument followeth not, Christ could giue a glorious forme to his passible bodie: Ergo, he can take away the essentiall properties of his naturall bodie, and yet keepe a true bodie still. Or thus, Christ could glorifie his bodie not yet glorified: Ergo, he can or will dishonor his glorious impassible bodie, by enclosing it vnder the formes of base creatures to bee deuoured of dogs and myce: which is honoured and worshipped of the Angels and Saints in heauen. Secondly, the question is not so much of Christs power, as of his will: therefore you conclude not aright, Christ is able to doe it: Ergo, he will.

Argum. 2. He that seeth water turned into wine by the power of Christ, neede not to doubt how he chaungeth bread into his bodie, Rhem. Iob. 2. sect. 2.

Ans. First, when you can bring any warrant out of Scripture for your imagined conuerſion, as we haue for this myracle, we will giue eare vnto you. Secondly, and when it shall appeare to the senses, that the bread is changed into flesh, as the water was knowne to bee turned into wine, by the colour and taste: wee shall then no more doubt of this conuerſion of the bread, than they doo of the other of water. Thirdly, if Christ could alter and chaunge the substances of creatures;
what reason haue you to giue such an omnipotent power to euery Priest, with a few words to doe as much as Christ himselfe could when he was present? Fourthly, all this prooueth but an abilitie and power in Christ, not a will or purpose to worke any such change or conuerſion.

Argum. 3. Bellarmin. vrgeth these words of our Sauour, which serue them for all purposes, this is my bodie: which words (saith he) doe signifie a substantiall, not a figuratiue change onely of the bread into Christs bodie: for otherwise the bread, and the flesh of Christ being things of diuers natures, cannot bee one pronounced, or affirmed of another: for bread is not flesh, remaining in it owne nature, Bellarmin. lib. 3. cap. 19.

Ans. First, as one thing being of a diuers nature, cannot be pronounced of another, vnlesse there be some chaunge: so neither can the same thing bee affirmed or predicated of it selfe, as to say, this substance is my bodie, which is all one in their sense to say, this bodie is my bodie.

Secondly, a figuratiue chaunge is sufficient according to the phrase of Scripture, though there be no materall or substantiall mutation in this proposition, this is my bodie, that is, this bread sig-nifieth my bodie: like as, when Christ breathed vpon his Apostles, hee said, Accipite ye scti holi
Ghost, calling the very breath the spirit, which it signified and exhibited onely; so the holy Ghost descending vpon Christ in his Baptisme is called the Doue: so then, as the breath of Christ is the spirit, and the Doue the holie Ghost; so is the bread Christs bodie, that is in figure and signification.

Contra. Bellarmin. replieth, that the breathing of Christ is not called the holie spirit, nor yet the Doue is said to bee the holie Ghost; but they were onely signes and instrumentall meanes to conuey the spirit.

Ans. First, that the breathing of Christ, and the likenes of the Doue, were not the spirit it selfe, but onely signes thereof, we graunt; and so wee say the bread is a signe and figure of Christs bodie in the Eucharist. Secondly, it is euident by the text, that the Doue, and the breath of Christ, are called the holie Ghost: as Ioh. 1. 33. Vpon whom thou shalt see the spirit come downe, &c. that is he,
which baptizeth with the holy Ghost: but Iohn saw onely the Doue to light vpon Christ; therefore the doue is called the spirit: so Iohn 20.22. Christ breathed upon them, and said, receive ye the holy Ghost: that which the Apostles received, is called the holy Ghost; but they received sensible nothing but his breathing; Ergo, his blast or breathing is said to be the spirit, being a signe and representation thereof, as the bread in the Eucharist is of Christs flesh.

Argum. 4. Though the substance of bread and wine be changed; yet the formes remaine still for these causes. First, because if the formes also should be changed, there should be no sensible signe left, and so no Sacrament. Secondly, the faith of the receiuer is the better tried this way: who beleueth the flesh of Christ to bee present, though hee see it not. Thirdly, Christ would not haue the formes altered, because man abhorred to eate humane flesh in the proper shape, Bellarmin. cap. 22.

Ans. First, your first reason is insufficient: for neither doe the bare and naked signes or accidents of the elements make a Sacrament, but the substance of them: for betweene the Sacrament and the thing thereby represented, there ought to be some conueniencie and agreement: namely, as the bodie is nourished by bread and wine, so doth the soule feede vpon the bodie and blood of Christ. But they are not the accidents of bread and wine that nourish vs, but the substance: Ergo, not the accidents, but the substance is the visible signe. Likewise in Baptisme, it is not the forme or outward accident of water, that is the signe, but the substance of water that washeth.

2 It is a more liuelie operation of faith, to beleue in Christ absent in heauen, then present in the earth, although hee appeare not to the senses. And Christ is indeede properly the object of faith, as he is now in heauen: Hope (saith the Apostle) entreateth into that which is within the vaine, whither our forerunner Iesus is entred for vs, Hebr. 6. 19. Faith and hope therefore doe leade vs to things within the vaine, that is, things in heauen, and not vpon the earth.

3 What a strange saying is this, that Christ giueth his flesh to be eaten in the Sacrament, yet hideth it vnder the formes of bread and wine, least men should abhorre to eate it? for is it to be thought that Christ would commaund any vnseemely thing, or contrarie to humanitie? How could the Apostles commaund the Gentiles to abstaine from strangled and blood, Act. 15. when as, by your doctrine, they did eate dayly in their assemblies the raw flesh and blood of Christ? And how is it that Christ now forgetteth his owne rule, He that doth the truth (saith he) cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest? Iohn 3. 21. But Christ now flieth the light, and shroudeth himselfe vnder the shape of bread and wine, and will not shew his flesh. These therefore are but fillie causes which you haue rendred, why Christ would haue the substance of bread onely changed, and not the accidents.

The Protestants.

AS the name of transubstantiation is strange, and newly deuised; so is the meaning thereof most vnreasonable: that in the Sacrament, the substance of bread should be conuerted into the bodie of Christ, the formes onely remaining: An opinion contrarie to Scripture, reason and common sense.

Argum. 1. As Christ said, Matth. 26. (poynting to the bread) This is my bodie: so he saith, Iohn 6. 35. I am the bread: but in this place he was not changed into bread: why then in the other place should the bread be turned into his bodie? for the speech is all one.

Bellarmin answereth, that there is great difference betweene these two speeches, This bread is my bodie, and I am the true bread: for there Christ speaketh of materiall bread, in the iudgement of our aduersaries, but in the other sentence he vnderstandeth celestially bread: and therefore Christ saith not simplie, I am bread, but I am the bread of life, or the bread of God, or such like: and this spirituall bread Christ was in deede; there needed no conuerſion or change for the matter. Bellarmin. cap. 24. resp. ad arg. 1.

Contra. First, if Christ, in saying, I am the bread, doe vnderstand bread spirituallie, which we denie not, what reason hath he, where Christ saith, verſ. 51. The bread, that I will giue, is my flesh, to inferre Sacramentall bread? if Christ, in saying, I, that is, my flesh is the bread, doe meane spirituall bread, when he saith, The bread is my flesh, why is he not also spirituallie to be taken? Secondly, as Christ saith spirituallie, he is the bread; so we also say, that the bread spirituallie is his bodie: therefore as in that speech, there needeth no change, as hee confesseth; so neither in the other are we forced to admit any alteration or change of substance. Thirdly, Christ saith not, I am the bread, simplie, but with some addition, saith Bellarmin: but he saith, I am the doore of the sheepe, Ioh. 10. 7. without any other adiection, yet was he not conuerted into the doore: no more is the bread chaunged into his bodie.

Argum. 2. The sense is not deceived in his proper object: but the eye in the Eucharist seeth nothing but bread, the tast discerneth nothing but bread, Ergo there is bread: for if the sight and feeling might be deceived; then by the same reason, the Manichees and Marcionites, who affirmed Christ to haue a phantasticall bodie, might answer vs, that though his bodie were both seene and felt, yet the senses might be deceived: And by the same reason Thomas might haue doubted still, notwithstanding notwithstanding his seeing and feeling of Christ: And further, if there be no bread or wine remaining, and yet the accidents of both, as the colour, taste; then should they be lying signes, and so they will charge the Sacrament of truth with falshood.

Bellarmine answereth: first, that the sense cannot be deceived in the accidents which are the true object, but in the substance it may, which is the object per accidentem; as he telleth us a tale of a peece of wood conuerted into a stone, that had the colour and shape of wood still: resp. ad argum. 5.

Contra. 1. Though the accidents, not the substance are object to the sense, yet by the accidents the substance is certainly discerned by a necessarie consequence of nature; for otherwise there should be no certaintie at all in the sense: but seeing euery substance hath his proper accidents, by the discerning of the accidents, the substance also is perceived. 1. It is possible for the eye sometime to be deceived, as in taking things artificiallie carued and painted for the very things themselves, and as in the example of the wood turned into a stone: but for all the senses to be deceived together, the eye, the feeling, the taste, it is not possible, as it must be in the Eucharist, where all the senses discern bread, and yet (they say) there is no bread.

Secondly, saith he, the argument from the sight and feeling to prove Christs true bodie, was good, because the soliditie of a bodie is the proper object of the feeling; but the substance of the bread and wine is not the proper object. Secondly, the Scripture maketh mention, that Christ had a true naturall bodie, and therefore the sight and feeling thereof grounded vpon the testimonie of Scripture, were good and sufficient proofes: Bellarmine. ibid.

Contra. First, the Apostles by their handling and seeing did not onely discern Christ to haue a solide bodie, but a bodie of bones and flesh: for that he saith, Handle me and see, for a spirit hath no flesh and bones, as you see me to haue, Luk. 24:39. So then not the soliditie onely, but the substance of Christs bodie, as his bones and flesh, was by their sense discerned: but in the Eucharist we discern neither flesh nor bones. Secondly, Christ would not haue them to beleue his word onely, that he had a true bodie, but to trust their owne sense also: so that the euidentie of sense, where there is no diuine testimonie, is a sufficient prooffe of things sensible. And againe, as the Scripture testifieth that Christ had a true naturall bodie; so also it witnesseth, that after consecration in the Eucharist, there remaineth true bread, as S. Paul calleth it bread being now consecrated thrice together: 1. Cor. 11. vers. 26, 27, 28.

Thirdly, saith he, the accidents of bread and wine, though the substance be gone, are no lying signes: for naturallie they doe shew bread and wine; but that in the Eucharist there is a worke aboute nature, that there should be the accidents of bread and wine without their substance.

Contra. 1. Yet for all this they are deceiueable signes, containing one thing, and shewing another; and the matter is not helped, but made the worse, in laying the blame not vpon nature, but vpon a worke beyond nature, which they make a cloake for deceite. Secondly, thus we see they cannot vpholde their foolish fantasies, but by destroying nature. Thirdly, for this their supernaturall worke, seeing they haue no Scripture, their words are but winde, and perswade not: for the Scripture is against them, for Christ is so farre from destroying nature, that he vpholdeth the nature of things by his word: Heb. 1. 3.

Argum. 3. The bread in the Eucharist after the consecration, is subiect to diuers changes and alterations, and so likewise the wine: for they may be boyled and made hote, they may be infected with poyson: for it is certaine that Vistor the 3. Pope, and Henric the 7. Emperour, were poysoned with the Sacrament: the wine may waxe sowre and turne to vineger: the bread may putrefie and breede wormes: Ergo, the substance of bread and wine remaine still: for the accidents cannot be subiect to such alterations: and to say that Christs bodie may be thus handled, it were great impietie. Argum. Pet. Martyris.

Bellarmine answereth: Materia substituitur à Deo in ipso instanti, in quo desinunt esse illa species: God supplieth some other matter in the very instant, when the formes begin to be changed, cap. 14. argum. 6.

Ans. Is not here good geare, thinke you, that if a man should come to poyson the Sacrament, that is, the bread and wine which are already consecrate, and made the bodie of Christ, God should supplie by a miracle some other matter for him to worke vpon, and so God himselfe should be accessarie vnto that wicked acte? Or if a sillie mouse should be so bolde as gnaw vpon a consecrate Host, that then likewise some other matter and substance should for that instant be appoynted: and so God should make miracles for mice? And why, I pray you, may not the substance of bread still remaine, as well as another substance to be put in the stead thereof?

Bellarmine answereth againe, that there is some matter for that instant supplied, and without a miracle, exigens ordine rerum: the order or course of things so requiring, like as the soule is sent into the bodie of ordinarie course. And concerning the poysoning of the Host, he saith there may be some poysoned matter mingled with the bread or wine, but that is not conuerted into Christs bodie hodie and blood: for nothing can be turned into Christs bodie or blood, but the bread and wine onely.

Contra. First, that the bread should be changed into Christs bodie, and againe another substance come instead of Christs bodie, and yet without a miracle, is very strange: for he may as well say, that the turning of water into wine, Iohn 2. was no miracle: neither because it is viall in the Eucharist, it is therefore no miracle; as the rayning of Manna was no lesse miraculous, falling euerie day, then if it had come but once: And the example of the comming of the soule is nothing like, for we haue Gods warrant for that, crecite, & multiplicamini, increase and multiply, which they haue not for the Eucharist. Let it also be remembered how contrarie he is to himselfe, for before, resp. ad argum. 3. he said that transubstantiation was supra ordinem naturæ, above the order of nature: here he saith it commeth to passe, exigente ordine rerum, according to the order of nature.

Secondly, if nothing be transubstantiated into the bodie and blood of Christ, but onely bread and wine, what then is become of the water which in the chalice you do vse to mingle with wine, which Innocent 3. determineth together with the wine to be transubstantiated into Christs blood, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 4. c. 6. Again you say, the poysoned substance is not turned into Christs bodie, but mixed together with it: Be it so, but what a dishonour is this to Christs bodie, that poyson may be receiued with it, and that it should not haue so much vertue, as many medicall confectiōs and receipts, which are taken against poyson: if Paul could shake the Viper from his hand without hurt, is there lesse vertue in Christs bodie? or if Vnicornes horne allayeth the malice of poyson, is Christs flesh lesse precious or vigorous? Wherefore lay your hand vpon your mouth, and confesse your errorious ignorance, if you can finde no better answer.

Argum. 4. When Christ spake these words, Hoc est corpus meum, the bread was transubstantiated, before, or after, or while the words were spoken. Before, they will not say, for the elements were not then consecrated: nor after, for then Christs words, This is my bodie, had not been true in that instant when they were spoken. Neither was the transubstantiation wrought in the while of speaking: for then should it not haue been done all at once, but successiue, and one part after another, as the words were spoken one after another. But this is also contrarie to the opinion of the Papists, that would haue it done altogether.

Belarmius answereth, that the conuerſion of the bread is not made till all the words be pronounced: and though there be no change, till the whole sentence (this is my bodie) be finished, yet it is done by vertue of all the words pronounced before.

Contra. If the transubstantiation be wrought by all the words, then, non fit simul, it is not done all at once, as he confesseth: for the words are not spoken all at once, but one after another. Then I aske, if all the words of consecration be not of like operation: if they be, why should not the first words at the very speaking, be working, as the last is? but so are they not, for he suspendeth the force of the first words, till the last syllable be pronounced: if all the words then be of like working, then is not the conuerſion wrought at one instant, as they generally holde, but in the leysure of speaking.

Argum. 5. It is against the nature and propertie of accidents and externall formes to be without a subiect, or substance, wherein they should rest: such are the whitenes and roundnes of the bread, the rednes and sweetnes of wine: if bread be gone, what is become of the roundnes and whitenes, and so of the wine? If a man aske what round or white thing is this, or what red and sweete thing is this, shewing the cup: what shall be answered? we cannot say, it is bread or wine: for there is none left. And I am sure they will not say, that the bodie of Christ is either round or white, or such like: and yet somewhat there must needs be, that must take denomination of these accidents.

Belarmius answereth, first, that although we cannot separate accidents from their subiects, yet God can: and in the beginning of the creation, there was an accident without a subiect, namely the light, which was made the first day, that moued without a subiect, vntill the Sunne was made, wherein the light rested.

Contra. First, we do not dispute of Gods power, neither how things are in Gods sight, but how they appeare vnto vs, whether accidents may be offered vnto our sight, without their subiect. Secondly, it is a fond opinion, which he would father vpon Basil, that the light was without a subiect: First, God is said to haue made or created the light; but creation is of substances, not of accidents. Secondly, God saw, that it was good: the light pleased God, which he had made: but God delighteth in no imperfect worke, as an accident without a subiect is imperfect. Thirdly, S. Ambrose thinketh, that this light was not afterward incorporated to the Sunne, but remained still a distinct light: Aliud est lumen diæ, aliud lumen Solis, &c. The light of the Sunne is one, the light of the day another: for there is a light, before the Sunne rise, and likewise after he is set: Hexamer. lib. 4. c. 3. Fourthly, notwithstanding, if in the beginning of the creation it had been so, so, yet now all things being disposed and settled in a perfect order, it is not to be expected: if accidents then might be without a subject, before things were brought to a perfect state, it followeth not, that it is or can be so now.

Secondly, saith he, the accidents of the bread and wine, though they haue no subsistence of themselves, after the substance of bread and wine are gone; yet they are in, and do depend of an other substance, Vi in consuetudine, non vi in subiecto: As in and of a preserver of them, not as in a subject, argum. 7. resp. ad 4.

Contra. First, if the accidents, as the rednesse, whitenesse, roundnesse do not consist of themselves, then they must haue their being in another substance, which is the body of Christ, that cometh in the stead of bread and wine: if they then haue their being in Christs bodie, what are they els but accidents to his bodie, which were a very inglorious thing to Christs bodie, which in brightnesse exceedeth the Sunne, to be ouer-shadowed with the accidentes of bread and wine? Secondly, I demaund, whether Christs bodie supposed to be present, haue not the proper accidentes of his bodie: if it haue (for otherwise a bodie without the proper adiuncts should be vnperfect) then the accidents of bread and wine cannot be there to; for this were to make accidents the subject of accidents, which were improper and vnnaturall: And againe, they bestow a goodly office vpon Christ, who vpholdeth all things, euen the heauens and earth, to be now a preserver onely of accidents.

Thirdly, though the substance of bread and wine remaine not, yet the quantitie remaineth, which taketh denomination of the accidents: as the host is said to be white, round, little in respect of the quantitie, respons. ad argum. 6.

Contra. First, the quantitie of a thing is the length, breadth, thickenesse, which are adiuncts to the substance, as well as other qualities of whitenesse, rednesse, &c. So then he defendeth one substance by another, to maintaine the being of qualities without their subject, he doth inculcate a quantitie without a substance, a thing as impossible as the other. Secondly, if the quantitie receive the denomination, you must not say, the host is white, round, &c. but the quantitie, as the breadth, length, thickenesse, is white, round, &c. So that, when wee aske, what round, or what white? in his opinion the answer must be this: a round, or white thickenesse or breadth, &c., which were very absurd: the foolish toys of this trifling Iesuite are not worth the while, that is spent about them.

Argum. 8. You say, The very flesh of Christ that did hang vpon the crosse, is in the Sacrament: but the cannot bee: for that flesh Christ tooke of the Virgin Maria: this sacramentall flesh is made of bread: Ergo, it is not the same flesh which was crucified vpon the Crosse.

Adou. The body of Christ is made of bread, but not as any matter or materiall cause thereof; but as the wine was made of water by our Sauour Christ.

Advs. And I pray you, how was the wine made of the water? was not the water the very matter which was turned into wine? for one of these three changes and mutations it must needs haue: first, either the water was annihilate and turned to nothing, and so the wine was created of nothing, which I am sure you will not grant. Secondly, or els there was a mixture of wine and water, the one being mingled with the other; which is likewise false, for it was very good and perfect wine: neither, I thinke, will you easily admit, that the body of Christ and the bread are mingled together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, there remaineth but the third kind of change, that is, the conuersion of one substance into another, as the water was changed into wine: and so is the substance of bread conuerted into the substance of Christs body, if you will haue any change at all: and thus Christ hath gotten by your helpe a breaden bodie; another from that, which he tooke of the flesh of the Virgin.

And thus may our argument be framed: The body, which Christ tooke of the Virgine, and which was nayled to the Crosse, was not made of bread: but this bodie, which is supposed to be in the Eucharist, is made of bread: Ergo, it is not that bodie.

Belarmine answereth, that euen the bodie of Christ, which was crucified, was made of bread: and the bread was changed and conuerted into it at his last Supper, when he said, This is my body: and though there be a conuersion of the bread, yet there is no production of Christs bodie out of the bread, but as the wine was made of water, Iohn 2. so is Christs bodie of bread. Belarmine. respons. ad argum. 9.

Contra. First, the bodie of Christ which was crucified, was made of the flesh of the Virgin: the bodie in the Eucharist is made of bread; and therefore they cannot be all one bodie: for it is one thing to be made of flesh; another thing, of bread. Secondly, where he maketh a difference between production, and conuersion, he vnderstandeth not himselfe: for the wine was produced out of the water, and the water was conuerted into the wine; so it was both a production and a conuersion: the difference is this, that conuersion is of the thing, which is conuerted; production, of that, whereinto it is conuerted: wherefore if Christs bodie be made of bread, as Chriſt made wine of water; the bread ſhall be the matter of Chriſts fleſh, as the water was of the wine: for it is ſaid, verſ. 9. that the Governour of the feaſt taſted the water which was made wine: Ergo, the ſubſtance of the water remained, though changed and converted. Thirdly, they muſt grudge, that the bread is eyther annihilated, that is, turned to nothing; or elſe converted into the ſubſtance of Chriſts fleſh: but the firſt is inſtantly denied by Beſarm. reſponſ. ad argum. 3. The bread, he ſaith, doth not vaniſh to nothing, and ſo utterly periſh: therefore it cannot be avoided, but that it paſſeth and is incorporate to the fleſh of Chriſt; and ſo, for all his ſophiſticall prating, Chriſt is become to haue a breadden bodie.

Let vs now further examine their owne decrees, decret. par. 3. diſt. 2. c. 36. Veniſſis ad aquam et panis dominicus facti eſtis: Ye came to the water, and were made the Lords bread: The Lords bread is then receiued ſpiritually in Baptiſme, and yet there is no tranſubſtantiation in Baptiſme: and c. 62. Commendamus vobis, &c. He commended to vs in this Sacrament his bodie and blood, Quoſcit nos ipſas, which bodie he maketh vs, for we are his bodie: we are that bodie of Chriſt, which is commended in the Eucharift, but we are not tranſubſtantiate into Chriſts bodie: Ergo, there is no tranſubſtantiation: Again, cap. 63. Hunc cibum & potum ſocietatem intelligi vult corpus, &c. This bread and drinke is the ſocietie of his bodie which is the Church: the bread then ſignifieth as the naturall bodie of Chriſt, ſo alſo his myſticall bodie; but it is not tranſubſtantiate into his myſticall bodie: Ergo.

Some alſo of the Papiſts themſelues haue denied tranſubſtantiation, as the Maſter of ſermons maketh mention of ſome in his dayes, that affirmed the ſubſtance of bread and wine to remaine, lib. 4. diſt. 11. d. and Innocentius 3. reporteth the opinion of ſome, That the water in the chalice tempered with the wine, was not tranſubſtantiate, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. and Dominus thinketh the matter of the bread and wine to remaine ſtill, in 4. diſt. 11. qn. 3.

Let vs ſee the conſent of antiquitie: Concil. Conſtanti. 7. ex Nicen. 2. ſeſſion. 6. ſem. 3. Pater Domini per ſpiritum ſanctum diuinitati eſt vnita, ita panem Euchariftia imaginem carnis per ſpiritum ſanctum aggreſſionem ſanctificatam diuinum ſuum corpus eſſe voluit: As the fleſh of our Lord was vnitd by the ſpirit to his diuine nature, ſo the bread of the Eucharift, the image of his fleſh being hatched by the coming of the holy Ghoſt, is become his diuine body. Hence we reaſon thus, a Chriſt is God and man, ſo the Eucharift is his body, and bread: but his manhood is not converted into his diuine nature: Ergo, the bread is not turned into his body.

This was the aſſertion of John Huſſe, for the which he was martyred: Concil. Conſtan. ſeſſ. 15. Sicut Chriſtus eſt ſimul Deus & homo, ſic hoſtia conſecrata eſt corpus Chriſti in figura & veru panis in natura: As Chriſt is both God and man, ſo the conſecrate hoſt is the body of Chriſt in figure, and true bread in nature.

B. Ridley holy martyr thus reaſoned againſt tranſubſtantiation: As the bread of the Lords table is Chriſts naturall body, ſo is it his myſticall body: but it is not Chriſts myſticall body by tranſubſtantiation: Ergo.

Again, the words of Chriſt ſpoken vpon the cup, and vpon the bread, haue like effect and working: but the words ſpoken vpon the cup haue no vertue to tranſubſtantiate, for then they ſhould tranſubſtantiate the cup, or that which is within the cup, into the new Teſtament: for Chriſt ſaid as well, This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood, as he did, This is my body: But this is not done: Ergo, not the other, vid. plur. p. 1444.

Laſtly, the diuerſitie of opinions, which this groſſe conceit of the carnall preſence of Chriſt hath hatched, do eaſily ſhew and demonſtrate vnto vs, what we are to thinke of this popiſh doctrine.

Some doe hold, that the elements doe ſtill remaine in their owne nature in the Sacrament, and that together with them the body of Chriſt is carnally preſent. Others doe teach, that there remaineth no more bread and wine, but onely the very naturall bodie of Chriſt: of each opinion there are three ſortes: Firſt of them that holde the elements not to be changed.

1. Some are of opinion, that the body of Chriſt and the elements are locally ioyned together, either for that inſtant onely, or els becauſe of the vbiquitie and omnipreſence of Chriſts humanity: of which opinion are the Lutheranes.

2. Some there were, that thought onely ſo much of the bread to be changed into the body of Chriſt, as was receiued of the faithfull: and that parte which the wicked receiued to be bread ſtill.

3. Others taught, that the bread was aſſumed in the Sacrament to the perſon of Chriſt, even as his humanity: ſo that Chriſt was bread by conſecration, as he was man by his incarnation: an horrible and monſtrous opinion, which is fathered vpon Rupertus the Abbot.

Iohannes Pariſienſis alſo came neere this opinion, who likewiſe affirmed, that the bread was aſſumed to the perſon of Chriſt, and vnited vnto him, yet not immediately as the other taught, but by the mediation and meanes of the humanity of Chriſt.

Secondly,

Secondly, of those that maintaine the conuersion of the elements. First, some would haue the forme onely of bread chainged, not the matter, as Durandus. Secondly, some contrariwise would haue the matter altered, and the forme to remaine. Thirdly, the Iesuites affirme the bread wholly in substance, both in matter and forme to be changed, the outward formes and accidents onely remaining, ex Bellarm. lib. 3. de sacram. Eucharist. cap. 11.

These men, when they begin once to leaue the truth, the Lord leaue them to themselves, and they run mad in their owne inuentions, not finding any end: and so it is iustly come vpon them, as S. Paul saith of the heathen: Because when they knew God, they did not glorifie him as God, neither were thankfull: they became vaine in their owne imaginations, and their foolish hearts was full of darkness: when they professed themselves to be wise, they became fooles. Rom. 1. 21. 22. We therefore leauing these shallowe pices of humane inuentions, which will hold no water, will betake vs to the fountaine of truth. This then, to conclude, is our definitiue sentence, and full determination, according to the Scriptures, that Christ indeed is verily present in the Sacrament, neither by conuersion of the bread into his body, either wholly, or in part; nor by assumption of the bread to the vnity of his person; nor yet by the coniunction of his body and bread together: but he doth verily exhibite himselfe, with all his benefits, spiritually by faith, to be eaten and drunke of the worthy receiuer; as we haue sufficiently proued before out of the Scriptures.

THE THIRD QUESTION, WHETHER THE EVCHARIST BEING ONCE CONSECRATED, BE A SACRAMENT, THOUGH IT BE NEITHER EATEN NOR DRUNKE.

The Papists.

The elements in the Sacrament, that is, the bread and wine, being once consecrate, which they say is done by the prolation of those words, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my body, whether they be receiued or not at that instant, but be reserued and kept in boxes, and pixes, and other vessels of the Church, for dayes, weekes, moneths, to be caried solemnly to those that are sicke, and to be applyed to other vses, are still the very body and blood of Christ, Trident. Council. sess. 13. can. 7. Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 2.

Argum. 1. Christs words which were spoken ouer the bread, This is my bodie, were true as soone as he brought them forth, before he said, Take, eat, and so likewise of the cup: therefore it was a Sacrament before they did receiue and eate it, and had been a Sacrament still, if it had not been receiued at all at that time, Bellarm. ibid.

Answe. First, these words of Christ, this is my bodie, were not spoken before he brake the bread and distributed it: but first, as Saint Matthew setteth it downe, he brake the bread and gaue it to his disciples, saying, Take, eat, and then follow those words, this is my bodie, Matth. 26. 26. which seeme to haue bene vttered euen in that instant, when they tooke the bread, and began to eate it.

Bellarmino replieth: first, saith hee, it seemeth, that the Euangelists did transpose the wordes of Christ, setting that first, which was spoken last: and contrariwise, as Mark. 14. 23. he tooke the cup, and when he had giuen thanks, he gaue it to them, and they all dranke of it, and he said vnto them, This is my blood of the new testament: Here the wordes of consecration (this is my blood) are rehearsed after they drinke, which notwithstanding were spoken before: and so these wordes, this is my bodie, are placed after, take, eat, &c. and yet were vttered before: for these wordes, this is my bodie, doe containe a reason, why he would haue them eate that meate: but the reason of the eating must first bee expressed before the bread be deliuered to be eaten.

Contra. First, where the Euangelists doe dissent in the order and placing of wordes, it is like that the wordes are transposed, as in that place of Mark, who onely of the Euangelists placeth these wordes, this is my blood, after their drinking: but where all the Euangelists keepe the same order, as in setting these wordes, this is my bodie, after, take ye, eate ye; it is euident, that the wordes were spoken in such order, as is set downe; seeing that the Apostle also rehearsing the institution, 1. Cor. 11. doth so place the wordes: wherefore it is great boldnes in him to controule the order agreed vpon by all the Euangelists, and the Apostle. Secondly, whereas S. Marke saith, they all dranke of it, and then Christ said, this is my blood, it maketh altogether for vs, that euen at the same instant of drinking Christ pronounced those wordes, signifying that it was his blood vnto those, that did receiue, and drinke it in faith. Thirdly, the reason or the cause in order of nature goeth alwaies before the signe or the effect, but not in order of time: as the end of a thing precedeth in intencion, but not in action: as Exod. 12. 11. Ye shall eate it in haste, for it is the Lords Passe-ouer. Here the Passeouer is the reason or cause, or end of their eating; yet their eating went before: so in the Eucharist, the participation of the Lords bodie is the cause, and end of their eating; yet by the same reason of the Passe-ouer, by eating in faith it is made the Lords bodie.

Secondly,

Secondly, the institution of the Sacrament consisteth partly of a promise, partly of a precept: the promise is this, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my bodie: The precept, Accipite, manducate, Tragetis, eat. Christ doth no otherwise make good his promise, then wee performe the condition: vnlles therefore accordingly we doe take and eate it, it is not the bodie of Christ.

To this Bellarmino answereth: first, that if these wordes, this is my bodie, contained a promise, it should be pronounced in the future tense; as when Christ saith, Mark. 16. he that beleueth, &c. shall be saved: so Christ would haue said, it shall be my bodie. Secondly, it would follow heretofore, that they should not in their eating receiue Christs bodie; for the condition prescribed goeth before, and then the thing promised afterward followeth, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. First, in the Scriptures we finde, that the promise is often deliuered in the present tense, because that which God promiseth is as certaine, as if it were alreadie performed: as Iohn 5. 24. He that beleueth, hath everlasting life: and Exod. 12. 11. This is the Lords Passe-ouer, he saith not, it shall be, but is: wherefore *Bellarmino*s collection is false. Secondly, Gods promise is oftentimes fulfilled in the very act of our obedience, as whereas God saith, Call vpon me, and I will heare thee, he doth heare vs not after we haue prayed, but while we are in prayer; as Ilay. 65. 24. Before they call, I will answer, and while they speake, I will heare: so in the very action of eating and receiuing in faith, Christs bodie is communicated to vs.

Argum. 2. S. Luke saith, chap. 22. This cup is the new testament in my blood: the blood of Christ was in the cup, before it was in their mouth: Ergo, it is a Sacrament, though it bee not receiued. Saint Paul also saith, 1. Cor. 10. 7 the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ. Ergo, it is the bodie of Christ before it be broken or distributed, Bellarmino. cap. 2.

Ans. First, there is a figure in Christs words, for the cup is taken for that, which was contained in the cup: and the other Euangelists rehearse them thus, this is my blood of the new testament: wherefore his collection drawne from a figurative speech concludeth not. And againe, Christ said before, drinke ye all of it, so that in the drinking his blood was exhibited. Secondly, the place of Saint Paul is for vs, for he speaketh of a communion, which cannot bee where there is no distribution: so that the communion of Christs bodie is in breaking of the bread, and distribution thereof.

The Protestants.

THe Eucharist is no Sacrament beside or without the vse thereof; so that, though some forme of words be pronounced ouer it, if it bee not receiued and eaten and drunke, it is no Sacrament: neither is that which remaineth after the distribution, the Eucharist being ended, either of the bread or wine, any part of the Sacrament, but so much onely as is taken and vsed.

1. Cor. 11. 24.

Argum. 1. It is no Sacrament, vnlesse it bee vsed according to the institution as Christ hath commaunded it: but to the institution it belongeth on the behalfe of the Minister, to blesse, break, and distribute it: on the behalfe of the Communicants, to take, eate, and drinke it: in them all, thereby to shew the Lords death, and to doe it in remembrance of Christ. But this cannot bee performed by vsing the words of benediction onely, but by the whole action: for how can they shew the Lords death, or doe it in remembrance of Christ, vnlesse they take, and eate? Ergo, if it be not so vsed, it is no Sacrament.

Bellarmino answereth: first, that to reserue the Eucharist is not contrarie to the institution of Christ: for it is reserued to be eaten, though not presently: so that the deferring of the eating, as to keepe it to be carried vnto the sicke, may very well agree with the first institution, where Christ commaundeth it indeede to be eaten, but not presently.

Contra. First, at the institution of the Lords Supper, they did presently take and eate, and Saint Marke saith, that they all drunke of it, Mark. 14. 23. so that, if the present eating and drinking be agreeable to the institution, the deferring of it is contrarie. Secondly, your reserued host is not alwaies eaten; for sometime it putrieth and mouldeth, in which case, by their owne Canons it must bee committed to the fire: so that herein there must bee an apparant breach of the institution. Thirdly, the Sacrament neede not to bee kept for the sicke, for it may much better bee ministred vnto the sicke at home, if there be a sufficient number well prepared, and the sicke person desiring it onely to his comfort, not of any superstitious conceit, in being addicted to the outward element.

Lastly, S. Origen thus writing, Hom. 5. in 7. cap. Leuitic. Dominus panem, quem discipulis dabat &c. The Lord did not commaund that bread, which hee gaue to his disciples, to bee deferred till the morrow, sheweth, that the present eating is most agreeable to the institution; as the parishall Lambe was commanded presently to be eaten, Exod. 12. 8.

Bellarmino answereth againe, that the Sacrament may be a Sacrament, though it be not vsed to that end, for the which it was instituted: for to the institution belongeth both the essence of the Sacrament, which is the consecration, and the vse, which is the manducation or eating: now if there there be the essence, though not the use, it is a Sacrament: as a chaire made to sit in, is a chaire still, though no man sit therein.

Contra. First, it is a most impious assertion, that the Sacrament may bee a Sacrament, though not used to the end it was instituted for: doth he thinke then, that the Eucharist if it bee cast vnto dogs, or swine, remaineth a Sacrament? or yf it be baptized, it is baptism? Secondly, in some things which consist in action, the very use is of the essence, as in speaking, and singing, the very use and action is the essence of the voyce and song: so in the Eucharist, which partly consisteth in eating, the very use is of the essence: That like as the paschall Lambe was not the Pasche-ouer, vnles it were eaten, Exod. 12. 11. so is not the bread a Sacrament: being not receiued. Thirdly, consecration becometh to bee the essence of the Sacrament; but eating and receiuing belongeth to the consecration: for the elements are not consecrated onely by rehearsing of the words of institution, but by the whole action of receiuing, thanksgiuing, &c. as S. Paul sheweth, 1. Cor. 10. 16. which he had said, the cup, which we bless, is the communion, &c. addeth further, the bread, which we break: the breaking of the bread answereth to the blessing of the cup: whereupon it followeth, that the bread is in part blessed and sanctified by the breaking and distribution thereof. Lastly, a chaire is a chaire, though it be not sit in; so is the bread, bread still, though it be not eaten in the Sacrament: but it followeth not by this example, that the Sacrament is a Sacrament still, though not used; for the Sacrament consisteth in action, and is not a permanent thing, as a chaire is. So then, notwithstanding any thing yet objected, it appeareth to be contrarie to the institution of Christ, to celebrate the Eucharist without eating and communicating, and indeede it is no Sacrament at all, if this be wanting: as out of S. Paul we reason thus:

In the Eucharist there is alwaies a remembrance of Christ, and a shewing forth of his death, 1. Cor. 11. 24. but in eating and drinking in the Sacrament the Lords death is shewed forth, ver. 26. Ergo, in the sacramentall eating and drinking consisteth the Eucharist.

Argum. 3. The Sacraments of the new Testament are alike, and of one and the selfesame kind; there is one way of instituting and consecrating both: but the water in Baptisme is no part of the Sacrament, but during the solemne action of baptizing, afterward it returneth to the common use, so much as is not used: Ergo, it is so also in the Eucharist: for as Christ saith to his Apostles, It is my body: Goe and baptize: so that it was no Sacrament, vnlesse some bodie were baptized: euen so hee saith, Accipite, manducate: Take, eate. No Sacrament then, vnlesse it bee receiued and eaten.

And here, I pray you, let it be noted, how well the Iesuites agree amongst themselves: our Rhetoricians commend the reseruing also of the water in Baptisme, and carrying of it home to giue it the diseased to drinke, annot. Iam. 5. sect. 5. Bellarmine saith, that Res permanens in baptismo: That the thing permanent in Baptisme, that is, water which remaineth, is not the Sacrament, but ipsa actio, the action of baptizing it selfe, and alloweth onely the Eucharist to bee reserued, and remaine a Sacrament, nam extra usum, without the use thereof, Bellarm. lib. 4. de Eucharist. cap. 3. But we haue shewed alreadie, that both the Sacraments are hallowed and sanctified alike, and that both in the one and the other, the use onely and present action according to Christs institution, maketh the Sacrament.

Bellarmine answereth, that there is great difference betweene Baptisme and the Eucharist: for Baptisme consisteth in the action, as of baptizing; but so doth not the Eucharist: for it standeth not in the action of eating, for that is an act onely of the receiuer; but Sacraments are not the acts onely of the receiuers, but of the ministers also: neither in the action of breaking is the Sacrament, for it is no signe of any inuisible grace: nor yet in the act of consecration, for that helpeth to make the Sacrament: Ergo, it is not the Sacrament, Bellarm. cap. 3.

Contra. We doe not affirme, that the Eucharist consisteth severally in any one of these actions of eating, breaking, consecrating, but that all these ioynly together are required to make the Sacrament: first then, as Sacraments are not onely the acts of the receiuers, so neither are they without them: but as in Baptisme, there is the act of the Minister to baptize, and the act of the receiuer to be baptized; so in the Eucharist, there is the act of the Minister to breake and distribute, and of the receiuer to take and eate. Secondly, the breaking also of the bread hath a spirituall signification: for thereby is signified the breaking and communication of Christs bodie spiritually vnto vs, 1. Cor. 10. 16. as likewise the manner of Christs death, whose bodie was in a manner broken vpon the crosse for vs, 1. Cor. 11. 24. Thirdly, we say not that consecration is the very Sacrament, but that it concurrerth with other actions to make the Sacrament: and the same reason which he vttereth against consecration in the Eucharist, might be enforced against Baptisme, that the action of baptizing is not the Sacrament it selfe, because it helpeth to make the Sacrament. So then as we say not that the very action of washing in Baptisme is the whole Sacrament; for there is beside the inuisible grace represented by that washing, and the words of institution; but yet without that action it is no Baptisme: so though the very act of eating and drinking be not the Eucharist; yet yet it is necessarily required, without the which, and other actions it is no Sacrament. There is then betwene Baptisme and the Eucharist herein no difference at all.

In Augustines time some vsed to receive the Communion daily: but vpon the Sabbath or Lords day, it was commonly receiued of all: Quotidie Eucharistia communione percipere, nos laudat, nec reprehendit; omnibus tamen dominicis diebus communicandum suadet & hortor: Every day to receive the Eucharist, I neither commend, nor dispraise it; but every Lords day I doe perswade men and exhort all to communicate. It should seeme then, that in those daies there was no such superstitious reseruatiō of the Sacrament, seeing euery day, or at the least euery Sabbath it was administered.

Let vs heare antiquitie speake: Epistol. 2. Clement. and it is rehearsed, De cr. par. 3. distill. 2. a. 3. Si remanserint, in crastinum non reseruentur, sed cum timore & tremore clericorum diligentia consumantur & comedantur: If any part remaine, let it not bee kept till the morrow, but let the Clerks with feare and trembling eate them. By this wee see that it was not lawfull to reserue the Sacrament, no not a day.

Bellarmines euasion here is this, that Clement is so to be vnderstood, that no part of the Eucharist should be reserued, vnlesse some portion for the sicke: so his meaning is, that not much of the Eucharist should remaine, Bellarmin. cap. 5.

Contra. It is euident by the words of the decree, that whatsoever remained, the Ministers should eate, and nothing at all be left till the morrow: Tanta in altaria holocausta, &c. Let so much bee offered vpon the Altar, as may suffice the people, &c. but if there remaine, let the Clerks eate them, &c. First, the prouision must bee made for the people onely, that communicate: but if any part should be reserued for the sicke, the prouision and offering ought to be made thereafter. Agnes, he calleth it holocaustum, a whole burnt offering, alluding to the rite of that sacrifice, which was consumed wholly vpon the Altar. Thirdly, the words are general, the Ministers must eate that which remained; and so, if any thing were intended for the sicke, they must eate it likewise, if it were a remainder. Lastly, this decree hath relation to the like rite of the Paschall Lambe: Non derelinquitur de eo, &c. There shall not remaine of it till the morning, Exod. 12. that as not one bit of the Pasche-ouer was to remaine till the next day; so neither should any part of the Eucharist be reserued.

The holy Martyrs also haue sealed this truth: Iohn Philpot holy Martyr; I doe not say that the receiuing maketh it a Sacrament onely: but I say, that a common receiuing must needs be concurrent with the true Sacrament, as a necessarie member; without the which it cannot be a Sacrament: because Christ hath made this a principall part of the Sacrament: Take ye, &c. For pag. 1875.

Richard Woodman: As if the words of Baptisme be sayd ouer the water, and there be no able there to be baptized, it is no Baptisme; so without eating and receiuing, it is no Sacrament, for pag. 1992.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, CONCERNING the elements or materiall part of the Sacrament, namely bread and wine.

The Papists.

no Error.

1. THe bread which is vsed in the Sacrament, ought to bee vnleauened: because it is not agreeable to Christs institution, who made the Sacrament of vnleauened bread, for he instituted his last Supper, after he had eaten the Pasche-ouer: which was to be eaten with sweete and vnleauened bread, according to the Law; neither was there any leauen to be found in Isræll for seuen daies together: and not onely Christ, but all the Iewes at that time did keepe the Pasche-ouer; and the next day after, in the which Christ suffered, was the first solemne festiual day of the seuen, being the fifteenth day of the moneth, as it was commaunded, Leuit. 23. 5. Rho. 1. Cor. 11. felt. 10. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Eucharist. cap. 7.

Argum. 1. That the Iewes kept the Pasche-ouer at the same time, that Christ and his Apostles did, Bellarmin pretendeth to proue by these places of Scripture, Mark. 14. 12. The first day of vnleauened bread, when they sacrificed the Pasche-ouer: Luk. 22. 7. Then came the day of vnleauened bread, when the Pasche-ouer must be sacrificed: Ergo, at the same time, when Christ eate the Pasche-ouer, it was commonly obserued of all, Bellarmin. cap. 8.

Contra. The Euangelists thus writing doe respect the right time of the Pasche-ouer, as it was appointed by the Law, and obserued by Christ, not regarding the contrarie corrupt vse and custome of the Iewes, who to auoide the keeping of two festiuals together, did deferre the eating of the Pasche-ouer till the 15. day at night: but Christ, according to the law, did eate it with his disciples the 14. day at euen.

Bellarmin

Belarmus answereth: first, that this tradition of the Iewes, that the Pasch should not bee kept vpon the 6. day of the weeke, which was now the 13. day of the moneth, because of the concurrence of two festiualls, might very well agree with Moses law: for the account of the daies must not be according to the Astronomically computation, but according to the account of the Hebrue Calendar, wherein they might so calculate the time of the Pasch, as that it should not fall vpon the 6. day; and so they might set their Calendar in the beginning of euery yeere, as that the feast should fall that day; as the Christians now haue a speciall rule for the obseruation of Easter: and this tradition our Sauour Christ was bound also to keepe. Secondly, this tradition of the Hebrues was brought in long since Christs time, Bellarm. cap. 7. 8. resp. ad Burgenf.

Ans. First, it is blasphemie to say, that Christ was bound to keepe y traditions, whereby they made the word of God of no authoritie, Mark. 7. 13. as this tradition in altering the Pasch from the 15. day of the moneth is contrarie to the law: which reckoneth the daies according to the Astronomical account of the moneths, not after the deuise of any such Calendar. So then Moses saith, they should eate the Pasche-ouer the 14. day (of the moneth, not of the Calendar) at euen, Exod. 12. 6. and the next day, which is the 15. should be the first solemne day of the feast: But the Iewes Calendar saith, this yeere you shall eate the Pasche-ouer the 15. day at euen; and keepe the solemne feast the 16. day: this was therefore a manifest transgression of the law. Secondly, it is vntrue also, that this tradition of the Iewes began after the time of our Sauour, that is not to keepe the Pasche-ouer vpon the Sabbothe eue, but to put it off to the Sabbothe: for we force not vpon the authoritie of some of the Iewish Rabbins alleaged by Bellarmine, who in this cause are not to bee heard being enemies to Christ: although we want not also the graue testimonie of some learned in the Hebrue rites, as of Rupertus in cap. 23. Lentic. and of Paulus Burgenf. in addition. ad Lyran. comment. cap. 26. Matth. who are of this iudgement, that this tradition was receiued long before Christs time. And this appeareth to be so by the Scripture, Iohn 19. 14. It was the preparation of the Pasche-ouer, when Christ was condemned of Pilate and crucified: but that was the 15. day of the moneth, which by the law should haue been the first solemne day of the Pasche-ouer: so that this being the day of preparation, the Pasche-ouer was put off till the next day, which was the Sabbothe.

Apom. 1. The day wherein Christ suffered was the festiuall day of the Pasche-ouer; and therefore the euen before, the Pasche-ouer generally was eaten of the Iewes. Bellarm. c. 8. The first he would thus proue: First, Ioh. 13. 1. Before the feast of the Pasche-ouer, when Iesus knew that the hour was come, &c. Christ therefore did eate the Pasche-ouer before, and the feast followed the next day. Likewise Ioh. 18. 39. Pilate saith, You haue a custome, that I should deliuer one at the Pasche-ouer: Ergo, or that instant the Pasche-ouer was begun: and therefore the Iewes say, it was not lawfull for them to put any to death, namely at that instant, because it was at the feast: for otherwise they did, and might put to death.

Caues. To the two first places we answer: first, that Christ did and might eate the paschall Lamb before the Pasche-ouer, though it followed not immediatly the next day, but the day after. And the disciples supposition may very well stand, that when Christ had said to Iudas, That thou dost quickly, they thought he had bid him buy somewhat needfull against the feast, Ioh. 13. 29. for this might bee against the feast following after one day: or both Christ and his disciples may be taken to speake of the right time of the Pasche-ouer, which by the law should haue been kept the next day. Secondly, Pilate might deliuer one at or against the Pasche-ouer, though not vpon the very festiuall day it selfe.

Thirdly, it is a fond conceit, that the Iewes should answer, they could put none to death, only in respect of the feast then instant: first, it had been as vnlawfull for them to lend him bound to Pilate vpon that day, which they did, Matth. 27. 2. and in their owne persons to lay in accusations against him, vers. 12. and to crie out, Crucifixe him, Luk. 23. 23. and to see Christ crucified, Luk. 19. vers. 21. Secondly, it is euident, that they indeede were deprived of the Ciuill power in putting to death by the Romanes, and that some 40. yeeres before the destruction of the Temple, as some of their Rabbins confesse. And the words of the Iewes imphie so much in plaine meaning: It is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death: not this man, or at this time, but not any man. And therefore Pilate doth arrogate this authoritie, as peculiar to his place: I haue power to crucifie thee, and power to loose thee, Iohn 19. 11. as if he should haue said, I onely haue this power, not the high Priests or Elders. Thirdly, if the Iewes put any to death, it was either tumultuously without any forme of iudgement, as Stephen was cast out and stoned, Act. 7. 58. or they onely came together to enquire and examine, Act. 23. 15. and their counsell was still at commaundement of the chiefe Captaine, who was present to moderate their doings, as Act. 22. 30. the chiefe Captaine commaunded the high Priests, and all their counsell to come together. Act. 23. 10. The chiefe Captaine taketh Paul away from the Counsell: So that it is euident, that they had no authoritie to put to death of themselves: for they acknowledge no King, but Cesar, Ioh. 19. 15. Now it is cleere that the power of life and death is onely in the King, and therefore it belonged onely to Caesar. Bellarmino then bewrayeth great ignorance, to say that the Jewes had power in themselves, being then vnder the gouernment of the Romanes, to put any to death. So then Bellarmino hath not yet proued, that he pretended, that either the Jewes generally did eate the Passe-ouer, when Christ did, or that hee was crucified vpon their feast day.

The Protestants.

1. WE denie not, but that Christ might vse vneleavened bread, at the institution of his last Supper, having immediately before eaten the Paschall Lambe, which we doubt not but he kept, according to the Law, with sweete bread: yet in the time they are greatly deceiued, affirming, that all the Jewes eate the Passe-ouer likewise ouer euen, and crucified Christ on the morrow, which should haue been, and was vnto them (as they say) a chiefe festiuall day.

The truth is, that Christ eate the Passe-ouer the 14. day at euen, as it is appointed in the Law: but the Jewes had a contrary tradition: they would in no wise keepe two festiuall daies together: and therefore because the sixteenth day was their Sabbath, they would not haue the feast of vneleavened bread vpon the fifteenth day (though it were so appointed by the law) to auoid the concurrence of two holy daies together, but deferred it till the next day, which was their Sabbath, and eate the Passe-ouer the eue before, which was the fifteenth day at night: whereas Christ reforming that abuse, kept the Passe-ouer the eue before, according to the law, that is, the 14. night. It appeareth then, that the next day following, which wee call Friday, wherein Christ was put to death, was not kept of the Jewes as a holy day.

First, the text saith, they would not put Christ to death vpon the feast day, fearing the people, Mark. 14. 2.

Bellarmino answereth, that this was but the sentence of some in the Councell, which prevailed not; but their sentence rather stood; that thought it good to take any occasion at what time soeuer, to put Christ to death, cap. 9.

Contra. First, there is no mention made of any diuision in the Councell, but that they all agreed vpon it, not to apprehend Christ vpon the feast day: the words are, but they said, Matth. 26. 3. that is, the high Priests, Scribes and Elders of the people which were assembled, vers. 4. they all agreed in one. Secondly, who would thinke, that Bellarmino had so soone forgotten himselfe before, where the Jewes said, it is not lawfull for vs to put any to death, hee expoundeth it, in respect of the feast, that it was not lawfull for them therein to kill any: and yet now they are resolu'd vpon any day whatsoever to kill Christ: how can these things hang together?

Argum. 2. Secondly, if they had kept it holie, as the Law commaunded, they should haue had no seruile labour therein, that is, no worke of the bodie, Leuitic. 23. 7. But what could be a more seruile worke, then to crucifie Christ, to carry the Crosse, and pitch it in the ground, and such like, which the Jewes would not haue done vpon that day, which they were as straightly to keepe as the Sabbath? It is also called the preparation of the Sabbath, Mark. 15. 43. Wherein they were wont to prepare against the Sabbath, what was needfull: but such workes of preparation could not haue been done in that great festiuall day.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Jewes were not of such a daintie conscience, to thinke that such things were not lawfull vpon the feast day: they thought it sufficient, if with their owne hands they did not stone Christ: resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, yea the Jewes did many things against Christ with their own hands, they ouergainst him to take him, with swords and stauces, Mat. 26. 55. they did buffet him, & smite him with rods, vers. 67. they did carrie him bound to Pilate, chap. 27. 2. they tooke Iesus and led him when crucified, Ioh. 19. 16. therefore it is like also, that with their owne hands they crucified him: wherefore they should apparantly in thus doing haue broken the feast. Secondly, seeing that the Jewes were so superstitious in keeping of the rest of the Sabbath, that they reprov'd the Apostles for pulling the eares of corne, and would not suffer Christ to heale vpon the Sabbath, it is not like they took such libertie vpon the chiefe festiuall of the Passe-ouer, wherein all worke was as strictly forbidden, as vpon the Sabbath, sauing about their meate, Exod. 12. 16.

Argum. 3. Ioh. 18. 28. The high Priests went not into the common hall, lest they should be defiled, lest that they might eate the Passe-ouer: Ergo, they did not eate the Passe-ouer till that night, which was the euen after Christ was crucified.

Bellarmino answereth, that by the Passe-ouer here is not vnderstood the paschall Lambe, which was eaten at euen, but other sacrifices beside, whereof the Priests did eate, wherewith they celebrated the Passe-ouer, as Deut. 16. 2. Thou shalt sacrifice the Passe-ouer of sheepe, and of bullocks, &c. resp. ad argum. 4.

Contra. First, though the feast of the Passe-ouer were celebrated with other sacrifices, yet to eate the Passe-ouer, is not found in Scripture, but properly to betoken the eating of the Paschall Lambe, as Mark. 14. 12. 14. I will eate the Passe-ouer with my disciples, &c. Likewise, Matth. 26. 17. In all all these places, the sacrificing of the Pasceouer, the keeping of it, the preparing and eating of it (for all these phrases are used) are vnderstood onely of the Paschal Lambe: wherefore this is but a fillic shift, to obscure so euident a text. Secondly, that the Priestes could not eate the Pasceouer the eue before Christs suffering, it appeareth by this, that they were so full of businesse, in sending for Christ with swords and stanes, first bringing him to Anna house, then to Caiphas, John 18. 14. in gathering the assemblie of the Elders to Caiphas house, Matth. 26. 57. in producing witnesses against Christ, vers. 59. in sitting and examining him with many questions, vers. 63. in buffeting and beating him, vers. 67. all this was done the fourteenth day at night: it is very apparent, that they being thus busied had no leisure to eate the Pasceouer.

Argum. John 19. 14. It was the day of the preparation of the Pasceouer: Ergo, it was not the first day of the Pasceouer: and vers. 31. the Sabbath following is called a great day, because of the feast of the Pasceouer: for the first day of the Pasceouer, and the last, were solemne dayes, Exod. 12. 16. Job. 7. 37. The last and great day of the feast: If the Sabbath following then were the first day of the pasceouer, then did they not begin their feast the same day, wherein Christ was crucified.

Belarmine answereth, that it is called the preparation of the Pasche, being indeed the preparation to the Sabbath: because it fell within the Pasche: and so likewise is the Sabbath called a great, or high day, because it was within the feast of the Pasceouer.

Contra. First, we graunt indeed, that it was the preparation day to the Sabbath, and to the Pasceouer likewise, because the Euangelist saith so: for it were an improper speech to say, the preparation of the Pasceouer, that is within the Pasceouer: but as the preparation of the Sabbath, serueth to the Sabbath; so the preparation of the Pasceouer serueth to the Pasceouer. Secondly, seeing that they were not to do any worke vpon the feast day, Exod. 12. 16. but in the preparation of the Sabbath, many workes must be done, that all might be dispatched before the Sabbath; it is not like, that the preparation could fall vpon the feast of the Pasceouer. Thirdly, the Sabbath day was not the greater, falling vpon the ordinarie weeke dayes of the Pasceouer: for they were not counted great dayes, but onely the first and the last: and therefore being not great dayes themselves, they could not make the Sabbath a great day: So then the greatnesse of this Sabbath was by reason of the first and great day of the Pasceouer. Fourthly, Augustine also saith, that the day of Christs suffering was not Pascha, sed preparatio Pascha, it was not the Pasch, but the preparation to it. It is not therefore true, that it was kept holy of the Iewes, the day of Christs Passion; neither that they did eate the Paschal Lambe the same eue that Christ did, but the night following.

cap. 13.

We conclude then, first, that Christ might eat vnleauened bread at the institution of his last Supper: and yet neither did the Iewes generally eate their Pasceouer then; neither was the next day of Christs Passion, kept by them as a solemne feast.

Secondly, it was not of the substance of the institution to eate vnleauened bread, no more then to eate it at night, and to receiue it sitting, we are not more bound to the one, then to the other. Again, Christ vsed vnleauened bread, because it was the vsuall bread at what time: so wee doe that, which is the vsuall bread in our time. And Saint Paul speaketh of such bread, as was vsuall among the Gentiles, when he saith, The bread which we break, 1. Corin. 10. 17. Ergo, ordinarie bread and leauened to be vsed, not vnleauened.

The testimonie of antiquitie is this: Concil. Lauden. can. 38. Nou oportet à Indau azyma accipere: It is not lawfull to receiue vnleauened bread from the Iewes. Trullan. can. 11. Nemo Indeorum azyma comeda: Let no man eat the vnleauened bread according to the custome of the Iewes. We see then that the vse of leauened bread pleased better, then of vnleauened. And the Greeke Church is herein more indifferent then the Latine: De pane, sine azymis, sine fermentatis fueris, Graciamus, dum ex critica constet: The Greekes, whether it be leauened, or vnleauened bread, care not; so it be of wheate: Florantin. sess. 29. Lastly, in this case we want not some testimonie of their owne: that whereas Belarmine alleagueth out of Abenezra in cap. Louisie. 23. that this tradition of the Iewes, not to keepe the Pasceouer vpon the Sabbath eue, to auoid the concurrence of two festiuals, began many yeeres after Christ, cap. 8. yet Iohann. Henricus praefat. in Euthymium, and Cornelius Sansonius in cap. 26. Matth. alleagueth out of Seder-alam, that this tradition began straight after their returne from the captiuitie of Babylon.

The Papists.

Concerning the other element of wine, which is vsed in the Sacrament, they say it is to be mixed with water, and they impudently condemne all those Churches, that do not mixe wine with wine, in the Sacrament: saying it cannot be omitted, sine graui peccato, without great sinne. Belarm. lib. 4. c. 10. And therefore Honorius 3. caused a Priest to be depofed both from his office and benefice, because hee did sacrifice Sine aqua & igni: Without water and fire, decrees. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 4. c. 14.

11. Error.

Argum. 1. Water gushed out together with blood, out of the side of Christ: Ergo, wine and water is to be ysed together in the Eucharist, Rhemist. 1. Cor. 11. sect. 10. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Euch. rist. cap. 10.

Ans. First, the blood and water, that issued out of Christs side, were not mingled together, but came forth apart: Ergo, if they wil ground their mixture in the Sacrament vpon this example, they must vse them seuerally and apart in the Eucharist: And Bellarmin answereth nothing, when he saith, that notwithstanding they were not mixed comming forth of Christs side; yet if they had fallen into one vessell or cup, they would haue runne together: for we say againe, if they had fallen into two seuerall vessels, they would not haue runne together: therefore if they will follow this president, they should put the wine and water into two seuerall cuppes, and so vse them apart.

Secondly, they cannot proue, that the water which came from Christ, was like to the water, which we commonly vse, but such, as is in the bodie of man: and it hath been an old received opinion, that it came neere vnto that humour in mans bodie, which is called Phlegma, as it is mentioned in their decrees, decret. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 8. which opinion is there confuted, neither do we altogether approue it: yet it is probable, that it was not pure water, comming forth of Christs bodie; and therefore this can be no warrant vnto them, to vse common water.

Thirdly, blood and water came forth, not wine and water: wherefore this example, if it proue any thing, maketh for the mixture of blood and water, not of wine and water.

Fourthly, by the blood and water the fathers do much better vnderstand the two Sacraments of the Church, Baptisme and the Eucharist, as afterward it followeth to be shewed out of Augustine: if the water then signifie Baptisme, it cannot be applied to the Eucharist. Bellarmin is here, that it is one thing to represent, another to be represented, is not worthie to be repeated, much lesse to be refuted.

Argum. 2. In the old Testament the cup in the Eucharist was not onely prefigured in wine, which Melchisedech brought forth to Abraham, but in the water, which came forth of the rocke: Ergo, water is to be vsed as well as wine: ca. 10. Argum. 3.

Contra. First, by this argument they may inferre, that water onely may be vsed; for water onely without wine flowed out of the rocke. Secondly, the figures of the law are no paternes of the Sacraments of the Gospell: they had the same substance, that ours haue, but not the same comonie: for by the same reason, because the cloud and the redde Sea were figures of our Baptisme, they may conclude, that now also we must baptize with a mist or cloud, and with salt sea water: these are very sillie arguments.

Argum. 3. Wine mixed with water doth fitly expresse the vnion of Christ and his people, who are signified by water.

Ans. First, it is too great boldnesse for men to make mysteries of their owne deuling, as to bring in water to signifie the people. Secondly, this vnion and knitting together of Gods people is represented in the bread, made of many graines of corne, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Corinth. 10. 17. We that are many, are one bread, &c. and therefore the signification of water is superfluous.

The Protestants.

1. WE deny not, but that of ancient time; in hot Countries, especially where their wine was strong, they vsed to mixe water with wine, in their common drinke, and thereupon they so vsed it in the Sacrament: but it was neuer generally the practise of the East countries so to doe: for the Armenians and Iberians vsed not of ancient time to put water in the cup in the ministrat[i]on, Fulk. annot. 1. Cor. 11. sect. 10.

Secondly, Be it that this mixture of wine were conuenient to be vsed: you cannot make such a matter of necessitie of it, as to charge them with heresie, and denounce damnation against them that keepe not that custome, especially seeing your Canonists and schoolemen doe graunt that it is de honestate tantum, of decencie onely, not of necessitie. And yet we are sayne to drinke mingled wine many times against our willes: for the Minister need put in no water, it is mixed to his hands many times. The Vintners craft standeth very well with popish profession.

Argum. 1. We holde it rather to be a superstitious custome and contrarie to Christs instituti[i]on: for he in his last Supper gaue wine, not water to be drunke; for he calleth it the fruite of the Vine, which is wine and not water, Matth. 26. 29.

Bellarmin answereth, that these words of our Sauour, I will not drinke henceforth of the fruite of the vine, are vnderstoode of the wine which Christ gaue vnto his Apostles before consecration in the end of the legall supper: and he thus goeth about to proue it; first, because S. Luke maketh mention of two cups, the one before the instituti[i]on of the last Supper, chap. 22. vers. 17. the other after, vers. 20. the first was giuen in the end of the Passeouer, and therefore Christ doth not call it the new testament in his blood, as he doth the other. Bellarmin. lib. 1. de Euchar. cap. 11. Argum. 10.

Contra.

De consecrat. distinct. 2. in

Contra. S. Luke maketh not mention of two cups, but twice of the same cup; and in the first place he speaketh by way of anticipation, as S. Augustine thinketh, lib. 3. de consensu Evangelii. Item. 1. whom Bellarmine vnmanly reiecteth: saying, Non diligenter expendisse hunc locum: That he did not well waigh the place: Therefore S. Luke once for all rehearseth the words of institution, part of them in the first place, as, Take this and divide it amongst you, which is all one, as to say, Drinke ye all of it; part in the latter place, as, This cuppe is the new testament, &c. And that which S. Luke omitteth in the first place, the other two Euangelists, Matthew and Marke, supplie: for first they make mention of the words of institution, this is my blood, &c. and then it followeth, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine: so that Christ calleth this cuppe, the new testament in his blood.

Secondly, saith Bellarmine, as these words of Christ, Luke 22. 16, Henceforth I will no more eate of it, &c. are necessarilie vnderstoode of eating the Pasceouer; so the other words that follow, verf. 18. I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, &c. must bee referred to his drinking in the Pasceouer, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Euchar. c. 11. argum. 10.

Contra. First, it is not necessarie to referre the first words to Christs eating of the Pasceouer in his last supper, but to the whole action of his eating, at that time in the first and latter supper: so that the meaning is this: This is the last time, that I will eate with you: for he thus spake in the beginning of the Pasceouer before he had yet tasted thereof, as may appeare by the 15. verse, I haue desired to eate this Pasceouer: So it was but yet in his desire, and not in acte. Secondly, though the first words be vnderstoode of eating in the Pasceouer, the second are not therefore to be referred to the wine which they did drinke in the Pasceouer. First, because both Matthew and Marke doe rehearse these words as spoken after the words of consecration. Secondly, because Christ did no more eate of the Pasceouer, but he did afterward drinke of the cuppe in his last supper; and therefore to make Christs words true, he speaketh of the cuppe ministred in the Sacrament.

Now on the contrarie side, that Christ spake these words, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, after the institution of his last supper, it may appeare by these reasons.

First, because two Euangelists, Matthew and Marke, doe both consent in placing these words after the institution; and there is greater reason to thinke that S. Luke should transpose the words, than the other two according together.

Secondly, S. Luke speaking twice of the cuppe, in both places rehearseth some of the words of the institution as in the first, Take this and divide it amongst you, in the latter; This cuppe is the new testament in my blood: Wherefore seeing these words, Take this, and diuid it, or as Matthew sayth, Drinke ye all of this, were spoken at the time of the institution: it must needs follow, that our Saviour meaneth the consecrated cuppe and wine.

Thirdly, otherwise they will make the words of Christ untrue, if he said before his last supper, I will drinke no more of the fruite of the vine, and yet did afterward drinke it in his last supper. They will answere: that Christ did drinke no wine in his last supper, for it was conuerted into his blood.

Contra. Beside that any man may see how grosse and absurd a thing it is, that Christ should drinke his owne blood, and eate his owne flesh; S. Matthew saith, that after Christ had said, This is my blood, &c. hee calleth it the fruite of the vine, verf. 26. 29. wherefore it was wine, which hee drinke in the chalice.

Argum. 2. The water and blood which issued out of Christs side, signifie no such thing, but rather as S. Iohn expoundeth them: by water, is betokened our washing from our sinnes, whereof Baptisme is a pledge: by blood, the full satisfaction that Christ hath made for our sinnes, whereof the other Sacrament is a seale, I Iohn 5. 6. This is that Iesus Christ, that came by water and blood, not by water onely, but by water and blood. By the which words the Apostles meaning is not, that by the water and blood, which were shed vpon the Crosse, we should vnderstand the Sacraments of the Church: but those spirituall graces, whereof the Sacraments are lively signes, namely, the satisfaction and ranfome of our sinnes by Christs blood, and our ablation and washing from the same.

Augustine picketh out no such fancie out of this mysterie as you doe, for the mixture of wine and water: but he doth more fitly apply it to the Sacraments of the Church: E Christs latera deriuantur in cruce promanant sacramenta ecclesie in Psalm. 138. Out of Christs side, lying vpon the Crosse, issued the Sacraments of the Church: namely, Baptisme, and the Eucharist. He draweth not both water and wine to signifie one Sacrament, but applieth them to both.

Argum. 3. The mixture of wine with water is in the Scripture taken in the euill part, as Isay 1. 22. Your wine is mixt with water, and 2. Cor. 2. 17. We are not as those, which doe adulterate the word of God: The Apostle borroweth the word from the corruptors and minglers of wine: and therefore vseth the word adulterata, which is the discerning of mixed and adulterate things by the light of the sunne, the mixing then of wine and water in the Eucharist can haue no good signification.

Bellarmino answereth, that the same thing in Scripture in diuers senses may haue both a good and an euill signification: and so the mixing of wine with water, to make marchandize of, is taken in the worse part; but with intent to drinke it, it is vsed in Scripture in the better sense, as Prou. 9. 5. Wisdom saith, Come and drinke the wine which I haue mixed for you, lib. 4. de Euchar. 11. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, that place in the Prouerbs is not necessarie vnderstoode of the mixture of wine with water, but of some pleasant temperature beside, whereby the wine is fined and relished, and not allayed, as by water: as Cantic. 5. 1. I haue drunke my wine with my milke. Secondly, though in the ordinarie drinke, the mixture of wine with water may haue a good vse and signification; yet in offerings and oblations to God, such as the prophet Isay speaketh of, such mixture neither in vse or signification is commendable: For like as the Prophet Malachie reprobuing the Israelites offering vnto God the worst things, as the halt and the blinde, saith, Offer it now vnto the Prince, will be he contemned; Malach. 1. 8. so if a man offer waterie or adulterate wine to the Prince, he will not be pleased; much lesse is it to be presented to God: And as it is not meete to vse course or browne bread in the Communion for the one element; so neither is it fit to present base and course wine for the other. And if Christ turning water into wine, did exhibite pure and perfect wine at the marriage feast: is it like he would bring forth adulterate and counterfeite wine at his begethly feast? Hereof S. Ambrose thus writeth, Dominus inuitatus ad nuptias, &c. The Lord being invited to the marriage feast, did not mingle the water pots full of water with wine, but changed them into wine: Maluit naturam vertere, quam adulterare substantiam: He had rather change the nature, then adulterate the substance, Serm. 78. Wherefore it is an adulterating of the substance, to mingle wine and water together.

Argum. 4. As Bellarmino to proue that Christ vsed vneleuened bread, alleageth that he immediately before did eate the Pascheouer, which was kept with vneleuened bread; so by the same reason, seeing he confesseth that Christ did drinke the fruite of the vine, that is, naturall and perfect wine in the Pascheouer, it is more then probable that he vsed the same at his last supper: that as he changed not the bread, so neither did he alter the wine.

And lastly, they may be thus pressed with their owne deuises: for whereas they hold that elements after the words of consecration are transubstantiate; I aske whether the water, which is incorporate to the wine, be also conuerted into Christs blood? if they say it is not, then they deny transubstantiation of all that is in the cup; if they say it is, then will they make Christs watric and elementall bodie: If the first, I object the decree of Innocent 3. who determineth, that the water together with the wine is chaunged into Christs blood, decr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. The second, I doe oppose Bellarmino, who before affirmed, that nothing but the bread and wine are transubstantiate: quest. 2. resp. ad 3. argum. protestant.

Bernard writing of this matter, sheweth his opinion according to those corrupt times, that water in the Sacrament ought to be mixed with the wine: but he condemneth not all those which retaine not this vse: Alind est (saith he) culpari negligentiam alind negare efficaciam; epistol. 69. It is one thing to blame their negligence, another thing to deny efficacie to the Sacrament without any such mixture administred.

Concil. Aurelianens. can. 4. Ut nullus in oblationibus sacri calicis, nisi quod ex fructu vinee haurit, et hoc sine aqua mixtum offerre presumat quia sacrilegium indicatur aliud offerri, quam quod in oblatione sacratissima Saluator instituit: That no man in the oblation of the sacred cup, but that which cometh of the vine, and that without mixture of water, presume to offer; because it is iudged sacrilege to offer any other thing, then what our Sauour did institute. This Canon maketh evidently against the popish mixture of water and wine, that Caranza in his Epitome hath cunningly left it out.

Lastly, in their owne decrees, there are certaine heretikes condemned, called Aquarij; because they did offer water onely: decr. par. 1. can. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. By the same rule, the Papists are Aquarij, in part Aquarij-heretikes, because they offer halfe water.

But we haue a more euident testimonie from their owne Canons, decr. part. 3. dist. 2. c. 27. which confuteth those which presume to offer milke and dipped bread, by this argument, It is ordered by the Gospel, Quid prater panem et vinum aliud offerri non licet: That it is not lawfull to offer any thing beside bread and wine: If nothing but bread and wine must be vsed, then water is not included as well as milke.

As for the decrees of the Synode of Trident, which say, Quod in calice non solum vinum, sed et aqua mixta offerenda sunt: they are not lawfull, because they are not in the words of Christ, Quid prater panem et vinum aliud offerri non licet: but they are added by the Synode, and therefore they are not lawfull. THE words of consecration.

The Papists.

These words (say they) This is my bodie, to bee spoken ouer the bread, and the like ouer the wine, This is the new Testament in my blood, are the very formes of the Sacrament and words of consecration: which being vttered, immediatly the elements are chaunged into the bodie and blood of Christ: Wherefore these words are not to be read historically for the instruction of the people, but they are onely consecratorie words, to be pronounced ouer the elements: Rhemist. 1. Cor. 11. sect. 11. Bellarmin. lib. 4. de Sacram. cap. 13.

Argum. 1. The Rhemists object that place of S. Paul, 1. Cor. 10. 16. The cuppe of blessing, which we bless, &c. Here the benediction is referred to the cup, not vnto God: Ergo, not by prayer or thanksgiuing to God, but by certaine consecratory words spoken ouer the cup, it is consecrated, Thomist. in hunc locum.

Ans. First, the word which the Apostle here vseth to blasse, is expounded by Saint Marthin, to be all one with to giue thanks: for hee saith, Christ after he had blessed (vsing the first word) tooke the bread, and after hee had (giuen thanks) which is the other word; hee tooke the cuppe: and S. Marke, chap. 8. 6, 7. vseth both these words; how Christ first gaue thanks and brake the bread, and he blessed the fishes, and caused them to be set before the multitude: wherefore the cuppe is blessed, that is, by giuing thanks vnto God and praier is sanctified: So that here is both relation vnto God, to whom wee offer our thanksgiuing, and to the cuppe, which is sanctified by our praiers. Secondly, though we graunt, that the cuppe is blessed by words of consecration, it followeth not out of this place, that it is done by these foure words, this is my bodie, or this is my blood: for Christ beside these words, vsed a benediction, blessing, or thanksgiuing beside, as the Euangelists make mention. Thirdly, as Saint Paul saith, The cuppe which we bless, so hee saith, The bread which wee breake, which member of the sentence answereth to the other, breaking of the bread, to the blessing of the cuppe: the bread then is blessed, not onely by the pronouncing of words, but by the whole action of breaking, distributing, thanksgiuing, &c.

Argum. 2. If these were not the onely words of consecration, This is my bodie, and if presently upon the vttering of these words the bodie of Christ were not present; then should not the words of Christ be true, Bellarmin. ibid. The answer to this argument followeth here in the assertion of the Protestants.

The Protestants.

WE acknowledge no such consecration at all, by vertue whereof the elements are conuerted and transubstantiated into the bodie of Christ, as wee haue before shewed. A consecration wee graunt, which is a setting apart of the elements, which before were common, to holy vses, and by the vertue of Christs institution, to bee made vnto vs signes of holiness.

Secondly, these are not the onely words of consecration, This is my bodie, and, This is the cuppe of my blood, and yet Christs words shall be true: for we must not dismember the sentence: Christ saith, Take, eat, yee, this is my bodie: it is then made his bodie to bee taken and eaten; by taking then and eating, the elements also are consecrated, not onely by saying of the words: yee must not then diuide the words of the institution, for then they shall no more consecrate, then if you should pronounce but two of your consecratorie words, as, This is, or, My bodie, and leaue out the rest.

Argum. 1. That these are not the onely words of consecration, it appeareth, because both the bread was broken and distributed, and the cup also, before Christ spake those words, as Math. 26. vs. 26. For first Christ saith, Take, eat, and, Take and drinke, before he said, either, This is my bodie, or This is my blood: Neither can ye well tell your selues, which are your consecratorie words for the cup, whether those that Mattheus setteth downe, This is my blood of the new Testament: or as Luke hath it, This is the new Testament in my blood. Nay, Bellarmin. vsieth another forme beside these: Hic est sanguis, This is the cup of my blood, Bellarmin. cap. 13.

And Luke addeth, This is my bodie, which is giuen for you: Saint Paul, which is broken for you, 1. Cor. 11. 24. And S. Luke also and S. Paul haue these words, Do this in remembrance of me, which are omitted both by S. Marthin and S. Marke. Wherefore seeing all these are the words of Christ, followeth, that they all, are effectuall and forcible to constitute the Sacrament (vnlesse they will say, that some of Christs words are superfluous): Ergo, these onely words, this is my bodie, and this is my blood, are not all the words of consecration.

Argum. 2. It is answered most absurdly, that their Leiturgie, which onely vseth those words, being being made by Saint Peter is more ancient, then either Lukes Gospell, or Pauls Epistle, Beza 2. 14.

res. ad argum. 9.

Contra. First, thus without all shame they doe make their vncertaine traditions equall with the Canonick Scripture, and their superstitious and erronious Leiturgie, to counteruaile the authoritie of S. Pauls writings. Secondly, if their Leiturgie were grounded vpon Canonick Scripture, yet one part of the Scripture is not of more credit then another: Matthew and Markes Gospell are equall to S. Lukes; and S. Lukes Gospell, and S. Pauls Epistle not inferiour to the other: for all those words which are reported by them all to haue been pronounced by Christ, must be receiued as of like authoritie.

Innocentius 3. is herein more equall, than Bellarmino: De cr. Greg. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. lps. Evangelista
mutuo inter se suppluisse leguntur, &c. The Euangelists do make a mutual supplie, when as any thing is omitted by any of them: as where the other Euangelists say, this is my body, only Luke hath said is given for you: and whereas Marke and Matthiew say, for many, Luke, for you: and Matthiew saith, for the remission of sinnes. Thus hee preferreth not one Euangelist before another: but maketh the wordes of Christ out of them all. But whereas Bellarmino affirmeth with Lindwood, that the wordes of Christ, recited out of S. Pauls epistle to the Corinthians, are not sufficient to confirme
c. 15. mendac. 3. what is this else but to charge the whole Church of the Corinthians, that they had no consecration at all, who obserued the same forme there prescribed by the Apostle, 1 Co- rinth. 11.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, every creature is sanctified by the word of God and prayer, 1. Tim. 4. but in the Eucharist the bread and wine are creatures and elements sanctified to holy use: but they are sanctified by the word, and by prayer also. Origen hereof thus writeth in 15. Mat. Quicquid, ingreditur, &c. If whatsoever enters in at the mouth, go into the bellie, &c. euen this which is sanctified by the word and prayer, in respect of the materiall part, goeth into the bellie: but in respect of the prayer added to it, it profiteth according to the measure of faith. Scourtiour vsed thanksgiving, when he gaue the cup, beside the words of institution, Matth. 26. 28. by which example wee are taught, that by prayer and thanksgiving the bread and wine were consecrated.

We conclude then, that not onely these words, but all the rest belonging to the institution, is to be rehearsed in the Sacrament, both to instruct the people, that they may know the right of the Sacrament; and they helpe also with the rest of the whole action, of taking, eating, drinking, praying, thankgiuing, to consecrate and make the Sacrament, as wee haue shewed at large before, Centurion. 1. 1. quest. 1. part. 2. to that place we referre the reader.

Bernards testimonie in this place is very full on our side: Non solus sacerdos sacrificat, neque consecrat; sed totius fidelium cœtus, qui assistit, cum illo consecrat, cum illo sacrificat: Nec solo ligno facit domum, sed alium ligna, alium trabes comportat: debent itaque assistentes habere de suo, sicut firmam fidem firmam, orationem puram, devotionem piam: The priest onely doth not sacrifice, hee onely consecrateth not, but the whole companie of the faithfull standing by, doth consecrate together with him: As the master carpenter doth not onely build the house, but other labourers, that carry the timber, helpe to build: therefore the standers by, as well as the priest, must haue a sure faith, pure prayer, godly devotion, &c. de Trin. Bernard. So then the Sacrament is consecrate by the whole action of the Minister and Communicants together.

Concil. Toletan. 7. cap. 2. Si aegritudinis acciderit quilibet euentus, quo captum nequaquam consecrationis mysterium, sit liberum presbytero alteri consecrationem exequi officij carpi: Item Minister chance to fall sicke, that he cannot finish the consecration, it shall bee lawfull for another to see thorough with it. It should seeme, that the consecration was not finished with five words speaking: for then the Councell needed not to haue been so carefull to provide for a supplie. The Canon is ratified, decret. par. 2. cap. 7. qu. 1. c. 16.

And further, Dee. par. 3. distill. 2. c. 5. Vt scire, quia verbis celestibus consecratur &c. Will you know, that it is consecrated with heavenly wordes? then it followeth, Accipe qua sunt verba &c. Hear what the words are, the priest saith; Make this oblation, reasonable, acceptable, which is the figure of the bodie and blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. But these are not the words of consecration, but the prayer of the Minister: Ergo, prayer helpeth to consecrate, and not the proposing onely of Christs words.

The Master of Sentences, lib. 4. diff. 8. thus rehearseth out of Saint Ambrose: Consecratio verbis fit, &c. By what words is the consecration made? attend, what the words are, Take and ye all of this, this is my body: and againe, Take and drinke ye all of this, this is my blood: therefore ye, eat ye, and take ye, drinke ye, are part also of the words of consecration. This sentence of S. Ambrose is rehearsed also in the decree before alleaged.

This truth lastly is sealed: Iohn Philpote holy Martyr; Saint Peter faith, If any man feele, as he speake as the wordes of God: wherefore whosoever faith, that these wordes onely, shall they be make a presence of Christ, without blasse ye, take ye; which be three as substantiall points of the Sacrament, as this is my bodie, he is highly deceived: Fox pag. 1809.

THE SIXT QUESTION, OF THE PROPER effect and vse of the Lords Supper.

The Papists.

They doe generally holde, that this Sacrament was not properly ordained for remission of sinnes, neither that the Sacrament hath any such vse: but it serueth onely as a preferuatiue against sinne, Trident. Council. sess. 13. can. 5. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Sacram. cap. 17.

Secondly, they teach, that faith is not sufficient to prepare vs for the Communion: and although a man be neuer so contrite, quantumcumq; se contritus existimens, yet they must be thoroughly purged and absolved from their mortall sinnes, before they come to communicate, Council. Trident. sess. 13. can. 11. Bellarm. ibid.

Argum. 1. They that receiue the Communion, are one bodie as they are partakers of one bread, 1. Cor. 10. 17. but they which are in any grievous and deadly sinne, are not liuely members of Christ, and of his mysticall bodie: therefore the Sacrament doth not profite them at all, Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, neither doe wee affirme, that men ought rashly and presumptuously to come to the Lords table, but to repent them thoroughly of their sinnes, and to haue a stedfast and liuely faith in Christ, who cannot be said, thus preparing themselves, to remaine in their sinnes: neither yet that they so fully acquitted of them, that they neede not to receiue the Sacrament to their comfort, and to strengthen their faith in the hope and assurance of the remission of sinnes. Secondly, whereas all this hindreth not, but that they should be true members of Christs bodie, even having a troubled conscience, and labouring vnder the burthen of their sinnes: for the weake and sick parts of the bodie, are they therefore no parts at all, because of their infirmities? Augustine saith very well, Non filios diaboli faciunt quaecumque peccata, peccant enim & filij Dei: in quibus non est filij, filij sunt diaboli: Every sinne maketh not a man the childe of the diuell, for the children of God also sinne: but they which haue no faith, are the sonnes of the diuell: Ergo, all sinnes cut not men off from the bodie of Christ, but onely the want of faith: They then that haue sinned, and doe repent them and come with faith, are still the sonnes of God, and members of Christs bodie.

pist. Pelag. 3.

Argum. 2. None were suffered to eate the Pascheouer, if they were vncleane, Numb. 9. 10. and our Saviour washed his Apostles feete, before he instituted his Supper, Iohn 13. and Matth. 26. he is punished, that came to the marriage feast without a wedding garment: Ergo, they that come to the Eucharist must be purged first and cleansed from their sinnes, so that they haue no pricke of conscience at all: Bellarmin. 1. 18. argum. 3.

Ans. First, these places alleaged do proue, that a man being vncleane by the committing of any sinne, should first by repentance and contrition of heart purge himselfe, which wee grant is necessarie, and so receiue the Communion, to his further comfort: but they proue not that a man should bee so purged, as that hee needed not by the Sacrament to be further assured of remission of sinnes. Secondly, the type of the Pascheouer is thus expounded by S. Paul, 1. Cor. 5. 8. Let vs keepe the Pascheouer, not with the old leauen of malitiousnesse and wickednesse, but with the unleavened bread of sinceritie and truth: so that if a man do forsake his former wickednesse, not maliciously continuing in it, and commeth with a sincere and vnfaigned purpose of heart, desirous to be fully assured of the remission of his sinnes, it is a sufficient preparation. Thirdly, the washing of the feete, was to teach the Apostles an example of humilitie, Iohn 13. 14. I haue giuen you an example: and it signifieth our spirituall washing by Christ, vers. 8. If I wash thee not, (saith Christ to Peter) thou hast no part in me: which is by faith, whereby our hearts are purified, Act. 15. vers. 9. not that washing or cleansing, which is wrought by our selues: and faith also is the wedding garment, as is expounded Apocal. 3. 18. Buy of me white raiment, that thou mayst be clothed.

Argum. 3. 1. Cor. 11. 39. He that eateth and drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation: but they that communicate, hauing any pricke of conscience for any mortall sinne, doe eate and drinke vnworthily: Ergo, it cannot bee answered, that this worthe or vnworthe receiuing is in respect of hauing or not hauing faith: for the Apostle reprobeth them for a certaine foule and corruption of manners, in disorderly comming to the Sacrament: Bellarmin. ibid. argum. 7.

Ans. First, the vnworthe receiuing, which the Apostle here speaketh of chiefly, is in comming without the due examination of faith: for the Apostle had said, Let a man examine himselfe, and so let him eate: but this examination is, whether we are in the faith, 2. Cor. 13. 5. And againe the Apostle saith, they eate and drinke their owne damnation, not discerning the Lords bodie: and this discerning discerning of the Lordes bodie belongeth to faith and knowledge, in making a difference betweene those holie mysteries, and all other common meates. Secondly, they also are vnworthie receiuers, that come without knowledge and amendment of their fault; as here the Corinthians retained an abuse in the Lords Supper, and as yet corrected it not. This place then proueth, that continuing in sinne without correction of it, is an vnworthie receiuing: it concludeth not against those that haue repented them, and yet there remaineth some griefe or touch of conscience still, whereof they desire to be releafed.

Argum. 4. They that come to the Communion either haue faith or not: if they haue not faith, they are vnworthie receiuers, and can reape no benefit by it; if they haue, they are already satisfied from their sinnes: therefore vnto them the Eucharist is not profitable towards the remission of their sinnes, which they haue already by faith, Bellarm. ration. 4.

Ans. Bellarmine very vnſkilfully maketh no difference betweene the beginning and the increase of faith: the Apostles had faith; for to them Christ said, they were cleane, but not all, Ioh. 13. 20. yet they pray, Lord increase our faith, Luk. 17. 5. So the careful father saith to Christ, Lord I beleue, helpe my vnbeleefe, Mark. 9. 24. So then a man hath faith, and by the same remission of sinnes; yet for the further strengthening of his faith, and full assurance of remission of sinnes, he desireth to receive the Sacrament. Our faith is not perfect, but many times interrupted, and assailed with doubts, and had neede continually to be strengthened, and renewed by the often hearing of the word, and receiuing of the Sacraments.

Argum. 5. There is not one and the same proper vse and end of diuers Sacraments: but Baptisme is receiued for remission of sinnes: Ergo, the Eucharist is not for that end, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. 1. The death of Christ, and so remission of sinnes purchased by the same, is properly represented vnto vs in both Sacraments, yet in a diuers respect: for as to be borne is one thing, and to be fed and nourished is another; yet both worke the same thing in the bodie, though diuersly: for the birth giueth life, meate and drink preserueth it: the same difference is betweene Baptisme and the Lords Supper, they both are seales vnto vs of our iustification, in the remission of sin by Christ: but by Baptisme we are initiated, regenerate and borne anew, and engrafted into the bodie of Christ. The other Sacrament doth confirme, increase, and nourish our faith, already begun and planted in vs, for the remission of sinnes, and all other benefits of Christs passion.

The Protestants.

First, wee doe truly affirme and teach, that an especiall and principall vse of the Eucharist or Communion, is to strengthen and assure our faith of the remission of our sinnes: and yet we denie not, but that it hath other vses beside: for as in Baptisme not onely the washing away of our sinnes is shewed forth, but it also betokeneth our dying to sinne, and rising to newnes of life, Rom. 6. 3, 4. so in the Lords Supper whole Christ with all his benefits are exhibited vnto vs, as it is a pledge vnto vs, not onely of remission of sinnes, but that Christ is become our righteousnesse and sanctification, 1. Cor. 1. 30. that he wil assist vs with his spirit, and replenish our hearts with graces. The water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water, springing up to euerlasting life, Iohn 4. 14. Yea, the spirituall eating and drinking of the flesh and blood of Christ, is a pledge vnto vs of the resurrection, and of life eternall, Ioh. 6. 54. But that amongst the rest, it also assureth vs of remission of sinnes, thus it is proued.

Argum. 1. Christ after Saint Matthew saith, This is the blood of the new testament, that is shed for many for remission of sinnes, Matth. 26. 28. But the new testament includeth a promise of remission of sinnes, Iere. 31. 34. Yea our Sauour setteth it downe in plaine termes: for why else should our Sauour make expresse mention of forgiuenes of sinnes, if this Sacrament did not serue for that vse?

Bellarmine answereth, that these words of our Sauour doe not signifie, that his blood is drunke in the Sacrament for remission of sinnes, but that it was shed for remission of sinnes, and so is represented in the Eucharist, cap. 19. resp. ad argum. 3.

Contra. First, in the Eucharist the death of Christ with the fruite thereof, which is the remission of sinnes, is not onely represented, but exhibited also and applied: for otherwise they will make it but a bare and naked signe, if it should onely represent and signifie: and who would thinke, that they which stand vpon the reall presence, would content themselues with representation and signification onely. Wherefore I thus vrge them, as Christs blood is present, so is the fruite of his blood: but his blood is not present onely in signification, but verely and indeede to the worthie receiuer: Ergo, so is remission of sins, which is the fruite of his blood. Secondly, S. Paul saith, that the vnworthie receiuer is guike of the bodie and blood of Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 27. If vnworthie receiuing doth verely adde sinne vnto them, then the worthie receiuing, which is a shewing forth of Christs death, doth verely obtaine remission of sinnes.

Argum. 2. Christ saith, I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance: but Christ in the Eucharist calleth vs vnto him: Ergo, he calleth sinners to come to the Eucharist.

Bellarmine

Bellarmin answereth, that Christ speaketh of his first calling vnto faith, and repentance; not of coming to the Eucharist, resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, where Christ saith, I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, he calleth all, but only such, as are so righteous that they neede no repentance: but such there are none in this life. Ergo, he calleth all. Secondly, he calleth all that thirst, Ioh. 7. If any man thirst, let him come and drinke: but who thirsteth more, then he that desireth to be released of his sinne? Neither doth Christ speake here of the first call vnto faith; but euen of such as did beleue already; as it followeth in the next verse, he that belieueth in me, out of his bellie shall flow rivers of waters of life. Thirdly, our Saviour saith, Come vnto me all ye that are wearie and laden, and I will ease you, Mat. 11. 28. but these are they which labbur vnder the burthen and griefe of their sinnes: Ergo, such are admitted to come to the Sacrament to finde ease thereby.

Argum. 3. Beside these places of Scripture, we reason thus: If a man must be purged from the very conscience and griefe of sinne before he come to the Communion, then no man liuing can be a fit receiuer, seeing no man in this life can be sure he is without sinne. This Bellarmin graunteth, but saith further, that though a man be not sure, yet if hee doe endeavour, as much as in him lieth, to be purged from sinne, he commeth worthilie, resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. All this wee graunt, and this may a man doe, that findeth yet some griefe in his conscience for his sinne: but seeing he confesseth, that a man cannot bee sure he is without sinne, there must then remaine some conscience, feare and griefe of sin, euen in the worthie receiuer. Againe, seeing he graunteth, that the Eucharist is available to take away veniall sinne, ibid. argum. 4. he offereth great indignitie to the Sacrament of Christs bodie and blood, that it should not be of sufficient efficacy to remit also mortall and capitall sinne. And further he graunteth out of 1. Thim. 1. 5. that a man being in deadly sin, and hauing no feeling of it, yet sorrowing for the rest, which he leleth and knoweth, may bee a worthie receiuer: whereby it followeth, that hee which hath committed a sinne, and hath remorse thereof in conscience, may much more be a worthie receiuer. And thus their doctrine is contrarie to it selfe.

Secondly, we doe hold, that to haue a liuely faith in the promises of God, with repentance for our sinnes, and a full purpose to amend our liues, is a sufficient preparation for the Communion: and that this Sacrament is a soueraigne remedie for a troubled conscience. Neither ought men to refrain from the Communion, till they haue fully satisfied for their sins, as the Papists teach, and are cleared in their conscience of all their sins: for so, few or none at all, should be admitted to the Lords table: but in whom faith hath already wrought repentance, in some measure, he may safely receiue the Sacrament for his further comfort, and assurance of remission of sinnes.

Argum. 4. Ioh. 6. 35. He that belieueth in me (saith Christ) shall neuer thirst: Saint Paul also exhorted men to examine themselves, 1. Cor. 11. 28. which is nothing else, as himselfe expoundeth it, then to proue whether they be in the faith, 2. Cor. 13. 5. Ergo, the examination or triall of faith, is a sufficient preparation for the Lords table.

Augustine saith, Ad Deum acceditur, fide seclando, corde inhiando, charitate currando: We come or haue access vnto God in following him by faith, seeking him in our heart, and running to him with loue, In Psalm. 33. conuincio. 2. Ergo, by faith wee haue access vnto God, Rom. 5. 2. but a liuely faith, which worketh by loue, Galath. 5. 6.

Bernards testimonie is euident also in this case: who speaking of the manner of preparation for the Sacrament, writeth thus: Anie omnia fides, quarenda est, de qua legitur, fide imundans corda eorum, &c. Before all things we must seeke for faith, of the which we reade, by faith purifying their hartes, Iam. 1. 26. 27.

Augustine, Apparatus mensa istius non hominis est, sed fidei, non temporalis elementis, sed eternis: The preparation or furniture of this table is not of man, but of faith; not of temporall nourishment, but eternall, serm. in cena Domini.

Council. Florentin. sess. 25. The Greeke Church confesseth thus: Sanctissimum Christi corpus & sanguinem peccatorum nostrorum remissioni & animarum salutis fieri: That the most holie bodie and blood of Christ, is made for the remission of our sinnes, and the health of our owne soules.

John Philips holie Martyr: When Doctor Moreman had denied that the Sacrament had a promise of remission of sinnes annexed to it: the Martyr vrged these words of the institution, Which is giuen for you, which is shed for you for the remission of sinnes: whereby that popish assertion was directly ouerthrowne.

Concerning our preparation also by faith, thus testifieth a Councell: Coloniens. part. 7. cap. 2. Examine est fidei gratiam & deuotio in Deum, ut credentes & mysterium intelligentes accedant ad salutem nostri gratiam participandam: The faith and deuotion of the faithfull must bee turned vp, that with beleefe and vnderstanding they may approach to bee partakers of grace.

Let

Let vs see what their owne decrees testifie of this matter: first, that the Eucharist is available to the remission of all manner of finnes: Nicolaus witnesseth decret. par. 2. caus. 15. q. 8. c. 2. in cramentis omnium contagium purgaturia vastant: The Sacraments are the purgation of all contagions whatsoever. par. 3. dist. 2. c. 6. In remissionem peccatorum oblationem distribuunt: Let the Priest distribute the oblation to the people, for the remission of their finnes. ibid. c. 40. Qui manducavit hic corpus, &c. He that eateth this body, it shall be to him the remission of his finnes: These words are generall of all finnes whatsoever.

Secondly, that the communion is not to be denied vnto them, that haue griefe of conscience euen of the greater finnes, their owne Canons are euident, decr. par. 2. caus. 33. dist. 1. c. 50. Nemo his oportere reddi communionem, &c. They say the Communion is not to be giuen to those that haue willingly fallen: Dens autem nullum crimen exceptis, &c. But God hath excepted no sinne, having forgien all finnes. ibid. c. 52. Grauius criminis res, &c. The Lord hath commaunded, that the Sacrament should be ministred to those which are guiltie of the greatest finnes, if with all their heart they repent and confesse their sinne. cap. 56. Sum qui arbitrantur, &c. There be, that thinke this to be repentance, to abstaine from the heavenly Sacraments: but there are too severe iudges against themselves, Qui sibi prescribunt penam, declinant remedium: Which prescribe a punishment to themselves, and decline the remedie. Here they are reproued that refraine the Sacrament, for some conscience of sinne, which is a remedie against sinne. decr. p. 3. dist. 2. c. 13. Quamuis peccata mortalia, &c. Though a man haue remorse of conscience for sinne, let him not haue will to sinne, &c. and so let him come intrepidus, securely to the Communion. Wherefore Belarmine position, Qui cum conscientia peccati accedit: He that commeth with conscience of sinne, doth eat and drinke his owne iudgement. c. 18. argum. 1. is flat opposite to their owne Canon. These words that follow in the Canon: Hoc de illo dico quem capitalia peccata non grauant: It is this of him that is not troubled with mortall and capitall finnes, doe not make against vs: for he speaketh of such a perplexitie of conscience, as hath no hope: but this Canon plainly affirmed, that a man though hee haue remorse of conscience for sinne, may safely come to the Communion, which is the thing by Belarmine denied.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, OF THE MANNER to be obserued in receiuing the Communion.

The Papists.

24. Error.

1. They holde it in no wise lawfull for Christians, otherwise then fasting, to receiue the Communion: and that they ought to eate nothing before they doe communicate, vntill it be in a case of great necessitie, Council. Constantienf. sess. 13. Bellarmine. lib. 3. de Eucharist. cap. 11. ratione 4.

The Protestants.

1. What they here vnderstand by necessitie, it may be doubted, seeing they themselves will not graunt the like necessitie to be in the Eucharist, as they say there is of Baptisme: All sacraments, we graunt, are necessarie, that is, profitable, expedient, requisite, so often as they may be had: But none so necessarie, that the want thereof vnto a faithfull man, that in hart doth wish and desire them, can be any hinderance to his saluation.

Secondly, that it is lawfull for any man to eate before hee come to the Communion, if his stomacke be weake, and not able to fast so long (for etherwise, if a man can abstaine, we wish him so to doe rather) S. Paul sheweth, writing to the Corinthians, 1. chap. 11. 34. If any man be hungry, let him eat at home. Some of them, he saith, came hungrie, some drunken, verily, the Apostle commendeth neither, but telleth them, if they be hungrie, they haue houses to eate in: Again, in that our Sauour Christ after supper instituted the Sacrament, it doth evidently declare vs, that it is no sinne to eate or drinke before we receiue the Sacrament.

Belarmine answereth, first Christ did institute the Sacrament onely after the legall supper, to shew that it was the shadow and figure of the other: but this doth no more warrant vs to receiue after supper, then that we should first be circumcised, and then baptized, because Christ was so: lib. 2. de missa. 14.

Contra. First, we doe not vrge Christs example, to warrant the receiuing either after dinner, or after supper, but to shew that it is no sinne to eate before, if necessitie require: for it is not simplie a sinne, Christ, vpon what occasion soeuer, would not haue giuen example therein. Secondly, the example of circumcision is not like: for there is no necessitie of being circumcised before Baptisme, as there may bee of eating before the Sacrament: and Christs example sheweth, that hee, which before was circumcised, may, being converted to the faith, bee also Baptized.

Secondly, saith he, the Apostles meaning is, that they which are hungry, should eate; but then they they must not for that time receive the Communion, so he speaketh it to shame them, not as allowing any such use.

Comm. The words of the Apostle are evident, verf. 33. When ye come together to eat, tarry one for another, and if any man be hungry, let him eat at home, that ye come not together to condemnation. Here the Apostle speaketh of coming together, and carrying one for another, that they which shew their weaknes are hungrie and doe eat should be stayed for.

Augustine saith; Neminem cogimus dominica illa cena prandere, sed nulli etiam contradicere ande- Epist. 118. c. 7.

Wee compell none to take the Lords Supper in dinner while, or after dinner; neither doe we forbid any so to doe. So he maketh it a thing indifferent, to communicate fasting or otherwise.

See their owne Canons of this matter: decr. par. 3. dist. 1. c. 49. A trinus hominibus, &c. The Sacraments must be celebrate by them, that are fasting, excepto uno die, &c. except one day in the year, when the supper of the Lord is celebrated. Here we see that the supper of the Lord may be taken not fasting: but by fasting this Canon vnderstandeth not an abstinence simplic, but that they should communicate before dinner, as it may appeare by the wordes following: Pomeridiano tempore, &c. They forbid the Sacrament to be ministred after dinner. Likewise dist. 1. c. 54. Lipsius apert, &c. It appeareth evidently, that the Apostles when they first received the Supper of the Lord, did not take it fasting. Though the same Canon alloweth the receiving of the Eucharist fasting, which we also confesse to be most meete and convenient; yet it graunteth, that at the first institution it was not so.

This is also sealed: Alice Harding persecuted, for saying to her neighbour, that she might die before she received the Sacrament.

Alice Harding likewise: for saying shee might as well drinke on Sunday before Masse, as upon any other day, p. 826. that is, if she could not in respect of her infirmities continue so long fasting.

The Papists.

1. They binde the people onely once in the year to receive the Communion at Easter time, as Ecron, and take it to be fully sufficient for them so to doe: Council. Trident. sess. 13. can. 9.

The Protestants.

1. This decree of theirs is contrarie to the practise of the Apostles, whom the Rhemists confesse to have ministred the Sacrament to the Christians daily, Annotat. All. 2. fol. 6. So expounding the words of the text, They continued daily in breaking of bread.

2. It seemeth also to be contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who speaketh of often communicating: Doe this, saith he, as oft as you drinke it, 1. Corinth. 11. 26. For seeing the eating of that bread, and drinking of that cuppe, is nothing else, but a shewing forth of the Lords death till he come; who seeth we, that it ought oftener then once or twice in the year to be received, seeing the death of Christ is continually to be remembered, and shewed forth.

3. Therefore Augustine doth boldly reprehend their custome, that content themselves with once receiving in the year: Si panis quotidianus est, cur post annum illum sumas? accipe quotidie, quid quidem tibi prodest: If it bee thy daily bread, why dost thou take it but yearly? take that daily and continually, which may profit thee daily, in Luke, serm. 28.

Can. Apostolor. 9. Quoties ingradiantur Ecclesiam, & audient scripturas, communicare debent: People as when as they enter into the Church, and heare Scripture, ought to communicate.

Elabor. can. 1. Nec inter fideles communicabitur, qui in istis temporibus Pascha, Pentecoste, Natali Domini, non communicaverit: He is not to be counted amongst the faithfull, which doth not communicate at Easter, Pentecost, and the Nativitie. This is more, then once in the year.

4. We have the witness of their owne Canons: decr. par. 3. dist. 2. c. 3. Quoties Eucharistia communicanda accipere, &c. To receive the Communion every day, I neither praise nor dispraise it: Singularibus dominicis, &c. But every Lords day, to communicate I perswade and exhort: This very sentence is rehearsed and approved by the Master, lib. 4. dist. 12. b. Ibid. c. 14. Quia semper fuit, semper habere debet medicinam: Because I alwaies sinne, I had neede alwaies of the remedie: Insuper of the Communion. And Canon 16. Fabianus thus decreeth, Si non frequentius, &c. I not oftener, yet at the least thrice in the year let every laye man communicate. Can. 18. Si quis in Ecclesiam Dei, &c. If a man enter into the Church, and heare the Scriptures, and of himselfe turneth himselfe from the Sacrament, let him be cast out of the Church: This Canon enioyneth receiving of the Sacrament, so often as they come to the Church: Ibid. c. 19. Secularium of Secular men, that doe not receive thrice in the year; let them not bee counted amongst Catholikes.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF RECEIVING the Sacrament in one kinde.

The Papists.

36. Error.

Christians (say they) are not bound by any commaundement of God, to receive the Sacrament in both kindes, Council. Trident. sess. 21. can. 1. And whosoever saith, that the Church hath erred or done amisse, in decreeing that lay men and the Clergie not saying Masse, should receive in the one kinde, that is bread onely; or that it is lawfull for them to communicate, is contrarie to the determination of the Church: let him be accursed, Council. Trident. sess. 21. can. 2. Rhemist John 6. sess. 11. Bellarm. lib. 4. de Eucharist. cap. 20.

Argum. 1. Christ is all and whole in every part of the Sacrament, his blood by a concomitance is in the bread, and his flesh by the like concomitance is in the cup, and his body and divinitie by the same concomitance in them both, for otherwise Christ should be divided: but every spirit, saith the Apostle, that dissolueth Iesus is not of God; 1 John 4. 3. Whosoever that receiveth in one kinde, is as well partaker of whole Christ, and of the full grace and effect of the Sacrament, as if he received in both, Bellarmin. cap. 21.

Again, Christ saith, John 6. 57. He that eateth me, shall live by me; but Christ is eaten only under the forme of bread, Ergo, vnder the forme of bread, whole Christ, not his bodie onely is present, Bellarmin. ibid.

And further, he objecteth that place, Rom. 6. 9. Christ being raised from the dead dyeth no more if his flesh were in the Sacrament without his blood, then should it be a dead bodie without life, and so Christ should die still. ibid.

Ans. 1. We deny any such concomitance of the blood and flesh of Christ in the Sacrament: for he is not in his carnall presence with his very flesh and blood there included, as we have shewed before: the bread and wine are signes onely of his body and blood, and therefore Christ is not divided, they being the signes onely, and not the thing signified.

2 The place alleged out of S. Iohn is greatly abused and corrupted by them, while they dare rather to follow their olde blinde latine translation, then the authentick Greeke text: the words in the originall are, Every spirit that confesseth not Iesus Christ: not, every spirit that doth not. And this may appeare to be the true reading, by the opposition in the former verse, Every spirit that confesseth Iesus, is of God: therefore this is the best reading, Every spirit that confesseth not Iesus, is not of God: as being set opposite and contrarie to the other verse. Again, the Rhemists vnderstand this place after their owne reading of the dissolving of the humanitie and divinitie of Christ: not of any such separation of the flesh and blood of Christ, as Bellarmin. supposeth.

3 Our Saviour in the sixth of Iohn speaketh not of the sacramentally, but of the spirital eating; and so indeede spirituallie it is all one to eate and drinke Christ: for every one that is sacramentally doth not live by him, seeing that the wicked may be partakers of the Sacrament. And againe, if they will have this chapter vnderstoode of the Sacrament, then where Christ saith, Except ye eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye have no life in you, there is an absolute necessitie imposed, to receive in both kindes, both sacramentally to eate Christ, and to drinke Christ. We cannot desire a more direct place against them.

4 To the place, Rom. 6. we answer: first, that Christ's flesh is not feallie and corporally present, and therefore the argument followeth not that Christ should have a dead body without blood; the blood and flesh of Christ remaine vndevided in his glorious body in heauen, yet may be represented apart in the Sacrament. Secondly, they themselves offering up Christ in the sacrifice of the Masse for remission of finnes, as they blasphemously say, doe consequently witness that Christ dyeth againe, seeing the Apostle saith: That without shedding of blood there is no remission, Hebr. 9. 22. contrarie to the place alleged out of the Apostle, That henceforth Christ dyeth no more. Rom. 6. 9.

5 This their devised therefore of concomitance overthwarteth the institution of Christ: For, he saith, The bread is his body, the wine his blood: but by their rule, the bread is his bloody, and the wine his bodie. Bellarmin. answereth, that they say not, The bread is his blood, and the wine his bodie, but that vnder the forme of bread, there is his bodie with the bloody, and vnder the forme of wine, the blood in the bodie.

Contra. First, bee it granted, that the blood of Christ is in the bread, yet how can any man bee said to drinke it in bread? We vse to eate bread, not to drinke bread: his blood therefore cannot bee there, because it cannot bee drunke there. Secondly, we vrge his owne words, that Sub specie panis representatur corpus à sanguine separatum, &c. That vnder the forme of bread, there is represented the bodie separated from the blood, cap. 21. But there is no other presence of Christs bodie, but by way of representation, Ergo, the bodie is present without the blood, and the blood without the bodie Sacramentally.

Arguments against the popish device of concomitance.

Secondly, whereas Christ feuerally consecrated the Bread, saying, This is my body, and the Cup, saying, This is my blood; if then both Christs bodie and blood were received sacramentally in one kind, Christ had superfluously and in vaine distinguished them.

Belarmius answereth, that Christ distinguished the signes, to represent his death and passion thereby; but therefore it followeth not, that his body and blood should be separated or distinguished: as one may picture a mans head in one table, his bodie in another; and yet both shall be together still. Bellarm. ibid. c. 21.

Cuma. First, if Christs death is represented both by eating the bread and drinking the cup; as the Apostle sayth, 1. Cor. 11. 26. then where eyther of them is omitted, Christs death is not represented; and so consequently, there is no Sacrament. Secondly, we make no reall distinction of Christs bodie and blood, as we graunt no such reall presence; and therefore it is a beggerly shift, so often to inculcate the thing most in question betwene vs: the head and feete sunderly pictured, are spiritually and figuratiuely discerned, though in act not deuided; and so are Christs bodie and blood sacramentally distinguished.

Thirdly, Christ saith, This is my body, he saith not, This is my selfe; neither is the body and blood of Christ called Christ, God, and man; but if the bodie of Christ were there present with his soule and diuinitie, it might be said, This is Christs soule and deitie, as well as This is Christs body and blood.

Belarmius answereth, that Christ saith not, This is I, but, This is my bodie, because he would onely expresse that, which is represented by that signe: and though we say not, that the bodie of the Lord is God and man; yet that, which lyeth hid vnder the forme of bread, is God and man, ibid.

Cuma. First, if the bread onely represent Christs body, then his body onely is there, for there is none other presence but sacramentally, and by way of representation: and againe, who seeth not how he destroyeth the chiefe foundation of the reall presence, by expounding these wordes, This is my body, that is, representeth or signifieth my body. Secondly, hee confesseth, that Christs body is not God and man; but, this is his bodie: Ergo, (This) contained vnder the forme of bread, is not God and man: and thus he hath well concluded against himselfe, and confessed the greatest idolatrie in the world, in worshipping that which is not God.

Argum. 2. The whole essence and reason of the Sacrament, is found in one kind onely: Ergo, the Sacrament may be receiued in one kind. The proposition he thus proueth; the essence of the Sacrament is to signifie, first, our spirituall nourishment: secondly, our vnion with Christ, and of the faithfull among themselves: but both these are signified in eyther kind; as of the first Christ saith, John 6. My flesh is meate indeed: of the second the Apostle speaketh, We are one bodie, because we are partakers of one bread, 1. Corinth. 10. 17. the partaking onely of the bread signifieth our my-

Cuma. First, our spirituall foode cannot fully be expressed, but in both kindes, because our bodily refreshing consisteth both of eating and drinking, and therefore our Sauour sayth, John 6. 55. My flesh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed. Yea, Belarmius might haue remembered himselfe what he saith else where in these wordes, Quia Eucharistia est cibum & potum spirituales &c. Because the Eucharist is spirituall meate and drinke, therefore it must be giuen vnder the forme of meate and drinke. exp. 10. ration. 5. And if in Scripture sometime bread onely be named, yet thereby, as by the more principall part, is signified the whole sustenance of man, both of meate and drinke: as in the Lords Prayer, Give vs our daylie bread, wee pray not for bread onely, but for drinke also, and what els needfull for our bodily sustenance. Secondly, the vnion also of Christ and his members is not fully and sufficiently expressed but in both kindes: for the cup is the communion of the blood of Christ; the bread the communion of the bodie of Christ, 1. Corinth. 10. 16. Wherefore as our perfit vnion with Christ consisteth not in the communion of his bodie onely, but both of his bodie and blood; so this vnion is expressed and represented, in both the signes of the cup and the bread: And the Scripture also euidently describeth this vnion, to be in partaking both of the same flesh and blood, as Hebr. 2. 14. Forasmuch as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he himselfe likewise took part with them. Thirdly, the vnion of the faithfull themselves, though it be not the essentiall and principall signification of the Eucharist, which is to abide in the remembrance of Christ, and to shew forth his death; 1. Cor. 11. 25. 25. but is inferred by way of consequence and application; yet neither is this vnion amongst our selues so significantly expressed in one of the elements, as in both: first, because as our communion with Christ is fully expressed, in the bread and cup together, as I haue shewed; so our communion amongst our selues, which is an effect, and consequent of the other, cannot otherwise be fully signified. Secondly, as the Scripture describeth our naturall vnion, by the partaking of the same blood, 1. 7. 26. he hath made of one blood all mankind: so our spirituall coniunction is ascribed both to the blood and flesh of Christ, Ephes. 2. 13. Now in Christ Iesus, yee which were once farre off, are made nere by the blood of Christ, vers. 14. which hath made of both one, &c. vers. 15. in abrogating through his flesh the hatred, &c. Thirdly, though the Apostle giueth instance onely of the bread, in saying, We are one body and one bread, because we are partakers of one bread; 1. Cor. 10. 17. yet hereof it followeth not, that the bread and wine together do not more fully expresse the union of the faithfull, then eyther of them apart, seeing that the Apostle in setting forth our communion with Christ, made mention of them both, vers. 16.

Argum. 3. There is no spirituall fruit receiued by both kindes, that is not receiued by one; for it should be eyther in respect of the signes, or of the thing signified and contained in the signes: but in neither respect is there more fruite: First, to receiue both the signes profiteth not more, then to receiue one; as in Baptisme, to be thrice dipped, is no more, then to be washed but once. Secondly, the thing contained being Christ, he being twice in the same instant receiued, profiteth no more, then once; for then three suppes of the chalice should be better then one. Bel- larmin. cap. 23.

Contra. First, the more spirituall fruite which ariseth by communicating in both kinds, rather then in one, is both in respect of the signes and the thing signified taken together: And his instance of thrice dipping in Baptisme is nothing like, because that it is not warranted by the institution, and commandement of Christ concerning Baptisme, as the vsing of bread and wine is prescribed in the Eucharist: And againe the thrice dipping, is a repeating and iterating of the same thing: but to eate the bread, and drinke the cuppe, are two diuers things. Secondly, the things signified (for things contained, in the popish sense vnder the formes of bread and wine, we acknowledge none other but the substances of them) are not one, but diuers, the bodie and blood of Christ: and therefore the instance of the three suppes of the chalice is ridiculous and not to the purpose, which is but a superfluous and superstitious repetition of the same action: but he which receiueth bread and wine, as he doth two seuerall actions, so spiritually he is made partaker of two diuers things, namely, of Christs bodie and blood: wherefore let him keepe his three sups of the chalice to himselfe, and aske his ignorant Italian masse-priests the reason, why three sups rather then one or two should be good for the chin-cough.

Thirdly, that there ariseth no more spirituall fruite by one element then by both, is contrary to the Scripture. First, the Apostle saith, that by eating and drinking both, We do shew the Lords death, 1. Cor. 11. 26. not by seeing onely and beholding, as Bellarmine is not ashamed herein to contradict the Apostle: the Lords death then is shewed, and our faith thereby confirmed by vsing both. Secondly, Iohn 6. 55. our Sauiour saith, My flesh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed: So then, as meate is not so profitable to the bodie without drinke, as both together; neither is the spirituall meate without the spirituall drinke. Thirdly, if the bread alone be effectuell, as the bread and cup together, then Christ commanded a superfluous thing, in giuing it in charge vnto vs to vse them both.

Argum. 4. Most of the figures and types of the Eucharist do signifie the receiuing in one kind: as the Tree of life in Paradise, whereunto no water was ioyned; the Paschall Lambe which was eaten; Manna, Exod. 16. the Shewbread, Leuitic. 24. 5. the sacrifices whereof the Priests did eate, but the drinke offerings were not tasted of, but powred out before the Lord. Bel- larmin. cap. 24. argum. 1.

Ans. 1. First, arguments drawne from types and figures conclude not, vnlesse they be, Typi definiti, Types ordaind of God to such vse: neyther are the Sacraments of the Gospel to be squared out according to the patterne of the ceremonies of the law: We also denie that the ceremonies and rites of the Law, as the Paschal Lambe, Manna, and the rest, are figures and types of our Sacraments; but both their Sacraments and ours are figures and representations of Christ, as S. P. R. calleth Baptisme, arctum, a figure correspondent, or answering vnto Noah his Ark, 1. Pet. 3. 21.

Secondly, the figures propounded doe rather make for the Communion in both kinds: In Paradise, as there was a Tree of life, so there was a riuer to water the garden, Genes. 2. 10. And therefore Apocal. 22. 1, 2. the celestially Paradise is described according to the patterne of the terrestriall, to haue both a Tree of life and a riuer of cleare water: In the Passeouer as the Lambe was eaten; so the blood was sprinkled vpon the doore posts: And at the same time, that the Israelites dranke water out of the rocke, Exod. 17. they did also eate Manna, which was giuen them euery day from heauen: The Shewbread maketh not for them, for it was lawfull onely for the Priests to eate thereof; but they will not say, that the Priests onely are to eate the host, for they giue it to the people: the Sacrifices likewise with the drinke offerings serue not their turne, for neither did the Priests taste of the drinke offerings; and by this reason the cuppe should be denied as well to their Priests, as to their lay people.

Thirdly, we haue Types of both kinds to be receiued together, as Melchisedech brought forth both kind, it is great impietie in them to withhold either: for they may as well withhold the bread in the cup; and as well both, as one: and so the people should haue no Sacrament at all.

Secondly, Christ saith after the cup, Drinke ye all of this: but after giuing of the bread, he saith not, Eate ye all of this: so that our Sauour as it were did foresee, that the cup should bee denied to some, and therefore directly commaundeth that to be vsed of all.

Bellarmino here telleth vs, that though the Euangelists haue not these words, eate ye all of this, yet by tradition it is certaine, that Christ spake them.

Contra. Thus he holdeth the Scriptures imperfect, and maketh blind traditions of equall authority with them: thus adding to the Scriptures, not regarding the great curse laid vpon all such, that God will adde vnto them plagues, &c. Apocal. 22. 18.

Argum. 2. Our Sauour saith after the giuing of the cup, This is my blood, which is shed for you, and for many: wherefore the blood of Christ must bee giuen to all those, for whom it was shed; and so consequently to lay-men also.

Bellarmino answereth, that Christ died for all men, euen Turkes, Iewes, Infidels: and by this reason, if his blood should be giuen to all, for whom it was shed, euen Turkes and Iewes also should be admitted to the Communion: for the prooofe of the first part, he alleageth 1. Corin. 15. Coloss. 1. 1 Joh. 2.

Contra. First, that Christs death is sufficient for all the world, if all could belecue in him, wee willingly acknowledge: but that Christ died effectually for all, these places proue not, but onely for the elect. Saint Paul saith, 1. Cor. 15. 22. As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive: If all men generally be here vnderstood, and not the vniuersall companie of the elect onely; then all men indeede should be made aliue by Christ, and so be saued. Againe, Coloss. 1. 20. He hath reconciled all things in heauen and in earth: If he will vrge these words (all things) strictly according to the letter, then Christ must haue died for all creatures: wherefore the Apostle by all things in earth, vnderstandeth all nations both Iewes and Gentiles, as he expoundeth it, vers. 21. You, which were strangers, hath he reconciled, &c. And where S. Iohn saith, 1. Epist. 2. 2. that Christ died for the sin of the whole world: he is not contrarie to himselfe, who testifieth thus of Christ, Ioh. 17. 9. I pray not for the world: if Christ prayeth not for the world, much lesse did he die for the world: wherefore by the world is signified the vniuersall companie of the elect. Secondly, that Christ died onely to save the elect, it is euident by these places of Scripture: Ioh. 17. 19. For their sakes sanctifie I my selfe: which his sanctifying was in offering himselfe vp in sacrifice to God his father: Ephes. 5. 25. He gave himselfe for his Church: Coloss. 1. 24. I fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his bodies sake, which is the Church: All Christs sufferings both in his own person, and in his members, are for the same companie and bodies sake: but his sufferings in his members are for the Church, as here the Apostle saith, and for the elects sake; 2. Timoth. 2. 10. I suffer all things for the elects sake, that they might obtaine saluation in Christ: Ergo, Christs sufferings in his owne person are onely for the elect. But of this matter hereafter we shall haue better occasion to entreat at large: to which place I referre the reader. Thirdly, this rather is a good argument to proue that Christs blood was not shed for all, because the Sacrament of his blood must not be giuen to all: For to whom the thing signified belongeth, the signe doth much more; as our Sauour reasoneth, Mar. 10. vers. 14. Suffer little children to come vnto me, &c. for of such is the kingdom of God. Christ toucheth, and blesteth children, because they had interest in Christs kingdome: so the blessing of the Sacrament belongeth to them that haue interest in Christs blood.

Argum. 4. Our Sauour saith, Hoc facite, Doe this, &c. in the ministring of the Sacrament: we must doe as Christ did: but he gaue the bread, and similiter, likewise the cup, Luk. 22. 20. he gaue the one in like manner as the other: Ergo, so must the Ministers of Christ doe now, distribute both to the people.

Bellarmino answereth: first, that Saint Luke hath not, Hoc facite, Doe this, after the giuing of the cup, but onely after the bread.

Contra. But S. Paul setteth downe, Poc facite, Doe this, after the cup also, 1. Cor. 11. 25. and both Saint Lukes Gospell and Saint Pauls Epistle are of one and the same authoritie. Now where Bellarmino putteth a difference in S. Pauls words, that speaking of the bread, he saith, Doe this in remembrance of me: but after the cup, Doe this, as oft as you drinke it, in remembrance of me: who seeth not the ridiculous fondnes herein, making a difference, where there is none at all?

Secondly, saith he, he did not giue the cup, similiter, in like manner, as the bread, for he brake the bread: so hee not the cup: and of the bread, it is said, he gaue it, but of the cup, likewise he took it; he drinke it, 1. Corin. 11. Ergo, the cup was not giuen in like manner, Bellarmino respons. ad argum.

Contra. First, Bellarmino professing himselfe a Master in his sect, may be ashamed thus to palter, although in every thing, we said the cup was giuen like to the bread: for the bread is broken, and onely the wine is diuided, and not broken, as Saint Luke himselfe saith, preuenting this cauil, verſ. 17. but in the action of giuing, bleſſing, receiuing, they are alike. Secondly, neither S. Luke nor S. Paul ſay, likewiſe he tooke the cup, but thus onely, likewiſe the cup: ſo that the word, take, or giue, may be indifferently ſupplied out of the words going before: and yet S. Marke ſaith directly, that he gaue the cup alſo; chap. 14. 23. We ſee what goodly ſtuffe here is.

Argum. 5. Saint Paul writing to all the faithfull at Corinthus, deliuereth this as a tradition and commaundement from Chriſt, that they ſhould receiue in both kindes: ſaying, Hoc facite, Doe this: and verſ. 28. Let a man examine himſelfe, and ſo eate, &c. and drinke. But the tradition of Chriſt and his Apoſtles muſt not be tranſgreſſed. Ergo.

Bellarmino answereth: firſt, that Saint Paul, verſ. 28. doth not bid them eate, &c. and drinke, but onely preſcribeth a way, how they ſhould doe it profitably, when they did eate, &c. and drinke. Secondly, he denieth that this tradition of the Apoſtle is a precept. Thirdly, he denieth that this epiſtle was written to all the faithfull at Corinthus; ſo that the doctrine therein ſhould concerne them all.

Contra. Firſt, S. Paul, verſ. 28. doth both bid them examine themſelves, and that done he doth bid them eate and drinke: and though wee could not finde a precept in the Apoſtles words, yet that is a precept of Chriſts rehearſed by the Apoſtle twice, Hoc facite, Doe this, verſ. 24. 25. Secondly, if this tradition of the Apoſtle binde not, neither is in the nature of a precept, where he ſaith, 1. Cor. 11. 23. I haue receiued of the Lord that, which I haue deliuered to you: then neither is this a binding and commaunding tradition, where he ſaith, 1. Corin. 15. 3. I deliuered vnto you, that which I receiued, how Chriſt died for our finnes; which hee vttereth in the ſame manner of ſpeech, and with the like authoritie from Chriſt: ſo that if this doctrine muſt be beleued, that Chriſt did &c. then the other tradition of receiuing in both kindes ought to be receiued. Againe, if the Apoſtles traditions binde, Keep the traditions, which ye haue been taught, 2. Theſſ. 2. 15. how much more the traditions, which (he ſaith) he receiued from Chriſt? And is it not ſtrange, that we are driven now to maintaine the authoritie of traditions againſt the Papiſts? Thirdly, it is falſe, that this epiſtle and the doctrine therein contained concerneth not all the faithfull at Corinthus, ſeeing the Apoſtle directeth his epiſtle to all the Saints at Corinthus, with all that call vpon the name of Ieſu, 1. chap. 1. verſ. 2.

Argum. 6. The Prieſt that ſaith Maſſe, you allow to conſecrate and receiue in both kindes, becauſe he muſt expreſſe liuely the paſſion of Chriſt, and the ſeparation of his blood from his bodie in the ſame: Remiſſiſſiſſimæ ſol. 6. 58. By the ſame reaſon all the communicants ought to receiue in both kindes, becauſe they doe all ſhew forth the death of Chriſt, and ſhedding of his blood in the Sacrament, 1. Cor. 11. 26.

Argum. 7. This prohibition for lay men, not to receiue in both kindes, is but a late deuile of the Church of Rome, not paſt two hundred yeere old, decreed no longer agoe then in the Council of Conſtance, Ex p. 1. 150. Yet after that, the Council of Baſile graunted the uſe and liberie of the cup to the Bohemians, Ex pag. 694.

Thus they take vpon them to ouer-rule mens conſciences, now reſtraining, now againe granting libertie, binding and looſing at their pleaſure.

In Auguſtines time there was no ſuch ſeparation of the cup from the bread: but both were indifferently uſed in the Communion: Cum cibo & potu, ſaith he, id oportet homines ut nequeſcant, neque ſitiant, hoc vtraciter non preſtat, niſi ſiſte cibum & potum, &c. As men by their meate and drinke doe prouide, that they neither hunger nor thirſt: ſo this ſpiritual meate and drinke worketh the ſame effect in vs. Whereupon it followeth, that ſeeing in the Sacrament is contained and ſignified the full and ſufficient nourishment of our ſoules by the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, it muſt needs bee reſembled by the outward full ſufficient nourishment of our bodies, which is not by eating alone, but by eating and drinking.

See alſo the teſtimonie of Bernard of this matter, or who elſe is the author of thoſe ſermons: Ad alios fratres, non me, ſed Apoſtolum dicentem, calix benedictionis, nonne communicatio ſanguinis Chriſti? Calix & communicatio calicis, facit nos communionem quendam cum Chriſto, i. ſerm. Guerin. Heare yet my bretheren, not me, but the Apoſtle ſaying, the cup of bleſſing is it not the communication of the blood of Chriſt ſo then the cup, that is the communicating, or partaking of the cuppe, doth ioine vs in one communion with Chriſt. If then the people of God, euen ſuch, as are of the lay ſort, haue one communion with Chriſt, the ſigne of that communion which is the cup, is not to be denied them.

Council. Maſſicenſis. 2. 4. decreuimus, ut omnibus diebus dominicis ſtaris oblatio ab omnibus offeratur ſanctiſſimi, quam vini. We decree, that euery Lords day, the people doe make an oblation of bread and wine: that is, that they ſhould communicate in both, ut peccatorum ſuorum ſordibus carerent, that they may be freed from their finnes.

Council. Vormatiſſenſis. can. 31. Leproſi, ſi fideles Chriſtiani fuerint, dominici ſanguinis & corporis participatione tribuantur. Let leprous perſons, if they beleue, communicate both the bodie and blood of Chriſt:

bread and wine together, Genes. 14. And whereas hee answereth, that this type for both kinds maketh not against them, as the other types for one kinde make against vs, because they doe not vnto the necessitie of one kinde, as we doe of both: wee reple first, that the types alleaged make not at all against receiuing in both kinds, as I haue shewed. Secondly, the types are not contrarie one to another, if some of them shew both kinds, how can the other serue for one kinde? Thirdly, if it be not necessarie to receiue in one kinde, it is not to be done at all: for either it is agreeable to the institution of Christ to receiue in one kinde, or disagreeable: if it be agreeable and prescribed, it is of necessitie to be obserued: if it be not prescribed, it is of necessitie not to be vsed at all.

Fourthly, what though the types some of them shew the Sacramentall bread onely, some the Sacramentall cuppe; yet these may be ioyned in the substance and bodie, which are separated in the figure and shadow: as the Propheties of Christs passion and the manner thereof, are not found in one place: as, Thou shalt not breake a bone of him, is found Exod. 12. They peared my hands and my feet, Psalm. 22. They shall looke vpon him, whom they peared, Zachar. 12. 10. Doth it therefore follow, that these things should not be fulfilled at one instant? so though some types onely should figure the eating of bread, as Manna; some the cuppe, as the water out of the rocke: yet these things figured in the figure, may be ioyned together in the thing figured.

Argum. 5. Luk. 24. 30. Christ brake bread to his disciples: Act. 2. 42. The Apostles brake bread: Ergo, to communicate in one kinde is grounded vpon the example of Christ and his Apostles, Bellarmine lib. 4. de Eucharist. c. 24. Rhemist. Iohn. 6. 11. And Christ saith, Whosoever shall eate this bread, shall liue for euer, Iohn. 6. 58. Ergo, it is sufficient to receiue in one kinde.

Answe. First, to the two first places, we say, that it is not necessarie to vnderstand the breaking of bread in the Sacrament: but the vsuall bread rather, which was accustomed in their daylie repasts and feastes after thanksgiuing to be broken. Or, if we take it for the Sacrament, the breaking of bread is by a Synecdoche taken for the whole mysterie, as it is an vsuall phrase of speech in Scripture: for otherwise we will conclude as well, that Christ and the Apostles did but consecrate in one kinde, which they holde for a great absurditie, as that the other receiued but in one kinde: But their opinion is, that although the people must communicate in one kinde onely, yet the Priest must consecrate in both, Rhemist. annot. Iohn. 6. sect. 11.

Bellarmino here answereth, that the Apostles did consecrate in both kinds, but they ministred to the people onely in one; for it is like that many of them were Nazarites, and so would not drinke wine contrarie to their vow. resp. ad ration. 3.

Contra. First, Bellarmine a little before speaking of that place, Luk. 24. how our Sauour brake bread to the two Disciples in Emmaus, sayth, Nullum locum benedicendo, &c. That no place is left in the storie for the blessing or distribution of the cuppe: so that in his opinion Christ did not consecrate in both kinds: as Christ did there, so doe the Apostles here. Secondly, as here the Apostles brake bread; so likewise S. Paul Act. 20. 7. but he ministred in both kinds, as he writeth to the Corinthians, 1. Cor. 11. c. 6. but the Apostles were not contrarie one to another: therefore they allowe of altem ministred in both kinds. Thirdly, it might be, that some of the congregation were Nazarites, but not all, for the whole number was three thousand, Act. 2. 4. and the vow of the Nazarites did hold but for a time; for S. Paul also had a vow, & yet receiued in both kinds. Act. 18. 18.

To the second place we answer: First, it is not vnderstood of the sacramentall eating of Christ, but of the spirituall manducation of him, which may be done without a Sacrament: For whosoever eateth this bread, shall liue for euer: but whosoever eateth the Sacrament, shall not liue for euer. Secondly, seeing the eating and drinking of Christ are so often ioyned in this chapter, as videtur 1. 16. they might well know, that drinking is hereto be vnderstood, though it be not expresse.

Argum. 3. In many countries there is no wine to be had, as in the colde Northerly countries: And therefore they can not communicate according to the institution: whereupon that there might be an vniformitie in all Churches, it is most meete that where wine may be had, they should notwithstanding be content to receiue it in one kinde, Bellarmine cap. 28. Also there may arise much inconuenience in granting the cup to the people, as in spilling and sheading the wine, which after consecration is the blood of Christ, Rhemist. annot. Iohn. 6. sect. 11.

Answe. 1. As in some countries there is no wine to be had, so we finde that in certaine places and regions of the world there is no bread, such as Christ vsed, made of wheate or the like graine: as in some places among the West Indians they haue a certaine kinde of bread made of rootes, Lib. 1. cap. 17. called Casah, as Benenius witnesseth. Wherefore by this reason of vniformitie, we should not communicate at all, either in bread or wine, seeing that as some countries are destitute of wine, so other are of bread: but all this notwithstanding, the Sacrament may be duely administred in all places in both kinds: And where they haue neither bread nor wine, neither can possible prouide them, they may safely vse such other elements, as doe stand them in the like stead, as in the place of bread, bread, that which commeth nearest to the vse thereof: and for wine, some other precious thing, that is to be had, as in Russia, in stead of wine, they vse a certaine drinke like vnto that which we call Metheglen.

As for the other reasons of the inconueniences in spilling the wine, shaking the cup, the hanging of it on mens heards, and other such friuolous allegations: as they were no let or hinderance, why Christ notwithstanding did not institute the Sacrament in both kindes, and the Church accordingly obserued it, as we reade, the Corinthians did communicate in both kindes: so ought they to be no reason, why Christians should not receiue in both kindes now.

The Protestants.

WE holde it to be an Antichristian practise of the Church of Rome, to take away from the people the cup in the Sacrament: for although they sometime minister the cup to the people, yet they vse no consecration ouer it, neither giue it as any part of the Sacrament, fully annot. 1. Cor. 4. 10. act. 4. They doe therefore offer great wrong to the people of God, in depriving them of the one halfe of the communion.

Argum. 1. Ioh. 6. 53. Christ saith, Except you eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, you haue no life in you. Here we see both eating and drinking are ioyned together: Ergo, Christians ought to doe both. This place maketh strongly against our aduersaries, who do expound it of the sacramentall eating and drinking of Christ.

Bellarmino answereth: first, these words of our Sauour Christ doe binde vs onely to the taking and receiuing of Christs body and blood, they inioyne not the manner of receiuing them, whether vnder one kinde or both, Bellarmino lib. 4. de Euchar. cap. 2. 5.

Contra. If these words be vnderstood of the sacramentall eating and drinking of Christ, vnder Iesuite faith, they are: then must Christ be receiued sacramentally vnder both kinds: first, to eate and drinke Christ, it is all one: but his body cannot be sacramentally eaten, but in bread, nor his blood sacramentally drunke but in wine: for we are saide to eate, not to drinke bread.

Bellarmino 2. The wordes are to bee read disiunctiue, Except ye eate the flesh, &c. (and) that is, (or) drinke the blood of Christ, as it is read Act. 3. 5. siluer, and, that is, or, gold lib. 1. none.

Contra. First, it followeth not, (and) is taken for (or) in some places of Scripture, therefore in all it is so to be taken, as in this. Secondly, the example alleaged is nothing like, for whether we say, siluer and gold haue I not, or, siluer or gold, &c. it is no materiall or substantiall poynt of fact: but here is a condition of saluation annexed, except ye eate, and drinke, &c. ye haue no life in you: wherefore we must not dally thus in so waightie matters of our saluation, with (and) and (or). Thirdly, where Christ saith, Iohn 3. Except a man be borne of water and the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of heauen, he may as well say, that and here is taken for or, and so either of them shall be sufficient, as to be borne of water without the spirit. Lastly, to admit your disiunction, (though this be a new Grammatician trick to put a coniunction for a disiunction) then it followeth, that either may suffice, to eate Christs body, or drinke his blood in the Sacrament: and so consequently, as you presume to giue the bread without the cuppe, so the cuppe may be vsed without the bread.

Bellarmino 3. This precept is giuen to the whole Church; yet it is sufficient if it bee performed by some onely in the Church, that is the Ministers: so that precept is generall giuen in the creation, Encrease and multiplie: yet all are not therefore bound vnto procreation.

Contra. First, the example is nothing like: for the precept or libertie rather of procreation is not laid vpon men with any such necessitie, as this commaundement of eating and drinking Christs bodie and blood is; which whosoever doth not, perissheth, vers. 53. Secondly, the precept is generall, because the daunger of perishing, or not hauing life in transgressing the same is generall: Whosoever doth not so eate and drinke Christ, perissheth: Ergo, it belongeth to all to eate and drinke Christ.

Argum. 2. Christ instituted the Sacrament in both kindes, giuing charge and commaundement to all Christians in the same manner to celebrate it: for he saith, Drinke ye all of this. If our aduersaries answer, as they doe, that this was spoken to the Apostles: first, by the like reason they may say also, that when Christ said, I eate, &c. he spake vnto his Apostles, and so the people should neither receiue bread and wine, but the Ministers onely.

Bellarmino answereth, that Christ indeede gaue the whole Sacrament in both kindes onely to his Apostles, yet he forbiddeth not, but that it may be giuen to the people also: yea he commaundeth it, in saying, Hoc facite. Doe this.

Contra. Bellarmino here, hath made a good argument against himselfe: for Christ saith, Drinke, not onely after the breaking of the bread, but the giuing of the cup also, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Corint. 11. 24, 25. Wherefore if it be a commaundement from Christ to minister the Sacrament in both Christ: Here is excepted no sorte or calling of men, if they bee Christians.

Let us see their owne testimonie: Decret. par. 3. distict. 2. c. 7. Iulius: Scorsim panis, scorsim calicis commendatio memoratur: The blessing of the bread, and the blessing or commendation of the cup are sundrily rehearsed. But most evidently, ibid. c. 12. Gelasius: Comperimus autem, &c. We finde, that some receiuing onely a portion of the sacred bodie, doe abstaine from the cuppe of blood, who ether let them receiue, integra sacramenta, the whole and entire Sacraments, or let them bee kept from the whole: because the diuision of one and the same mysterie cannot be done without great sacrilege. Gelasius here maketh no mention at all of consecrating, but of receiuing in one kinde, which he counteth great sacrilege in whomsoever: his words are generall.

Likewise the Master, 1. 4. distict. 11. f. rendreth a reason out of S. Ambrose of receiuing in both kinds: Valet ad missionem anima & corporis, &c. That which we receiue is auailable for the tuition both of the bodie and soule: for the flesh of Christ is offered for the health of the bodie, his blood for our soules. But lay men haue soules to saue, as well as Priests: Ergo, they ought to receiue both Christs bodie, and blood. Some also of the Papists themselues doe hold, that there ariseth more spirituall fruite by receiuing in both kinds, than in one: Alexand. Aletius in 4. par. summ. quest. 53. super 1. Gelasii, lib. de euna & calice, cap. 25.

The holie Martyrs haue sealed this trueth: Iohn Philpot, pag. 1820. Christ instituted nothing superfluous; therefore you cannot say, that the whole effect of the Sacrament is as well in one kind as in both: if it were, Christ would haue giuen but one kinde onely.

Bishop Cranmer holy Martyr: Christ said, Drinke ye all of this: the Pope giueth a contrarie commandement to Christ, that the lay sort shall not drinke of the cup of their saluation. Theophilus Abundinus saith, That if Christ had been crucified for the diuels, his cup should not haue been denied them: Yet the Pope denieth the cup of Christ to Christian people, Fax pag. 1890.

THE NINTH QUESTION, OF THE adoration of the Eucharist.

The Papists.

It was decreed in the Councell of Trent, that the Eucharist should bee adored euen with the 17. Error. highest degree of worship, (Cultu latrois) which is proper to God: that it should also be carried about in solemne processions, to be shewed to the people, to bee worshipped and adored of them. And whosoever holdeth the contrarie, they pronounce accursed, Trident. Concil. sess. 13. can. 6.

Argument. 1. Hebr. 1. 6. Worship him all ye Angels: Ergo, Christ in the Sacrament, and wheresoever else his person is, ought to bee adored of men and Angels, Rhemist. ibid. This Saint Paul meaneth, they say, by discerning the Lords bodie, 1. Cor. 11. 29. that is, adoring, worshipping it, and making prayers vnto it, Rhemist. ibid.

Answer. First, we denie Christ to bee present in the Sacrament really, corporally, substantially: therefore it is not to be adored. Secondly, although the bodie of Christ were present in that manner under the accidents of bread and wine; yet vnlesse Christ be so present, that the elements or accidents of the elements be ioyned and vnited vnto him in one person, as the Godhead and humanitie make but one person, he is no more to be adored, then God the Father is to be worshipped in the Sunne or Moone, in the which he is verely present. But to say that the visible formes and elements are ioyned in an hypostaticall vnion to Christ, as his humanitie is to his Godhead, is a great blasphemie. Thirdly, a reuerent estimation and discerning of the Lords bodie we grant in the Sacrament; in preferring the elements before all other meates and drinkes, because of their mysticall signification, as wee preferre the mysticall washing in Baptisme before all other: but to knettle hold vp the hands, and to worship a piece of bread, we count it grosse and abominable Idolatry.

Argument. 2. Bellarmin. God is verely and truly to be worshipped, Matth. 4. Thou shalt worships the Lord thy God, &c. but Christ in the Eucharist is very God: Ergo, verely in the Eucharist to bee worshipped, cap. 9.

Answer. First, all this wee easily graunte, that Christ is in the Eucharist to bee adored, so is he also in Baptisme, and in the word preached, as the Apostle sheweth, 1. Corinth. 14. 24. If all prophesie if thou remainest, that beleueth not, &c. the secrets of his heart are made manifest, and so he will fall downe on his face, and worship God, and say plainly, that God is in you indeede: So we also, though wee denie that the Eucharist is to be adored, yet wee adore Christ in the Eucharist, saying, We praise thee, we blesse thee, we worship thee, we glorifie thee, &c. Secondly, he should haue assumed thus, but the Eucharist is my God, he would haue prooued any thing: but it were blasphemie so to say: for though wee should graunt the bodie of Christ verely to be present, yet is not the bodie of Christ God. And beside there are the formes of bread and wine remaining still, which being creatures and not hypostatically ioyned to the person of Christ, cannot without great perill of Idolatry bee adored.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, to put all out of doubt, Christs flesh is not bodily present, neither shal they be able, while they liue, to proue it : and therefore they haue no colour or ground at all of their adoration.

The Protestants.

That the Sacrament is not to be adored with any godly worship, but onely to bee duly reuerenced as an holie mysterie ; thus we proue it by the word of God.

Argum. 1. In the first instituting of the Sacrament, the Apostles receiued it sitting, not kneeling, by taking of it, not lifting vp their hands to it : Ergo, they did not adore it, neither is it by vs to be adored.

Againe, Christ commaundeth vs, onely to Take, and eate and drinke, and to doe all in remembrance of him : the Sacrament therefore was appointed to bee eaten and drunken, not to be adored about, or to be gazed vpon, or to be kneeled vnto.

Bellarmino answereth, that it was no maruel, that they worshipped not the bodie of Christ visible present vnder the forme of bread, seeing they worshipped not Christ himselfe visible present at the table : for it was now Supper time, neither could they at all times worship Christ, lib. 4. cap. 30.

Contra. 1. Though the Apostles did not alwaies externally worship Christ, especially being occupied in ciuill and common acts, as taking now their repast at Supper : yet there was now great occasion offered, both in respect of this high religious act begun, the institution of the Sacrament : and because of this great and wonderfull worke in the transubstantiating of the bread into Christs bodie. Now it had become them to haue fallen downe, and wondred, as Peter did at the taking of so many fish, Luke. 5. 8. and Thomas did when he thrust his hand into Christs side : And though they were sitting at Supper, yet they might soone haue chaunged their gesture ; especially seeing the legall supper was finished, and Christs supper begun. Therefore it is most like, that there was no adoration at all then intended.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, Whatsoever is not of faith is sinne, Rom. 14. 23. but the adoration of the Eucharist is not of faith : for faith commeth by hearing of the word, Rom. 10. 17. but nowhere in the word are we taught, to adore the elements in the Eucharist : Ergo, it is sinne.

Bellarmino answereth, that the word doth evidently teach that Christ is to be adored ; and that he is in the Eucharist, and therefore in the Eucharist to be adored, c. 30. resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. 1. First, that Christ is to bee adored as God and man, both in the Eucharist, and every where else, both of men and Angels, the Scripture teacheth, and we beleuee : but hereof it followeth not, that the Eucharist it selfe is to be adored with diuine worship. Secondly, neither is it of faith, or by the word, that Christs bodie is present in the Sacrament corporally : for if it were of faith, it should be plainly expressed in Scripture, as Saint Augustine saith : In ipsis, quae operibus scripturis posita sunt, inueniuntur et omnia, quae continent fidem, more scilicet, viuendi : In those places, which are plainly set forth in Scripture, are all those things found, that containe faith and manners, lib. de doctrin. Christian. c. 9. But that onely place, which they vrge, this is my bodie, though it be manifest and plaine, yet by their grosse comment is made obscure : and therefore according to their owne rule, In rebus obscuris minimum est sequendum : In obscure things the lesse and safest from danger is to be followed, Bonif. 8. regul. iuris. 30. But there is lesse daunger in not adoring at all, than in adoring there is perill and feare of idolatrie.

Argum. 3. Christ, as we haue shewed, is no otherwise present in the Eucharist, then in Baptisme. But the water in Baptisme is not to be adored : Ergo, neither the bread in the Sacrament.

Augustine did not so much as dreame of any adoration of the Sacrament : A Ceres & Liber Panis ganorum dijs longe absumus, quamuis panis & calicis sacramentum nostrum vix amplectimur. We doe not worship the heathenish Gods of corne and wine, Ceres and Bacchus, although after our manner we embrace the Sacrament of the bread, and of the cuppe. His meaning is, that Christians doe not worship bread and wine in the Sacrament, as the heathen did, conir. Faust.

In sacramenti sanctificatione & distributione existimo Apostolum propriis iussu fieri oportere, orationes, 1. Timoi b. 2. 1. Quod verò quidam codices non habent, orationes, sed adorationes, non arbitror facilius interpretatum : In the consecrating and distributing of the Sacrament, I thinke the Apostle biddeth orations or prayers to be made, not as some doe vnlearnedly interpret, adorations or worshippings, Epistol. 19. Ergo, he approueth not the adoration of the Sacrament.

Bellarmino obiecteth that place of S. Augustine Psalm. 98. Neque carum illum manducamus, nisi prius adorauerit : No man eareth that flesh, vnlesse he first adoreth. Bellarmino. cap. 30.

Ans. S. Augustine, as he holdeth onely a spirituall manducation : Quid parat dentes & ungues? crede & manducasti, &c. Why dost thou prepare thy teeth and bellic? beleuee onely and thou hast eaten, for to beleuee in him is to eate him, de civ. dei. par. 3. dist. 2. cap. 47. So he is to be understood speaking of adoration : as Christs flesh is eaten, so is it adored ; it is spirituall eaten by faith, Ergo, it is spirituall to be adored. So speaketh also Eusebius Emisenus, as he is cited in the decrees, par. 3. dist. 2. cap. 35. Sacrum Dei corpus fide respice, bonora, mirare, &c. The sacred bodie of God

God behold by faith, honor it, marvell at it, touch it with thy minde, receiue it with the hand of thy heart, &c.

Nicene. action. 6. These words are rehearsed out of the Synode of Constantinople, which was assembled against images: Eccce transfiguratus illius corporis imaginem totum, &c. Beholde all the image of that liuely and quickening bodie, the substance of bread, which he commaunded to be set before vs, least, if it should be shewed in humane shape, Idolatriam induceretur, Idolatrie by this means should bee brought in: They conclude directly against the adoration of the Sacrament.

Council. Florentin. sess. 25. The Grecians maner is, when as the bread and wine are caried by the Priest from one Altar to another, Capita sua reuerenter inclinant vniu panis ipse vinumque vniu for consecration: Doe reuerently bow their heads, when as the bread and wine are not yet consecrated. So then the Greeke Church doth reuerently vse them as holy signes, not adore them with a diuine worship: for it were to too grosse Idolatrie to worship the bare elements, such as they are before consecration.

Trident. Synod. can. 90. Nicene. 1. can. 20. and in diuers other Councils it was decreed, that none should bow their knees diebus dominicis, vpon the Lords day. It is not like then, that kneeling, they did adore the Sacrament; which was vually celebrated vpon the Lords day.

So that this adoration of the Eucharist seemeth to bee but a new deuise, hauing no warrant from the ancient practise of the Church: and indeed Homerus the third was the first, that commaunded the people at eleuation time to incline and bow themselves, and when the Host was carried about in procession: as it may appeare, decr. Greg. lib. 3. c. 10.

See also the testimonie of the holy Martyrs: Iohn Fortuna: if it be not God before the consecration, it is not God after, for God is without beginning and ending. p. 1919.

Thomas Spurdance holy Martyr: I receiue Christ by fayth by beleeuing in him: but the bread Fox. p. 1037. being resumed is not God, nor the bread, that is yonder in the pike is not God: God dwelleth not in temples made with hands. And therefore you doe very euill to cause the people to kneele downe and worship the bread.

AN APPENDIX OR TENTH PART, WHETHER the wicked doe receiue the bodie of Christ.

The Papists.

The wicked, they say, doe in the Sacrament eate the true flesh of Christ and drinke his blood, though they be infidels, and ill liuers. st. Ermo.

Argum. 1. They are guiltie of the bodie and blood of Christ, 1. Corin. 11. 27. How can they be guiltie of that, which they haue not receiued? And againe, by the vnworthie receiuing of no other Sacrament, is a man made guiltie of the bodie and blood of Christ, but onely heere: Ergo, the wicked are partakers of his bodie? Reuociss. annotat. 1. Corin. 11. sect. 16.

Ans. First, the wicked may be guiltie of the bodie and blood of Christ in vnworthie receiuing the Sacrament, though Christ be not corporally present: Euen as he that contumeliously greiues the scale of the Prince or abuses his image, is guiltie of the Maiestie of the Prince, though he haue not hurt his person. Secondly, he also may be guiltie of the blood of Christ, that despiseth discipline, which he receiued as a signe of his washing in the blood of Christ. And so the Apostle saith of wicked men, that fall away from Christian religion; that they crucifie againe to themselves the Sonne of God, Hebr. 6. 6.

Augustine also bringeth in Christ thus speaking to the wicked in the day of iudgement, Gratias ago illi peccatorum tuorum cruci, in qua iustus pendes, quoniam ille, tu quem tui miseris ascendi: The crosse of thy finnes, whereby thou didst crucifie me, was more grieuous vnto me, then the crosse, to the which for thy cause I was lifted vp: Serm. 181. cap. 7. de tempor. Thus we see, that wicked men by their sinfull life may crucifie Christ, though they can offer no violence to his bodie.

Argum. 2. One Collins a Papist thus reasoned from the example of Iudas: Iudas receiued the bodie of Christ, Ergo, the wicked, &c. Fox. p. 1686.

Ans. First, it is not so certaine out of the Gospell, whether Iudas receiued the Eucharist as all the other Disciples, but some thinke that he went out before: and there are some probable coniectures of this opinion: as first, it is like that the first supper was not yet finished, because of the dipping of the soppe, which was giuen vnto Iudas: for in his last supper, there was no such dipping vial, but onely bread and wine. Secondly, the washing of the Disciples feete was done before the last supper, and immediately vpon that washing, the soppe was giuen to Iudas, and forthwith vpon it he went out: These and other coniectures might leade one to thinke, that Iudas was not present at the institution of the last supper, but that S. Luke setting downe the storie in order, as Augustine thinketh, rehearseth those words of Christ, as spoken after his last supper: Be- hold the band of him which betrayeth me, as with me at the table. Luk. 22. vers. 21.

Secondly, it is notwithstanding certaine, that the wetted or dipped soppe was not the Eucharist, which was given to Indus; for Christ ministred the bread and wine apart, bread by it selfe, and wine by it selfe, not soppes in wine: as the decree condemning a certaine abuse of some that gave the Eucharist to the people dipped, or sopped, concludeth thus, Intus illa buccellat, et sic dipped soppe serued to bewray the betrayer of his Maister, not to signifie the Sacrament p. 3. d. 2. c. 7.

Thirdly, though we graunt with Augustine, that Christ deliuered the Eucharist to Indus as well as to the rest of the Apostles, in Psalm. 10. rehearsed also in the decrees, p. 2. cons. 1. q. 12. Ill. yet it followeth not that he receiued Christs bodie, Satan being entred in before, but the Sacrament onely of his bodie.

The Protestants.

That wicked men and Infidels, cannot in any sense be partakers of the true body and blood of Christ, thus it is proued.

Argum. 1. By faith onely are wee made partakers of the bodie and blood of Christ: but the faith the wicked cannot haue. The first part is proued out of the Gospell: He onely that believeth of the blood of Christ shall neuer thirst againe, John 4. 14. He that shall neuer thirst, must believe in Christ, John 6. 35. Ergo, he onely that beleueth doth drinke the blood of Christ. So Augustine saith, Nolite parare fauces, sed cor; non quod videtur, sed quod creditur, pascit: Doe not prepare your iawes, but your heart; it is not that which is seene, but what is beleueed, that nourisheth: Christ must be receiued by faith: therefore Infidels or vnbeleueers cannot receiue him.

Argum. 2. Whosoever eateth the flesh of Christ and drinketh his blood, shall haue eternall life, John 6. 54. But the wicked haue not eternall life: Ergo, they neither eate nor drinke of Christ. So Origene reasoneth: Si fieri posset, ut qui malus adhuc perseueraret, &c. If it were possible, that he which yet remaineth wicked, could eate the word made flesh, it had not been written, that that eateth this bread, shall liue for ever: Homo in 15. Matth.

But here they will thrust in an olde distinction: that we must consider three things in the Eucharist, Speciem panis, veritatem carnis, virtutem gratia spiritualis: The shape of bread, the veritie of Christs flesh, the spirituall grace or vertue: the first a mouſe may gnaw; the second a wicked man may receiue; the third none but the faithfull can haue.

Contra. 1. The veritie of Christs flesh cannot bee separated from the spirituall grace: for he saith, John 6. 55. My flesh is meate indeede, &c. and whosoever eateth my flesh hath eternall life, &c. If the wicked then verily eate Christs flesh, they verily haue eternall life. Secondly, so there are not three, but two things in the Sacrament: the Sacramentall signe, which the wicked may be partakers of; and the spirituall grace, which is the communicating of Christs bodie and blood, which none but the faithfull can haue: As Bernard witnesseth: Sacramentum sicut accipitur indignus, sic ad mortem indignus, rem sacramenti nemo percipit, nisi dignus & idoneus: As the wicked may receiue the Sacrament to life, so the vnworthie vnto death: but the matter or substance of the Sacrament no man receiue, but he that is worthie. Bernard de vit. solitar.

Augustine saith, De mensa dominica sumitur quibusdam ad mortem, quibusdam ad vitam, &c. In the Lords table some doe receiue vnto life, some vnto death: but the thing, whereof it is an instrument, worketh in all to life, in none to death, whosoever are partakers of it. But the body and blood of Christ are the things signified in the Sacrament: Ergo, whosoever receiue, they haue life thereby; the wicked then receiue them not.

Coloniens. part. 5. cap. 2. Panis spiritus, tam per verbum predicationis quàm sacramentaliter veritate corporis & sanguinis dominici in vna fide comestus, vinificas, &c. The bread of the spirit is well by the preaching of the word, as in the Sacrament, being eaten by faith in the veritie of the bodie and blood of Christ quickeneth. The veritie of Christs bodie then is receiued by faith, which the wicked haue not: and as they receiue not Christ in the worde preached, so neither in the Sacrament.

We haue the testimonie of their owne decrees: Part. 3. dist. 2. c. 65. Qui discordat de Christo, non est particeps eius. He that dissenteth from Christ, doth neither eate his flesh, nor drinke his blood. But the wicked dissent from Christ: Ergo.

Ibid. c. 69. Quicunque panem hunc manducauerit, &c. Whosoever eateth this bread, shall liue for ever. But the wicked liue not for ever: Ergo, they eate not this bread.

Cap. 70. Quando Christus manducatur, vita manducatur. When Christ is eaten, life is eaten. But the wicked eate not life: Ergo, they eate not Christ.

Cap. 75. Non sunt fideles, &c. The faithfull know how they eate the flesh of Christ: Therefore the wicked and vnbeleueers know it not.

Cap. 40. Qui manducauerit corpus, &c. He that eateth Christs bodie, hath remission of sinnes. But the wicked haue not remission of sinnes. Ergo.

1. Idol. 42. this was the faith of Pope Nicolas, to the which he caused Bernardine to subscribe Christi frangi & fidelium dentibus atteri: That Christs bodie is broken and chewed in the mouth of the faithfull. So that his bodie cometh not betwene the teeth of the wicked and that receiveth it, receiveth the spirite, which is not without grace. Neuman Martyr, after one Collins had saide, that Indes received the body of Christ: replied, for the Diuell was entred into him before, and if the Diuell and Christ were there at once, how could they agree together? pag. 1686. These holy Martyrs, with many others, for this their true confession of their faith, were cruelly put to death.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CONTROVERSIE, CONCERNING THE POPISH MASSE.

His part likewise comprehendeth divers questions.

1. Of the divers representations of the death and sacrifice of Christ.
2. Of the sacrifice of the Masse, the name thereof, and of the sacrificing priesthood.
3. Of the vertue and efficacie which they falsely ascribe to the Masse.
4. For whom the sacrifice of the Masse is available; whether for the quicke and the dead.
5. Of priuate Masses.
6. Of the manner of saying and celebrating Masse.

7. Of the ceremonies which they vse in the idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse: some goe before: some are observed in the celebration thereof.

1. Of the forme of the Masse, which consisteth partly of the Canon, and of the preface to the Canon, where we are to shew the strange and hereticall blasphemies, which in great number are mixed by them in the Masse. Of these now in order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE DIVERS representations of the death of Christ.

The Papists.

They are not contented with that one lively representation of the death of Christ, which is exhibited in the Lords Supper, but they have brought in two more beside that, and so make three in all: the first, say they, is simplex representatio, a simple and plaine representation of the death of Christ, which is done so often as the Sacrament is received. The second is, Representatio, a lively and full representation of Christs death: which they doe vse yearly to see done by sollemne gestures, apparell, and other ceremonies vpon Good Friday, as it is commonly called before Easter, when they doe make nothing else but a Pageant play of the Sacrament. The third representation is also a sacrifice beside, and that is the sacrifice of the Masse. Bellarmin. de Missa. The Rhemists make a fourth representation beside, which is in the sollemne receiuing of the Communion at Easter: So then first, Christs death is shewed forth by the Sacrament of the Eucharist all the yeare long as it hangeth in the pixe, or when it is carried to house the sicke; Secondly, it is represented once in the yeare by their sollemne Pageant play on good Friday, when there is no Sacrament consecrated, but an histrionically expressing by gestures and actions, the manner of Christs crucifying. Thirdly, in the continuall sacrifice of the Masse, Christ his death is represented. And lastly, in the sollemne receiuing at Easter: especially, the mystrie of Christ our Paschall Lambe is commended to the people to be eaten with all sinceritie in the Sacrament: and so doe the Rhemists expound that place of S. Paul, Let us feast or holy day, not with the leuen of malitiousnes, 1. Cor. 6. 8. literally applying it to the feast of Easter, Rhemist. in hunc locum.

The Protestants.

We are taught by the word of God, that by eating the bread, and drinking of the cup in the Sacrament, not by gazing, looking, lifting vp, turning, hanging vp bread in pixes, or by any such meanes, but only as wee haue said, is the Lords death shewed forth and represented, 1. Cor. 11. 26. We acknowledge therefore one onely sacramentall representation of Christ, and no more in the Lords Supper: the sacrifice of the Masse we iudge to be an abominable thing, as afterward shall be shewed.

Secondly, it is a foule absurditie to make any representation of Christs death by bare shewes, and actions of the bodie without any Sacrament, as they doe in their popish vpon Christs Passion day: for at that time there is no Sacrament consecrated; but the Priests by certaine gestures and motions of the bodie, in bowing, bending, casting abroad his arms, and such like, doth resemble Christ crucified, Bellarmus. cap. 1. But to call this a lively representation done without a Sacrament, and the other in the Sacrament, simpliciter representationem, but a simple and plaine representation, is too great presumption: wherein they preferre their own superstitious deuises, before the ordinance of Christ.

Thirdly, that place of S. Paul is vnfitly applied to the celebration of Easter: Augustinus expoundeth it far otherwise: Diem festum celebremus, non vniquem suam diem, sed totam vitam in ipsius sinceritatis & veritatis: Let vs keepe holy day, not one onely day, but all our life long, in the vnleavened bread of purenes and trueth. So then in Augustinus iudgement, the Apostles had no relation to any certaine time, which he would haue kept holy: but to the reformation of the whole life.

Lastly, Nicen. 2. actio. 6. tom. 3. The sentence of the Synode of Constantinople is thus referred, after they had set downe the words of our Saviour, This doe in the remembrance of me, they say thus, Eccc vivificantis illius corporis imaginem totam panis, id est substantiam: Behold the true image of that quickening bodie, the substance of bread. The Synode vpon these words of Christ concludeth, that there is no other representation of Christ, but in the Eucharist: so that in the Sacrament there is no representation at all. Likewise, Council. Toletan. 12. c. 5. Quoniam sanguinem & corpus Christi in altario immolatur, totius se participem prebeat: As often as the Priest offer vp the bodie and blood of Christ, let him be partaker of it. Wherefore by this Canon the sacrifice of Christs bodie and blood cannot be repeated or represented, without the partaking and receiuing of the Sacrament.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE SACRIFICE of the Masse, and the Priesthoode thereto belonging.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NAME and terme of Masse.

The Papists.

30. Error.

There are diuers opinions amongst them, concerning the originall of this name. Some say it is called Missa, the Masse, Quia oblatio & preces ad Deum mittantur, Hugo de S. Victor. Others, quid Angelus à Deo mittatur, qui sacrificio assistat: Because an Angell is sent of God to assist at the Masse. Thom. Aquinas 3. part. quest. 83. artic. 4. Some of the Hebrew words Mincha, Deut. 16. which signifieth an oblation: Some, ex missis donariis, & symbolis, of the gifts and offerings sent or put in before the Communion. But what beginning soeuer it had, they doe generally take the Masse, for that solemne action, whereby the Sacrament is made a sacrifice, and offered vp to God, Bellarmus lib. 1. de missa. cap. 1.

The Protestants.

We doe not greatly force vpon this name: for both the name and the thing is abolished from our hearts and mouthes; and wee trust in God, wee shall neuer haue occasion to know it againe. But howsoeuer it is, this name Missa, Masse, cannot signifie any such thing as they pretend.

1 For it seemeth that Missa was deriued, à dimissione populi, of the dimission or sending away of the people: and so was taken generally for any congregation assembled either to pray, as the Psalmes, or for any other religious duety: As yet to this day in the dutch language (Messe) signifieth any solemne frequencie or congregation of the people. In this sense Cassianus vnderstandeth Masse, that is, for the dimission of the people: speaking of him that commeth not timely to the howres of prayer: hee would not haue him to enter in, but Stantem pro foribus congregationis, missam praestolari debere: He ought standing without the doores to waite for the masse of the congregation. Or as Master Philips giueth the sence of this word, the Communion was called, Missa, à mittenda: of such things as were sent at the celebration of the Sacrament by such as were of authority to the reliefe of the poore, pag. 1815.

orat. lib. 3. c. 7.

2 Augustinus taketh this word Missa generally for the Leiturgie or seruice of the Church, in sermo. de tempore 251. if that Sermon be Augustinus. Sunt aliqui, & maxime potentes homines cum veniunt ad ecclesiam, non sunt deuoti ad laudes Dei celebrandas, sed cogunt Presbyterum ut dicat Missam: There are some, and commonly the great men of the world, which come not to Church

wid

...to sing praises to God; but they constrain the Presbyter or Minister to make short Masse. Here this word Masse signifieth the whole Leiturgie, as singing of Psalmes, and praising God; not any sacrifice or oblation: which could not be abridged or curtailed. Wherefore as the Masse is of no great antiquitie, so neither is the name in that sense.

And is evident out of their owne decrees, that the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Christ is more vially knowne of ancient time by other names, than this of the Masse. Decret. 1. 2. c. 72. Gregorie calleth it the Communion. C. 88. Augustine, Eucharistiam, the Eucharist. Decret. 1. 3. diff. 2. c. 63. it is called Sacramentum pietatis, The Sacrament of pietie or deuotion. Ibid. 17. Soter calleth it Cenam Domini, The Supper of the Lord. Ibid. 8. Alexander, the oblation. C. 12. Gelasius, Mysterium, a mystrie. C. 5. Sacramentum corporis & sanguinis Domini: The Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Christ. These and other such names they gaue this Sacrament, more significant, and farre more ancient than the title of the Masse.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE SACRIFICE OF THE MASSE.

The Papists.

Christ, they say, at his last Supper, did offer vp his owne bodie and blood in sacrifice, vnder the formes of bread and wine, to God his father: and at the same instant made his Apostles, and their successors Priests, to offer vp his bodie in the Sacrament, Council. Tridentin. sess. 22. cap. 1. And the same bodie which Christ offered vp vpon the crosse, is daily offered vp by the ministerie of the Priests: the difference onely is in the manner of offering, Council. Trident. ibid. cap. 2. The eternitie and proper act of Christs Priesthood, consisteth in the offering and sacrificing of the bodie and blood of Christ in the formes of bread and wine in the Church, Rhem. Heb. 7. sect. 8. And we meane alwaies of Priest and sacrifice taken in their owne proper signification, ibid. sect. 7. In the Eucharist then there is a true sacrifice of the very bodie and blood of Christ offered vp to God, by the hands of the Priest, in the formes of bread and wine, Bellarmin. cap. 5.

Argum. 1. Christ is a Priest after the order of Melchisedech: but the proper act of Melchisedech Priesthood did consist in sacrificing in the formes of bread and wine: Ergo, the eternitie of Christs Priesthood standeth in the sacrificing of his bodie and blood in those formes: there doth therefore still remaine a proper externall sacrifice in the Church, Rhemist. annot. Heb. 7. sect. 8. Bellarmin. cap. 6.

And that *Melchisedech*s Priesthood consisted in the oblation of bread and wine, Bellarmin. would strengthen by these reasons:

First, from the word vsed, Genes. 14. 18. he brought forth, the Hebrue word is, me isfa, which scripture is properly applied to the bringing forth of sacrifice: as Genes. 4. the like word is vsed vnto Cain and Abels sacrifice, Bellarmin. c. 6.

Contra. First, the word, which here signifieth to bring forth, is not alwaies, or for the most part, vnto the bringing of sacrifice; as Exod. 3. 10. That thou maist bring my people out of Egypt: Leuit. 10. The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness: wherefore his obseruation of this word is not hold, than true. Secondly, Genes. 4. 3. Cain brought an oblation to the Lord: Here these two words, an oblation, and to the Lord, doe shew that he brought a sacrifice: but there is not any word vsed in this place to *Melchisedech*s bringing, that may conclude a sacrifice.

Secondly, because Abraham had no neede of bread and wine to refresh himselfe, being returned with great spoyle from his enemies, and so hauing sufficient to refresh himselfe with: therefore Melchisedech brought them forth to offer to God.

Contra. First, your owne vulgar text hath this note in the margin: Melchisedech cibis ipsum Abraham: Melchisedech doth feede Abraham himselfe: their owne note is against them. Secondly, whereas Abraham had receiued all the King of *Sodom*s goods, and the victuals also, which were carried away, though hee suffered the young men to eate thereof; yet he would not take any of the Kings goods so much as a thread or a shoole latchet, vers. 23; and therefore it was Gods purpose to send Melchisedech, that hee should bee refreshed rather at his hands, than from the King of Sodom an Insidell.

Thirdly, as Melchisedech is said to haue been Gods priest, so it was requisite that the Scripture should make mention of his sacrifice, wherein his priesthood consisted: but that is not any where else mentioned: Ergo, he offered the sacrifice of bread and wine, Bellarmin. ibid.

Contra. First, the argument followeth not, there is no mention made of any other sacrifice in scripture which Melchisedech offered: Ergo, he offered bread and wine: for as touching this high myste of *Melchisedech*s priesthood, many things in scripture are concealed, as the Apostle saith in the Hebrewes, 3. 12. of whom we haue many things to say, which are hard to be opened, because ye are dull of hearing. Vpon which words S. Hierome thus writeth, Si uis electionis stupet ad mysterium, &c. If the vessel of election be astonished at this mysterie, and confesseth that, whereof he disputeth, to bee ineffable; how much more we, &c. Secondly, the Apostle sheweth wherein Melchisedech shewed himselfe a priest, namely, in blessing of Abraham, and therefore receiued tithes of him, Hebr. 7. vers. 6.

Fourthly, whereas the words are, Melchisedech brought forth bread and wine, for he was a Priest of the most high God, Genes. 14. 18. the Scripture giuing this as a reason of his bringing forth bread and wine, because he was a priest, implieth, that he brought them forth to sacrifice, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. First, the text according to the Hebrue is this: And Melchisedech King of Salem brought forth bread and wine, and he was a Priest of the most high God, and he blessed him, &c. Genes. 14. 18. What though in some places of Scripture, and signifieth (for) yet it followeth not, that it should bee so euery where: and if it be so taken here in this clause of the Sentence, for he was a Priest, &c. why not in the other also, for he blessed him? so that this is giuen as a reason taken of the effect of his Priesthood. And indeede the order of the words so requireth: that as first he is named a King, and then the effect followeth, which was his munificence in bringing forth bread and wine: so secondly he is called a Priest, and then the effect of his Priesthood is expressed, namely, his blessing. Secondly, whereas Bellarmin saith, that the Apostle, Hebr. 7. proueth Melchisedech not to be a Priest, because he blessed Abraham, but therefore greater onely then Abraham, it is a false collection: for the Apostle saith thus, Hebr. 7. 6. He receiued tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promise. From which words we reason thus: Melchisedech as he was a Priest receiued tithes: for tithes were not due but to the Priesthood, vers. 5. but as he blessed he receiued tithes, as the Apostle saith, vers. 6. Ergo, as he blessed he was a Priest.

Fifthly, Bellarmin reasoneth thus: Christ is said to be a Priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech: but his priesthood cannot remaine, vnlesse his sacrifice continue still: but his sacrifice vpon the crosse was once done for all: Ergo, hee must haue another sacrifice daily to bee offered in the Church, which is the sacrifice of Melchisedech in bread and wine, Bellar. c. 6.

Contra. First, as Christ is a Priest for euer, so also doth his sacrifice continue for euer, which was but once offered; yet the vertue and efficacie thereof endureth still: for his blood yet speaketh vnto God for mercie for vs, not for vengeance, as the blood of Abel, Hebr. 12. 24. Secondly, it is not necessarie that Christ should haue an externall priesthood still in earth: for neither in the time of the law, was there any externall priesthood after *Melchisedech*s order continued, and yet euen then, was Christ a Priest after *Melchisedech*s order. Thirdly, the Apostle sheweth, that Christ our high Priest is entred into heauen, as the Priest did goe once a yeere into the holy place, and there continueth a Priest for euer after *Melchisedech*s order, in appearing in the sight of God for vs, Hebr. 9. 24.

Sixtly, Christ being a Priest for euer after *Melchisedech*s order, must agree with Melchisedech in that, which was proper to *Melchisedech*s priesthood: but nothing is proper to his priesthood, but to sacrifice in bread and wine: Ergo, herein there must bee an agreement of *Melchisedech*s priesthood and Christs.

The assumption is proued thus: first, it was not proper to *Melchisedech*s priesthood to blese, and to receiue tithes: for this the Leuiticall priesthood did. Secondly, nor yet to haue none to succede him: for so neither had Abel. Thirdly, neither to bee without genealogie, and so to be a type of Christ: for there is no mention made likewise of the genealogie of Iob and Helias, who were also Priests: Ergo, this was onely proper to *Melchisedech*s priesthood to sacrifice in bread and wine, cap. 6. resp. ad 3. arg.

Contra. First, though Leui receiued tithes, and gaue blessings, yet not as Melchisedech, to whom euen Leui paid tithes then in *Abraham*s loynes, Hebr. 7. vers. 9. and they being of *Abraham*s seede could not be greater then Abraham; yet Melchisedech was greater because he blessed him: wherefore to receiue tithes of Abraham, and to blese so great a Patriarch, was proper to *Melchisedech*s priesthood, and not common with Leui. Secondly, though Abel had none to succede him in his carnall generation, and respect of his person; yet in his office in sacrificing of sheepe and such like, he had many successors: but Melchisedech in his priesthood and office had none to succede him: wherefore this was also proper to his priesthood, and agreeable herein to Christ. Thirdly, Iob and Helias are not in the Scripture called priests, as Melchisedech is: but Iob is set forth by the name of a iust man, Iob. 1. 1. Helias by the name of a Prophet, Malach. 4. 5. and Melchisedech was so without genealogie, as there is no mention made neither of the beginning nor of the end of his daies, Hebr. 7. 2. yet there is mention made both of the terme of Helias life, in the earth, when hee was taken vp into heauen, 2. King. 2. and of *Iob*s death, Iob. 42. 17. wherefore this also is proper to Melchisedech to be a priest without genealogie, hauing neither beginning of daies, nor end of life; and herein he was a type of Christ. We neede not then seeke for any thing els, wherein Christ and Melchisedech should agree, the type answering in euery respect to the substance; much lesse are we forced to deuise any such sacrifice of bread and wine.

Seuenthly,

Seemingly, Christ was not a priest after Melchisedech's order, in respect of the sacrifice vpon the crosse, because he did not offer vp himselfe vnder the forme of bread and wine: Ergo, hee is after Melchisedech's order in respect of the daily sacrifice offered vnder bread and wine: Bellarm. cap. 6.

Contra. First, we denie that Melchisedech sacrificed vnder the formes of bread and wine at all, and therefore therein he is not a type of Christ at all. Thus he still shamefully beggeth the thing in question. Secondly, it followeth not that if Christ answere not to Melchisedech in the sacrifice of his crosse, that the resemblance should be in sacrificing bread and wine: for in many other things was Melchisedech a type of Christ: 1. In his name, which signifieth King of righteousness. 2. In his offices, because he was both King and Priest. 3. In the eternitie and continuance of his office. 4. In the excellencie of his person, in that hee was greater then Abraham the Patriarch. Thus the Apostle sheweth Christ in Melchisedech to haue been prefigured: so that wee neede not run to any such strange denise of the sacrifice of bread and wine. Thirdly, euen Christ vpon the altar of the crosse was a Priest after the order of Melchisedech, in respect of the permanencie of his priesthood, and eternall efficacie of his crosse, hauing with one offering consecrated for euer them, that are sanctified, Hebr. 10. 14. so that Melchisedech was not so much to prefigure the matter of Christs sacrifice, which was shadowed forth in the bloodie sacrifices of calves and goates in the law, as to signify the dignitie of his person, and eternitie of his office. Fourthly, this cannot be farre from blasphemie to denie, that Christ was properly a Priest after Melchisedech's order, and to affirme, that their popish priests doe sacrifice in the formes of bread and wine according to the order of Melchisedech's priesthood: And such are their reasons drawne from the similitude of Melchisedech's priesthood vnto Christ. Now on the contrarie side our arguments follow, to prouoe, that their sacrifice of the Masse hath no shew of ground at all in the type of Melchisedech.

Argum. 1. We confesse, that Melchisedech was a type of our Sauour Christ, and that hee was a Priest after Melchisedech's order: but, not in any such respect, for offering in bread and wine: for the next faith, he brought forth bread and wine, he offered it not: he brought it forth for the refreshing of Abraham, and those which were with him, Genes. 14. 18.

Belarmius answereth, that the bread and wine were first offered and sacrificed to God, and afterward giuen to Abraham, and his fellows to eate, resp. ad argum. 7.

Contra. First, if the same bread and wine were first offered to God, and then giuen to Abraham, then in effect nothing was offered to God: for in all offerings and sacrifices, whether burnt-offerings, meate-offerings, or peace-offerings, some part at the least was burnt vpon the altar vnto God: but here no such thing was done. Secondly, there was no sacrifice without an altar, fire, and wood: as Abraham laid the wood vpon Isaac, and tooke the fire in his hand, and built an altar, Genes. 22. 6, 10. but here are none of all these. Thirdly, if Melchisedech had a purpose to sacrifice to God, he would rather haue imitated Abel to haue offered of the fruites of his sheepe, then of Cain who brought of the fruites of the earth, Genes. 4. 2.

2. He brought forth bread and wine, and not the formes onely of bread and wine: therefore your sacrifice in the formes onely, is not after his order.

Belarm. The sacrifice of Melchisedech and the sacrifice of the Masse agree in the outward symbole, though not in the inward substance, which is sufficient: for the representation is in the accidents, not in the substance: and that was but the type, or symbole, and therefore the substance may be diuers, resp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. First, hereof it followeth, that they which consecrate bread and wine only without any real presence, doe more properly imitate Melchisedech, then your Masse-priests, that hold a fleshy presence vnder the formes of bread and wine: for Melchisedech offered the substance of bread and wine, and not the formes only. Secondly, if Melchisedech's oblation do represent the sacrifice of the Masse, it must represent it as it is a sacrifice: but the Masse is no sacrifice but in respect of the inward substance: the sacrifice is not of the outward formes of bread and wine: Ergo, the representation is in respect of the substance. Thirdly, types and shadowes differ from the bodie in outward symboles onely, they agree in substance, as S. Paul sheweth, how Christ was the same spirittuall meate and drinke both to the Israelites and vnto vs, but vnder diuers Sacraments, 1. Cor. 10. 4. Wherefore it is a false conclusion, Melchisedech's sacrifice was a type of the sacrifice of the Masse: Ergo, diuers in substance.

3. If Melchisedech's bringing forth of bread and wine, were a sacrifice or oblation, and a type of the like sacrifice to continue for euer in the Church, it must also haue bin a propitiatorie sacrifice for the remission of sinnes, as they say the sacrifice of the Masse is, which was thereby signified: but there is no propitiatorie sacrifice for remission of sinnes, without shedding of blood, Hebr. 9. 22. Therefore Melchisedech's act, being without blood, was no such sacrifice, and consequently none at all.

4. The Apostle to the Hebrues sheweth, wherein Christ was a Priest after Melchisedech's order, der, Hebr. 7. First, in that Melchisedech was both King and Priest, vers. 2. so is Christ. Secondly, in respect of the eternitie of his Priesthood: we doe not reade either of the beginning of his daies, or end of his life, nor of any change of his Priesthood, vers. 3. All which is most truly verified in Christ. Thirdly, Melchisedech was a type of Christ, and his Priesthood of Christs, because of the excellencie thereof above the Leuiticall Priesthood: for Leui paid tithes in Abraham to Melchisedech; and therefore was inferiour, and was blessed of Melchisedech in Abraham, the lesse of the greater: so is the Priesthood of Christ aduanced farre above Aarons order. If in any other materiall point Melchisedechs Priesthood had resembled Christs, as in this oblation of bread and wine, the Apostle would not haue omitted it.

Bellarmine answereth, that the Apostle omitteth of purpose to speake of Melchisedechs oblation of bread and wine, least by this occasion he should haue been constrained to treat of the Eucharist, which was too high a myserie for them, and that very thing (which he saith) was hard to be vttered concerning Melchisedech, in respect of their dulnes, resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, the Hebrues were no more dull to vnderstand, than the Corinthians: for so the Apostle saith to them, they haue neede of milke, not strong meate, Hebr. 5. 12. so likewise he writeth to the Corinthians, that he gaue them milke to drinke, and not meate, because they were babes, 1. Cor. 3. 2. yet hee doubteth not to vnfolde to the Corinthians the myserie of the Eucharist both in the 10. and 11. chapters: wherefore this can bee no reason, why hee should conceale it from the Hebrues. Secondly, the Eucharist is no higher a myserie, than the doctrine of Baptisme, or then the myserie of the resurrection: but these things the Hebrues were well instructed in Hebr. 6. 2. therefore they were capeable also of the doctrine of the Eucharist. The antecedent is thus proued: for Baptisme by the Apostle is called a myserie: This is a great myserie, I speake concerning Christ and the Church, Ephes. 5. 32. and wherein this myserie lieth, is declared, vers. 26. Christ loved his Church, and gave himselfe for it, &c. that hee might cleanse it by the washing of water thorough the word. This washing in Baptisme, is that myserie, which hee speaketh of: so also the resurrection is called a myserie, 1. Cor. 15. 51. I shew you a myserie, we shall not all sleepe, but we shall all be changed: but these mysteries the Hebrues vnderstood, Hebr. 6. 2. Ergo, they might safely be instructed in the myserie of the Eucharist.

5. Therein consisted the proper act of Melchisedechs Priesthood, for the which hee receiued tithes of Abraham: but, as the Apostle saith, hee receiued tithes, and blessed Abraham, Hebr. 7. 4. Ergo, the tithes were due not for any sacrifice which he offered, but for his blessing. The same therefore was the proper act of his Priesthood. See Bellarmino his answer, and the replie thereunto, argum. 4. by him before produced.

6. Melchisedech is a type of Christ in those things, which are not common with Aarons Priesthood: but to offer bread and wine was daily frequented in the Leuiticall Priesthood: Ergo, therein consisteth not the type of Melchisedech.

Bellarmino answereth, that the sacrifice of bread and wine in the Leuiticall Priesthood was alwaies joyned with other sacrifices of beasts, and was tempered or mingled with oyle: but here Melchisedech offereth bread and wine alone, and simple bread, without any mixture, resp. ad argum. 4.

Contra. First, it is vntrue, that the Priests of the law neuer vsed the oblations of bread and wine, but with other sacrifices, as it may appeare, Leuit. 2. where the law of meat-offerings is set downe, and no such thing there prescribed. Secondly, if the mixture of bread with oyle make a difference betweene the Leuiticall oblation of bread, and Melchisedechs offering; then your mixture of wine with water maketh the like difference, betweene your Masse sacrifice and Melchisedechs, who offered as simple bread, so also simple wine. Thirdly, the Apostle saith, If the Priesthood be changed, there must of necessitie be a change of the law, Hebr. 7. 12. Wherefore if the law of sacrifices be changed, then could not the new Priesthood offer the sacrifices of the law, and therefore not bread and wine: for then the law of sacrifices should onely be changed in part, not in whole.

7. The eternitie of Christs priesthood after Melchisedechs order consisteth not in the daily sacrifice of the Masse, which is offered by many Priests, one succeeding another: for this is a difference betweene Aarons order, and Melchisedechs, as the Apostle noteth, that among them many were made Priests, because they were not suffered to endure by reason of death; but this man, because he endureth ouer, hath an everlasting Priesthood, Hebr. 7. 23. Ergo, in Melchisedechs order there cannot be a multitude of Priests one following another.

It will be here answered, that although there be many Masse-priests, yet the priesthood is one, and Christ the eternall priest offereth by them as his miniters.

Contra. First, so also the office of the priesthood vnder the law was one, and Christ the vnspotted Lambe in all the sacrifices was typically laine, Reuelat. 13. 8. Yea Bellarmino confesseth that Christ was a priest vnder the law, and offered by his types and figures, cap. 6. initio: yet the difference remaineth still betweene the many mortall priests of Aaron, and the one eternall priest after Melchisedech.

Answe. Secondly, the power, right, and execution of Melchisedech's priesthood resteth in the person of Christ, and cannot be transferred to any other that die, but is proper to him, of whom it is said, that he lieth, Hebr. 7. 8.

Argum. 8. To make Christs priesthood eternall, it is not necessarie to bring in a continuall sacrifice to bee frequented in the Church: but the Apostle sheweth wherein the eternitie of his priesthood consisteth, namely in those foure pointes.

First, because he endureth ever, he hath an everlasting Priesthood, Hebr. 7. 24. This reason Bellarmino saith is not sufficient, Christ lieth for ever: Ergo, he is a priest for ever after so the Leuites after the resurrection, which were once Priests, and then shall liue for ever, might bee said to be Priests for ever, per se ad argum. 8.

Contra. First, the Apostles reason is this; The priests of the law, were not priests for ever, because they liued not ever: but Christ a priest after Melchisedech, is a priest for ever, because hee lieth ever: So then he peruerteth the Apostles reason, who speaking of Christ as a priest, by the eternitie of his life concludeth the eternitie of his priesthood. Thus then is the reason, Christ our priest lieth ever: Ergo, he is a priest ever. Secondly, the Leuites when they begin to liue ever after the resurrection, shall then be no priests at all, and therefore cannot be said to be priests for ever.

Secondly, Christ is said to be a priest for ever, in respect of the everlasting efficacie and vertue of his sacrifice vpon the crosse. So saith the Apostle, With one offering hath he consecrated for ever, them that are sanctified, Hebr. 10. 14.

Bellarmino. This reason is not sufficient: for so might Noah's sacrifice be said to be eternall, because the force thereof remaineth, in that he obtained thereby, that the waters should not returne to couer the earth: the effect also of Christs birth and death still remaineth, and yet he cannot be said ever to die, and to be borne, Bellarmino ibid.

Contra. First, it was not the force of Noah's sacrifice, which maketh Gods couenant stable, but the ground and foundation of all those sacrifices, which was Christ the vnspotted Lambe slaine from the beginning of the world, Apoc. 1. 3. 8. In whom all the promises of God are yea and amen, 2. Cor. 1. 20. This instance therefore sheweth the eternitie of Christs sacrifice, the force whereof extended euen to the ages before. Secondly, as wee say not, that Christ is daily borne, but because the effect of his birth remaineth ever, he is the man Christ for ever: so neither doe we say, that he dyeth daily, but because the force of his death and sacrifice ever remaineth, he is the Priest Christ for ever.

Thirdly, Christ is a Priest for ever, because he ever lieth to make intercession for vs, Hebr. 7. 25. and he is exspectatus to appear in the sight of God for vs, Hebr. 9. 24.

The sentence of Bellarmino's answer here is this; that whereas Christ is our intercessour by the mediation of his sacrifice, it is necessarie that Christs sacrifice should be continually offered, seeing he continually maketh intercession for vs, resp. ad 3. ration. 8. argum.

Contra. First, the argument followeth not: for the sacrifice of Christ once done is the foundation of his intercession, and it were a great derogation to Christ, that his intercession in heauen should depend of the act of priests in the earth. Secondly, as Christ is not to be imagined to continue his intercession by making daily prayers vnto God: so neither is his sacrifice continued by daily offering; but the very appearing of him, as the Apostle saith, in heauen is sufficient: And as Gregorio saith, Sine intermissione, &c. Our Redeemer, without any intermission, doth immolate himselfe in shewing his incarnation for vs to his father, &c. Moral. lib. 1. c. 10. Interpellari, &c. To make intercession for vs, is to demonstrate himselfe to be man, lib. 1. c. 13. So that as their Schoolemen confesse he doth daily offer himselfe, and make intercession for vs, representatione sui, by representing himselfe to his father, Gabriel Biel.

Fourthly, the Apostle sheweth Christ to be an eternall Priest, because he is for ever perfectly able to saue, Hebr. 7. 25. Bellarmino. This sheweth him to bee a Sauour, not a Priest.

Contra. As Christ is a Priest, so he also saueth by the sacrifice of himselfe. And thus much of this first argument drawne from Melchisedech.

Argum. 2. They alleage that place, Hebr. 8. 3. Every high Priest is appointed to offer gifts and hostes: wherefore it is necessarie that he also haue somewhat to offer. Christ then hath a certaine host in externall and proper manner, as other Priests haue; but this visible and externall act of sacrificing he doth not exercise now in heauen: therefore it must needs be meant of the perpetuall oblation of his bodie and blood in the Church; for somewhat he must alwaies haue to offer, Bellarmino. Hebr. 8. sect. 3.

Answe. 1. The Apostle saith not, that it is necessarie that Christ should still haue somewhat to offer in sacrifice: but that it was needfull for him to haue somewhat, which hee had already offered: for the verbe offerens, signifieth not the present tence, but the time past: whereby is vnderstood the oblation which hee had already offered once, and which neede not to bee repeated, Hebr. 7. vers. 27. For as herein hee is like to other Priests, that hee must haue somewhat to haue offered, so is he vnlike also in this, that they by reason of their infirmitie had neede to offer often: but Christ our high Priest did it but once, as in that place the Apostle sheweth.

Heb. 8. vers. 3.

2. The gift which the Apostle in this place attributeth to Christ, was his bodie, which he calleth the true Tabernacle, which the Lord pight and not man. But that bodie of Christ, which they say is offered vp in the sacrifice of the Masse, is not of that nature: for it is made by the ministerie of man: for euery one of their sacrificing Priests is able to make the bodie of Christ: but this bodie, which Christ had to offer, was made onely by God, without the helpe of man, as the Apostle saith. Again, say, if you dare, that the bodie which you offer, is the true Tabernacle and temple of God: for then it would follow, that God dwelleth in Temples made with hands, that is, by the ministerie of man, contrarie to the Scriptures: seeing you affirme that the bodie of Christ is no otherwise present but by the ministerie of the Priest. And what a goodly Tabernacle is this for God, thinke you, which you shut vp in a pize, and hang vp in your Churches? A mouse may eate it, the fire may consume it, corruption may take it: would God suffer his Tabernacle thus to be defiled? Wherefore vpon these premisses we conclude, that what you offer in your papish sacrifice, cannot be the proper gift belonging to Christs Priesthoode.

Argum. 3. The celebration of the Pascheouer was a manifest type and figure of the celebrating of the Eucharist: but in the Pascheouer there was a sacrifice: Ergo, there must be a Sacrifice in the Eucharist. cap. 7.

First, Bellarmino proueth the proposition out of S. Paul: Christ our Pascheouer is sacrificed for us, therefore let vs keepe the feast with the vneleavened bread of synceritie, &c. 1. Cor. 5. 8. Christ was crucified or sacrificed vpon the crosse to be eaten; he is then sacrificed to be our Pascheouer, wher he is to be eaten; and that is no where, but in the Eucharist: the Eucharist therefore is the true Pascheouer. Bellarmino ibid.

Contra. First, S. Paul speaketh not in that place of any Sacramentall eating of Christ, but of the reformation of the whole life to be ledde in synceritie and truth, as before vers. 7. Purge out the old leauen: He applieth this type to his present purpose, that the Corinthians should expell from amongst them the incestuous person: wherefore in this sense Christ our Pascheouer was sacrificed vpon the crosse, spiritually to be eaten by faith, and to be followed by vertuous imitation all our life. Secondly, though we grant, that the Paschal Lambe and the Eucharist may haue some resemblances together, as Bellarmino noteth some, as in the ceremonie of eating commanded in them both, also in the end, that is to bee a remembrance of their corporall deliuerance, this of our spirituall; and likewise, as that was eaten with foure herbes, so the other must be received with true sorrow and repentance: yet was not the Pascheouer appointed directly to be a type of the Eucharist, but of Christ crucified, as the Euangelist expoundeth, Iohn 19. 37. these things were done, That the Scripture should be fulfilled, Not a bone of him should be broken: if then the type of the Pascheouer were fulfilled in Christ crucified vpon the Crosse, we are not to seeke for any other accomplishment of it. Thirdly, if it should be granted, that the Pascheouer was a type of the Eucharist, it followeth not, that it should be in euery thing a type, which hee must proue, or else his argument concludeth not: for they differ in many things. 1. The Pascheouer was of flesh with blood; the Eucharist is of bread without blood. 2. The Pascheouer was done in remembrance of their deliuerance; the Masse they say is a propitiatorie sacrifice, and not a commemoration onely. 3. The Pascheouer was eaten at Euen, Masse is said in the morning. 4. Nothing was left of the Pascheouer, vntill the morning; but their consecrated host is reserved. 5. The Pascheouer was eaten in their houses; Masse is said in their Churches: if in these and other points the Paschal Eucharist differ, why not also in this? that the one was a Sacrifice, and so is not the other.

Secondly, whereas Bellarmino proueth the assumption, that the Pascheouer was a Sacrifice, for S. Marke saith, Marke 14. 12. When they sacrificed the Pascheouer: We answere, first, it was not properly a Sacrifice, because Sacrifices were made by fire, and were brought to the Priest, and some part laid vpon the Altar, as we may read in the lawes of Sacrifices, Leuit. 1. 2. 3. Chap. But the Pascheouer was eaten in the house, where neyther Priest, nor Altar was necessarie, and the whole Lambe was eaten, nothing reserved. Secondly, notwithstanding it was called a Sacrifice, being a religious act, in respect of other sacrifices of sheepe and bullockes, which the Pascheouer was used to be solemnized with, Deuter. 16. 2.

Argum. 4. The Apostle saith, Heb. 13. 10. We haue an Altar, whereof they haue no power to say which serue in the Tabernacle. Ergo, we haue not onely a common table to eate meere bread vpon, but a very Altar in the proper sense to sacrifice Christs body vpon. Rhemist. annot. Heb. 13. fell. 6.

• Answ. First, the Apostle speaketh of the Sacrifice of Christs death, whereof we are made partakers by faith: which they can reape no benefite by, which remaine in the ceremoniall obseruations of Leuiticall sacrifices. Christ therefore is our Priest, Altar and Sacrifice: for vers. 12. the Apostle maketh mention of the sufferings of Christ: he meaneth not then the Communion table, which is vnproperly called an Altar, or any materiall Altar beside, but the Altar onely of Christs death.

dead. Secondly, if wherefoever in Scripture this word (Altar) is read, it must be taken for a proper materiall Altar, wee shall haue also a materiall Altar in heauen, Apocal. 8. 3. which I am sure they will not grant. Thirdly, the Apostle saith, We haue an Altar; which is but one, whereas popish altars are many: it cannot therefore be vnderstood of such Altars. Fourthly, Bellarmin better aduised then the Rhemists, refuseth to vrge this place, because diuers of their owne writers vnderstand it of Christs crosse: cap. 14.

Argum. 5. Ierem. 33. 18. Neither shall the Priestes and Leuites want a man before me, to offer burnt offerings and meate offerings, and to do sacrifice continually: these are the Priestes of the new Testament, which do truly offer sacrifice in the Masse: for it cannot be vnderstood of the Ministers of the Gospell, because these are called Priestes, and are said to offer burnt offerings: neyther of Christ, for the Prophet speaketh of many Leuites and Priestes: Bellarmin cap. 9.

Ans. First, this text may very well be referred to Christ, for vers. 17. the Prophet had sayd, Dauid shall not want a man to sit upon the throne, &c. This is vnderstood of the spirituall kingdome of Christ, and so may the other of his spirituall Priesthood: for the Prophet speaketh of one singular man, Non interibis vir, there shall not be wanting a man to offer Sacrifice, &c. Secondly, but we may vnderstand this place of the Ministers of the Gospell, as it may be expounded by the like place, 1 say 39. 2. I will make this my covenant with them &c. My words shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of the seeds of thy seed, &c. And in the new Testament we reade both of spirituall Priestes, Reuel. 1. 6. He hath made vs kings and priests to God his Father; and of spirituall burnt offerings and sacrifices, Rom. 12. 1. I beseech you giue vp your bodies a living sacrifice. Thirdly, but this place cannot be vnderstoode of any such externall Priesthood for these reasons: first, as is the kingdome of Dauid here promised, so is the Priesthood: but the first is spirituall: Ergo the second. Secondly, as they are called Priestes, so also Leuites: but their Priestes offering according to Malchisedecks order, as they say, cannot be of the Leuiticall order. Thirdly, neither haue they any, holocaustumata, burnt offerings in their Masse sacrifice: therefore the literall sense of this place serueth not their turne.

Argum. 6. Daniel 8. 11. & 12. 11. The Prophet foretellet how Antichrist shall take away the daylie sacrifice, which is the sacrifice of the Masse: it cannot bee vnderstoode of Antiochus, who worshipped the God of his Fathers: but Antichrist shall not regard the God of his Fathers, Daniel 11. 37. Bellarmin ibid.

Ans. First, these prophecies were historically fulfilled in Antiochus Epiphanes: how that the Temple should by him bee first prophaned, by the space of two thousand three hundred dayes, Dan. 8. 14. that is fixe yeares, three moneths and an halfe: for this profanation began in the yeare 141. or thereabout, as may bee gathered 1. Macchab. 1. 12. for hee turned againe to spoyle the Temple in the 143. yeare. ibid. v. 21. So that he began the yeare before: and the Temple was purged in the 148. yeare, the 25. day of the ninth moneth Callen. 1. Macch. 4. 52. Again, the final destruction and desiling of the Temple with the ceasing of the daylie sacrifice was to endure 1290. dayes, Dan. 12. 11. that is, three yeares, seuen moneths and odde dayes: so it came to passe, for in the 157. yeare Antiochus sent againe to defile the Sanctuarie, and to abolish the sacrifice, 1. Macch. 1. 30. and in the moneth of Callen he accomplished his purpose, and set vp the abomination of desolation vpon the altar, vers. 37. and in the 158. yeare, in the eleuenth moneth Zanti, the King by his letters patents restoreth religion againe, 2. Macchab. 11. 33. So that these prophecies being so euidently fulfilled in Antiochus, cannot be applied to any other. And concerning the objection of Antiochus idolatrie, though he openlie professed the worship of the idols of the heathen; yet in truth, as by his profanenes appeareth, he had no conscience of any religion at all.

Secondly, the place cannot be vnderstoode, as Bellarmin would enforce. First, their Antichrist shall raigne but three yeares and an halfe, as they say; but the Prophet speaketh of fixe yeares and three moneths, Dan. 8. 14. Secondly, if their Masse shall be abolished by Antichrist, wherein they say the eternitie of Christs Priesthood consisteth; then should Christs Priesthood also be at an ende. Thirdly, the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel, is interpreted to be the ceasing of the Iewish sacrifice, both in the storie of the Macchabees, which is Scripture with them, 1. Macch. 1. 37. and by our Sauour, Matth. 24. 15.

Argum. 7. Malach. 1. 11. From the rising of the sunne, vnto the going downe of the same, my name is mentioned in the gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure offering: This place Bellarmin proueth by thiese reasons to be vnderstoode of the sacrifice of the Masse; and not any spirituall sacrifice. c. 10.

First, by the signification of the Hebrue word mincha, that signifieth an offering or oblation, which properly betokeneth a kinde of externall sacrifice, which was made of oyle and incense. Conse. First, if this be the proper signification of the word, it cannot meane the sacrifice of the Masse, which consisteth in the formes of bread and wine, not of oyle and incense. Secondly, this word word doth not onely signifie a Sacrifice, giuen vnto God, but a gift or present offered to God. Genes. 33. 11. So Iacob calleth his present sent to his brother: wherefore the Iesuites collect him sayleth him. Thirdly, Psalm. 141. 2. The Prophet saying, Let the lifting up of mine hands be an evening sacrifice, vseth the same word: Where we see that the spirituall sacrifice of Prayer is called by this name, or resembled to it: and so is the Prophet to be vnderstoode in this place.

Secondly, the Prophet calleth it a pure offering, which cannot be polluted: but prayers may bee polluted; the sacrifice of the Masse onely cannot by the euilnes of the Minister bee defiled. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. First, though our prayers as they proceede from vs haue many imperfections, yet they are accepted thorough Christ, 1. Pet. 2. Offer up spirituall sacrifices acceptable to God through Christ in which sense the Apostle speaketh, I will that enerie where men lift up pure hands, &c. 1. Timothy. as here the Prophet saith, In every place a pure offering shall be offered. Secondly, we haue spirituall sacrifices and exercises of religion, which cannot be by the euilnes of the Minister defiled: as the preaching of the word, which though it be vnder a pretense preached, is profitable, Philippi. 1. The Eucharist also which is a sacrifice of thanksgiuing is effectuell to a worthie receiuer, though by the hands of an vnworthie Minister. Thirdly, your Masse is so farre from being a pure offering that it is the most impure and vncleane sinke, that euer was brought into the Church: and you selues also require to the consecration thereof, the intention of the Minister, which if it be vn deuoute and religious, the sacrifice sayleth: so that an impure intention also defileth your Masse.

Thirdly, the Prophet speaketh of such an offering as was not in vse amongst the Iewes: saying, I will not accept an offering at your hands, vers. 10. but prayer was in vse amongst them: Again, the Prophet speaking directly to the Priests, vers. 6. Thus saith the Lord of hostes saying, O ye Priests, &c. and reprobuing their sacrifices, bringeth in a new kinde of offering, which a new kinde of Priests should offer vnto God: but spirituall sacrifices are common to all Christians: Ergo. Bellarm. ibid.

Contra. First, the Prophet speaketh onely in this place of the abuse and corruption of their externall sacrifices, in that they offered the lame and the blinde, vers. 8. and chap. 3. 8. Ye haue spoiled me in tythes and offerings: and he saith he will accept no such offering at their hands: but he will be spirituellie worshipped amongst the Gentiles. To the same effect he saith, Psalm. 50. 9. I will take no bullocke out of thy house, &c. but offer vnto God praise: these sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiuing, though they were not altogether vnknewne to the Iewes, yet they were not frequented and vsed, nor relied vpon, as the other externall sacrifices.

Secondly, the Prophet doth not onely reprove the hypocrisie of the Priests, but the deceitfulness of all the people, vers. 14. Cursed be the deceiver, that bath in his sleeke a male and sacrificeth a corrupt thing: so that he prophesieth of the generall sacrifices of all Christians, not of any particular sort, as S. Peter best of all expoundeth this place, 1. Pet. 2. 5. Ye are made a spirituall house, whereby Priests should offer up spirituall sacrifices, &c.

Argum. 3. Iohn 4. 23. The houre cometh and now is, when the true worshippers, shall worship the father in spirit and truth: By worship and adoration here is vnderstoode the solemne worshipping of God by sacrifice. First, the scope of the place giueth it: for the womans question was of the worship of God by sacrifice, which was tied to Ierusalem, You say that Ierusalem is the place where men ought to worship, vers. 20. but it was lawfull for the Iewes to offer spirituall sacrifices in any place: therefore Christs answer must be of such a sacrifice which should not be tied to any place, as the Iewes sacrifice was.

Secondly, The houre cometh, &c. Christ speaketh of a new adoration which was not before: but the time was alwaies to offer spirituall sacrifices of prayer, &c.

Thirdly, Christ speaketh of publike and solemne adoration, which should answer to the publike sacrifices of the Iewes; but prayer and thanksgiuing may be done priuatlie; Ergo, he meaneth the solemne sacrifice of the Masse, Bellarm. cap. 11.

Ans. To the first reason. First, though it were lawfull for the Iewes to pray otherwise, yet prayer made in the Temple, had a more especiall promise: and therefore it was called The house of prayer. Ilay. 56. 7. and Salomon prayeth to God at the dedication of the Temple, That whosoever vpon any occasion should come and make his prayer in that house, God would heare in heaven euen if he were a stranger, 1. Reg. 8. 42. Wherefore Christs answer may include also the worship of God by prayer. Secondly, it followeth not, the worship of God by Sacrifice was tied to a place, or they sacrificed onely at Ierusalem: Ergo, now they shall sacrifice every where: for by this reason the sacrifices of beasts might continue still with an enlargement onely to any place: but Christ opposeth the spirituall worship of God, not limited to any place, against their carnall sacrifices appendant to the Temple.

Secondly, though the time was alwaies for spirituall Sacrifice, yet neither was it so general under Christ, whose name is called vpon amongst the Gentiles: And againe they were notwithstanding bound to the externall Sacrifices, which now are abolished by this spirituall worship: which seemeth in these two respects to be a new worship. Secondly, Christ saith, The house is; but as yet the Eucharist was not instituted, nor the Sacrifice thereof, and therefore in this time God could not be so worshipped by Sacrifice.

Thirdly, the argument followeth not, prayer may be vsed privately: Error, it cannot be the publick service of God: For the house of God is called the house of prayer: therefore this publike spirituall worship doth answere to the solemne carnall sacrifices. Secondly, neither is your Masse publike, neyther in respect of the place, seeing you allow it to be said in houses; nor in respect of the persons, for the Priest and his boy may dispatch a Masse.

Fourthly, that this place cannot be vnderstood of the sacrifice of the Masse, it is thus euident. First, Christ saith, The house is; but at that time the sacrifice was not instituted. Secondly, this worship is in spirit, as God is a spirit: but in the Masse they vrge a carnall, not a spirituall presence. Thirdly, God must be worshipped in truth: but the carnall presence is a monstrous lie. Fourthly, The Father requireth such to worship him, ver. 13. But God no where in Scripture teacheth any such carnall presence, nor requireth vs so to worship him.

Fifthly, That which Christ did in his last Supper, hee commaunded his Apostles to do the same: but Christ offered himselfe vp to his Father, vnder the forme of bread and wine: Error, Christ offered vp in the sacrifice of the Masse: Bellarm. cap. 12. That Christ offered vp himselfe in his last Supper, he thus laboureth to proue.

First, S. Luke saith, This is my bodie, which is given, and my blood, which is shedde, not, (which shall be) so that in that very instant Christs body and blood was offered vnto God, and (for you) saith Christ, (not vnto you:) and (for many) as S. Matthew hath, Matth. 26. 28. so that it was a sacrifice then offered to God, not for them there present, to whom it was ministred, but for many believers.

Also, First, the Scripture doth often speake of that which is to come, as present, because it is certaine before God, as alreadie done: as John 5. 24. He that beleeueth, hath everlasting life, John 11. I lay downe my life for my sheepe: yet Christ had not yet laid it down: likewise Exod. 12. 11. It is the Lords Passouer, for I will passe, &c. the Lord had not yet passed ouer; yet hee saith, It is the Lords Passouer, in the present tence: So, My bodie is given, and my blood is shedde: that is, it shall be surely given, and shedde, as if it were now done.

Secondly, I do vrge Bellarmines owne words against himselfe, who elsewhere saith, that these words, Which is shedde for you for the remission of finnes; do not signifie, that his blood is drunke for remission of finnes, but that it was shedde for remission of finnes, & hoc per Eucharistiam representat: and that this is represented in the Eucharist, lib. 4. de Euchar. c. 19. res. ad argum. 3. If Christs blood be not then drunke for remission of finnes in the Sacrament, as he confesseth; it is vnjust, for the same thing is drunke, that is shedde: and if the shedding of Christs blood be only represented in the Eucharist, then it is not shedde. Thirdly, it is false that Christs bodie was giuen to the Apostles in the Eucharist, for the text is plaine, He gave the bread vnto them, and drinke the cup: and whereas Matthew saith, for many, it is euident that he speaketh of Christs death, for the Sacrament is onely profitable to them that receiue it. Fourthly, if these words, which is shedde for you, are so materiall to proue the Masse a sacrifice, why are they left out in the Canon of the Masse?

Secondly, S. Paul saith, Which is broken for you, signifying Christs bodie, for bread is not broken for them, but to them: and S. Luke saith, This cuppe (is the new testament in my blood) which is shed for you (which cuppe) for so is the construction in the Greeke: so that the blood, as it was in the cuppe, when shed, Bellarmin. ibid.

Also, First, S. Paul maketh euidently against them, for Christs bodie is not broken in the Sacrament, but bread: the bread, which we breake, 1. Cor. 10. 16. so that these words, which is broken for you, must be referred to the breaking and tormenting of Christs bodie vpon the Crosse. Secondly, S. Luke must be expounded by S. Matthew, who saith, in 2. 22. 28. The blood, which is shed, for the remission of finnes, The cuppe which is shed, as S. Luke hath it: which some thinke should be read in the datine case, as S. Basil readeth to answere vnto blood, in the same case: And againe, in proper speaking, the cuppe cannot be said to be shed, and blood in the cuppe we acknowledge none to be shed but wine onely.

Thirdly, Bellarmino thus reasoneth against the Lutheranes, who holde a carnall presence, the blood and flesh of Christ are verily in the Eucharist, as the blood and flesh, accisi & mortui corporis, of a liue and dead bodie, and therefore they are consecrated apart; the body by it selfe, and the blood by it selfe: Christ is then present as a Sacrifice killed and slaine: Bellarmin. ibid.

Also, Let the Lutheranes here answere for themselves; this argument doth not force vs at all, holding to such carnall presence: I will onely note the notable contradiction of Bellarmino, who else where affirmeth that the bodie of Christ is not in the Eucharist, as exanimam, exanimam, exanimam, as without life, without blood, or dead, because Christ now dieth no more: lib. 4. de Eucharistia. But here he saith, it is present as a flame and dead bodie: therefore his owne words shall suffice for his owne objection.
als

Argum. 8. S. Paul saith, 1. Cor. 10. 16. The cuppe of blessing, which we blesse, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ, &c. vers. 18. They which eate of the sacrifices are partakers of the altar. vers. 20. Those things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to diuels. vers. 21. To communicate the cuppe of the Lord and the cuppe of diuels, you cannot be partakers of the Lords table, and the table of diuels. From this place Bellarmino reasoneth thus, Such as was the table of diuels, such is the Lords table: but that table was the altar of idols, Ergo the Lords table is an altar. Again, as the Jews did eate the sacrifices, and so were made partakers of the altar, and the Gentiles by eating of idolatrous sacrifices were partakers of diuels: so we, by eating the flesh and drinking the blood of Christ are made partakers of him. c. 14.

Ans. First, the table of diuels was not the altar of the Idols, but they had beside their tables in the Idol temples, whereat they did feast. 1. Corinth. 8. 10. If any man see thee sit downe in the Idols temple: therefore as their tables were not their altars, no more is the Lords table an Altar. Secondly, the argument followeth not, they were made partakers of the external sacrifice by eating externall sacrifices: Ergo, so are we made partakers of Christ by an externall sacrifice: for as their altar was externall, so their sacrifices were externall; but as our Altar is spirituall, as the Apostle saith, We haue an Altar, Heb. 13. 10. so our eating and drinking, must be spirituall: and the Apostle himselfe putteth this difference, vers. 18. Behold Israel which is carnall flesh: signifying, that they were delighted in fleshie sacrifices, because they were after the flesh; we being after the spirit, must be exercised in spirituall sacrifices. Thirdly, that we are effectually ioyned vnto Christ, by a spirituall coniunction, though we carnallie eate him not, the Apostle sheweth, He that is ioyned to the Lord is one spirit, 1. Cor. 6. 17. And if while the materiall Altar stode, they might be partakers of it in heart and desire, though they did not eate of the sacrifices, as Dauid being absent from the temple saith, My soule fainteth for the courts of the Lord, and for thine Altars, Psalm. 84. 1. 3. much more may we now in spirit and by faith, communicate with the true Altar and sacrifice: And so the Apostle saith, Heb. 13. 10. We haue an altar, whereof they haue no authoritie to eate, which serue in the Tabernacle: Ergo they, which serue not in the Tabernacle, but haue left the ceremonies of the law may eate thereof, partly by faith and spirituallie, partly in the Eucharist sacramentallie, which Christ hath commaunded to be done in remembrance of him. And thus farre of their arguments for the sacrifice of the Masse.

The Protestants.

THAT there are spirituall sacrifices remaining yet vnto Christians in the exercise of prayer, we doe verilie beleue, being so taught by the Scriptures: such are the sacrifices of praise and thanksgiuing, Heb. 13. 15. The sacrifice of almes and distribution, vers. 16. the mortification of the flesh, is a kinde of crucifying, and so a spirituall sacrifice, Galath. 6. 14. And in this we denie not, but that the Sacrament may be called a sacrifice, that is, a spirituall oblation of praise and thanksgiuing: but that there is a proper and externall sacrifice, as in the lawe of Moses and Bullocks, vpon the crosse of the bodie of Christ; so in the Eucharist, of the same bodie and flesh of Christ: we doe holde it for a great blasphemie, and heresie.

Argum. 1. The very flesh, and true naturall bodie of Christ, is not, as we haue shewed before at large, in such carnall and corporall manner present in the Sacrament: therefore it cannot in the Sacrament be sacrificed, and offered vp.

Argum. 2. This sacrificing of the bodie and blood of Christ is contrarie to Christs institution for he saith onely, Take ye, eate ye, drinke ye: he saith not, Sacrifice ye, or lift vp, and make an oblation of my bodie. Neither doe those words, hoc facite, doe this, giue them any power to sacrifice, as Bellarmino would haue it: for to whom he saith, Eate ye, drinke ye, to the same also he saith, Do ye. Wherefore if doe ye, be as much as, sacrifice ye: all Christians, for whom it is lawfull to eate and drinke the Sacrament, by this rule haue authoritie to sacrifice. Again, the words are, Do this in remembrance. We remember things absent, and which are alreadye done and past: if then there be a present sacrifice in the Sacrament of the bodie of Christ, it cannot properly be said to be a memorie of his sacrifice.

Argum. 3. The Apostle saith, that Christ neede not to offer himselfe often, but that he hath done once in the end of the world, Heb. 9. 26. And with one offering, hath he made perfect foruer them that are sanctified, 10. 14. Ergo, Christ cannot bee sacrificed againe: for that were to make his sacrifice vpon the crosse imperfect.

Bellarmino answereth: that the Apostle here speaketh of the bloodie and painefull sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, which was sufficient once to be done: but this taketh not away the the sacrifice, which is but an iteration of the former; whereby the fruite and efficacie of that sacrifice is applied vnto vs, Bellarm. lib. 1. de miss. cap. 25.

First, the Apostle excludeth all manner iterations of the sacrifice of Christ; for otherwise, if Christ should now be often howsoever sacrificed, the difference would not hold between the sacrifices of the law which were often done, and the sacrifice of Christ, which was once to be performed: as the Apostle setteth it downe, Hebr. 10. 11. Every priest appeareth daily ministring, and offeringe fresh one manner offering, &c. but this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sinne, &c. and his sacrifices were also in a manner iterations and commemorations of the sacrifice of Christ. The Apostle then thus reasoneth; They had many iterative and commemorative sacrifices of Christs death: Ergo, we haue not now. Secondly, that is but a foolish and false distinction of the bloodie and vnbloodie sacrifice, as they vnderstand it: for there can bee no proper vnbloodie sacrifice of Christ, neither could he be offered vp, otherwise then by dying, Heb. 9. 27. 28. Therefore he is not offered vp in the Sacrament, because now he dyeth not. Thirdly, neither neede wee inuent a new kinde of sacrifice, for the application of Christs death: for to that end Christ hath appointed the preaching of the worde, and instituted the Sacraments; whereby the death of Christ with all the benefits thereof, are most fruitfully applied vnto vs, Galath. 3. 1. S. Paul saith, that Christ was described in their sight, and as crucified: that is, by the preaching of the Gospell. 1. Corinth. 11. vers. 26. As oft as ye eate this bread, and drinke this cup, ye shew the Lords death till he come.

Admirans replieth: first, though the death of Christ be applied by the preaching of the word and administration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: yet it may be applied also by the sacrifice of the Masse, which in this behalfe is not superfluous, no more then Baptisme is, by which also Christs death is applied. Secondly, that the Apostle speaketh of the bloodie and painfull sacrifice of Christ upon the crosse, it appeareth by the words following, vers. 26. for then he must haue often suffered. Bellarm. 2. 25. resp. ad argum. 2.

Comm. First, Baptisme is not superfluous in applying and shewing forth Christs death, though to the same end we haue the preaching of the word and the other Sacrament, because they are all of Christs institution, so is not the Masse. Again, they applie Christs death diuersly; Baptisme as the hole of our regeneration; the Eucharist as a signe of our spirituall feeding vpon Christs death; the word preached as a worker of our faith: so that none of them are superfluous. But the Masse is superfluous, because the remembrance and shewing forth of Christs death is as fully set forth in the Sacrament without a sacrifice.

Secondly, the words of the Apostle make against their vnbloodie sacrifice: for thus the Apostle reasoneth, Hebr. 9. 25. not that he should offer himselfe often, &c. for then must he haue often suffered. Christ cannot bee offered without suffering, but hee suffred but once: Ergo, he was offered but once.

Argum. 4. Christ saith, This cup is the new testament in my blood: we reason then thus; The same cannot bee both the testament, and the matter testamentarie, or which is testified; the Eucharist is the publike instrument or testament; the sacrifice of Christs death is the thing testified: Ergo, the Eucharist is not the sacrifice: for a sacrifice is a thing from vs offered to God, a testament a signe of Gods promise exhibited to vs.

Admirans answereth, the Eucharist in diuers respects is both a sacrifice and a testament: a sacrifice, as it is offered vnto God; a testament, as it is an authentickall instrument of Gods promise vnto vs. So we reade, Exod. 24. This is the blood of the testament, that God hath appointed. Like as the sacrifices of the law were signes of Gods couenant and testament, and yet true sacrifices standing: so the blood of Christ is both the sacrifice, and the signe of Gods testament and couenant, cap. 24. respons. ad argum. 1.

Comm. First, wee graunt, that a testament cannot bee ratified without blood, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 9. 18. and therefore the blood of the sacrifice is also a ratification of the testament: but since the sacrifice was one thing, the testament another: the sacrifices of the law were of beasts, the testament had relation to Christ: So then the sacrifices of the law were true sacrifices, & signes of the sacrifice of Christ, which was diuers from the sacrifices of the law: But here they make the same thing to be both the sacrifice it selfe, and the ratification or testament of the same sacrifice, which cannot be.

Secondly, there cannot bee such diuers respects, as to make the same thing, at the same instant, to be both the signe, and the thing signified: and therefore in the Eucharist there cannot be both the sacrifice it selfe, and the testification thereof, what respects soeuer can bee pretended: for this is to make a thing absent, present at the same time: for that which is sacrificed must bee present, and which is represented and remembred is absent: Christs bodie therefore being represented in the Eucharist, cannot be then and there sacrificed.

Argum. 5. If there were remaining still in the Church a reall externall sacrifice, then there must be also a reall and externall priesthood, and so a multitude of sacrificing priests: but this is contrarie to the Scripture, that maketh this difference betweene the law and the Gospel, that there were many priests, because they were not suffered to endure by reason of death: but now Christ hath an everlasting priesthood, Heb. 7. 23, 24. So that he is the only priest of the Gospel: Ergo, there being no more sacrificing priests, there is no such sacrifice: for it were a derogation to the eternall priesthood of Christ, to ordaine other priests beside.

Bellarmino answereth: first, it is no more derogation to Christs priesthood to constitute inferior priests vnder him, then it is to his pastoral and propheticall office to substitute inferior pastors, ministers and teachers vnder him: and as Aaron while he liued had other inferior priests, and a King hath vnder him inferior officers and gouernours; so Christ may haue other inferior priests, as his vicars and ministers. Secondly, the Apostle excludeth onely the multiplying of priests in the same degree and power, not of inferior priests, that are but Christs ministers, cap. 25. resp. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, the comparison betweene inferior sacrificing priests, and inferior preaching pastors vnder Christ is not like: 1. Because Christ hath giuen commandment for the one, et baptizet, Matth. 28. but no where are they commanded againe to sacrifice Christ. And 1. Pet. 2. 9. the Apostle sheweth, that the callings of Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, Pastors, are giuen of Christ: but priests are not there named. 2. Because there is necessitie of preaching, Woe is me if I preach not, 1. Cor. 9. 16. and such offices are necessarie in the Church, for the building together of the Saints, for the work of the ministerie, and the edification of the bodie of Christ, Eph. 4. 12. but of sacrifices and sacrificing priests there is no necessitie at all. 3. There is in pastors and teachers but an outward seruice and ministrie onely, the efficacie is of God: Paul planteth, but God giueth increase, 1. Cor. 3. but Christs pastorall and propheticall office giueth the inward encrease and vertue, to the which the outward ministrie is not derogatorie: but vnto the sacrificing priesthood they ascribe an efficacious power to make Christs bodie, and to work sinners by it, and so ioyne them as fellow-workers with Christ in the spirituall worke, which is grosse impietie.

Secondly, Aaron had other inferior priests for other sacrifices and seruices: but he himselfe onely entred into the holie place with the blood of reconciliation, Exod. 30. 10. This office did rest in him personally: but the Papiists in this office of sacrificing the blood of reconciliation lay in commision their priests with Christ himselfe. A King hath other ministers, because he is busy, and cannot execute every part himselfe, yet his soueraigntie and princely prerogatives he putteth not to any other: but Christ is an absolute priest, and is able to execute every part of his priesthood himselfe: and this being a prerogative of his person to be a priest after the order of Melchisedech, cannot be deputed to another.

Thirdly, they bring in a multitude of priests in the same highest degree of priesthood, to sacrifice the bodie of Christ, and to make reconciliation by it: nay, they make their priests superior to Christ: for he offered but his bodie in earth, they sacrifice it being in heauen: Christ offered his bodie but in one place, they in many places; he a bodie borne of the Virgin, they make him to die out of bread; Christ without a miracle offered his bodie to the death, they sacrifice him miraculously without death: and they make their sacrificing priests also after the order of Melchisedech, as Christ himselfe is.

Fourthly, the Apostle excludeth all succession or multiplying of priests, but onely when they are taken away by death: Ergo, seeing Christ euer liueth and dieth not, there is no other priest but he.

Argum. 6. Our Sauour said vpon the crosse, Consummatum est, It is finished, Ioh. 19. 30. By the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse being perfect and sufficient, all other sacrifices beside are superfluous.

Bellarmino answereth, that these words, it is finished, doe signifie that al the prophecies of Christs passion were accomplished, not that all things were done necessarie to saluation: for then the Sacraments, and all doctrine should be superfluous, ibid. cap. 25.

Contra. First, all prophecies of Christs passion were not finished, when he spake these words, for hee had not yet giuen vp the ghost: after which time the Euangelist sheweth the fulfilling of two prophecies, as touching the piercing of his side out of Zacharias, vers. 37. and of the not breaking of his bones out of Moses, vers. 36. Secondly, that Christ meaneth the perfection and consummation of his sacrifice vpon the crosse, the Apostle sheweth, Hebr. 10. 14. with one offering, consummatum, hee hath consummated those that are sanctified: where the very same word is vsed both in the Greeke and vulgar Latine, whereby the Euangelist expresth the consummation and perfection of Christs crosse. Thirdly, the perfection of Christs sacrifice taketh not away the vse of doctrine and Sacraments, which doe but set before vs the death and sacrifice of Christ: but it is a barre to all other sacrifices, which if they bee but memorials of Christs death, are superfluous.

about doctrine and the Sacraments being sufficient to that end : if they bee more then memoriall, as available to forgive sinnes, they are blasphemous, and make Christs sacrifice imperfect. Argum. 7. Saint Paul saith, Christ dieth now no more, Rom. 6. 9. but he that is sacrificed dieth: Ergo Christ is not sacrificed. The first part is thus prooued : first, from the vse of the sacrifices, which were first killed, before they were offered. Again, where a sacrifice is, the testament is confirmed, Heb. 9. 17. but where a testament is, there is death, ibid. 17. Ergo, further, there is no remission of sinnes without blood, vers. 22. but in the Masse there is remission of sinnes : Ergo, there is blood, and consequently death.

Belarmine answereth : first, the death of the sacrifice is not necessarie, but where a thing living is offered in the forme of a living thing : but Christ is sacrificed vnder the forme of bread and wine. Secondly, the Masse is not a testament, but a repetition of the testament confirmed in Christs death. Thirdly, the Apostle speaketh onely of the legall sacrifices, where there was no remission of sinnes without blood : or the Apostles meaning onely is, that there is no remission of sin, but in the vertue of the shedding of blood : and so in the Masse there is the vertue of Christs blood, though it be not shed, resp. ad argum. 3.

Conra. First, that thing is killed, that is sacrificed : if bread and wine be sacrificed, they being dead things neede not bee killed : But if the sacrifice be of Christ, he must be killed, what forme soever you pretend of the sacrifice. Secondly, if the Masse be but a repetition of a testament already confirmed, then it is no sacrifice, but a memoriall onely : for where a sacrifice is, a testament is ratified and confirmed, not repeated onely. Thirdly, S. Paul speaketh not properly of the legall sacrifices, for they did not sanctifie the conscience, vers. 9. Ergo, they gaue no remission of sinnes : And if the vertue of Christs blood be onely in the Masse, it is sufficient also to haue the vertue of his sacrifice : for to expresse the vertue of Christs blood, a new sacrifice neede not, a Sacrament to that purpose is sufficient.

Argum. 8. In euery sacrifice there is a consecration of the thing sacrificed from a prophane to an holie use, as the Paschal Lambe was set apart foure daies, before it was eaten, Exod. 12. 4. there must also be an oblation vnto God : but in the Masse, there is nothing consecrated but bread and wine, nothing offered but bread and wine : for in the institution after the consecration in these words, this is my bodie, immediately follow, take ye, eate ye : there is no mention made at all of any oblation to God : Ergo, if there be any sacrifice, it is of bread and wine onely.

Belarmine answereth : first, that the bread is consecrated by being turned into the most holie bodie of Christ. Secondly, the very placing of that holie thing vpon the altar, is an oblation and offering of it to God, Belarmine. c. 27.

Conra. First, if bread bee consecrated, then bread is sacrificed : for the same thing is sacrificed, that is consecrated : if the bodie of Christ bee consecrated, then was it before prophane and vnholie : let him chuse which part he will. Secondly, if the very placing vpon the Communion table (for Altar we acknowledge none) be an oblation, then bread and wine are offered : for they only were exhibited and placed. Christs bodie is placed in heauen, his place is not on the earth.

Argum. 9. Augustine in a certaine place allegorizing the parable of the prodigall childe, thus saith, Vitalium occidis, quando in sacramento altaris memoriam passionis in mente renouant : He slew the calfe, when he renewed in the Sacrament of the altar, the memorie of his passion in his mind. Recallect it the Sacrament, not the sacrifice of the altar : and it onely bringeth to our minde the memorie of Christs passion and sacrifice : there is then no oblation or sacrifice in the Sacrament, but onely a commemoration of Christs sacrifice, which we denie not.

Bernard also witnesseth here very plentifully for the truth : Sicut Christus adhuc quodammodo immolatur quotidie donec mortem eius annuntiamus, sic videtur & nasci dum fideliter eius natiuitatem representamus : In Vigil. mat. ser. 6. As Christ is daily offered vp, while we doe shew forth his death, so he seemeth to be borne, when we faithfully represent his natiuitie. The reason is this, as Christ is borne daily, so is he sacrificed ; but he is borne onely by a godly remembrance of his birth : Ergo, he is no otherwise dieth or is sacrificed.

Againe, Vltimus Christus, ut ingiter recoleretur per mysterium, quod semel offerrebat in precium, &c. Serm. in corn. Dom. Christ his will is, that it should bee daily remembered in mysterie which was once offered vp for our price, and that the euertasting sacrifice should liue in our godly memorie, and bee present alway in grace : for Christ ought not to be crucified againe, but it is a sufficient remedie, if by faith and imitation, we keepe his death in remembrance. Christs sacrifice then, is onely renewed by a godly remembrance thereof, and a faithfull imitation of his death, and no otherwise.

Argum. 10. Let vs see also their owne testimonies : Damasus epistol. 4. Mensa Domini participes, &c. Let them be partakers onely of the Lords table. So also S. Hieron. lib. de 7. adu. i. Ipsi sacerdotes de mensa Domini, &c. It is not lawfull for the Priests, without presumption, to take the cup from the Lords table, vnlesse it be given them of the Deacon. Where a table is then, and not an altar, there can be no sacrifice.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 1. c. 10. Sine intermissione pro nobis holocaustum redemptor immolat. &c. The Redeemer without ceasing doth immolate a burnt-offering for vs, in demonstrating or shewing unto his father his incarnation. Innocent. 3. in consensu. S. Pauli: Sanguis ipsius, &c. His blood cryeth out wailes to God for vs. Gabriel Biel in canon. lib. 61. Ad quem pertinet & pro peccatis offerri, &c. presentations (ad patrem) it belongeth to him to offer for our sinnes, &c. by presenting himselfe to his father, &c. If then the presenting of Christ in heauen, bee our burnt-offering, the crying of his blood, an offering for sinne; then it is superfluous to sacrifice him, or to offer and present him to God in the earth?

And if they will allow that definition of a sacrifice in the decrees. Par. 2. caus. 1. qu. 1. c. 84. Sacrificium quasi sacrum factum est. A sacrifice, that is made sacred or holie, being consecrate to the memorie of the Lordes passion: Thus is the Eucharist a sacrifice without the Masse, for it is an holie action instituted for the remembrance of Christs passion. If it bee then but a representation of Christs sacrifice, it is not the reall and externall sacrifice it selfe. Likewise, Decr. par. 3. dist. 1. c. 11. Quod factum est. That which was once done, is done in our memorie every yeere. C. 53. Quod facimus in commemorationem sit eius, &c. That which wee doe is done for the remembrance of him. So then the Eucharist is not a sacrifice of a thing present, but a commemoration of Christ alone. In distinctione membrorum semel tantum, &c. In the distinction of his members he hanged but once vpon the crosse offering himselfe, &c. cap. 52. ibid. Christ then cannot be sacrificed without distinction of his members; which distinction being not in the Masse, when he is imagined to bee in a lesse rooade then the compass of a spanne, he cannot be there sacrificed.

This truth hath the plentifull testimonie of the holie Martyrs, whose effectuall reasons and substantiall arguments against the idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse, wee haue set downe together in the treatise annexed to this controversie: to the which place I referre the reader.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART, OF the name and office of Priests.

The Popists.

31. Error.

As they doe falsely teach and perswade, that there is yet remaining a proper externall sacrifice for Christians vnder the Gospell, so also they maintaine a sacrificing Priesthood. And whether they say, that the Leuiticall Priesthood was not translated into the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, but is properly turned into the Priesthood and sacrifice in the Church, according to Melchisedechs rite, in offering vp the bodie and blood of Christ in the formes of bread and wine, 1. homil. annot. Hebr. 7. sect. 7. Wherefore they which minister vnder the Gospell, are worthily called Priests: which worde doth so certainly imphie the authoritie of sacrificing, that it is by itselfe the onely English of Sacerdos, Rhemist. Alt. 14. sect. 2.

The Protestants.

First, we hold it to be a great blasphemie to say, that the Priesthood and sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse, is not that sacrifice or Priesthood into the which the olde sacrifice and Priesthood was translated and chaunged. The Apostle proueth the contrarie: for that sacrifice, whereby the new testament is established, is that, wherunto the old sacrifice and Priesthood is translated: but this is done by the singular sacrifice of Christ, who is the suretie of a better testament, Hebr. 7. 23. Ergo, his singular sacrifice vpon the crosse, is that whereinto the old Leuiticall sacrifices are chaunged, and no other. Againe, the Priesthood after Melchisedechs order is that, into the which the old Priesthood is chaunged: but the Priesthood of Christ vpon the crosse was after that order. Ergo. But here they are not ashamed to denie, that the sacrifice of Christ vpon the crosse was after Melchisedechs order; but doe most impudently and blasphemously affirme, that it was after the order of Aaron: Heskin. lib. 1. cap. 12. And thus every vile Masse-monger shall bee more properly a priest after Melchisedechs order, than Christ himselfe.

Secondly, none but Christ is a Priest after the order of Melchisedech: for vnto whom the Lord said, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech, to him the Lorde saith also in the same Psalm, Sit thou at my right hand Psal. 110. But this cannot agree to any popish priest: therefore not the other. Againe the Apostle maketh this difference betweene the Priesthood of the law and the Gospell: because then there were many Priests, they being prohibited by death to continue: but Christ is the onely priest of the new Testament, because he dieth not, Hebr. 7. 23. 24. If they answer, as they doe, that althoug<sup>h</sup> there be many priests, yet it is but one Priesthood, because Christ concurrerh with them in the acts of the Priesthood, Rhemist.

We answer: first, Christ concurrerh with his faithfull ministers in the acts of their Ministerie: but no such Priesthood doe we acknowledge. Secondly, so Christ concurred in the acts of the Leuiticall Priesthood, & the sacrifices of the law that were rightly offered: wherefore this concurrence of Christ doth no more take away the multitude of priests in the Gospell, than it did in the law.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, concerning the name of Priests in their sense, as it implieth an authoritie of sacrificing, we utterly abhorre it. Secondly, but as it is deriued of the Greeke word presbiteros, which signifieth an Elder, we refuse it not, but wish rather, that it had not been abused in common speech to signifye the popish sacrificers. Thirdly, as for the word (sacerdos) which may be englished a sacrificer, wee finde it nowhere in the new Testament giuen to the Ministers of the Gospell, and so much Bellarminus confesseth, cap. 17. And therefore vnfitly and vnproperly agreeth vnto them. If some of the fathers haue confounded the names of Sacerdos and Presbyter, they are not to bee commended. The word Sacerdos, a sacrificer, being a proper name of the Leuiticall Priests, cannot properly bee attributed to the Ministers of the Gospell. To conclude, this word (Priest) as it is the English of Sacerdos, we doe not approue: but as it giueth the sense of (Presbyter) from whence it is deriued, we condemne it not: for so it signifieth nothing else but an Elder. If common vse of speech haue deuine it to a contrarie sense, it would be amended.

Bellarminus answereth, the Apostles in their writings vse not the words of priest, sacrifice, temple, altar and such like; because the Iewish sacrifices and priesthood were yet in force, lest they might bee thought, by vsing these words, to renew and confirme the rites of the Iewes: but afterward, when at the temple was destroyed, these names began to bee vsed of the ancient fathers, Bellarminus cap. 17. lib. de Missa.

Castra. First, it is vntrue that the Apostles in the Scripture forbear at all to vse these names: for in the new Testament euery one of these names is found, but in a spirituall sense, as the Apostle taketh the Temple for the Church of God, 1. Cor. 3. 16. 2. Cor. 6. Again, the Apostles speake of spirituall sacrifices, Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 13. and the Apostle in the same chapter saith, we haue an altar, &c. meaning the altar of the crosse. And Reuel. 1. 6. He hath made vs Kings and Priests, that is spiritually: wherefore it is a great vntruth, that the Apostles did of purpose shunne these names, for any such cause alleaged, seeing they euery where vse them.

Secondly, it cannot be denied, but that this word (sacerdos) a priest, is taken by some of the ancient fathers, for an office of the Gospell: but they vnderstand not then a sacrificing priest, but either the same, which was called (Presbyter) a teaching Elder, as Damasus epistol. 4. (de presbiteris ministris presbyterorum contenti sunt, &c. Let the countrie Bishops be contented onely with the ministris of the Presbyters, and bee partakers onely of the Lordes table; A table is for ministers, not for priests: Or else they expressed it by this word (minister) a minister; as Cornelius epistol. 2. Episcopi & ministri, &c. Bishops and Ministers must not frequent riotous feasts. Arelaten. 1. 2. Ministri seruantes, That Ministers should not bee vsurers: Or else they vnderstood this word spiritually. Ambrosius lib. 4. in Luc. Omnes filij ecclesie sacerdotes, &c. All the children of the Church are priests, offering themselves spirituall sacrifices to God. So also Origen, Hom. 9. in Leuitic. Petrus ad omnem dicat ecclesiam, &c. Peter saith to the whole Church, ye are a royall priesthood. But a sacrificing priest by this word (sacerdos) they vnderstood not: for (sacrificans, or sacrificulus) a sacrificer was taken for an Idolatrous priest of the Idols of the Gentiles, as S. Cyprian vseth it, Epistol. 3. ad Cornelium: Iniquus cum paucis vel sacrificantibus, vel male sibi conscijs, &c. These five with a few sacrificers, or men of a guiltie conscience, did adopt Fortunatus to be their false Bishop.

Augustine saith, Sacerdotium Iudeorum nemo dubitat, &c. No faithfull man doubteth, but that the Priesthood of the law was a figure of the royall Priesthood in the Church, whereby all that partake to the bodie of Christ are consecrated. He acknowledgeth no other Priesthood abiding in the Church, then that whereby all Christians are made Priests, to offer spirituall sacrifices vnto God through Christ.

Weare also what Bernard saith: Non solus sacerdos sacrificat, non solus consecrat, sed totus fidelium cunctus: qui adstat, cum illo consecrat, cum illo sacrificat: The Priest onely doth not sacrifice or consecrate, but the whole companie of the faithfull, that stand by, doe consecrate and sacrifice with him: Ergo, in this sense all the people are as well Priests, as the sacrificer.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE VERTVE and efficacie falsely ascribed to the sacrifice of the Masse.

The Papists.

1. They blasphemously affirme, that it is a sacrifice propitiatorie, that is, available to obtaine, ex opere operato, by the very worke wrought, remission and pardon of all their sinnes, Tri- 33. Error.

Arg. 1. There were vnder the law sacrifices truly propitiatorie, and available to take away sin, as Iob. 1. he sacrificed for the sins of his sonnes: and Leuit. chap. 4. 5. there are described diuers sacrifices for sinne. If then the sacrifice of the crosse, which was shadowed forth in these sacrifices, did not hinder them to be propitiatorie, much lesse doth it hinder the sacrifice of the Masse to bee such, which is a commemorative also of the passion of Christ, Bellar lib. 2. de Missa. c. 2.

Ans.

Ans. First, the sacrifices of the law did not truly purge sinnes as concerning the conscience: the Apostle saith, Heb. 9. 10. but were figures onely and types of the sacrifice of the crosse, which doth onely purge our conscience from dead works; ibid. vers. 14. And it is vntrue, that Bellarmine to this replieth, that those sacrifices were figures also of the sacrifice of the Masse and of the Eucharist: for neither doe wee acknowledge any such sacrifice of the Masse; and the Eucharist hath relation to Christs sacrifice already past, as the olde sacrifices did shadow it forth then to come: so that the Eucharist is not the substance of the shadow of sacrifices; but the passion of Christ is the substance both of their sacrifices and our Sacraments. Secondly, Bellarmine himselfe granteth, that the legal sacrifices did not iustifie men before God, as ex opere operato, by the work wrought, but only served for the expiation of legall faults: therefore the argument followeth not from the sacrifices of the law to the sacrifices of the Masse, which he affirmeth to bee propitiatorie, ex opere operato. Thirdly, all this being graunted to be true of the sacrifices of the law, yet he hath prooued nothing for the Masse, which we denie to be a sacrifice.

Argum. 2. Hebr. 5. vers. 1. Euery Priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices for sinnes: but in the Church now there are Priests properly so called: Ergo, they offer for sinnes: Bellarm. ibid. c.

Ans. I haue shewed before, that there remaineth now no externall Priesthood in the Church but onely a spirituall, to offer vp spirituall sacrifices to God through Christ, 1. Pet. 2. 5. and that the Priesthood in the new Testament resteth onely in the person of Christ: Hebr. 7. 26. Such a high Priest it became vs to haue, which is holy, harmlesse, vndefiled, separate from sinners, higher than the heuens, &c. But these properties are onely in Christ: Ergo, he is the onely Priest of the new Testament. This argument then beggeth the thing in question, and therefore concludeth not.

Argum. 3. Christ himselfe saith in the institution, This is my blood shed for you for the remission of sinnes: Ergo, the sacrifice of the Masse is auailable for remission of sinnes: for it forgiveth sinnes either as a sacrifice, or a Sacrament: but as a Sacrament it is onely appointed for our spirituall nourishment: Ergo, as a sacrifice, &c. Bellarm. lib. 2. de miss. c. 2.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, Christ instituted no sacrifice, as we declared before, but only a Sacrament in remembrance of his death and passion. Secondly, the Eucharist as a sacrifice neither forgiveth sinne, nor giueth assurance thereof, because it is no sacrifice at all, but as a Sacrament rightly administered it serueth to assure our faith of remission of sinnes, by the death of Christ: which is an effect of our spirituall nourishment, to assure vs of our spirituall health, which is the remission of our sinnes: but it doth not by it owne vertue conferre remission of sinnes, neither profited by the worke wrought: for the Apostle saith, that without faith it is impossible to please God, Hebr. 11. 6. Wherefore no action is accepted of God, not proceeding of faith.

Argum. 1. The Apostle saith, Where there is remission of sinnes, there is no more sacrifice for sinne, Heb. 10. 18. Seeing then remission of sinnes is fully obtained by the death and sacrifice of Christ, there can be no more sacrifice for sinne: Ergo, the Masse is no sacrifice for sinne.

Bellarmino answereth: first, there are two things required to the remission of sinnes: first, the finding out, or paying the price of our redemption. Secondly, the application thereof: The first is done by the sacrifice of the crosse, so that there neede no more offering for the satisfying for sinne: but for the application of that remedie a sacrifice is yet necessarie, which is the Masse: lib. 1. de Miss. c. 2. resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, the sacrifices of the law also did serue to applie the vertue of Christs crosse, and yet the Apostle excludeth them by this reason, that where there is remission of sinnes, there is no more sacrifice: wherefore if the Apostles reason be good, it concludeth against sacrifices applicatorie also. Secondly, to applie the benefit of Christs passion, a sacrifice is not necessarie; God hath appointed the preaching of the word, and the ministration of the Sacraments to that end. Thirdly, the power of Christs crosse is not seene onely in finding out the price of our redemption, but in giuing and conferring the same actually vpon all beleeuers, to whom also he giueth that grace to beleue by the vertue of his crosse: Heb. 10. With one offering hath he consecrated for ever them that are sanctified.

Secondly he answereth, that the Masse doth not immediatly giue remission of sinnes, but obtaineth the gift of repentance for sinners, whereby they are stirred vp, to seeke for remission of sinnes: And if it worke not in them repentance, as it doth not in all, yet it worketh a disposition to repentance, which yet helpeth them not, because they reiect the calling of God, Bellarm. lib. 1. de Miss. c. 5.

Contra. First, if the sacrifice of the Masse conferre not remission of sinnes, and yet you say the Sacrament doth conferre grace: then is the Sacrament more auailable, where Christ is not offered, than the sacrifice wherein he is offered. Secondly, if the Masse purchase remission of sinne otherwise but by working repentance, then is it not at all auailable for the dead, as you say it is, to whom repentance is not given. Thirdly, if in the Masse Christ were offered vpon verily and indeed as you say, why should not the Masse giue then remission of sinnes? which is the immediate and proper effect of the Sacrifice and Crosse of Christ. Fourthly, neither doth the Masse giue repentance to all those, for whom it is said, for many of them remaine impenitent still: and as for that disposition you speake of, seeing it benefiteth them not, they might as good be without it. And thus by your owne graunt, the Masse is altogether vnprofitable, neither auailable to remitt sinnes, nor to giue repentance to him, that is otherwise disposed.

Argum. 2. Heb. 9. 22. Without shedding of blood is no remission; but in the Masse, there is no shedding of blood: Ergo, no remission.

Belarmine answereth, first to the proposition, that the Apostles meaning is, not that blood should be shedde so often as there is remission of sinnes, but that there is no remission of sinnes, but in the vertue of the shedding of blood, lib. 1. de Miss. c. 25. resp. ad argum. 3. Secondly, to the assumption he saith, that the blood of Christ is really shedde in the oblation of the Masse, ibid.

Contra. First, the Apostle meaneth not the vertue of blood onely, but the actuall shedding of blood, verf. 12. Almost all things are by the Law purged with blood, and without shedding of bloods no remission: as the legall purging then was by blood, so is the remission of sinnes by blood; but there was the very actuall shedding of the blood of Sacrificers: Ergo, consequently there must be so in the remission of sinnes. Secondly, if Christs blood be really shedde in the Masse, then is Christ slain in the Masse: for without death, there is no shedding of blood: because that the shedding of blood is to confirme a Testament, and a Testament is not ratified but by death. Heb. 7. 12.

Argum. 3. The Masse is no Sacrifice at all, as we haue shewed before: Ergo, it is not a Sacrifice propitiatorie: the first also may be thus further proued: The Sacrifice of Christ is of infinite vertue. Heb. 10. 14. With one offering hath he consecrated for ever, them that are sanctified: but, per se the Masse finitus, the valour or vertue of the Masse is finite, Belarm. c. 4. prop. 4. lib. 2. Ergo, in the Masse Christ is not sacrificed. And againe, no finite thing can conferre that which is infinite: but remission of sinnes is infinite, that is, for euer: Heb. 10. 17. Their sinnes and iniquities will I remember no more: but the vertue of the Masse is finite, and therefore is often iterated: Ergo, it doth not conferre remission of sinnes. If it shall be here objected, that this reason also may be vttered against the often receiuing of the Eucharist; I answer, that the Eucharist, doth not as a Sacrifice actuall and really conferre remission of sinnes by the worke wrought, but onely instrumentally assure vs of remission of sinnes, by faith in the blood of Christ: and therefore the reason is not like against the sacrifice of the Masse, and the Sacrament of the Eucharist.

Interrog. cap. 22. Christum in cruento & impassibili modo sistimus patri, non vt remissionem peccatorum promeremur, &c. We do after an vnbloodie and impassible manner present Christ to his Father, not to merite thereby remission of sinnes, but that calling to minde the memorie of the Lords Passion, we giue him thanks for our saluation purchased vpon the Crosse, and by faith apply the same vnto vs: Ergo, the Masse in it selfe conferreth not remission of sinnes.

See further euidence out of their owne decrees: part. 2. causa. qu. 1. c. 80. Scito, quoniam sanctum est, quod offertur in altari, &c. Know, that it is holie, which is offered vpon the Altar: but thou art next much sanctified by the host, as polluted by thy dead workes. If the sinne of the partie doth hinder the worke of the Sacrifice, then doth it not profite ex opere operato, by the very worke of the Sacrifice onely.

Doctor Taylor holy Martyr witnesse the same: Christs body offered vpon the Crosse was the propitiatorie sacrifice, full, perfect, and sufficient vnto saluation, for all that beleue in him: Our Sacrifice is onely memoratiue in the remembrance of Christs death and passion, a Sacrifice of thanksgiving, and other Sacrifice hath the Church of God none. p. 1521.

The Papists.

2. The sacrifice of the Masse is not onely propitiatorie for sinnes, but auailable to obtaine all other benefites, as peace, tranquillitie, health, and such like, Belarm. cap. 3.

34. Error.

Argum. 1. The Sacrifices of the law were auailable for obtaining of temporall benefites, as Dauid by his sacrifice turned away the plague, 2. Sam. 24. and the Israelites did offer sacrifice for the life of Darius and his children, Ezra. 6. 10. Ergo, the Eucharist is much more auailable, Belarm. c. 3.

Ans. First, the argument followeth not, for the Sacrifices of the Law being temporall and carnall, might serue for temporall blessings; as the Apostle saith, Heb. 9. 13. They did sanctifie, touching the purifying of the flesh: but the euerlasting Sacrifice of Christ is to procure eternall blessings. Secondly, the plague was ceased before Dauid sacrificed, for the Angell was bidde to stay his hand, verf. 16. so that Dauid's sacrifice following, verf. 25. was rather a sacrifice Eucharistical, than impetratorie: and the Israelites are not commanded to sacrifice, but to pray for the life of the King, verf. 10.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul willeth, that prayers and intercessions should be made for all men, especially cially for Kinges, that wee may leade a godly and a peaceable life, 1.Timoth.2.1. These are the prayers which are made in the celebration of the Masse, Bellarmin.

Epist. 59.

Ans. First, the Apostle speaketh generally of all prayers, made by whomsoever, as it appeareth, ver. 1. Therefore this place is vniuersally applied to the prayers of Priests in the Masse. Secondly, this place proueth, that temporall benefites are obtained by faithfull prayers, not by the sacrifice of the Masse, which Saint Paul neuer knew. Thirdly, Augustine indeed expoundeth this place of the publike prayers of the Church, vsed in the administration of the Sacrament: for he calleth it, Domini mensam, the Lords table, not the Altar: hee meaneth nothing lesse then your popish Masse.

The Protestants.

IT is contrary to the institution of Christ, to apply the Sacrament for any such temporall or earthly vse.

Argum. 1. It was ordayned to be receiued in remembrance of Christs death, as our Saviour saith, Do this in remembrance of mee, to assure vs by faith, of remission of sinnes, and other spirituall blessing: not to giue vs assurance of health, peace, life, prosperitie; for the obtaining of such blessings, according to the will of God, other meanes are appointed. The ministerie of the Sacraments no more serueth for such vses, then the preaching of the word.

Argum. 2. The Apostle maketh this difference betweene the legall Sacrifices, and the Sacrifice of Christ: They sanctified as touching the purifying of the flesh: but the blood of Christ, which through the eternall spirit offered vpon himselfe, &c. doth purge our conscience from dead works, so serueth liuing God: wherefore the end and vse of Christs Sacrifice, is, to obtaine eternall redemption by vs: temporall blessings we obtaine also through him: but all his members haue them not, nor all wayes: but eternall redemption by him, all beleeuers obtaine: wherefore this onely is the end and vse of his Sacrifice.

And further the ancient name of this Sacrament, called the Eucharist, of giuing of thanks, sheweth the vse thereof rather to be in giuing of thanks for benefites receiued, then in praying for the same: and so it may be gathered, that sacrifices were vsed vnder the law, to testify their thankfulness after some temporall deliuerance, as from famine, or captiuitie, for the obtaining whereof they vsed publike fasting and prayer, as Isa. 2. 16. Sanctis a fast, call an assemblie &c. Let the Priests weepe betweene the porch and the altar, &c. These were the meanes which they vsed in their distresse, Prayer and fasting: And againe, ver. 14. Who knoweth, if he will returne, and haue a blessing, a meate offering, and a drinke offering, &c. These Sacrifices were vsed after their deliuerance, as testifying their thanksgiving.

Let vs see what antiquitie saith, Liberius decret. 1. Si euenit famas, aut pestilentia, &c. If there fall out a famine, or the pestilence, &c. Let them intreat Gods mercie, with fasting, almes, prayers, &c. He saith not, Let a masse be said.

Trullan. can. 28. Ad viuificationem, & peccatorum remissionem, &c. For our quickening and the remission of sinnes, solum oblationem, &c. That they minister the oblation onely to the people: the oblation then in the Eucharist serueth onely for remission of sinnes.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, FOR WHOM the sacrifice of the Masse is auailable.

The Papists.

35. Error.

First, they affirme that Masse may be said and offered for all the liuing, yea for Pagans and Infidels, for men absent as well as present: for S. Paul willett prayers and supplications to be made for all men, 1.Timo.2.1. Bellarmin. cap. 6.

Secondly, the sacrifice of the Masse is auailable for the dead which are in Purgatorie, Bellarmin. cap. 7. Concil. Trident. sess. 22. can. 3.

Thirdly, Masse may be rightly said in the remembrance and for the honour of Saints, with inuocation of them also in the prayers of the Church, Bellarmin. cap. 8.

Argum. 1. The Apostles taught the Church to keepe a memorie or inuocation of the Saints in this sacrifice, and that there should be speciall prayers for the dead: for these and such like were the things (no doubt) that Saint Paul saith he would set in order when he came, 1.Cor. 11. 34. Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. To the place out of Timothie we haue answered before, that it is vnderstood generally of all prayers made by the faithfull: neither doth it follow, it is lawfull to pray for all men, and therefore the Sacrament is auailable for all men: For these are two diuers things; Prayer is an effect of our faith, which we are commanded one to make for another: the Sacrament is an instrumentall or ministeriall cause of our faith; the benefite whereof is to them onely that worthily receiue it, because to them onely it is a Sacrament, by presenting the visible signes to their eyes.

It is too great boldnes for you, without Scripture, to affirme, that these superstitious rites of yours were those very orders which the Apostle promised at his coming to establish: but either they were such as pertained not to the administration of the Sacrament, or were but accidentall orders meete for the Church of Corinth, and not necessary for all times and places.

Argum. 2. The sacrifice of the Crosse was offered for all; the sacrifice of the Masse is a representation of the sacrifice of the Crosse: Ergo, it may be offered for all. Bellarmino. c. 6.

Ans. First, the sacrifice of Christ was not offered for all men in generall, but onely for the children of God: Iohn 11. 52. Christ dyed to gather together in one the children of God, which were scattered: and if Christ prayed not for the world, Iohn 17. 9. much lesse would hee dye for the world.

Secondly, we deny any such sacrifice of the Masse to be offered at all in Christs Church: thirdly, it followeth not, that so many should be partakers of the Sacrament and representation of Christs death, as shall be partakers of his death: for he dyed for many yet vncalled and vnregenerate, but none but the faithfull are to be admitted to the Sacrament.

Argum. 3. The sacrifices of the olde testament were offered for the dead, as Indas Marchabens is commended for so doing, 2 Macchab. 12. 45. Ergo, the sacrifices of the new may likewise be vsed, if it be here answered, that this booke is not Canonically; yet for the matter of storie, it is of as good credite as Ioseph, or Salust, and sheweth, that this hath been an ancient custome in the Church to sacrifice, and make prayer for the dead. Bellarmino. c. 7.

Ans. First, for a matter of fact, we refuse not this storie, and it may be, that such a thing Iudas did: but this booke erreth in commending it to be well done; as likewise, chap. 14. 41. Rexis is commended for killing himselfe. Secondly, the Iewes to this day haue no such custome to pray for the dead. Thirdly, here sacrifice is made for manifest idolaters, verse 40. whom this author notwithstanding commendeth for godly men, verse 45. and it is contrarie also to the practise of the popish Church to pray for the notorious wicked.

The Protestants.

First, the Sacrament (for sacrifice we acknowledge none) is onely ordayned for their comfort that doe receiue it: neither can one receiue the Sacrament for another, no more then he may be baptized in the stead of another.

Secondly, neither doth the celebration of the Sacrament profite the dead, as we haue shewed before, that it is in vaine to pray for them.

Thirdly, neither are the Saints, either then or at any other time to be prayed vnto, or either by this, or any other religious worship to be honored.

Argum. 1. All these superstitious obseruances are cleane contrarie and repugnant to the institution of Christ. First, he saith, Take ye, eate ye, doe this: wherefore to their comfort onely the Sacrament worketh, that doe receiue it, and are doers in that action: the benefite thereof then is not extended to the absent, but onely to the partakers. Secondly, the dead can feelee no comfort by it, because they can neither eate nor drinke it, nor be doers therein. Thirdly, Christ saith, Doe this in remembrance of mee: hee saith not, in remembrance of Angels, Apostles, Saints: but onely of mee. Therefore it is contrarie to the institution to vse any commemoration of Saints in the Sacrament.

Bellarmino answereth, that the Saints are not remembered in the Masse, as Christ is: for his death is there represented and remembered, so is not the death and passion of the Saintes: but they are remembered as our mediators and intercessors. Bellarmino. c. 8.

Contra. First, there are but two kinds of commemorations; one is with worship and adoration; the other is Eucharisticall, when wee giue thanks in the memoriall of the Martyrs and Saints, for such excellent instruments: this commemoration may be made of the Apostles and Saints: the other is peculiar to Christ in the Sacrament; and yet they do associate vnto him, the Virgine Mary, in that kinde of commemoration, thus saying in the Masse; Worshipping the memoriall of the Virgine. Secondly, they doe in their Masse vse commemoration euen of the death and passion also of their Saints: as thus,

Tu per Thomam sanguinem, quem pro te impendit, Fac nos Christe scandere, quo Thomas ascendit.

By the blood of Thomas, which for thee he did spend,

Graunt vs Christ with Thomas to ascend. This was Thomas of Canturburie.

Thirdly, the remembrance, which is to be made in the Sacrament, is expounded by S. Paul, to be a shewing of the Lords death, 1. Cor. 11. 26, 26. but the death of none but Christ is to be shewed forth, and this Bellarmino himselfe confesseth: Ergo, he onely is to be remembered.

Argum. 2. He onely is to be invocated, or we are onely to draw neere vnto him by prayer, by whom we haue an entrance vnto God, Hebr. 10. 19, 20. but by the blood of Iesus we haue entrance onely, Ergo.

Bellarmino

Bellarmino answereth, that Christ and the Saints are not mediators alike, for Christ is a Mediator by himselfe, the Saints by him: and as wee praying one for another, do no iniurie to Christ's mediation; so neither the Saints praying for vs, through Christ; nor we praying to them to pray for vs. Again, in the Masse, we pray not directly vnto Saints, as thus; O Peter pray for me; indirectly, we pray that God would heare their prayer for vs. Bellarmino ibid.

Contra. 1. If Christ be the Mediator both of the prayers of the Saints and ours, then is the mediation of Saints superfluous; for seeing we may haue access to the Sonne himselfe, it is in vaine to runne to the seruant. Secondly, we pray not as mediators one for another, but as humble fathers, not with authoritie, but of charitie; therefore the comparison betwene our prayers and the Saints prayers is not like. Thirdly, though the Saints pray in heauen for vs, as fellow members in respect of their inward desire; yet it followeth not, that we should pray vnto them, no more than we pray to men liuing that pray for vs. Fourthly, your indirect inuocation of Saints in the Masse, when ye pray thus, by whose merites and prayers, graunt we may be defended, is both blasphemous, leauing out the Mediation of Christ; and presumptuous, in making your selues mediators of the prayers of the Saints: for they pray, that the prayer of the Saints may be heard. Fifthly, yet our argument answered, that we must draw neere onely to him, by whom we haue an entrance, which are the Apostles direct words: and I thinke they will not say, that we haue entrance by the blood of Saints.

Augustine saith, Qui offeret sacrificium corporis Christi, nisi pro his, qui sunt membra Christi. Who will offer the sacrifice of the bodie of Christ, but for the members of Christ? Lib. 1. de origin. cap. 9. Therefore the Sacrament cannot be celebrated for Pagans and Infidels, who are no members of Christ.

Again, hee saith: Nos Martyribus non constitutum templum, sacerdotia, sacra aut sacrificia. We doe not erect either temples, Priests, seruice or sacrifices to Martyrs, De ciuitate Dei. lib. 2. cap. 23. Ergo, it is not lawfull to vse the Sacrament for the honor of Saints.

Concil. Carthagenf. 3. can. 6. Placuit ut corporibus defunctorum Eucharistia non detur, dum uiuimus a Domino, Accipite, edite, cadavera autem nec accipere possunt, nec edere: Wee thinke good that the Eucharist be not giuen to the bodies of the dead, for the Lord said, Take, eate: Now dead bodies cannot take and eate, &c. The Sacrament then is appliable to none, but to those that liue and eate; but neither the dead nor any that are absent, can take and eate: Ergo.

For. p. 147.

In defense of this trueth, that the Masse is not a propitiatorie sacrifice for the quicke, and that many holy and excellent Martyrs willingly rendered their liues: As Rowland Taylor, Iohn Nisbet, Iohn Bradford, Bishop Hooper, with others.

Their owne decrees thus testifie, decr. par. 3. dist. 1. c. 40. Clement. Martiri non obuiantur uimentis altaris: That the dead should not be wrapped in the altar-cloathes. But the sacrifice of the altar is more then the altarcloath, if this must not be communicated to the dead, much lesse other. Again, decr. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 41. c. 6. Innocent. 3. Iniuriam facis martyri, qui oras pro eo: He doth wrong to a Martyr, that prayeth for a Martyr: But so doe the Papists in praying, that God would heare the prayers of Martyrs, Ergo they offer them wrong.

THE FIFT QUESTION, OF PRIuate Masses.

The Papists.

36. Error.

IF any many shall say, that priuate Masses, wherein the Priest alone by himselfe doth communicate, are vnlawfull, and therefore to bee abolished; wee pronounce him accursed, Concil. Trident. sess. 22. can. 8.

Argum. 1. The reason of the Councell is this, because that many doe communicate parauallie in the sacrifice of the Masse, that are not present, and so the fruite thereof being publicke, the Masse it selfe is in this behalfe not priuate, but publicke: Concil. Trident. sess. 22. cap. 6.

Answe. First, a spirituall communion of the faithfull, we graunt euen without a Sacrament, which is not the effect of the Sacrament, but by fayth, Ephel. 4. 4. There is one bodie, we haue one: And in the celebration of the Sacrament, there is also an exercise of this spirituall communion, the faithfull doe communicate with vs in our prayers, and in the profession of the same faith: but they doe not communicate with vs in the Sacrament, or the fruite thereof. Secondly, to the sacramentall communion is required a presence of many: as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 10. 17. that are many, are one bread and one bodie, because we are partakers of one bread: so then the spirituall communion is one thing, the sacramentall another: and wee cannot bee one bodie sacramentally, vnlesse wee communicate together in the Sacrament. Thirdly, as priuate prayer, though it may haue a publicke fruite, yet it is priuate still; so the Sacrament priuately administred, though it might haue some publicke effect, is yet priuate still.

Argum. 3. Prayer is profitable to him, that is prayed for, though he be not present; the sacrifice of the Masse is a kinde of solemne prayer: Ergo, though it bee priuat, it may bee profitable. Belarmius lib. 2. de missa. 9.

Ans. First, we see that they are forsaken of the Scripture, for the prooffe of their priuat Masses, and therefore are driuen to deuise reasons of their owne. Secondly, there is not the same reason of a Sacrament (for sacrifice therein, we acknowledge none) and of prayer: for a Sacrament is exhibited vnto men by the commaundement of Christ, a prayer is exhibited vnto God from men, and therefore prayer may be priuat, because, God, to whom we pray, heareth priuately: And againe, we haue warrant in Scripture for priuat prayer, Matth. 6. 6. so haue we none for a priuat Masse. Secondly, Belarmius confesseth that a Masse cannot be so priuat, ¶ vni soli applicatur: To be applied to one man alone, c. 9. yet priuat prayer may be made for one man alone: therefore the comparison is not like betweene them. Thirdly, the prayers which are made in the Eucharist for the whole congregation of Christs Church, may be profitable to those that are absent; but it followeth not therefore, that the sacramentall action of eating and receiuing should be auailable for them which are absent.

Argum. 3. The sacrifices of the law were sacrifices, before the people did eate thereof: so the substance and making of a medicine is one thing, the ingredience, or taking of it, another: Ergo, neither receiuing part of the substance or making of the sacrifice of Christs bodie, but a consequence onely: therefore there may be a sacrifice and Sacrament without it, Rhemist. 1. Cor. 11. 29.

First, the argument followeth not from the sacrifices and ceremonies of the lawe, to the Sacraments of the Gospell: for they are much vnlike: it was not lawfull but for the Priests onely, and the males amongst them to eate of the sacrifices, Leuiticus 2. 3. 6. 29. they may as well conclude hereupon, that none but Priests should eate of the Sacraments of the new testament.

Secondly, the proposition is also false, for the Paschall Lambe, which of all the sacrifices doth most properly resemble the Eucharist, was neither sacrifice nor sacrament, vnlesse it were eaten.

Thirdly, we deny that there is any sacrifice in the Eucharist, but a sacrament onely: and therefore the comparison holdeth not betweene a sacrifice, which consisted both of oblation to God, and the participation of the people that offered, and the Sacrament which Christ in his institution offered not to God, but to his Disciples.

Lastly, neither doth the similitude of a medicine conclude: for you cannot proue that the Sacrament not receiued hath vertue in it, as a medicine hath: for faith is requisite to the worthie receiving of the Sacrament, which is not necessarie in the applying of a medicine; and yet it is not properly called a medicine, vnlesse being made, it be also applied, and receiued: And say it is a medicine vnreceiued, yet it profiteth not, vnlesse it be vsed; so you haue gayned nothing hereby, but the Eucharist is also an vnprofitable medicine, where it is not receiued.

The Protestants.

WE vtterly condemne the superstitious practises of popish priests, who doe vse to communicate alone in their Masses, the people standing by, gazing and looking vpon him: yea you might haue seene many Masses said in one Church at once, almost in euery corner one, no person being present for the most part, but the Priest and his boy.

Argum. 1. This priuate receiuing of the Sacrament is contrarie to the institution of Christ, who thus speaking to many, Take ye, eate ye, and divide this amongst you: there must be then a distribution and distribution. S. Paul also saith, ¶ it is that are many are one bread and one bodie, in as much as we are partakers of one bread, 1. Corinth. 10. 17. Ergo, many must communicate together. For the Apostle speaketh not of the mysticall communion of the faithfull in this place, which doe all make but one bodie in Christ, (for so we doe communicate with the Church by faith, not onely in the Sacrament, but without it) but of the Sacramentall Communion of as many as receiue together: for how else can they be said to be partakers of one bread, or loafe, vnlesse they receiue together?

Belarmius answereth, first, all that which Christ commaunded in the institution to be done, is not of the essence of the Sacrament, nor alwaies to be obserued; but in respect of person, time, and place: for if there be none worthe to minister the Sacrament to, yet it must be celebrate notwithstanding. c. 10. respons. ad argum. 1.

Contra. First, and doe you speake, as you thinke, that all, which Christ commaunded concerning the Sacrament, is not of necessitie to be obserued: and yet all which your Church commaundeth, must be kept: we may then iustlie say vnto you, as Christ said to the Pharisees, ¶ You resist the commaundement of God, to observe your owne tradition, Mark. 7. 9. Secondly, all Christs precepts in in the institution of the Sacrament are of the same authoritie: for of them all he saith (this do ye) &c. then they may as well leaue all vndone, or any one of them, as another; and so they neede no more vse consecration of the Sacrament, than distribution, which in their owne learning is very absurd. Thirdly, the Apostle saith, concerning the actions of breaking, taking, eating, &c. which I receiued of the Lord, haue I deliuered to you, 1. Cor. 10. 23. He maketh euery one of these of and belonging to the tradition and institution of Christ.

Secondly, saith he, the Apostle concludeth affirmatiuely, that he which eateth the Eucharist is ioyned to Christ: but not negatiuely, he, which receiueh not the Eucharist, is not ioyned vnto Christ: for this may be done in heart and desire, Bellarm. resp. ad 3. obiect.

Contra. The Apostle speaketh not of a spirituall onely, but of a sacramentall communion with Christ in this place: and therefore he saith, The bread which we breake is the communion of the body of Christ, &c. If the sacramentall communion of Christs bodie be in the breaking and distribution of bread, then where the bread is not broken and distributed, there is not that sacramentall communion. So he saith, We that are many are one bread, because we are partakers of one bread. They then which partake not, are not sacramentally one bread, though spiritually wee denie not, but they are.

Argum. 2. Act. 2. 42. They continued in the Apostles doctrine and fellowship, and breaking of bread. It was then the vse in the Primitiue Church to vse distribution in the Sacrament.

Bellarmino. It is true, yet it followeth not, that the Sacrament cannot bee celebrated without distribution.

Contra. It cannot bee shewed that in the Primitiue Church, there was any celebration of the Eucharist without distribution: Ergo, the argument followeth. The Apostles neuer celebrated the Eucharist priuately, therefore it is vnlawfull so to doe.

Argum. 3. The Apostle maketh a manifest difference betweene the Lords Supper, and other feasts: for these might be priuate in their owne houses, 1. Cor. 11. 22. Haue ye not houses to eat and drinke in? but the other ought to bee publike, ver. 33. they must one tarrise for another: Ergo, the Lords Supper must not be priuate.

Bellarmino answereth, the Apostle speaketh not of the Sacrament, but of other feasts, vsed in the Church, which he calleth the Lords Supper: for hee saith, one is hungry, another is drunken: but in the Eucharist, they did all eate alike, &c. These then are the feasts which the Apostle would haue common.

Contra. First, it is true, that such feasts were then kept, which were called feasts of loue: but in the end of those feasts they vsed to receiue the Sacrament: and therefore the Apostle reproveth them, because, when they came together to eate the Eucharist, they did eate their owne Supper afore, ver. 22. Secondly, it is euident, that the Apostle by the Lords Supper meaneth the Eucharist, because immediatly he inferreth the institution of Christ, which had been impertinent, if he spake not of the Sacrament. And where he saith, that ye come not together vnto condemnation, euident, that he speaketh of coming together to the Lords table, wherein only, and not at the common table, they eate and drinke their damnation, that doe it vnworthilie.

Argum. 4. The word of God is not to be preached but to a congregation, nor Baptisme to be administred, where there is none to bee baptized: Ergo, neither is the Eucharist without communicants to be administred.

Bellarmino answereth, the reason is not alike: for the word and Sacraments are from God directed to men: but the sacrifice of the Masse is directed vnto God, Bellarmino. c. 9.

Contra. First, we denie any sacrifice in the Eucharist, but a Sacrament onely: and therefore the one Sacrament of Baptisme requireth some to bee baptized, so the other of the Eucharist requireth communicants. Secondly, the Eucharist is not directed vnto God but vnto men, not in the words of consecration, whereby they say it is made a sacrifice: for these words, this is my body, whereby they say it is consecrated to bee a sacrifice, are directed vnto men, if they vse those words, as Christ did: for these words follow in the Gospell, This is my body, which is given for you, which words are by them left out in the Masse, that their craft should not appeare, in perverting the vse of Christs words, which were spoken onely to his Apostles, and not directed vnto God.

Epistol. 59.

Augustine saith, that, Sacramentum benedicitur, sanctificatur, & ad distribuendum communicantibus. That the Sacrament is blessed, sanctified, and broken to be distributed: Ergo, where there is distribution, there must be many to receiue.

Can. Apostolor. 10. Fideles qui ingrediuntur ecclesiam, & sanctam Communionem non percipiunt, communionem priuentur: The faithfull, which come into the Church, and receiue not the Communion, shall be excommunicate.

Clement epistol. 2. Tanta in altari holocausta offerantur, quanta populo sufficere debeant: Let so much be offered, as may suffice all the people. Prouision must be made for all the companie to communicate: Ergo, priuate Masses were not yet heard of in the Church.

See further testimonie out of their owne decrees: Par. 3. distict. 2. c. 18. Anacletus. Per illa consecratione omnes communicent, &c. After consecration, all must communicate, they which will not, let them bee thrust out of the Church: for thus the Apostles have ordained, and the Romane Church so holdeth. C. 17. Soter. In cena Domini a quibusdam, &c. Some men neglect to receive the Eucharist in the Lords Supper, which ought to be received, ab omnibus fidelibus, of all the faithfull:
Error. private Sacraments are against their owne Canons.

Master Philpot holy Martyr: Christ said, and the Minister faith in Christs behalfe to all that are present, Talis ye estis: wherefore as many as be present, and doe not communicate, breake Gods commandment in not receiuing the same: and the Minister is no iust Minister, that doth not distribute the Sacrament as Christ did to all, that are present: and where Gods word is transgressed, there is not Christ present, and consequently no Sacrament.

AN APPENDIX, CONCERNING

the name of Sacrament.

The Papists.

They utterly mislike these names of the Sacrament, that it is called amongst vs the Lords Supper or Communion: belike (say they) they will bring it againe to the Supper, or euening service, liberist. 1. Cor. 11. sect. 6. And the name Communion, is as ignorantly vsed of them, thereby making the people beleue, that many should communicate together, 1. Cor. 11. sect. 24. they should rather vse the names of the Eucharist, Masse, or Leiturgie.

The Protestants.

First for the name of the Lords Supper, we doe learne of S. Paul so to call it: When ye come together, (saith he) this is not to eate the Lords Supper, 1. Cor. 11. c. 6.
The Apostle calleth their feasts of loue, which they were wont to make after the re-ceiuing of the Sacrament, the Lords Supper, cena dominice, because they were made in the Lords house, which were called Dominica: he meaneth not the Sacrament.

First, there were then no such distinct plates, as Churches, and Oratories for the seruice of God, which began to bee built many yeeres after, but they assembled together in their owne houses. Secondly, the Apostle cannot meane any other Supper, but that which was instituted by Christ, and which he describeth afterward as it followeth, vers. 23: Further the Apostle speaketh but of two Suppers; the one, which he calleth their owne Supper, vers. 21. the other, is the Lords Supper, which is so called, because it was instituted by the Lord Iesus, as the Apostle sheweth afterward.

Thus saith also Master Latimer holy Martyr: There was cena Iudeica, the Iewish Supper, when Christ with his Apostles did eate: the Paschall Lambe; the other was called cena Domini, the Lords Supper, Ex pag. 1456.

And though Doctor Weston cauill in that place against this name, (the Lords Supper) yet hath the Communion been so called in forner times.

Coul. Cabilonens. can. 47. In cena Domini perceptio Eucharistia a quibusdam negligitur: In the Supper of the Lord, some neglect to receiue the Eucharist. Augustine calleth it the Lords Supper, Communionem in suis consecratam discipulis suis dedit: His Supper being consecrated, he gaue it with his owne hands to his Disciples. And although we eate not downe at the feast: Ipsam cenam tamen se quisque manducamus: Yet we eate that Supper daily by faith.

In Luk. Ser. 33.

Yea their owne decrees allow this name: Decret. par. 3. distict. 2. c. 17. Soter. In cena Domini a quibusdam perceptio Eucharistia negligitur, &c. In the Supper of the Lord the receiuing of the Eucharist of some is neglected.

The name Communion, the Apostle also himselfe vseth: he calleth it communio, The Communion of the bodie of Christ, 1. Cor. 10. 16. so doth Augustine name it, Communio in corpore Christi de cena. Dei 20. cap. 9. So also is it called in the Councils: Niceni. 1. cap. 14. Eliberin. decret. 1. Toletan. 2. 5. and in diuers other.

As for the names of the Eucharist, and Leiturgie, we mislike them not, being vnderstood in their owne sense; but because they are Greeke and not vnderstood of the people, we vse them not. The horrible sacriledge of the Masse, is the cause also why we vse not that terme.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, OF THE MAN-

ner of saying and celebrating Masse.

The Papists.

It is not necessarie that the Masse (or as we call it, the Sacrament) should bee said or done in the tongue and familiar speech, but for the greater reuerence, to be kept in the Latine tongue, they say,

30. Error.

Fff

say, it is more conuenient: and that the words of consecration should not bee vttered in a loud and audible, but in a soft and low voyce, Bellarmin cap. 11. 12.

Argum. 1. If Masse should be said in the vulgar tongue, two great inconueniences would ensue: one, that the wordes of consecration must bee often chaunged, because the vulgar speech doth often alter: the other is, that hereby the communion of Churches should be taken away: for an Italian could not say Masse in France, nor a French man in Italie, Bellarmin cap. 11. argum. 5.

Answ. For the first, the vulgar tongue is not so soone, nor so easily altered: the vulgar English tongue doth not differ, sauing in certaine new wordes, from the vulgar language vsed three hundred yeeres agoe: but if it should in proceesse of time be wholly altered, what would it hurt, if the forme of the Leiturgie were chaunged with all? as likewise the vulgar translation of Scriptures may safely be amended, as the vulgar speech is perfected. To the second we answer: first, the same obiection may be made against Latine Masse, for neither can an Italian say Masse in Greece, nor a Grecian in Italie. Secondly, the Latine tongue rather taketh away the communion and fellowship of the Church, when the same congregation vnderstandeth not a Latine Masse, where it is ordinarily and daily said, which is rather to be respected, than any such extraordinarie or wanted occasion of strangers and traouellers. Thirdly, by the same reason sermons also should be made in Latine, because otherwise strangers cannot vnderstand them. Fourthly, where in populous cities there bee diuers congregations, there should bee provided for them Ministers of their owne: As Innocent. 3. decreed, Qui secundum diuersitates linguarum, &c. Which according to the diuersitie of the tongues, should celebrate the diuine offices, Decr. Greg. 14. 1. tit. 31. c. 14. Their owne decree is evidently against them.

Argum. 2. Christ for the space of three houres, being so long vpon the crosse, vttered nothing in the hearing of the standers by, but seuen short sentences: Ergo, in the sacrifice of the Masse, it is not necessarie to vtter all in the hearing of the people, Ibid.

Answ. First, they haue not proued by this example, that the Priest should mutter and mumble to himselfe, but the contrarie rather: that either he must altogether hold his peace, or else speake aloud; vnlesse they can shew that Christ spake some words secretly to himselfe. Secondly, wee must not fetch the right vse of the Sacrament of our owne heads, from the example of Christs sacrifice vpon the crosse: but wee are commaunded to resort for direction to the institution in his last Supper, 1. Cor. 11. 23. wherein Christ is not read to haue spoken any thing, but in the hearing of his Apostles: neither did Christ pronounce any of the words of consecration vpon the crosse, but in the institution of his last Supper.

Argum. 3. The Priest in the law did enter alone into the holy place, all the people standing without, as we reade of Zacharie, Luk. 1. 10. Ergo, the sacrifice of the Masse must be offered vp in silence and secret, Bellarmin cap. 12. argum. 3.

Answ. First, the Priest herein was a type of Christs entring into the holie place of heauen, as the Apostle sheweth, Hebr. 9. 24. therefore it concludeth not for the Masse. Secondly, sacrifice might be offred without the presence of the people, but vnder the Gospell wee denie any such sacrifice. Thirdly, the Priest while he burned incense, was neither heard, nor seene of the people: you may as well inferre, that your Priests neither must bee seene of the people saying of Masse, and so should yee lose the glorie of your superstitious eleuation. Fourthly, the reason why the people staid without in the time of the sacrifice, was in respect of the diuision of the Temple, which consisted of three parts; the most holy place, whereinto only the high Priest entred; the holy place, appointed for the inferiour sacrificing Priests; and the court without, which was for the people: but the Temple now is dissolued, and the vaile thereof, which made this diuision, was rent by the death of Christ: so that it must not be a patterne of Christian oratories or houses of prayer.

The Protestants.

First, for the Sacrament, or any other part of the seruice of God to be ministred in an vnknown tongue, is contrarie to S. Pauls rule, who would haue all things to bee done in the Church edifying, and in such sort that the vnlearned might say, Amen, 1. Cor. 14. 16. But the people cannot be edified by a language which they vnderstand not: nor yet can say Amen vnto strange prayers. But of this matter we haue already elsewhere entreated more at large.

Secondly, it is also contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, that the Priest should mutter to himselfe, and not speake aloud in the hearing of the people: for he saith, Ye doe shew forth, euangelium, preach or declare the death of Christ, so often as ye receiue it, 1. Cor. 11. 26. But they doe not annuntiare, that is, preach, set forth, and declare the death of Christ, that speake onely to themselves.

Bellarmin answereth; This shewing forth of Christs death is not done so much by the words, as in act and in deed: for how else could all the people shew forth the death of Christ, but by eating and drinking in the Sacrament?

Contra. First, we grant, that by the very action of eating and drinking in the Sacrament Christs death death is shewed forth, but not thereby onely: for the institution of Christ must be declared, as the Apostle doth, 1. Cor. 11. 23. I have received of the Lord, that which I have delivered unto you: otherwise if there should bee a dumbe action onely, without the word of institution rehearsed in the audience of the people, they should not know, what by their action is represented and shewed forth. Secondly, if by the action of eating and drinking onely the Lords death is shewed forth, then in your priuate Masses, where the people neither eate nor drinke, there is no shewing forth at all of the Lords death.

Argum. 3. A Sacrament consisteth of two parts; of the outward element, as the matter; and of the word of institution, as the forme: the element, as water in Baptisme, bread and wine in the Eucharist must not be concealed: Ergo, neither the word of institution.

Belarmine answereth, that it is sufficient, if the words bee vsed, though not pronounced in their hearing, that receive the Sacraments: for infants heare not the words spoken in Baptisme.

Contra. First, the reason is not alike between infants baptized, and other communicants; they heare not, neither vnderstand, therefore they profit not by the words: but they which communicate in the other Sacrament can both heare and vnderstand. Secondly, though infants heare not, yet they which are present at their Baptisme doe heare and are edified: otherwise ye might as well reason thus, Infants see not the element, which is vsed: Ergo, the water also may bee concealed. Thirdly, yet the argument is not answered, drawne from the proportion, betweene the element of the Sacraments, and the word.

Argum. 4. There is the same reason of vsing words not vnderstood in the Church of God, and of words, that are not heard: for by neither is the people edified: but the first are nō to bee vsed; as the Apostle saith, I had rather in the Church speake five words with mine vnderstanding, than I might instruct others, than tenne thousand words in a strange tongue, 1. Cor. 14. 19. Ergo, neither are the others: and therefore their five words of consecration must be so spoken, as that others may be instructed thereby.

Belarmine answereth: first, the Apostle speaketh of preaching, not of prayer. Secondly, sacrificing is not a speaking, but a doing: and if it be a speaking it is to God, not to the Church.

Contra. First, it is euident that the Apostle speaketh of prayer, vers. 14. If I pray in a strange tongue, my spirit prayeth but my vnderstanding is without fruite, that is to others. Secondly, if their sacrifice be a doing onely, what neede they vse any words at all? Thirdly, prayer is a spirituall sacrifice offered onely to God; yet the Apostle would not haue it without vnderstanding and instruction.

Augustine saith, Populus cum episcopo orat, & quasi ad eius verba subscribens responder, Amen: The people prayeth with their pastor, and subscribing to his words, say, Amen. But how can the people say, Amen, where nothing is heard, or subscribe in their hearts vnto it? Contra Parmenian. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Concil. Oxiensius sub Stephano: Verba canonis presertim in consecratione corporis Christi plene & integre proferantur: The words of the canon, especially at the consecration of the body of Christ, must be pronounced fully and wholly.

Concil. Basiliens. sess. 21. Abusum aliquarum ecclesiarum, in quibus Missa privata sine ministro, aut per solas orationes ita submissa voce dicitur, quod à circumstantibus audiri non potest, abolimus, &c. The abuse of certaine Churches, where Masse is said privately without a Minister, or with a low voyce, & prayers are mumbled, that the standers by cannot heare, wee doe abolish. This is contrarie to Belarmine's opinion, who would not haue the words of consecration vttered in a loud voyce.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, OF THE CEREMONIES which they vse in the idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse.

The Papists.

SOME ceremonies goe before the celebration of the Masse, and they are of such things, as they should be in a readines for that impious seruice: such are the vestiments and apparell of the Priest, the Albe, Chescil, Stole, Dalmatike, with such other: Altars, Altarclothes, Corporalles, Vases, Plates, Dishes, Candlestickes, Platons, Censers, Water-pots: all these and the like trumperie brought of right to be vsed in the sacrifice of the Masse, the better to discerne the bodie of Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 28.

Belarmine warranteth their massing garments by the example of the priestly attire prescribed in the law: and as Magistrates in their office vse a speciall kinde of attire for reuerence sake, so also it is fit that priests should be knowne by some speciall habite in the publike seruice of the Church, Belarmine lib. 2. de Miss. c. 14.

Ans. First, the Apostle saith, If the Priesthood be changed, there must be also a change of the law, Heb. 7. 12, wherefore the priestly garments belonging to the law of the Priesthood, are chaunged together with it, and are no warrant for the habite of the Ministers of the Gospell. Secondly, be it granted that Ministers may bee discerned in their office, by some decent habite (though by their life and doctrine they chiefly are to manifest themselves) yet such partly ridiculous, partly superstitious apparell, as you hang vpon your Masse-priests backe is not fit: for as the Magistrate will not adorne himselfe with straunge and vnwonted apparell, but such, as may adde comelines and grace to his person; so neither are such popish ragges seemely for a Minister of the Gospell, which onely attend vpon their Idolatrous sacrifice. Thirdly, sacrificing garments are not meete to be vsed where there is no externall sacrifice: but vnder the Gospell there is no externall sacrifice: Ergo, the sacrificing garments of Aaron are not now to be put in vse.

The Protestants.

First, for diuers causes wee doe condemne and reiect these superstitious vsages of the Papists: first, because of the superfluous and vnneccessarie number of them, fewer by a great deale may serue for the Communion to be kept, after Christs institution: neither doe wee reade, that Christ at his last Supper vsed any such, who notwithstanding would not haue left out any thing requisite and needfull for the Sacrament.

Secondly, the superfluous and excessiue cost, in making so many Church vessels of gold and siluer, so many Masse garments of silke, fine linnen, embroidered with gold, pearle, and precious stones, was both an intolerable burthen to the Church, at whose charge such things were provided, and a great deale more costly, than became the simplicitie of the Gospell.

Thirdly, conuenient vessels and instruments, which are necessarie for the administration of the Sacrament, with other seemely ornaments: as a decent couering for the Communion table, a cleane and handsome vessel to keepe the wine, a cup of siluer for the distribution, cleane linnen napkins for the bread; such instruments and ornaments of the Lords table we condemne not, but vse them our selues: yet none of them for such ends or purposes, as they pretend, to discern the bodie of the Lord by them; as though they were ordained to waite and attend vpon the bodily presence of Christ, which they haue falsely imagined: but wee doe vse them for decency and order sake, and due reuerence, which is to bee yeilded to so great mysteries. As in their owne decrees, decr. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 44. c. 2. Innocent. 3. Sum. alij. &c. qui vestimenta tam immunda reliquit: There be, that leaue the vestments so vnclane, &c. that they are loathsome vnto some, &c. wherefore we will, that they bee kept white and cleane. Such comelines and cleanelines in the celebration of the Sacrament wee commend, and allow: but their superfluous vessels and garments the Gospell hath no neede of.

Argu. The Tabernacle, with all things thereto belonging, was a figure for the time present, and the time of reformation, Hebr. 9. 9. The priestly garments did belong to the seruice of the Law: Arg. they are no more to be vsed now vnder the time of reformation.

Again, as the Apostle saith, That the similitude of heavenly things, and the heavenly things themselves, are not purified with the same things, Heb. 9. 23. so neither are they to bee adorned, and furnished with the same things: the similitude of heavenly things require such ornaments; but the heavenly things themselves must haue better ornaments.

In the Apostles time they had no consecrated Altars, but Communion tables, 1. Cor. 10. 21. neither is it like that they vsed vessels of gold or siluer in the Lords Supper, when they had neither siluer nor gold in their purses, Math. 10. 9. Wherefore such things are not necessarie for the discerning of the Lords bodie.

Bernard saith well: Quam multa bodis gemmis & auro fulgent Altaria? &c. How many Altars now a daies shine with gold and precious stones? how many walles are decked with costly garments? thinke you that the Angels will regard these things, and thinke scorne of base myrrour men? if it were so, how chance they appeared to shepherds rather than vnto Kings? Altars therefore or Communion tables are better adorned with the frequencie of poore faithful people, than with cloth, and iewels of gold.

Eusebius. de. par. 3. dist. 1. cap. 45. Nam in serico pauca, aut tincta, sed puro lino, terram solummodo prociuit, sacrificium altaris consecratur: Let the sacrifice be consecrate, not in silke, or coloured cloth, but in pure linnen made of naturall flaxe. But now silke will not serue the turne: their Altars, and Altarclothes are decked with gold, siluer, and precious stones.

Bonifacius Martyr and Bishop, being asked, whether it were lawfull to celebrate the Sacrament in wooden vessels, made answere: Quondam sacerdotes aurei ligneis calicibus utebantur, nunc contrario lignei sacerdotes aureis inuuntur calicibus: In time past golden priests vsed wooden cuppes, now wooden priests vse golden cuppes, decr. par. 3. dist. 1. c. 46. Wherefore it is euident, that in the simpler ages of the Church, such sumptuous ornaments were not requisite. First they did minister in wooden cuppes; then Zepherinus brought in glasse cuppes: and after that time cuppes were in vse; and last of all siluer and golden cuppes, ibid. cap. 44. 45. And thus by steps and degrees, they grew to this superfluitie.

The Papists.

Here are other ceremonies, which they obserue and vse in the very action it selfe and celebration of the Masse: as the diuers gestures of the Priest, to lift vp his eyes; and cast them downe againe, and to lift them vp the second, the third time: sometime to cast abroad his hands, to close them againe, to warble with his fingers, to bow, to bend, to duck, to turne on this side and on that, now on the right hand, againe on the left: to sigh, to smite vpon his breast, to lift vp the Chalice, and shew it to the people, and set it downe againe: as also the diuiding of the host into three parts, which signifie three parts of the Church, in Heauen, in Earth, and in Purgatorie: the mingling of part thereof in wine, and eating part drie, the washing of his fingers before consecration: kissing of the Altar, the paten, the booke, the paxe: sprinkling of holie water, censuring of odors, crossing the Chalice, the bread, their mouth, breast and face, which signe of the crosse they make aboute twentie times in one Masse while: Adde also vnto these, their tedious and yrekesome noise, the rude noise and vnedifying sound of strange instruments, and the whole course of their Masse-musicke set forth in a strange language, and endited to the honour of Saints. All these superstitious rites, with diuers more, vaine, vnfruitfull, abominable, they notwithstanding with force and maine defend and maintaine, Bellarm. lib. 2. de Massa. cap. 14. 15. Concil. Tridentin. sess. 21.

Argum. The lifting vp of the hands Bellarmino warranteth by Moses example, Exod. 17. the bowing of the knees, and the eleuating of the eyes by the example of Christ, who often lift vp his eyes and prayed kneeling: the eleuation of the host, the burning of incense, and musicall instruments he deriueth from the sacrifices of the law: and so concludeth the lawfull and necessarie vse of them, lib. 2. de Massa. 15.

Ans. First, to lift vp the eyes, the hands, to bow the knees, to knocke the breast, are reuerent gestures and to be vsed in prayer, and we willingly reiteine them in our seruices: but they abuse these same gestures three waies: first, in setting forth thereby a false and idolatrous sacrifice: for though it bee a comely thing to kneele, yet it is impious to kneele to an Idoll. Secondly, they offend in their mutabilitie and inconstancie, shifting and chaunging their gestures, looking sometime vp, sometime downe, now this way, now that way: as the Wise man saith, The eyes of the foolish are in the corners of the world. Prou. 17. 24. but Stephen looked stedfastly into heauen, Act. 7. 55. so they kneele, they ducke, they bend, they bow: So did not Moses, that continued holding vp his hands till the euening, and Salomon was vpon his knees all the time he prayed, 1. King. 8. Thirdly, they offend in vsing dumbe and mute gestures, without any prayer at all, or the same in an vnknowne tongue: so did not the Publicane, who not onely smote vpon his breast, but said, Lord be mercifull to me a sinner.

Secondly, if the flesh of beasts were now sacrificed, as vnder the law, then they might also shake them and heaue them before God, and perfume them with incense, as the Leuites did: wherefore those sacrifices being abolished, the rites also and ceremonies accompanying them are disallowed.

Thirdly, a moderate and sober vse of Musicke in the Church wee conilemne not, though the practise of the Iewish Church doeth not warrant it: for their melodious sound of instruments was speciall, signifying the spirituall melodie and harmonie, which we should make in our hearts, Eph. 1. 3. And though Musicke may be well vsed, yet is it by them three waies abused: first, in adorning a false and idolatrous service, Secondly, in playing and singing vnedifying songs. Thirdly, in displacing thereby the preaching of Gods word, and fruitfull prayer.

The Protestants. His multitude of humane inventions, agreed not with the institution of the Lords Supper: for wee reade not of any such killing, kneeling, becking, bowing, or the like ridiculous gestures to haue been vsed, when our Sauiour instituted the Supper, nor afterwards by the Apostles to haue been practised: wherefore we concerning our selues with the plaine institution of Christ, doe worthilie reiect all such toys.

Most of these gestures are impious, and tend to Idolatrie in the adoration of bread and wine, which are but creatures: and they are all frivolous and hypocriticall, stealing away true devotion from the heart, and making men to rest in the outward gestures of the bodie. Augustine saith very well: Corpus genibus flexis prosterne, collum curuas in adoratio, vnde ubi sacens corpus prosterne, ubi vultus adoratio. Thou bowest the knee, bendest thy bodie in prayer, stretchest out thy necke, I see where thy bodie lieth: but what is become of thy soule?

Concerning Church songs and Musicke, Augustine thus writeth: Sobrie psallimus in Ecclesia Epistol. 119. cap. 19. Contra Iulian. lib. 4. 14. We sing treatably and soberly in the Church the diuine songs of the Prophets. Two conditions he requireth: first, that we sing holy Psalmes taken out of the Scriptures. Secondly, that they be sung treatably and distinctly. Etiā illic (saith he) si sonum non sensum audienti de fides, improbat ur: Euen in good songs, if we follow the sound, not the sense, it is to be discommended: but in popish songs neither of these conditions is kept: for both the dittie, for the most part, is idolatrous, stuffed with inuocation and adoration of Saints, and the note is so diuided and drawne out in length, that it cannot be vnderstoode.

Bernard thus writeth excellently of this matter: Sape ad sacrum mysterium vocem meam frangi, ut dulcius cantetur: magis delectabar in vocis modulatione, quam in cordis compunctione: Meditatio. cap. 11. Oftentimes in diuine seruice, I quauered with my voyce to sing more pleasantly, and so delighted more in tuning my voyce, then in turning my heart. This then is one great fault in singing, so to regarde the note, that we thinke not of that which is sung: And therefore he saith, Sic mulceat aures, ut moueat corda: Let it so please the eares, that it may play vpon the heart: Frangis vocem, frange & voluntatem: seruas consonantiam vocis: serua & concordiam morum: Thou rubbest with thy voyce, relish also with thy heart: thou keepest the consort of the voyce; keepest so the harmonie of manners, Meditatio. cap. 51. But popish Masse songs set forth with tedious notes, and vnknowne syllables, doe want this consort and harmonie of the heart, being not vnderstood for the most part of the singers themselues, much lesse of those that heare them.

Concerning Organe play: Order hath been taken by Councels in these two poynts especially. 1. Nolumus, quod organicis instrumentis resonet in Ecclesia impudica aut lasciuia melodia, sed solummodo dulcis qui nihil prater hymnos diuinos, & cantica spiritualia repraesentet: We will not haue any light, wanton voluntarie melodie to be played vpon the Organes, but onely spirituall and diuine hymnes: Concil. Seruoniens. decret. 17.

2. For the moderating of Organe play, thus also it is decreed, Coloniens. part. 2. cap. 12. Item in rellis sit in quibusdam Ecclesijs, &c. That is not well done in some Churches, when because of the singers, and Organes, better things, as prayer, giuing of thanks, are shortened, are omitted or cleane cut off. These rules in Church musick are to be kept: which the popish sort little obserue in their Masse seruice.

Let vs heare their owne decrees: part. 1. distincti. 92. c. 2. Gregor. In sancta Romana Ecclesia idum est consuetudo valde reprehensibilis exorta, &c. There is of late a very euill custome risen vp in the holy Church of Rome, &c. That certaine singers are chosen for the Ministerie of the altar, &c. and they attend the tuning of the voyce, which should applie themselues to preaching, and so it cometh to passe, Dum blanda vox queritur, quari congrua vita negligatur: That while they stude for a pleasing voyce, they neglect a good life: and a singing Minister pleasing the people with his voyce, offendeth God with his workes: Wherefore I ordaine, Ys altaris Ministri cantantibus beant: That the Ministers of the altar should not sing. Likewise, Iohann. 22. extrin. canon. 14. tit. 1. c. 1. reproveth certaine notorious abuses in Church musicke: In semibreues & minime ecclesiastica cantantur, discantibus lubricant, triplis &c. inculant: They sing Church songs with long briefes and minimes, and glide away with triple time and descant, &c. This curious kind of singing here reprehended, is notwithstanding still vsed in the popish Masse-seruice.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF THE FORME OF THE

Masse, which consisteth partly of the Canon, partly of such things as are rehearsed before and after the Canon.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE PRAIERS WHICH goe before the Canon of the Masse.

WE doe not vtterly condemne whatsoever is said or sung in their Leiturgie or Masse: for as they haue their introite, so we doe bid the people, after due preparation, in our Communion to draw neere. We haue also our Confiteor, a confession of sinnes to bee said before the Communion. Other formes also, which haue been vsed of auncient time, we doe not refuse: as Dominus vobiscum, The Lord be with you: Kyrie eleyson, Lord haue mercie on vs: Sanfctus, Lift vp your hearts: with Allcluia, praised be God, and Sanctus, Sanctus, holy, holy, and Gloria excelsis, Glorie be to God on high: the preface also to the Communion, Vere dignum, &c. It is meete, right, and our bounden dutie: And we vse also the Lords prayer after the Communion. These formes we mislike not, vsing the same our selues, which notwithstanding we borrow not from them, but from the ancient and purer ages of the Church. But the corruptions, additions, immutations, which are vsed by them in these prefaces to the Masse, wee doe vtterly condemne, as their introite and confiteor, is stuff full of idolatrie, and inuocation of Saints: their Kyrie eleyson is nine times repeated in an vknowne tongue. Elevation and adoration was brought in by Pope Honorius, anno. 1222: the Agnus was deuised by Pope Sergius, anno. 700. the Pax by Innocentius, plura apud Focum. pag. 1403.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE Canon of the Masse.

The Papists

First, the forme of their Masse they haue (they say) by tradition from the Apostles: Rhemist. 40. Error;
1. Cor. 11. sect. 22. Bellarm. lib. 2. de miss. s. 19.

Argum. That the Canon of the Masse is most auncient, and so like to take beginning from the Apostles time, Bellarmino sheweth by these three coniectures: first, because mention is made only of Martyrs in the Canon, not of the confessors of the Church, who began of later time to be honoured: Secondly, because some few words of the Canon haue been added since by diuers, as by Leo 1. Gregorius 1. with others, whereby it appeareth, that the Canon it selfe was before their time. Thirdly, because the author of the Canon is vnknowne, and therefore it is like it came by tradition from the Apostles. c. 20.

Ans. First, the adoration and inuocation of Martyrs, as also of confessors, is but a late superstitious deuise, not knowne in the auncient and purer times of the Church: as Origene saith, Homil. 6. Iosua. Iosua non adorasset, nisi agnouisset Deum: Iosua would not haue worshipped, if hee had not knowne the Angell to be God. Ambros. in 9. ad Roman. Non potest genus flecti nisi Deo: The knee cannot be bowed of euery creature but onely to God. And againe, lib. 4. de interpellat: ars. vpon these words in the 73. Psalme, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? Nec superest in caelestibus quicquid amplius quaram, &c. There is nothing in heauen but Christ, which I desire: Ergo, hee needed not, neither desired the helpe and assistance of Saints. S. Hieron. also saith, aduers. Vigilant. Quis enim i infanum caput Martyres vnquam adorauit? Who euer (thou foolish head) worshipped or adored Martyrs? Ergo, by this reason it appeareth, that the Canon of the Masse, allowing inuocation of Martyrs is not so auncient as Origens or Ambrose and Hieronims time. Neither is it true, that Martyrs onely are mentioned in the Canon, for the Virgine Maria and Iohn the Apostle were no Martyrs, who are especially remembred: and whereas they conclude thus, after rehearsing made of some, Et omnium sanctorum tuorum: And of all thy Saints, vnder this generall name, not onely Martyrs, but all true confessors of Christ are contained.

Secondly, the patching together of the Masse by diuers at sundry times doth evidently shew, that the Canon of the Masse, as it now standeth, is not auncient. And whereas he inferreth that some part of the Canon was before Leo and Gregorius, we graunt it, for the Lords Prayer vsed in the Masse, and these words, This is my bodie, and the rehearsing of the institution are read in the Gospel: but this proueth not, that the other parts also are Apostolicall.

Thirdly, the author of the Canon is assigned to be one Scholasticus by Gregorius, as euen now followed to be shewed, Ergo Bellarmines third coniecture is vaine.

The Protestants

Their owne authors doe testifie, that euery patch of their Masse was thrust in by Popes, later then the Apostles: As Sixtus the second brought into the Masse, the (Sanctus) Iulianus the first, the (Pax) Leo the first added this clause, Sanctum sacrificium, immaculatam hostiam, the holy sacrifice, the vnbloudin host: Gelasius the prefaces, collectes, graduals: Symmachus the (Gloria in excelsis) Agapetus the first, the processions. Polagius the second, appoynted nine prefaces before the Canon: Gregorius the first, brought in the (Antiphonies, and the Kyrie eleyson) Sergius the first, Agnus Dei: The other parts also and members of the Masse are assigned to their severall authors, and inuents: yea, Gregorius the first confesseth, that one Scholasticus made the most part of the Canon. Ergo, it was not deuised by the Apostles. Bellarmino answereth, that Gregorius letteth not down any one man, by this name Scholasticus, but meaneth generally some notable learned man: and in this sense S. Peter, saith he, which was the author of the Canon, may be called Scholasticus. Solum cap. 19.

Ans. This deuise of the Iesuite is rather to bee laughed at, then to bee confuted. Who euer heard before, that S. Peter and the ether Apostles were Scholastici, Schoolmen? What is this else, but to let the spirite of God to schoole, in saying that the Apostles being men endued with the holy Ghost, were brought vp in Schooles? Againe, Gregorius findeeth fault with the said Scholasticus in composing the Canon, hee would put in his owne prayers, and leaue out the Lords prayer: but if this Scholasticus had been Peter, I thinke Gregorius would not haue been so bolde, as to rebuke him: Or else saith Bellarmino, this Scholasticus was not the author of the Canon, but of certaine extraordinarie prayers.

Comps. I will here oppose the iudgement of Esposaus a graue writer among the Papists, who saith Scholasticus, vsed as Canonis auctorem: Scholasticus the author of the vsuall Canon. Comment. de Sacram. p. 31.

Argum. 2. There be many things contained in the Canon contrarie to the doctrine of the Apostles postles, as inuocation of Saints, adoration of bread, prayer for the dead, with many other grosse errors, as afterward shall be shewed: Ergo, the Canon was not instituted by the Apostles.

Argum. 3. S. Hierome findeth fault with some in his time, that in their prayers and oblations vsed to say, Qui sedes super Cherubim & Seraphim: Thou that sittest vpon the Cherubim and Seraphim: Illorum plus, sed conuincendus error: Whose error, though it may haue a shew of pietie, is worthe of reproofe, because that no where mention is made in Scripture, that God sitteth vpon the Seraphim, but only vpon the Cherubim: 10m. 4. epist. ad Damas. From hence I reason thus: If they vse the same forme in their Masse oblation, then is it an error, and so can not be fathered vpon the Apostles: if they doe not; then do they not vse that forme, which was in Hieromes time, and so it cannot be of any great antiquitie, let them choose which part they will.

The Papists.

41. Error.

2. THe Canon of the Masse (say they) is perfect and absolute, voyd of all error, and therefore not to be changed or abrogated. Council. Trident. sess. 22. can. 6. Bellar. cap. 21.

The Protestants.

BUt wee on the contrary side, more truly and agreeable to Scripture, doubt not to say, that there can bee nothing more corrupt, abominable, fuller of all impietie, heresie, lying, then is their idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse: as it shall now more particularly appeare, by the collection of the seuerall errors.

A FULL HALFE HVNDRED OF ERRORS AND

Blasphemies that are to be found in the Canon of the Masse, as touching the matter.

1. THe Priest saith, Wee pray thee accept these gifts, these holy and vnspotted sacrifices. Thus he maketh Bread and Wine the sacrifices of the Gospell: for these words are spoken before Consecration. And whereas Bellarmine saith, it is called a sacrifice, because it is intended and set apart to be a sacrifice: Contra. Yet is it not already a Sacrifice, much lesse vnspotted, seeing it is neither vnspotted in respect of it selfe, being not yet made the body and blood of Christ, nor in respect of the offerer, who is a sinfull man.

2. The Priest speaking of the bread and wine, thus saith: Which wee offer vnto thee for thy holy Catholike Church. And againe afterward; Which wee offer for the redemption of our soules. What great Blasphemie is this, to offer bread and wine for the redemption of the Church, for the which Christ in great loue offered vp himselfe? and so to make his death of no force.

Bellarmin. Bread and wine is not offered for the Church, but the sacrifice to be made of bread and wine. Contra. Then the Priest should say, Which we shall offer, not, Which we do offer: but which he offereth, is nothing but bread and wine, whatsoever it is, which he offereth afterward.

3. The rubricke of the Masse willet, that the Priest should pray for his owne Bishop onely and for himselfe, and his speciall friends: But charitie would, that he should pray for all Bishops, Pastors and Ministers: and Christ biddeth vs, not onely to pray for our friends, but also for our enemies.

4. The Priest first prayeth for the Pope, then for his owne Bishop, lastly for the King: But S. Paul would haue prayers first of all made for all men, but especially for Kings, 1. Timothy 2. they should first of all be remembered: & S. Peter setteth down the King as the chiefe, 1. Peter 2. Agatha B. of Rome writing to Constantine the Emperour, confesseth himselfe Imperij famulus, a seruant to the Emperour, actio. 4. Synod. 6. Constantin.

5. He saith, and with thy seruants our Pope: he is their Pope and Bishop onely, that are vnder his Diocese and Seignorie: he hath no iurisdiction ouer other Churches: Pelagius 2. 1. epist. aduersus Eulog. Patriarke of Constantinople findeth fault with him, for giuing him the stile of vniuersall Pope, calling it superba appellatiois verbum; a proud name. And here also let it be noted, that our English Papists can betime subiects, that in their Masse and other prayers preferre the Pope before their Prince, and acknowledge him to be their Pope and Bishop.

6. Hec sacrificium laudis: This sacrifice of prayse: it is only then a spirituall sacrifice of thankgiuing, not a materiall and externall sacrifice, as they beare men in hand. Bellarmine misseeth, that the Sacrifice of Christs body, is called a Sacrifice of prayse; because thereby God is praised, &c. Contra. First, God thereby is greatly dishonoured, when they adore a piece of bread, and Christs bodie also is disgraced, being made subiect to wormes and corruption, and to be gotten of mice and dogges; all which inconueniences ensue vpon the carnall presence. Secondly, the Apostle sheweth, what the Sacrifice of prayse is, namely, the fruit of the lippes, Heb. 13. but Christs bodie is not the fruit of the lippes: though their Priests can make Christs body his words speaking, yet I thinke they dare not say, that Christs body is the fruit of the lippes.

lipes: if they should, the Apostle confuteth them, who expoundeth himselfe, that the fruit of the lipes is, the confession of the Name of God: Ergo, Christs body is not the Sacrifice of prayse.

7 The Priest saith, Worshipping the memoriall of the Virgine: But Christ instituted the Sacrament to be kept in remembrance of himselfe, and not for the worship of Saints.

8 By whose merites and prayers, namely of the Saints, graunt we may be defended. But S. Iohn saith, If any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the righteous, 1. Iohn 2. 1.

9 In the second prayer of the Canon, they pray, by vertue of the oblation of bread and wine deliuered from eternall damnation: for as yet the elements are not consecrated. Bellar. They conclude this prayer, through Christ our Lord, by whom, and not by the oblation, they desire it to be graunted. Contra. They doe for fashion sake indeede conclude their prayers, through Christ &c. but they do also ascribe their Petition to the vertue of the oblation: that God being well pleased with that oblation, &c. would deliuer them from eternall damnation, &c.

10 We beseech thee (saith the Priest) to receiue this oblation, which we beseech thee in all thinges to make blessed: Here the Priest is made a Mediator betweene Christ and his Father; desiring God to sanctifie the body and blood of his Sonne. Thus beginneth the third prayer of the Canon. Bellarmino answereth, they pray not here for the Eucharist now consecrated, but to be consecrated, that it may be made the bodie and blood of Christ, c. 23. Contra. First, they pray for that oblation, whereby they prayed a little before to be deliuered from damnation: Ergo, for an oblation consecrated. Secondly, after the consecration they pray also in the same manner, Which we beseech thee vouchsafe to accept.

11 Who the next day afore hee suffered: But the Scripture saith, The same night. For this is my body. Here they haue put in enim, of their owne, and left out, Quod pro vobis datur. Such is their boldnesse, that they are not ashamed to change the words of our Saviour Christ.

12 Take ye, &c. Why then doth the Priest take it alone? seeing Christ appointed it to be taken of many.

13 Eate ye, &c. Why then do they hang it vp in a Pixe? seeing Christ would haue it eaten.

14 Drinke ye all of this: why then doth the Priest drinke it alone? seeing by the institution all were drinke of it.

15 He saith further in the fourth Prayer: The holy bread of eternall life, which vouchsafe thou with equall countenance to behold: The bread of eternall life is Christ himselfe, if this be he, how dare he presume to offer him vp to his Father? Bellarmino answereth, that they pray not in respect of the Sacrifice offered, but in respect of the Minister, that offereth. Contra. They desire God not to behold the Priest, but the oblation.

16 As thou didst vouchsafe to accept the righteous gifts of Abel, and the sacrifice of Abraham. Here the Sacrifice of Christ is compared to the sacrifice of beastes: and the Priest seemeth to attribute as much efficacy to the one, as to the other: he compareth the gifts and sacrifices together, not the sacrificers in respect of their devotion, as Bellarmino trieth.

17 And the holy sacrifice which thy high Priest Melchisedech did offer unto thee. This is a plaine word, and a flat lie, as we haue shewed already, that Melchisedech sacrificed bread and wine.

18 After the words of consecration rehearsed, the Priest is willed in the Rubricke, to rubbe his hands, because of the crummes: but if it be Christs bodie, it cannot be crumme. And againe, let the host crosse be made upon the bread: here it is called bread after the consecration: then is it not Christs bodie: So by their owne Canon, they are conuicted to be in an error.

19 Command thou these to be brought by the hands of thy holy Angell, unto the high Altar in heauen. What an absurd thing is this, that he should desire that to be carried into heauen, which hee eateth and deuoureth? And if this be the body of Christ, what need the helpe of an Angell to carrye y<sup>e</sup> to heauen? Is not Christ able to liue y<sup>e</sup> his owne body? Or what need that to be carried to heauen, which was neuer from thence? Bellarmino. The Angell doth not carrie y<sup>e</sup> Christs body into heauen, but their seruice and obedience. Contra. Hee saith, In hac, &c. Command thou these, &c. looking toward the host and the chalice: Ergo, he meaneth, that Christs bodie and blood should be carried.

20 As many of us as shall receiue by Summes body and blood: And yet for the most part none receiue, but the Priest; and when the people doe communicate, the wine they haue not: how then can he say, As many?

21 Remember, O Lord, the seruants of thy seruants, which rest in the sleep of peace, and graunt them a place of refreshing and rest: Here is another error contrary to the Scriptures in praying for the dead, and the prayer also is contrary to it selfe: for first he saith, they rest in peace, and yet after prayeth for their refreshing: thus beginneth the fift prayer of the Canon. Bellarmino answereth, that they which are in Purgatorie, are at rest from the workes of sinne, though not from paine. Contra. They which are dead in Christ, do rest from their labours, Apocal. 14. 13. From all laborious and painful toiments.

22 In the sixt prayer, Vouchsafe that they may have a portion with the Saintes, ending through Iesum Christ, &c. the Rubricke forbiddeth Amen to be sayd; contrary to the Apostle, 1. Cor. 14. 16. that would haue Amen to be said to the publike blessing and thanksgiving in the Church.

23 Deliver vs by the blessed intercession of the Virgins: What then is become of Christs Mediation and Intercession? who ever lieth to make Intercession for vs, Heb. 7. 25.

24 Let this mingling together of the body and blood of our Lord Iesum Christ, be vnto me saluation of minde and body: Then is not Christs blood shedde vpon the Crosse the full sufficient and perfect saluation of mankinde, if there be another saluation beside.

25 Again, if it be the very bodie and blood of Christ, how can they be mingled together, seeing the very body and blood of Christ cannot be deuided? Bellarmine answereth, that they are mingled onely by reason of the formes of bread and wine, which remaine. Contra. Formes and accidents cannot be mingled without substances, and therefore, if there be no substance remaining but of Christs body and blood, it followeth, that they are mingled. And further, seeing they hold, by way of their deuised concomitance, that the flesh of Christ is with the blood, and the blood with the flesh, what need then any such mixture or mingling at all?

26 Grant me soworthily to take this body and blood, that I may merit to receive forgiveness of sinne: O sinful man, how canst thou merite that which is Christs onely gift? And in the sixt prayer of the Canon, the Priest prayeth thus, Not weighing our merite, &c. and here hee prayeth for merite: so that their Masse is contrarie to it selfe.

27 Let the Priest bow himselfe to the host, saying, I worship thee, I glorifie thee, I praye thee: What monstrous Idolatrie is this, thus to worship a peece of bread?

28 The Sacrament of thy body and blood, &c. If it be a Sacrament of Christs bodie, then is it not the bodie it selfe: for the same thing cannot be both the Sacrament, and the thing wherof it is a Sacrament: the signe, and the thing signified; the shadow and the bodie: Sacraments are bodily shadowes, but Christs bodie is not a shadow. Coloss. 2. 17.

29 Haile for ever, thou most holy flesh of Christ, &c. Haile for ever, thou most heavenly drinke: Where do they finde in Scripture, to salute God in this manner? the Angell indeed said to Mary, Ave: Haile: and S. Iohn forbiddeth vs to say to an heretike, Ave, which the Rhemists translate, Godeum you apost. 2. 10: Is it not then a lewdly thing to say to Christ, all health, haile, or God save you? that we should blesse him, of whom we looke to be blessed.

30 Let not this Sacrament be vnto my iudgement or condemnation: thus they thinke that Christs flesh may be eaten to condemnation, contrary to the Scripture: Whofover eateth my flesh, hath eternall life, Iohn 6. 54.

31 Deliver me by thy precious bodie from all mine iniquities, &c. and graunt, that for ever I be separated from sinne: This is contrary to their owne doctrine, that a man cannot be sure to be preserved from sinne falling: for if the Masse be an available Sacrifice, as they hold, then it is available to this end, that they shall not be finally separated from God.

32 Out of a temporall gift, let it be to vs a remedie everlasting: Here he calleth the body and blood of Christ a temporall gift, which is blasphemie, vnlesse they will graunt that there is bread and wine of Christ onely purge vs, Heb. 1. 3. If they vnderstand the instrumentall meanes of our purification, to are we purged and iustified onely by faith, Rom. 5. 18. I conclude, that a man is justified by faith, without the workes of the Law.

33 Let this Communion purge vs from sinne: If they meane the principall purging of our sinne, so doth Christ onely purge vs, Heb. 1. 3. If they vnderstand the instrumentall meanes of our purification, to are we purged and iustified onely by faith, Rom. 5. 18. I conclude, that a man is justified by faith, without the workes of the Law.

34 Respect not my sinnes, but the faith of thy Church: By this reason one may be profited by anothers faith; which is contrary to the Scriptures: The iust shall liue by faith: his owne, and not anothers: Rom. 1. 17. and belike the Priest thus saying, hath no faith himselfe.

35 Let vs worship the signe of the Crosse: What I pray you will not these Idolaters worship the signe of the Crosse? which God hath not done: how is now their Masse available for the obtaining of temporall benefites, as Belarmine would haue vs in hand?

36 Let this sacrifice which I haue offered, auail to obtaine remission of sinnes: If the Masse be available for this end, wherefore then dyed Christ? The Priest prayeth, that God would restore the land consecrated by Christs blood to the Christian faith: But where do they finde, that the land was consecrated by Christs blood, whereas the Scripture saith, that the land is defiled with blood, that is, standeth accursed, Numb. 35. 33. The Apostle saith, He hath consecrated (not the earth, but) them that are sanctified, Heb. 10. 10. The blood of Christ purgeth our conscience, Heb. 9. 14. not the terrene part.

37 And whereas they pray, that the holy land may be recovered out of the hand of the heathen, which God hath not done: how is now their Masse available for the obtaining of temporall benefites, as Belarmine would haue vs in hand?

38 The Priest prayeth also, That the power of the faithfull may be directed toward the deliverance of that land: These were superstitious and vnlawfull vowes, as S. Hierome writeth vpon these words of the Psalme, I hope to see God in the land of the living: Ergo, Terra Iudea; quam illi diuinitus &c. Therefore the land of the Iewes, which was vnder his regiment, is not that land of the heathen.

but he draweth vs to a spirituall vnderstanding: Hierom de terra promiss. And againe, vpon these words, The Lord loweth thy gates of Sion more, then all the tabernacles of Iacob: Numquid istas portas diluuium destruxit, quas videmus in cineres, &c. Doth God loue those gates, which are turned to ashes? No, sed quisquid hoc persuadere potest. Very fooles will not be so perswaded. So then all such vowes are foolish, that are made in respect of the terrestriall Ierusalem, and by Hieromes sentence they are fooles, that are so perswaded.

40 In the end of the Masse, according to the vse of Sarum, there is annexed the forme of blessing or consecrating the Paschall Lambe, with this prayer, Vouchsafe to sanctifie this Paschall Lambe, that as many of thy people as doe eate thereof, may be replenished with all heavenly benediction, &c. What grosse superstition is this, that they should still retaine the vse of the Paschall Lambe, which cannot be, but to the great derogation of the true Paschall Lambe Christ Iesus, that the body being come, the shadow should bee still retained? And I haue heard it credibly reported, by one sometime brought vp in Barnwell Abbey by Cambridge, that the Monkes did vse once a yeere to rost a Lambe whole, and so to eate it with herbes: what greater superstition can bee found among the Iewes?

OTHER ERRORS IN THE MANNER of celebrating Masse.

41 NOW to make vp the halfe hundred of errors in the Masse, as those before going are found in the matter, so these following are in the manner: as first, all is done and said in the Latine tongue, not vnderstood of the people, and often not of the Priest himselfe, contrarie to Saint Pauls rule, that all things should be done to edifying. 1. Cor. 14. 12. and they that speake words not vnderstood, speake in the ayre, vers. 9.

42 Again, they vse many irksome, tedious, and friuolous repetitions of the same words, as Benedicamus Domino, Let vs blesse the Lord, is sung tenne seuerall times together, and Te igitur, is sung thirteene seuerall times, with long and tedious notes. This is contrarie to the precept of Christ, that we should not, when we pray, vse vaine repetitions. Matth. 6. 7. for so the word Benedicamus, there vsed, signifieth, being taken from the Poet Battus, that vsed often to inculcate or repeate the same things.

43 The Priest is charged in the Rubricke to say diuers prayers, primum, secretly to himselfe: as that prayer, Deliner vs Lord from all euill, past, present, to come, &c. And, Then Lambe of God, that taketh away the finnes of the world. Likewise, where he saith, For sake not vs thy seruantes, but forgive vs our finnes, &c. these and many other words must bee pronounced to himselfe: contrarie to S. Paul, who would haue prayers so said, that they may be vnderstood, and thereunto Amen answered by the people, 1. Cor. 14. 16.

44 The Priest is taught by the Rubricke to make thirtie seuerall crosses at the least vpon the bread, the cup, the Altar, his forehead: as may appeare in the Canon of the Masse, according to the vse of Sarum, and as it is translated by Master Fox in the beginning of the tenth booke of the Abbe and Monuments: wherein first they doe contrarie to that, which they professe in the Canon, saying thus, Diuina institutione formati. Being informed by the diuine institution. But no such crossing is to bee found in Christs institution, which they professe to follow. Secondly, whereas they crosse themselves either against the diuell and euill spirits, they neede not feare any such thing, where Christs bodie is: or else they vse it, to blesse withall: but they haue no reason to blesse Christs bodie, whereby they receiue blessing. Thirdly, if the signe of the crosse be so effectuall a signe, as they make it, once or twice were enough, or too much: but the making of it so often, sheweth it to be a vaine, idle, superstitious and vnprofitable ceremonie, as they vse it.

45 Their gesture in saying of Masse, is so changeable, so ridiculous, so affected, that a man would thinke a Player were comming forth vpon the stage, when the Priest addresth him to the Masse: nay, Roscius was not so full of action, as the Massing Priest is of gesture, varying and chaunging it at the least fortie or fiftie times in a Masse while: first, he boweth his bodie: then he rouseth himselfe and kisseth the Altar on the right side: he boweth againe, and looketh toward the hoast, he ioyneth his hands, wipeth his fingers, listeth vp the hoast: then he listeth vp his eyes, and boweth himselfe, and listeth vp his eyes againe: he boweth againe, and listeth vp the hoast about his forehead, vncovereth the cup, and holdeth it betweene his hands, keeping his thumbe and forefinger together: then hee boweth, and listeth vp the cup a little, then to his breast, or about his head, he listeth it downe againe, and wipeth his fingers for feare of crummes: then he spreadeth his armes acrosse: he boweth his bodie: then rising kisseth the Altar on the right side, after this, he listeth his breast: then he vncovereth the cup, maketh s. crosses with the hoast, beyond the cup twice, on each side, vnder the cup and before it: then he laith his hands vpon the Altar: the Deacon then reacheth the Priest the Paten, which he putteth to his right eye, then to his left, and maketh maketh a crosse beyond his head with it, kisseth it, and laieth it downe, then he breaketh the host in three, holding two pieces in his left hand, one in his right ouer the cup, which with a crosse he letteth fall into it: the Priest then kisseth the Corporas, the Deacon taketh the Pax from the Priest, giueth it to the Subdeacon, and he to the Queere: then humbling himselfe, he first taketh the bodie, then the blood; so hee goeth to the right horne of the Altar: then the Subdeacon powreth in wine, and the Priest rinseth the cup and washeth his hands, &c. he turneth himselfe to the people, cometh againe to the Altar, and turneth to the people the second time, then bowing his bodie, and closing his hands he prayeth to himselfe: he riseth againe, making the signe of the crosse, and bowing againe so goeth from the Altar. This leuitie and inconstancie, in turning this way, and that way, to the right hand, to the left, now vp, now downe, backward and forward, casting the armes acrosse, warbling the fingers, &c. Moses vsed it not in his prayer, that continued holding up his hands in prayer against Amalek, till hee was wearie: and Salomon endured kneeling on his knees, and stretching out his hands to heauen, till he had made an end of his prayer, 1. King. 8. vers. 54.

ERRORS COLLECTED OVT OF THE CAUTELES of the Masse, that follow after the Canon.

46. THe eight cautele is, that if the Priest chauce to consecrate water for wine, he must consecrate againe. Why masters, if these wordes, this is my bodie, bee effectuell to make the bodie of Christ, why not spoken ouer water, as well as ouer wine? If ye vrge Christs power, he was able to turne water into wine, and so likewise water into his bodie: if ye vrge Christs institution, the consecrated onely in wine, he vsed no water at all, and therefore ye breake his institution.

47. In the tenth cautele, a Priest excommunicate is willed to proceede. Can he then make Christs bodie, that is not of his bodie? this were monstrous: for then not only Priests, but euery one may make Christs bodie, euen an Heathen or Infidell: for he that is excommunicate is suspended from his office, and is for the time as an heathen man, Matth. 18. 17.

48. Cautele 12. If a Fly or Spider fall into the chalice after consecration, they must bee first waled, then burned, and the washing and ashes be kept in the sacring vessell, if the blood be poisoned, it must not be drunk, but kept in a cleane vessell. But this Cautele telleth vs not, what shall become of that which is kept, but there it remaineth still, till it fowre or stinke, or putrifie with wormes, which is as bad, as the falling in of a flie: and how an absurd thing is it, that Christs blood may bee poisoned, seeing there be many preservatives against poyson, much inferior to Christs bodie?

49. Cautele 18. If a drop of blood fall vpon the Altar, or Altar-cloth, table, &c. the Priest must like vp with his tongue, and the place must be washed, and the washing laid vp, &c.

Contra. Here the Priest hath a good office, to licke stones and tables, and clothe with his tongue: but I would askethem, whether euery drop of the Chalice bee Christs whole bodie, or part: if a part, then is he diuided: if the whole, then, how many drops in the Chalice, so many bodies of Christ are there at once: they cannot winde themselves from these absurdities.

50. Cautele 21. If any man vomit up the Eucharist, it must be burned, and the ashes laid vp by the altar, &c. What masters, will ye make Christ an heretike, that ye burne his bodie? And I pray you whence are these ashes? they cannot be of accidents: ye must either graunt that it is bread, that is burned, for Christs bodie: if the first, then there is no transubstantiation: if the second, it is blasphemie. And cannot Christs bodie stay a vomite, which many a medicine is able to doe?

51. Cautele 23. If the Sacrament bee eaten of a mouse, or if it bee lost, let the Priest doe penance, &c. Thus by the popish doctrine, myce may deuoure Christs bodie, and he that found the lost sheepe may be lost himselfe.

52. Cautele 24. If by the negligence of the Priest the host doe putrifie, let him doe penance, &c. If the accidents onely putrifie, there is no harme done, and this penance may bee spared: if the host it selfe putrifie, as this Cautele saith, then doe they make Christs glorious bodie corruptible.

Thus we see with how many and what great and horrible blasphemies this popish, and superstitious Canon of the Masse is stuffed: indeede it is an epitome and abridgement of Popishrie, the marrow, sinewes, and bones of their idolatrous profession: yea the very darling of the popish Church: it is the very proper badge and marke of a Papist. He that hateth the Masse, hateth the whore of Babylon: he that loueth the Masse, cannot loue the truth.

If then I should be demaunded at once, which of all popish blasphemies and heresies I thinke most abominable, contrarie to the faith, and to bee abhorred of all good Christians: (though I know that there are many of this kinde) yet I would readily answere the Masse: the inuention whereof, I am well assured, cannot bee ascribed but to him that is the author of all lyes, and blasphemies.

Lastly, let vs see how well the popish Masse agreeth with their owne Canons: concerning the mingling mingling of the bread and wine together, it is contrarie to the decree of Iulius: Decret. par. 3. dist. 2. c. 7. Item, quod pro complemento communiois intinctum tradunt Eucharistiam, &c. That for the complement of the Communion, they doe giue to the people the Eucharist sopped, or dipped, &c. it hath no warrant from the Gospell.

Belarmin answereth, that this decree forbiddeth onely that commixtion, which is giuen to the people in the Sacrament, not that, which is done in the Masse, lib. 2. de Miss. c. 27. resp. ad ob-

id. 4. Contra. The reason in the decree vsed, is generall against all mingling of the Sacrament: Scorsim panis, scorsim calicis, &c. The bread was commended or sanctified apart, and the cup apart: neither did Christ giue dipped bread to any of his Disciples, but to Iudas, to signifie his proditiō, not any institution of a Sacrament. Wherefore this decree is most euident against this superstitious notion in the Masse.

Concil. Colonienf. par. 2. c. 11. Videbimur operaretur falluri, &c. Wee shall doe very well, if wee cause the Missals and Breuiaries to be perused, that cutting off superfluous things, & qua superstitiosa, &c. and things superstitiously brought in, &c. How can the Missall or Masse-seruice be void of error, which is stuffed with many superfluous and superstitious things?

Synod. Augus. c. 33. Quod ad apocrypha, &c. As touching apocryphall, foolish, and vn sincere matters, by the corruption of time crept into the Breuiaries, the often repetition of Psalmes, innumerable Suffrages, new Collects, Sequencies, Prefaces, to be amended, & taken out of the seruices, &c. This Canon reprehendeth vaine repetitions, the multitude of Collects in the Masse-seruice, which yet remaine vn purged.

I will lastly insert the testimonie of Lindanus an arch-papist, who reporting the words of Ago- herus Bishop of Lyons: Antiphonarium correximus, &c. We haue corrected the Antiphonarie, cutting off what seemed to vs superfluous, light, false, blasphemous, ridiculous, phantalticall. He addeth further: Who if he were now alieue to see our Missals, &c. how would he call them? in the which not onely Apocryphall stories out of the Gospell of Nicodemus, and other toyes, are inserted, but secret prayers, mundis turpissimis confusata, defiled with most filthie faults: yea the Canon is sele, variis & redundat, doth varie and excede, &c. Lindan. lib. 3. de interpre. scriptur. c. 3. Here is a graue testimonie of a learned writer of their side against the errors, faults, and corruptions of the Masse: how then are they not ashamed to iustifie the same as perfect, and without any reprehension.

I conclude therefore with that saying of Gregorie, as he said concerning the word Antichristus: so may in as good sense of this word, Missæ, as it is now vnderstood of Papists: Si spectes quantitatem vocis, duæ sunt syllabæ; si pondus iniquitatis, est vniuersa perniciēs: If you marke the quantitie of the word, it standeth but of two syllables: but if we respect the waight of iniquitie, it containeth all impietie and vngodlines. As one sometime pleasantly descanting vpon the name, said, that the Masse was called beyond the Sea (Missæ) for that all is amisse in it.

col. 2.

Soli Deo immortalis Patri, Filio, cum Spiritu sancto, sit honor & imperium sempiternum.

Before I leaue this place, being a controuersie of such great waight, I thought good to insert the arguments of the Martyrs against the reall presence, and the contrarie reasons vsed against them by the Papists in those dayes.

THE PAPISTS THEN IN TIME PAST HAVE thus reasoned for their reall presence.

Arg. 1. The same bodie which was giuen for vs, is truly in the Sacrament: for our Sauiour Christ said, This is my bodie, which shall be giuen for you.

But his true bodie was giuen for vs.

Ans. Bishop Craumer answereth: His true bodie is truly present to them that truly receiue him, but spiritually: ibid. Which answer may be further explained thus: First, wee graunt, that the same is present, but not after the same manner: Christs bodie may be truly present, although it be not there carnally: he is present spiritually by faith, which is his true presence. Secondly, we graunt this argument against them: for if the same bodie of Christ bee present in the Sacrament, which he gaue for vs; then is it not present, but onely to those for whom it was giuen: but it was giuen onely for the elect and beleeuers, therefore to the wicked and Infidels Christ is not present in the Sacrament, because for such he gaue not his bodie: and so it followeth, that wicked men doe not eate Christ in the Sacrament, and consequently Christs bodie is not there really present: for then the wicked, that communicate, should eate thereof.

Contra. Christ, when he spake these words, this is my bodie, spake of the substance of his bodie, not of the efficacie or effect; Christs bodie then is more then spiritually, that is effectually present: Chedsey.

Answ. Wee graunt, that in the Sacrament there is both the efficacie of the bodie of Christ, and the substance thereof, but the substance spiritually applied by faith: for the flesh profiteth nothing of it selfe, My words (saith Christ) are spirit and life, Ioh. 6. ſic Cranmer. It is therefore no good argument, the efficacie of Christs bodie is spirituall in the Sacrament: Ergo, the substance of his bodie is not there spiritually: for the substance of Christs bodie is there spiritually, as the working the effect also is spirituall, as that which is wrought.

Argum. 2. That onely is giuen to vs in the Sacrament, which was giuen for vs vpon the crosse: but bread was not giuen on the crosse for vs: Ergo, bread is not giuen in the Sacrament: Chedsey.

Answ. To the proposition wee answere: first, the same bodie indeede is giuen both in the Sacrament, and vpon the Crosse, but not after the same manner: we haue the same bodie, but spiritually giuen vs by faith. Secondly, it is not true that that onely is giuen vs in the Sacrament. For there are both the bodie of Christ present spiritually in mysterie, and the bread present visible.

Argum. 3. The same flesh, whereby Christ is made our brother and kinsman, is giuen of Christ to vs to be eaten.

Christ is made our brother and kinsman by his true, naturall, and organically flesh.

Ergo, his true, naturall, and organically flesh is giuen vs to be eaten: argum. Weston.

Answ. Christ giueth vs indeede his true naturall flesh to be eaten, yet not after a carnall manner, but spiritually by faith: ſic Cranmer.

Contra. Christ gaue vs the same flesh, which he tooke of the Virgin: but he tooke not his true flesh of the Virgin spiritually, or in a figure.

Ergo, he giueth it not vs spiritually: ſic Weston dissent. Oxoniens.

Answ. First, the proposition wee graunt, that Christ tooke the same flesh of his mother, which he giueth vs to be eaten, but not after the same manner: therefore the assumption, which includeth the manner, not the thing, is sophistically inferred, and containeth more than is in the proposition: which speaketh of the same flesh, but not of the same manner.

Secondly, this argument may be turned vpon themselves: as thus,

Christ giueth vs the same flesh, which he tooke.

But hee tooke not his flesh of his mother spiritually: at all, but after an humane manner onely:

Ergo, he giueth not his flesh to vs to be eaten spiritually at all.

If this bee a good conclusion, (which let them graunt, if they will) then is the other brought forth by them.

Argum. 4. ex Chrysostomo. That thing is shewed in the Sacrament, which is worthie most highest honour in the earth:

But the bodie of Christ is worthie highest honour, not the elements of bread and wine:

Ergo, the bodie of Christ is shewed in the Sacrament, argum. Weston.

Answ. First, the conclusion wee graunt, if it be rightly vnderstood: for the bodie of Christ is shewed spiritually to the eye of faith in the Sacrament, as the Apostle saith, Christs death is shewed forth: for other shewing of Christs bodie in the Sacrament there can bee none: The Papists themselves cannot demonstrate vnto vs Christs bodie, but onely the externall shapes of bread and wine.

Secondly, we graunt that the bodie of Christ, thus spiritually shewed in the Sacrament, is worthie highest honour: and that the outward signes, not as bare elements, but as they are mytical seales of hidde and heavenly graces, and the Sacraments instituted of Christ, are of vs to be highly reuerenced, as the ordinances of God. So then Christs bodie shewed in the Sacrament, is worthie highest honour in earth, and the Sacraments, as signes of holie things, are highly to be esteemed.

Argum. 5. The soule is fed by that, which the bodie eateth:

But the soule is fed by the flesh of Christ:

Ergo, The bodie eateth the flesh of Christ in the Sacrament, argum. Chedsey.

Answ. First, the Sacrament is one thing; the matter of the Sacrament another, outwardly the bodie eateth the Sacrament, inwardly wee eate the bodie of Christ: as in Baptisme the flesh is washed with water, that the soule may be purged spiritually, so our bodie eateth the outward Sacrament, that the soule may be fed of God: ſic Cranmer.

Secondly, to the argument in particular we answere thus: first to the proposition: It is not generally naturally true, that whatsoever the bodie eateth, the soule is fed by the same: and if it be but particularly propounded, this instance onely of eating in the Sacrament, then the argument proueth not, standing wholly of particulars. Againe, the bodie and the soule are fed by the same meate in the Sacrament, but not after the same manner; the bodie is nourished by the naturall proprietie of the elements, which they haue to nourish: but the soule, by the sacramentall and supernaturall power, as they are signes and seales of holie things. Secondly, wee graunt that the soule is fed by the bodie of Christ, yet not carnally, but spiritually by faith: so that this argument may be turned vpon them thus: As the soule feedeth vpon Christ, so doth the bodie: the soule is fed by faith: Ergo and no otherwise is the bodie. And true it is that the bodie is nourished both with the Sacrament, and with the bodie of Christ: with the Sacrament (though not as a Sacrament) naturally to temporall life; with the bodie of Christ (Supernaturally by the gift of faith in the soule) to eternall life: ſe Cranmer ad Westmonum.

Argum. 6. As Christ liueth by the Father, so liue we by his flesh:

But Christ liueth by his Father naturally:

Ergo, we liue naturally by the eating of Christs flesh, argum. Treshami.

Ans. 1. The first part of this argument is not generally true: for Christ liueth otherwise by the Father in many respects: for he is the Sonne of God by nature from all eternitie, but so are not we. Secondly, the Papists themselves denie any such naturall eating of Christs flesh: for this naturall foode goeth downe into the bellie, part whereof is turned into the substance of the bodie, part is throwne out into the draught: But neither is true of Christs flesh; for if it were conuerted into our flesh, then should our flesh also bee immortall, and without sinne, as our foode is: and to say, that part thereof goeth the common way of meates, were a monstrous blasphemie against Christs glorious bodie: therefore we cannot so naturally eate Christs flesh. Thirdly, we notwithstanding in a good sence are said naturally to liue by Christ: first, not only because wee are of his nature according to the flesh, but rather in that we make all one mysticall bodie, whereof Christ is the head: that as the bodie naturally liueth by the head, so we doe naturally, that is verely, and in deede, liue by Christ. Secondly, in that Christ doth communicate vnto vs his nature of eternitie and glorie, and will bring vs to be, where he is, wee are said also naturally to liue by Christ: ſe D. Cranmer disputat. Oxoniens.

Argum. 7. The speech of Christ, in saying (this is my bodie) they would thus proue, not to be a figurative, but a proper speech.

Argum. Substantia, is not predicated denominatiuely:

This word (bodie) which is the predicatum, is a substance:

Ergo it is an essentiall predication, not a denominatiue: so it is his true bodie, not a figure of his bodie: argum. Ogilthorpi.

Ans. Substantia may be predicated denominatiuely, in an allegorie or metaphor, or a figurative locution: ſe D. Cranmer disputat. Oxoniens. And so is it in this place, where Christ speaketh figuratiuely. Againe, they thus argue.

Argum. A figurative speech worketh not:

As Christs speech, this is my bodie, worketh: the word of Christ is of strength, and by the Lords word the heauens were made:

Ergo, it is no figurative speech: argum. Yongi.

Ans. 1. The words of Christ doe not worke of themselves, but Christ himselfe, and he worke by a figurative speech. 2. Christs speech, or rather Christ by his speech worketh, in instituting a Sacrament, not in conuerting the substance of bread. 3. God doth worke by his power in the Sacraments, as in Baptisme, so in the Eucharist: But there is no such conuersion in Baptisme, therefore not in the other. 4. The Sacrament of Christs blood is made: the words make the blood to them, that receiue it; not that the blood is in the cup, but in the receiuer: resp. D. Cranmer disputat. Oxoniens. Againe, thus they reason.

Argum. My sheepe (saith Christ) heare my voyce, and follow me: but all the sheepe of Christ heare this voyce, This is my bodie, without a figure:

Ans. First, the sheepe of Christ follow the voyce of Christ, vnlesse they be seduced and deceiued through ignorance: But the sheepe of Christ, neuer vnderstood this voyce of Christ without a figure: for the fathers doe number this place among figuratiue and tropicall speeches: respons. D. Radri disputat. Oxoniens.

Argum. 2. Whereas we alleage such places of Scripture against the reall presence, as doe make mention of Christs ascension into heauen, and his abode there: they on the contrarie labour thus to proue, that Christs ascension into heauen, and his continuance there, is no let to the reall presence of his flesh in the Sacrament.

Christ appeared corporally and really on the earth since his ascension into heauen: as he was scene of Paul, 1. Corinth. 15. and ecclesiasticall stories make mention, that Christ appeared corporally vnto Saint Peter, as he fled from Rome, as Eusebius writeth, lib. 3. cap. 3.

Ergo, for all Christs being in heauen, he may also be in earth, and so consequently in the Sacrament, argum. Smith.

Ans. First, Christ may, when it pleaseth him, bee in heauen, and in earth, and appeare whom he will: yet it followeth not, that he will doe so. Secondly, that Christ appeared to Paul and Stephen, Act. 7. we graunt, but he was scene of them in heauen, not in earth: the story there reported of Christs appearing to S. Peter, is not certaine, and therefore it proueth not. Thirdly, though we should graunt the corporall appearance of Christ sometime vpon earth, yet it needes be with some intermission of his bodily presence in heauen: for corporally to be present in earth, and corporally to bee in heauen at the same time, is contrarie to the Scriptures, and against the nature of an humane bodie: wherefore if Christ abide in heauen after the manner of his corporall presence, as the Scripture saith, The heauens must containe him; this must needs hinder his bodily presence in the Sacrament, respons. D. Ridley. disput. Oxoniens.

Argum. 9. Every Sacrament of the newe Testament hath a promise of grace, and so consequently the Eucharist hath:

But there is no promise of grace made to the bread and wine, but to the bodie, and blood of Christ:

Ergo, the bread and wine are not the Sacraments, but the body, and blood of Christ: argum. Watson. disputat. Oxoniens.

Ans. First, there is no promise made to bread and wine, as they are common bread, and wine; but in as much as they are sanctified, and made the Sacraments of the body and blood of the Lord, they haue a promise of grace annexed vnto them. Secondly, and yet to speake properly, this promise of the spirituall partaking of Christs body, is made not to the bread, and wine, but to them which worthily doe receiue the Sacrament: respons. D. Ridley.

Argum. 10. ex Clorissismo: That which the woman did hold in her wombe, that same thing holdeth the Priest: but the Virgine did beare the very flesh of Christ in deede: Ergo argum. Weston.

Ans. 1. We grant, the Priest holdeth the same thing, but after an other manner: he did hold the naturall body, the Priest holdeth the mystery of the body: resp. Ridley. disputat. Oxoniens. And thus far of our aduersaries arguments.

THE ARGVMENTS OF THE MARTYRS AND holy confessors of Gods truth against the Reall presence.

Argum. 1. IF Christs body be really in the Sacrament, as it is now celebrated in the Church, then so was it present, at the first institution thereof: If Christs body were then eaten in the Sacrament; and Christ as he did eate the Paschall Lambe with his Disciples, so likewise did he the Eucharist: then it will follow, that Christ did eate his owne body, which were very absurd.

Ans. Moreman a popish Doctor granteth this consequence, that Christ did eate his owne body: against whom Master Philpot framed this argument.

Receiuing of Christs body, hath a promise of remission of sinnes:

Christs eating the Sacrament had no such promise: for he had no sinnes, and therefore needed no remission: Ergo, Christ in the Sacrament did not eate his owne body.

Ans. 1. First, Moreman answereth to the proposition, denying that the receiuing of the Sacrament hath a promise of remission of sinnes: whom Master Philpot confuteth by the very words of institution; Which is giuen for you, which is shed for you for remission of sinnes.

Ans. 2. Doctor Weston answered, that Christ did no more eate the Sacrament for remission of sinnes, then he was baptized: and by this reason may we proue as well, that he was not baptized at all; because Baptisme is giuen for remission of sinnes.

Contra. Though Christ were baptized, not for any neede thereof, but to giue an example to his Church, yet it is otherwise in eating his owne body in the Eucharist: for the water in Baptisme of it selfe is but a terrene element, but Christs body is liuely, and cannot be eaten without some effect or operation. Againe, let it be obserued, how they doe here match the Eucharist and Baptisme together, which elswhere they deny; affirming that these two Sacraments haue no likeness each to other: If then they will compare these Sacraments, they must be alike therein: that as the bread in the Eucharist is become, as they say, the body of Christ; so must the water likewise in Baptisme: and so consequently it is as absurd a thing, for Christ to eate his owne body in the Eucharist; as for his body to be washed with his body in Baptisme: respons. disputat. conuocat. alt. 3. de.

Argum. 2. The Angell said to the woman, He is risen, he is not here: Matth. 28. Ioh. 16. I come from my father into the world: againe, I leaue the world, and goe to my father: Christ speaketh of his natural whole body: Ergo, we may conclude, that his body is not now in the world, argum. Philpott.

Ans. Christ is visibly departed in his humanity, but invisibly notwithstanding he remaineth in the Sacrament.

Contra. This distinction may be taken away by the answer of the disciples to our Saviour Christ in the same place, where he speaketh of his departure, John 16. Now thou speakest plainly, and utterest forth no parables: But if Christ had vnderstoode any such invisible presence according to the distinction, hee had spoken obscurely, and darkely, not plainly, resp. Phil. disp. conuoc.

Argum. 3. Philpott: S. Peter saith, Act. 3. Whom heauen must receiue, till the consummation of all things: this is spoken of Christs humanity: Ergo, it cannot be present vpon earth in the Sacrament.

Ans. Harpfield answereth, 1. Christ is not ex necessitate, of necessitie forced to any place: Contra. Christ is no otherwise forced of necessitie to any place, then as he hath by his owne decree appointed his body to remaine in heauen, and so declared it in his word. The decree therefore of God is immutable, not that God is forced by any to keepe it, but because his will and purpose cannot be changed.

Ans. 2. Christ is omnipotent, and may be in heauen, or in earth at his pleasure. Contra: of Christs omnipotencie, what he can doe, is not our question, but rather what he doth: it is no good argument, he may doe this or that: Ergo, he doth it. So much onely is to be beleued of Christs omnipotencie, as is in the word exprest: but that Christs bodie is in heauen, and really in the Sacrament vpon earth, is not exprest in the word: Ergo, it is not to be beleued, sic Philpot Martyr.

Ans. 3. This word oportet, vsed by S. Peter, he must, doth not include an absolute necessitie, as may appeare by other places of Scripture: S. Paul saith, Oportet Episcopum unius uxoris virum esse: A Bishop must be the husband of one wife, yet he may be a Bishop, that was neuer married.

Contra. This word oportet, is diuersly taken in Scripture: S. Paul describing a Bishop, sheweth his qualitie, what manner of person he ought to be; but S. Peter speaking of Christs being in heauen, declareth the place where Christ must necessarily be, vntill his second comming: As when I say (oportet te hic esse) you must needs be in this place; here is included an absolute necessitie, that you cannot possibly, at the same instant, be in another place: but when I say, oportet te virum bonum esse, you must be a good man: it doth not include any such necessitie, but that you may be an euill man: sic Philpot disputat. conuocat. allion. 6. As then this word is taken in common speech, so also in Scripture: sometime it signifieth (it is meete) conuenient, sometime it implyeth an absolute necessitie.

Argum. 4. As Christ worketh in Baptisme, so he worketh in the other Sacrament.

But in Baptisme he worketh not by any conuersion of substance:

Ergo, there is no such conuersion in the Eucharist: argum. Cran. disp. Oxon.

Ans. 1. First, D. Young answereth, that by this meanes they will make no change at all in the Sacrament.

Contra. Not so, but wee make a great change: as in them that are baptized there is a great change, when the child of the bond-slave of the diuell is made the sonne of God: so is it also in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiueth vs into his protection and fauour: sic Cranmer.

Ans. 2. There is great difference betwene Baptisme, and the Lords Supper: in the Supper the words are directed to the bread: in Baptisme, to the spirit: he said not the water is the spirit, but of the bread he said, This is my body: sic West.

Contra. The Scripture in like manner, as here the bread is called Christs body, because it representeth his bodie, so it calleth the spirit a doue, when the spirit descended in likeness of a doue: as John 1. Vpon whose sacert thou shalt see the spirit descending: he calleth that which descended, the holy spirit: the bread then is no more the body of Christ in the Eucharist, then the doue in the Baptisme of Christ lighting vpon him, was the spirit.

Argum. 5. ex Theodoro: who thus reasoneth against the heretike Emychen, who denied two natures of substance to remaine in Christ.

As in the Sacrament of the body of Christ after the consecration, there is the substance of Christs humanity together with the substance of bread, so in the person of Christ there doe remaine two seuerall substances, that is, his diuinitie and humanity vnited together, &c. But if so, that there should not remaine in the Sacrament, which is a representation of Christ, the substance of bread, but should be absorpt by the presence of Christs flesh, this would make strongly, not against, but for Emyches, that euen so in the person of Christ, his humanity should be swallowed vp of his diuine nature annexed thereunto: argum. Philpott disputat. conuocation.

Argum. 6. To these reasons we may adioyne those substantiall prooues and arguments exhibited by that famous Clerke, and most constant Martyr Bishop Ridley, in his learned disputation at Oxford.

1 The reall presence varieth from the articles of the faith, He ascended into heauen, &c. and from thence, and from no other place shall he come to iudge the quicke and the dead.

2 It destroyeth and taketh away the institution of the Lords Supper: first, the Lords Supper was commanded onely to be vsed, vntill the Lord himselfe should come: but if he be come already in his flesh, then must the Supper cease. Secondly, wee are commaunded to vse it in remembrance of Christ: but a remembrance is not of a thing present, but of a thing that is past, and absent.

3 This opinion of the reall presence, admitteth many absurdities: as that whoremongers, murderers, wicked and faithlesse men, yea myce, rats, and dogs also may receiue the very reall, and corporall body of the Lord.

4 It confirmeth and maintaineth that beastly kind of crueltie of the Anthropophagi, that is, the deuourers of mans flesh: for it is a more cruell thing to deuoure a quicke man, then to slay him.

5 Againe, the bread which Christ gaue to his Disciples, hee brake: but his body could not be broken, for the Scripture sayth, Exod. 12. Ye shall not breake a bone of him. Further the bread which Christ giueth vs to eate, came downe from heauen, Iohn 6. But Christs body came not downe from heauen: Ergo, his body is not carnally eaten, and after a fleshly manner.

Argum. 7. Here we may remember also the pithy arguments of that renowned learned man Peter Martyr, propofed by him in his disputation at Oxford.

1 The analogie or resemblance betweene the Sacrament, and the thing signified in the Sacrament, must alwayes be kept: But so is it not, if the real presence be affirmed, without the substance of bread and wine: as it is thus further proued. First, one point of resemblance is in nourishing, that as the bread and wine nourish the body, so the body of Christ doth spirituallly nourish the soule: but the elements of bread and wine without a substance cannot nourish, they cannot therefore resemble the spirituall nourishment. Secondly, another resemblance in the Sacrament is this, that as one loafe of bread, and one cup of wine containeth many cornes, and grapes: so the mysticall congregation containeth many members, yet maketh but one body: but if there be no substance of bread and wine (which should consist of many cornes, and grapes vnited) remaining, this similitude of the coniunction of the parts and members of the Church, cannot be represented: Ergo, there remaineth the substance of bread and wine, or else the analogie of the Sacrament is abolished.

2 The death of Christ is not present really in the Sacrament, but by similitude: for it is done in remembrance of his death: Christ in the Sacrament dyeth not verily, or is crucified againe.

The precious blood of Christ is present in the Sacrament, as his death is present, for Christs blood was shed in his death, and without his dying his blood cannot be shed: if his death be verily and indeed, so is the shedding of his blood: if one be in mysteric, so is the other:

Ergo, the precious blood is not present in the Sacrament, but by similitude, and as the death of Christ is shewed forth.

3 Christs body cannot be really in the Sacrament, vntill it be in many places at once: for out of heauen his body must not be vntill Christs second comming:

But his body being a true naturall body cannot bee at one instant present in many places: Ergo.

The assumption or second part is thus proued: First, Spirits being of a more rare and subtile substance then a bodie is, cannot be in many places at once: as the soule of man hath his certaine place, so also are the Angels limited at one time to one place: much more is a naturall bodie tyed vnto a definite and certaine place. Secondly, euery quantitie, that is, euery body having magnitude, length, and other dimensions, is circumscribed in one peculiar place: but the bodie of Christ hath his dimensions, and is a quantitie: Ergo:

4 The wicked receiue not Christs body:

But if Christ be really present in the Sacrament, and so all receiue his body that communicate in the Sacrament, then should the wicked bee partakers of Christs bodie, which is not to be granted:

Ergo, Christs bodie is not really present.

That the wicked eate not Christs bodie, it is further thus proued:

To eate Christ, is for a man to haue Christ dwelling, and abiding in him, the wicked haue not Christ dwelling in them.

Ergo, the wicked eate not the bodie of Christ. Againe, Christs body is eaten by faith.

But the wicked haue no faith.

Ergo, they cannot eate the bodie of Christ: that Christs body is eaten onely by faith, it thus appeareth:

That

That bread, the eating whereof giueth eternall life, is eaten by faith: as Iohn 6. 47. He that be- leueth in me hath everlasting life, and verse 50. He which eateth of this bread shall not die. Here to be- leue, and to eate of the heauenly bread, are all one, because they bring forth the same effect, namely euertlasting life: But Christs bodie is this heauenly bread, that giueth euertlasting life, verse 53.

Ergo, his body is onely eaten by faith. And further thus:

Christs body is either eaten by sense, reason, or faith:

But the wicked eate him not by any of these meanes: Ergo, not at all.

Not by sense: for they say, that Christs body in the Sacrament is not sensible: they are the shapen onely and accidents of bread and wine that are scene, felt, and tasted, (as they say) in the Sacrament: Not by reason, for the Sacrament exceedeth all reason. Nec fides habet meritum, ubi ratio prabet experimentum: Faith is nothing worth where reason maketh experience: And faith wicked men and vnbelecuers cannot haue: Ergo, they cannot eate Christs bodie at all.

The holy Ghost could not come, if the body of Christ were really present, as it is proued, Iohn 16. Unlesse I goe from you, the holy Ghost cannot come.

That the holy Ghost is come it is most certaine: Ergo, Christ cannot be really present, for this were to deprive vs of the presence of Gods spirit.

6 If Christ had giuen his body substantially and carnally in the supper, then was that body either passible, or impassible:

But you cannot say that it was either passible, or impassible: Ergo, Christs passible bodie is not now giuen to bee eaten, for Christ dieth no more, his bodie is now glorified, and can bee no more passible.

Neither did he giue an impassible bodie to be eaten: for he saith, This is my body, which shall be gi- uen for you: that is, which should suffer and be crucified for them: If it be then neither passible, nor impassible, it is no bodie at all. And thus farre also of these arguments, who list at large further to know the sure and substantiall grounds of the faith of the holy Martyrs in this matter, may sup- ply what is here wanting, which for want of sufficient leysure, and the necessitie of finishing and hastening this worke, I could not at large collect together, may make a supplie thereof by his owne obseruation out of the storie of their actes and doings. Against the reall presence we haue the full consent of antiquitie.

S. Cyprian sermo de cena Domini. Panem Angelorum sub Sacramento manducamus, &c. We eate the bread of Angels vader a Sacrament in earth, we shall eate the same without a Sacrament more manifestly in heauen: The same bodie shall be eaten in heauen, which is eaten in earth, though not after the same manner: but Christs flesh shall not be eaten in heauen, therefore it is not eaten in earth.

Againe in the same Sermon, Esui carnis vniu, &c. The eating of this flesh, is a certaine desire of abiding in him: That which food is to the flesh, that is fatch to the soule: that, which meate is to the bodie, that is the word to the spirit.

Origen homil. 16. in Numer. Bibere dicimur sanguinem Christi, &c. We are said to drinke the blood of Christ, not onely in the sacramentall rites, but when wee receiue his word. If Christ beate in his word, as in the Sacrament, then is he onely eaten spiritually.

Chrysostome also, hom. 51. in Matth. Tangamus nos simbriam vestimenti, &c. Let vs touch the hemme of Christs garment, whose not vesture onely, but his body is set before vs. As Christs garment is set before vs, so is his body; but the one is spiritually done, therefore the other. Againe, Ne ag- num emidentes, in lupos conuertamur, &c. Let vs not after we haue eaten the Lambe, be turned in- to Wolves: As then are turned into wolves, so they eate the Lambe; but they are so spiritually on- ly turned: Ergo, they do spiritually eate the Lambe: Non est opus, &c. We haue no neede of gol- den vessels, but of golden soules, ibid: Christs body then is food for the soule.

Augustine in Psalm. 14. Donec seculum finiatur, sursum est Dominus; sed etiam hic nobiscum est veritas Domini: corpus enim in quo resurrexit, in uno loco esse oportet, veritas eius ubique dis- fusa est: While the world shall last, the Lorde is aboute, and the veritie of the Lorde is with vs: for his body, wherewith hee rose must bee in one place, but the veritie thereof is euery where dispersed.

Hierom. ad Marcellinum: Stultum est in paruo loco vel abscondito querere, qui totius mundi est lumen: It is great foolishnesse to seeke him in a corner (as the popish Priest doth, that putteth him into the pixie) who lighneth the whole world.

Ambrosius: Qui discedit a Christo non manducas carnem eius, nec bibis sanguinem, etsi tant a rei sa- cramentum accipias: Hee that dissenteth from Christ, doth neither eate his flesh, nor drinke his blood, though hee receiue the Sacrament thereof. If wicked men eate not Christs body, and yet eate the Sacrament, then is not the bodie of Christ the Sacrament.

Againe, S. Ambrose lib. 1. offic. c. 48. Nunc Christus offertur, sed hic in imagine, &c. Now Christ is offered, but here in an image or similitude, but there in truth, where he as our advocate maketh intercession for vs with his Father: if Christs body then be onely in veritie in heauen, then is not his true body carnally present in the earth.

Likewile, Tertullian contra Marcion lib. 4. August. in Psal. 3. cont. Adimant. cap. 12. In this speech of Christ, This is my bodie, doe vnderstand the figure of his bodie. Likewile Origen. hom. 7. Lamentic. Est in Euangelij littera. qua occidit: There is a killing letter in the Gospell, as well as in the old Testament, for if according to the letter we follow that, which is said, Unlesse yee eat my flesh, &c. this letter killeth. And many testimonies wee haue beside, but these here shall suffice, and so I conclude this place.

HEERE FOLLOWETH A SHORT TREATISE CONSISTING OF THREE PARTS: THE FIRST CONTAINETH THE REASONS OF THE HOLY MARTYRS, AGAINST THE MASSE: THE SECOND, A confutation of Masse-gospellers arguments, in defence of their going to Masse: the third dealeth against Popish Recusants.

THE FIRST PART.

ARGUMENTS IN GENERALL AGAINST the Idolatrous sacrifice of the Masse.

B. Ridley Mar-
tyr. Epist ad Bradford.
pag. 1715.

Here are two most perilous engines, whereby Antichrist doth chiefly impugn the veritie and faith of the Gospell, which seeme to bee the most mainlie postes, and mightie pillars, whereby he vpholdeth, and maintaineth his Kingdome: the one is the idolatrous vse of the Lords Supper, which they haue turned into the idoll of the Masse: the other is the proud and arrogant vsurpation of the primacie of the See of Rome. Of this latter we haue entreated before at large: this other pillar, as we haue hitherto in this place laid particular assault vnto it, so now, we will by Gods grace shake the foundation of it all at once: by setting forth such valiant arguments, wherewith the faithfull and stout Souldiers of Christ, the holy Martyrs and confessors of the truth, haue armed themselves, against this raging beast, that hath deuoured the precious liues of so many of Gods Saints.

Argum. 1. The popish Masse, is not onely diuers from the institution of the Lords Supper, but contrarie to it, not dissenting onely from it, but quite and cleane ouerthwarting, and ouerthrowing it: Ergo, it is abominable.

The antecedent or first part of the argument thus appeareth to be true, by these particulars. First, Christ commanded it to be done in his remembrance: the Priest saith Masse in remembrance of dead men. Secondly, Christ tooke bread, and left bread: the Priest taketh bread and conuereit it away. Thirdly, Christ tooke bread and brake it: the Priest taketh bread and hangeth it vp. Fourthly, Christ tooke bread and gaue it to his Apostles: the Priest eateth euery whit alone. Fifthly, Christ gaue a Sacrament to strengthen mens faith: the Priest giueth a sacrifice to redeeme mens soules. Sixthly, Christ gaue it to be eaten: the Priest giueth it to be worshipped: Christ gaue bread: the Priest saith he giueth a God, Ergo, the Masse is contrarie and opposite to Christs institution. ex dialog. consue. ind. verit. p. 132.

Argum. 2. Whatsoeuer commandeth and practiseth things contrarie to the word, will, and commaundements of God, is to be abhorred and detested: But so doth the Masse: it maineaineth inuocation of Angels and Saints, prayer for the dead, adoration of creatures, yea euen of bakers bread, bread, opinion of merits, with such things, as we have proved before severally in every one of these questions: Ergo, this sacrifice is not a propitiatory sacrifice for the quick and the dead, is injurious and derogatory to the death and passion of Christ: Ergo, it is abominable.

The first is thus proved: to reiterate a thing once done for the same end wherefore it was begun, declareth the imperfection of the same thing before: but in the Masse is reiterated the sacrifice of Christ for the same end, for the which it was first offered, namely for propitiation and remission of sinnes: Ergo, it maketh Christs sacrifice imperfect. Argumentum M. Bradford. Fox. pag. 1397. col. 2.

Argum. 4. The Masse also is blasphemous to the Priesthood of Christ, which is eternall and perpetuall; but by that popish sacrifice it is made not eternall: That thing is not eternall or perpetuall, which admitteth succession of better to do the same thing, that was done before, Heb. 7. 23. But the Masse Priests succeed after Christ doing the same sacrifice, as they say, which he did before: Ergo, they make Christs Priesthood not to be perpetuall. Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 5. The popish Priesthood is idolatrous and abominable: Ergo, so is their sacrifice. Probatum antecedens. No sacrifice ought to be done, but by a Priest worthy for the same, and appointed by Christ into.

But all Priests are unworthy to offer sacrifice for sinne, saying Christ, because they are sinners, Heb. 7. 27. And onely Christ is called to that honour, to sacrifice for sinnes, he being the onely Priest after the order of Melchisedech, Heb. 7. 6. Ergo, popish Priests have no authority to sacrifice for sinnes, but in so doing commit sacrilege and idolatrie. Argumentum R. Radcliff. Fox. pag. 1397. col. 2.

Argum. 6. The Masse is a vaine, needlesse, and fruitlesse action: Ergo, to be abolished. It is thus proved: After eternall redemption found and obtained, there needeth no more daily offering for the same. But Christ hath for vs obtained eternall redemption, Heb. 9. 12 and is able perfectly to save vs, Heb. 7. 25. Ergo, all sacrifice and oblation for the same is needlesse and in vaine. Argumentum D. Radcliff.

Argum. 7. As the matter, end, and the Minister of the Masse are, as we have seene, all idolatrous and unlawfull; so also is the manner thereof. All things, according to S. Pauls rule, ought to be done in the Church in a knowne and edifying tongue; 1. Cor. 14. But the Masse is celebrate in a strange and unknown tongue: Ergo, it ought not to be done or used in the Church.

Argum. 8. The Masse hindreth the right service of God: Ergo, Whatsoever causeth a man to rest in the outward serving of God, whose service should be inward, in spirit and truth; that hindereth the true service of God. But this doth the Masse, requiring nothing but externall service; in hearing, seeing, gazing, peeping, stooping, kneeling, knocking; yea and they make these things meritorious, Ex opere operato, etiam sine bono motu intentionis: By the very worke wrought, without any good motion or intention: Ergo, the Masse destroyeth the true service of God.

Argum. 9. The Masse is an enemy to preaching, praying, and all other godly Christian exercises: Ergo, it ought to be abolished.

Where one thing is made and thought to be alone sufficient, there all other helps are needlesse. But the Masse, as they say, serveth for all, to pardon sinnes; to deliver from Hell and Purgatorie; to give health both of bodie and soule: Ergo, it maketh all other helps needlesse, hearing of Gods word, praying, repenting, &c. and other helps to good life. Argumentum Magistri Foxi.

Argum. 10. As the Masse overthroweth the true service of God, and doth oppose it selfe to all Christian exercises, so doth it also hinder a good life, and maketh men presumptuous, and ministreth false hope of forgiveness to the wicked, maketh them more prone and readie to sinne, and hindreth good life.

But this doth the Masse, promising sufficient redemption to the wicked, that have spent their life in drunkenness, adulteries, wantonness, swearing, riot, excess, and in all uncleannes, if they will but come to the Church and heare a Masse, and take holy bread, and holy water, or finde a soule Priest, or give somewhat to the Priest to doe penance for him; though they neither pray, nor repent, nor heare the word preached.

This is proved by the confession of Roger Holland, who was at the first an obstinate Papist, yet afterward (God having mercy vpon him) he was converted to the faith of the Gospell, and dyed a constant Martyr. It is not unknown (saith he) that I was of this your blind religion, and therein continued obstinately all King Edwards dayes; and having libertie vnder your surcular confession, I made no conscience of sinne at all; trusting to the Priests absolution, he for money also doing some penance for me; which after I had given, I cared no further what offences I did, so that lechery, swearing, and all other vices I accounted no offence or daunger, so long as I might have them absolved for money. Hac Roger Holland. Martyr. coram Bonero. vid. plur. Fox. pag. 204. col. 2.

Ergo,

Ergo, the Masse bringeth wicked men into a sooles paradise, and maketh them presumptuous, and more bold to sin, and so hindreth good life. Wherefore, seeing the popish Masse is so contrary to the institution of Christ, so full of errors and blasphemies, so derogatorie to the eternall Priesthood, and onely sufficient sacrifice of Christ, a perverting of sound doctrine, and a destruction of good life and manners: we conclude, that it is an abominable inuention, and say with Doctor Taylor, that it is one of Antichrists daughters; Epistol. ad uxorem. p. 1388. with Bishop Ridley, that it is one of the massie postes, and mighty pillars of Sathans Synagogue, pag. 1725. with William Tims Martyr, that in the sacrament of the Altar, Christ is not present neither spiritually, nor corporally, but as they vse it, it is an abominable Idol, pag. 1897. with Thomas Huisson Martyr, that it is a patched monster, a disguised puppet, more longer a peccing then euer was Salomons temple, pag. 2035. And therefore to be abhorred and detested of euery good Christian.

HERE FOLLOW OTHER REASONS, WHY IT IS not lawfull to resort to the popish Masse, or any part of their Idolatrous seruice.

Arg. 1. For as much, as there haue beene some of opinion, (whether caried away with a felicitous, and singularitie in themselves, or thereunto driuen by reason of their weakenes, in time of persecution) that a man keeping his heart and conscience to himselfe, might present himselfe, for safegard of his life, at the popish idolatrous and massing seruice. How dangerous this opinion is, and how vnlawfull a thing it is so to do, we will by these reasons make it plaine. First, the Masse, and the whole popish seruice, (though the first we graunt, is fuller of abominations, and therefore more dangerous; yet both of them wicked and abominable;) doth repugnantly against Gods word. In the Masse, these things are offensive, and intolerable; the want of shewing the Lords death, in making it priuate, whereas it should be a Communion: the Sacrament is not communicated vnder both kindes: the signe is seruilly worshipped, for the thing signified: Christs passion is iniured, seeing they make the Masse a propitiatorie sacrifice: Ergo, for these abominations, we ought neither to heare, nor see a Masse. Argum. Ridley. p. 1718.

In the popish seruice or leiturgie, these notorious abuses and superstitions are common: in their Mattens and Euen-song, there is idolatrie maintained, inuocation of Saintes, kneeling to the Rood, creeping to the Crosse, reading fables in stead of Scripture, prayer for the dead, and all is done in an vnknowne tongue, which is forbidden in Gods word. Wherefore seeing they are manifestly opposite to the word of God, we ought not to vouchsafe our presence, lest thereby we should seeme to giue consent vnto them. Arg. Bradford in epistol. quad. p. 1647.

Argum. 2. Wee cannot be partakers of Gods Religion, and Antichrists seruice, whereof the Masse is most principall: and the Latine seruice is a plaine marke of Antichrists Synagogue: a man can not be a member of Christs Church, and of the Popes Church: But he that frequenteth their idolatrous assemblies, maketh himselfe a member thereof: Ergo, he cutteth himselfe off from the Church of Christ. Argum. Bradford.

Argum. 3. To dissemble, and to halte in matters belonging to Gods glorie, is a thing impious and vngodly: but they which are present at Masse, both hearing the name of God blasphemed, and seeing many abominations, and yet holding their peace, doe notably dissemble: for as the Iewes were wont to rend their clothes, when they heard or saw any thing done or spoken blasphemously against God: and Paul and Barnabas did so likewise, when they saw the people of Lycaonia readie to offer sacrifice vnto them; so ought we to open our mouthes against the blasphemie and abominations of the Masse: but this the Masse-gospellers doe not: Ergo, they are dissemblers, and to be condemned in so doing. Argum. Bradford epistol. quad. p. 1652.

Argum. 4. Frequenting of Masse impugneth diuers petitions in the Lordes prayer, and so the practise of such is contrarie to the daily prayer they vse: How can we say, let thy kingdome come, and goe to Masse, when as nothing in the earth more destroyeth the preaching & kingdome of Christ, than the Masse? How can we pray, thy will be done, when we will doe our owne will, and the will of our parents and friends, and not Gods will? How pray we, deliuer vs from euill, which knowing the Masse to be euill, doe come to it? Ergo, if we meane, as we pray, going to Masse is to bee awayed: argum. Bradford. ibid.

Argum. 5. The Masse and Latine seruice, and the setters forth of it, condemne the English reformed seruice, as heresie, and so do they which communicate with their assemblies, thus condemning that in practise, which they allow in iudgement: contrarie to S. Pauls rule, Blessed is hee that condemneth not himselfe, in that thing which he alloweth. Rom. 14. 22. Ergo, in going to Masse, they sin against their owne conscience: argum. Bradford. p. 1647. col. 1.

Argum. 6. All things, which giue occasion to the wicked to be more obfirmed, to the weak to stumble and fall, are to be abhorred: But Gospellers going to Masse, and by their presence giuing allowance allowance of it; doe occasion the obstinate to bee more intractable: the weake Papists to bee more obstinate: the strong Gospellers to be fore weakned: the weake Gospellers to be vtterly overthrowne: Ergo. argum. Bradford ibid.

Argum. 7. Daniel refused to be defiled with the Kings meates, Dan. 1. 8. which were polluted by idolatrie, and so Judas likewise, Iud. 12. The Macchabees manfully gaue their liues in defence of the ceremonies of the Law: Ergo, we ought much more to endure and suffer all things for the maintenance of the word of God, and Sacraments: argum. D. Riddle pag. 1722.

Argum. 8. God commaunded his people by the mouth of his Prophet Amos, chap. 5. vers. 5. not to seeke Bethel, neither to enter into Gilgall, where idolatrie was vied: My soule haith no pleasure in these, saith the Lord, that withdraw themselves, Hebr. 10. 38. If any man prophane the temple of God him will God destroy, 1. Cor. 3. 17. All straunge religion is counted whoredome with the Prophets, and they that follow the same goe a whoring: none of those whose names are written in the booke of life, doe receiue the marke of the beast, Apocal. 13.

But they that goe to Masse, enter into Bethel, and Gilgall, that is, places of idolatrie, they withdraw themselves from the faith, in their outward behauiour: they prophane their bodies, which are Gods temples, being present at idolatrous seruice: they goe a whoring after a straunge worship: yea and they carrie the marke of Antichrist in their externall obedience: Ergo, the Masse is abominable, and they in so doing, are in daunger of Gods curse: argum. M. Philpotts Martyr, epistolical pag. 1832.

Argum. 9. Abraham, because he would not bee partaker of their Idolatrie, fled from the people of Chaldeas, his natiue countrie: Lot departed from the Sodomites, least hee should bee consumed with them: Sara would not suffer Ismael, who was giuen to mocking, to keepe companie with her sonne Isaac, least he also should become a mocker. Moses at Gods appointment, commanded the people to depart from the tents of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, least they should bee all wrapped in their finnes, and so perish among them: And the Scripture saith, Goe out of her my people; that you be not partakers in her finnes, and so receiue of her plagues, Apocal. 18. vers. 4. Ergo, we must not keepe companie with Idolaters and Masse-mongers, in their idolatrous and massing temples; for so communicating with them in their finnes, wee doe entangle our selues in their punishment: arg. Gulielm. Tyns. epist. Fox p. 1900. col. 2.

Argum. 10. Lastly, what better prooffe can wee haue, then the wofull experience of those, who professing the Gospell, were entised through their infirmities to come to Masse, and afterward either iudged themselves, feeling inwardly an horror of conscience, and so repented them, or continuing in that sinne, were iudged of God.

Examples of the first, we haue one Cicellie Ormes, who for the space of a twelue moneth after she had recanted, could not be quiet in conscience, vntill she had vtterly forsaken all poperie, and at the last gaue her life for the faith of Christ, pag. 2023. Also one William Sparrow, who hauing yeelded to be confessed and heare Masse, had such trouble in conscience, that he could not bee at rest, till he had renewed the confession of his former faith, and dyed for the same, Fox pag. 2026. Many such examples are occurrent euery where to such, as are conuersant in the stories of the Martyrs: and all these iudged themselves, and found mercie.

I will set set downe one notable example of a backslider, who not iudging himselfe, was iudged of God: One Robert Edgore seruing in the place of the Clarke, in the Church of Mendlesham in Suffolke, but sore against his conscience, was at the length so depriued of his wittes, that many yeeres after his poore wife was constrained to keepe him bound in chaines. Notwithstanding this so good a warning, one George Renos, that had been a talkatiue Gospeller, for lucre sake, set his sonne into the same roome; and being therefore reprooued of some good Christians, his neighbours, he wished of God that if it were not Gods will his sonne should serue in that place, God would shew some straunge token, which came euen so to passe: for the Lord sent vpon him a strange swelling in his legges, which rising vp to his bodie did so torment him, that he dyed most miserably and impatiently, Fox pag. 1918. col. 1.

Thus I trust, it appeareth how daungerous and vnlawfull a thing it is for Christians to associate themselves to idolatrous assemblies, and to be present at Masse, or other popish seruice. Now because it is the propertie of flesh and blood, to seeke starting holes, and to search euery corner, to finde some excuse to salue the weaknes, and infirmities thereof, and with Adam as with fig leaues to hide our nakednes: I will therefore set downe certaine obiections with their answers: which some haue inuented in defence, or at the least to excuse their going to Masse.

CER.

CERTAINE OBJECTIONS WITH THEIR ANSWERS made by Masse-gospellers, in defence of their going to Masse.

Obiect. 1. IT is not materiall, though my bodie be present, if my heart doe not consent to their wicked doings.

Ans. 1. Saint Paul saith, Glorifie God in your bodie, and in your spirit, 1. Cor. 6. 20. It is not enough then, to reserve our soule onely for God; but as he hath made both bodie and soule, so we must honour him in both, Respons. M. Philpotts pag. 1832. col. 1.

2. In Helies time God counted none to be his seruants and people, but such as had not bowed their knees to Baal, 1. King. 19. euen so now he is Gods faithfull seruant, that hath not bowed his knee to the filthie Idoll of the Masse, or any other abomination. We must not thinke that God requireth lesse of vs, than the husband of his wife: will the husband admit his wiues excuse, finding her in bed with another, that her heart notwithstanding is her husbands? No more will Christ allow the presence of your bodie at Masse, though your heart be not consenting to it, Respons. D. Ridlei. p. 1652. col. 1.

Obiect. 2. It is a great crime to diuide and separate our selues from the communion and fellowship of the Church, which is the common practise of the Anabaptists in our daies; and of the Nouatians, and the heretikes called (Cathari) in times past: therefore we thinke it best to remaine the fellowship of the Church, and to come to the ordinarie and vsuall assemblies.

Ans. The sect of the Anabaptists, Nouatians, and other heretikes is to bee condemned, who vpon no iust or necessarie occasion doe separate and diuide themselves from the Church: also we graunt that the vnitie of the Church is to be retained by all meanes, as a thing necessarie to salvation: but the Popish Masse, as it is now vsed, is not the communion of the Church, but a monstrous Idoll, and grieuous prophanation of the Lords Supper: So that they which abstaine from it, doe not breake themselves off from the fellowship of the Church, but indeed they depart from Babylon, and the abominations thereof, Respons. D. Ridlei. pag. 1718. Vnitie therefore and concord, is to be sought for by all meanes, and embraced, but vnitie, as Saint Paul saith, Secundum Iesum Christum, According to Iesus Christ: Sic beat. Latimer ibid.

Obiect. 3. Admit there bee some fault in the Masse, and somewhat that may bee mended, and made better: if you doe not consent thereunto, what neede you further trouble your selfe. Augustine saith, that communion of the Sacraments defile not a man, but consent of deedes.

Ans. If there were but some small faults, and indifferent matters, or tolerable abuses in the Masse, rather shewing some imperfection, than tending to open impietie; they might for common quietnes sake bee somewhat borne withall. But now seeing it is stuffed full of blasphemies, and spotted with foule idolatrie, manifestly impugning the holie institution of the Lords Supper: no man can with good conscience either in word or deede, giue consent thereunto. Augustine meaning is, that the badnes of the Minister, or of the receiuers, pollute not the Sacraments in the commers thereunto, where the Sacraments are rightly administred: he saith not, that men abhorring superstition, and the traditions of men, thrust vpon the Church in stead of Gods word, ought not to refrain from them for feare of pollution, Resp. beat. Ridlei. Martyr. p. 1719.

Obiect. 4. Vnto this your fact in abstaining from the Church by reason of the Masse, the examples of the Prophets, of Christ, of the Apostles is contrarie: for wee doe not reade, that any of them, no not in most superstitious times, refused to communicate in the Temple with the people, in their sacrifices, and other Sacraments of the Law. Our Sauour Christ and his Apostles, making no doubt or scruple, haunted the Temple: Ergo, you also may safely come to the popish Churches.

Ans. That the Prophets, Apostles, yea our Sauour Christ himselfe, resorted to the Iewish Temple, we graunt: but we reade not that they did communicate with them in their idolatrie, or superstitious worships, but reprobued them: onely in the lawfull ceremonies and rites of the law, they associated themselves to their assemblies: So neither are we angrie with the Churches, or the men there congregated, but would willingly resort to them, to heare Gods word, and if we might haue the Sacraments rightly administred: but not to communicate with them in their idolatrous seruices, we are taught by the examples aforesaid, Resp. beat. Ridlei. and Anthony obiect. p. 1722.

Obiect. 5. You condemne the Masse, because it is said in an vknowne tongue, and therefore refuse to come vnto it. So is Baptisme also ministring in the Latine tongue: and yet, you will not say, that a child hauing receiued it, is to be baptized againe.

Ans. There is great difference betweene the popish Masse, and Baptisme vsed in poperie: first, I deny not Baptisme to be a Sacrament in their church, nor say it ought to be reiterated, because the substance ance of the institution is kept, to baptize in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holie Ghost. But the Masse is neither Sacrament, nor Sacrament at all, because many substantials of the institution are wanting, as we have shewed before. 2. Though Baptisme, and all other publike exercises ought to be celebrated in the vulgar tongue, yet there is not the like necessity in Baptisme, because the children are not able to vnderstand what is spoken, in what language soever: but to the other Sacrament, none but such as are of discretion, are admitted. 3. Though children baptized in poperie, are not to bee baptized againe, yet when they come to yeeres of discretion, they must be taught and instructed in the Christian faith: and for such children, as are not yet baptized, some convenient time, when they may get one to minister Baptisme, not in subitance only, but in rites and ceremonies agreeable to Christs institution, wherein the Baptisme of the popish Church faileth. Respons. hear. Riddle. Fox p. 1722.

Obi. 6. Some will say, excusing themselves for their going to Masse, God is mercifull, and mercie over all, and I trust he will forgive vs.

Ans. True it is, God is mercifull, but wee must not sinne vpon hope of forgiveness. Gods mercie is above all his workes, and yet but vpon such as feare him, as wee read in the Psalmes, The mercie of God is on them that feare him, Psalm. 103. 17. And to feare God is to turne from euill, and doe that which is good. So that they which looke to bee partakers of Gods mercie, must not chide in any knowne and manifest euill, Respons. hear. Riddle. Fox p. 1782.

Obi. 7. We are commaunded to obey our Magistrates, though they bee wicked, and theol unlesing they commaund and inioyne vs to come to Masse, we see not how wee can doe otherwise for feare of contempt, and disobedience.

Ans. We are bound indeede to obey wicked Governours, but so long onely, as they commaund nothing contrarie to Gods word: if they doe, wee must herein follow the Apostles example, who not obeying the Magistrates wicked precepts, answered: that it was better to obey God than men, Act. 5. And our Sauiour Christ teacheth vs, to giue vnto Cæsar, the things that are Cæsar, and to God, the things that are Gods, Respons. Philpot.

Obi. 8. Some other there be, that for an extreme refuge in their euill doing, doe minne vnto Gods predestination, and election, saying, If I bee elected of God to saluation, I shall bee saved, whatsoeuer I doe.

Ans. These men bee great tempters of God: they will at the diuels bidding cast themselves downe from the pinnacle of the Temple, by presumption, that God may preserue them by his Angels through predestination. We must not doe euill, that good may come thereof, whose damnation is just, saith S. Paul, Rom. 3. 8. Wee must also consider, that God hath chosen vs to this end, that we should be holie, Ephes. 1. 4. And Saint Peter willet vs to make our election sure through good workes, 2. Pet. 1. 10. The consideration of our election then, is so farre off from making vs careless of good workes, that it will rather stirre vs vp to all godlines of life. So that hee which minneth not himselfe to all obedience of life, hath good cause to doubt, that he is none of Gods elect, Respons. Philpot. ibid.

Obi. 9. Some doe object the example of Naaman, the Syrian, who being newly conuerted to the worship of the God of Israel, desired to be dispensed with, when hee should goe in with the King into the house of his Idoll Rimmon, and there bow himselfe, together with the King, that when God would be mercifull vnto him: vnto whom the Prophet answered: Goe in peace, as liking of his motion, and yeelding to it.

Ans. This example is so farre from being any warrant for Christians to present themselves in idolatrous Temples, that it rather maketh against it: for the Prophets answer, Goe in peace, doth insinuate no graunt made of his petition, but rather a prohibition, not to trouble himselfe about those matters: as if he should haue said, content thy selfe, request no such thing, it would trouble thy conscience, but goe in peace, keepe a good conscience, and labour for the peace thereof. That the Prophet is thus to be vnderstood, it shall appeare by these two arguments.

First, the circumstance of this place sheweth it: Naaman made two requests: one for a toleration to goe into Rimmons Temple: the other, for two Mules loades of earth to carrie home with him, to sacrifice vpon vnto the Lord. Now the Prophet made the same answer to both: he then neither graunted both, or denieth both: but graunt them both hee did not: for the one was cleane contrary to the law, to giue Naaman leaue to sacrifice in Syria, whereas Ierusalem was onely appointed to bee the place of sacrifice: neither did Naaman aske to haue any Priest or Levite with him, to whom it onely pertained to offer sacrifice: so this had bene another transgression of the law. This request therefore, the Prophet in no wise is to bee thought to haue graunted: Ergo, not the other.

Secondly, the vse of this phrase in Scripture, Goe in peace, may teach vs how it is to bee taken here: it is twice vsed in one chapter, 2. King. 4. vers. 23. and 26. In the 23. verse the Shunamite, so soone as her child was departed, which God had giuen vnto her, according to the word of Eli, made haste to goe to the Prophet: her husband not knowing the cause, seemed to bee vnnecessary. Wherefore wilt thou goe to him to day, saith he, seeing it is neither new moone, nor Sabbath day? She answered, Peace be vnto thee, and so went on her iourney: In so saying, she condescendeth not to her husbands minde; but willeth him onely to content himselfe, and not to be too inquisitiue. Likewise in the 26. verse, as she was comming toward the Prophet, Gebezi met her and said, Art thou healthy? is thy husband and the child in health? She answered, Peace be vnto thee: which was not a confirmation of his question, but a watch-word, that he should desist, from further enquiring of her. As this forme of salutation is taken in these places, in the same sense did the Prophet vie it, when he said to Naaman, Peace be vnto thee: wishing him to content, and quiet his minde, and not to trouble himselfe with such curious matters, which might disturbe the peace of his conscience. And thus I thinke this place is answered.

Obiect. 18. Last of all, it may bee thus objected out of the 8. of the first to the Corinthians, vers. 10. where the Apostle writeth thus: If any man see thee which hath knowledge sit downe in the Idols Temple, shall not the conscience of him that is weake, be bold to eat things sacrificed to Idols? Here the Apostle reproofeth not the sitting downe in, or resorting to the Temples of Idols, but only the eating of things offered to Idols, whereby the weake might be offended: wherefore it seemed not by the Apostle to be condemned.

Ans. 1. This question whether it be lawfull to eat things sacrificed to Idols, the Apostle handleth at large, in the tenth chapter from the 19. verse to the end: where the whole question is divided into threemembers or parts. First, whether it be lawfull to eat them before the Idolatrous Temples. Secondly, whether they may buy such meate in the shambles: for there was left of the sacrifices, the idolatrous Priests put to sale for their aduantage. Thirdly, whether they might eat such things, if they were invited by the Infidels home to their owne houses: but two last cases the Apostle alloweth in themselves, as matters lawfull and indifferent, vnder the weake brother be thereby offended: but the first he maketh absolutely vnlawfull, without respect had to the offence: Ye cannot, saith he, bee partakers of the Lordes table, and the table of diuels: that is, they which communicate in Christian assemblies, thereby making themselves members of Christ, ought not to associate themselves to the companie of the idolatrous Idols, who in their filthie Idols worshipped diuels, vers. 20. 21.

Secondly, this being then the Apostles iudgement in that place, no doubt hee is of the same minde and meaning here, that it is vtterly vnlawfull to sit downe at the sacrificers feasts in Idol Temples: yet he speaketh onely of the offence, that may arise to the weake, about drinking of things sacrificed, because this is the matter onely here in question, simple for the lawfulness of eating or not eating, without any relation had vnto the place, as it may appeare vers. 4. And before the Apostle, who doth alwaies keepe himselfe to the very point of the question, leaue the part lesse pertinent to his purpose, and standeth wholly vpon the other, deciding the rest in the tenth chapter. This place then, is so farre off from giuing allowance, either of Christians resorting then to Idolatrous Temples, or now to popish seruices: that by comparing this place, with the eight chapter, and the other in the tenth, vers. 20. we doe gather a strong argument, against such practises: for as the Apostle there reasoneth against Idoll sacrifices, that they sacrificed them to diuels, because Idolatrie is the inuention of the diuell: So we may say that Masse-seruice is the seruice of the diuell, that monstrous Idoll being of his inuention and deuising; and they therefore that are partakers of it, doe worship the inuention of the diuell, and so in like manner are partakers of the table of diuels.

I will end now this treatise with a notable saying of Saint Augustine: Conseiler va mon frere: Deo & Angelis etiam ac deumatis, ut nec ad diabolica illa conuiuia, qua aut ad sanum, ad sanum, aut ad uerum fiant, ueniat: etsi vobis forte inde aliquid transmissum fuerit, tanquam si ipsum diabolum videmus perhorrescere, ut nec in domum vestram permittatis, de illo sacrilego conuiuio quicquam exhiberi, prout illud Apostoli, Non potestis calicem domini bibere, & calicem demoniorum: I doe charge you all before God and his Angels, and denounce vnto you, that ye neither goe your selues vnto those diuellish feasts, which are made in their temples, by fountaines, or vnder trees: and if any thing chanceth to be sent vnto you from those feasts, to be afraid to touch it, as if ye saw the diuell himselfe, neither suffer any part of such sacrilegious feasts to come within your house, because the Apostle hath said, Ye cannot be partakers of the Lords cup, and the cup of diuels, Serm. de tempor. 241.

Thus (I trust) it hath been sufficiently declared, how horrible and dangerous a thing it is, for good Christians and wellwillers of the Gospell, though not consenting in heart, yet in bodie to be present at Idolatrous seruices, such as we are perswaded the Masse-worship is: We haue also seene their weake grounds and simple excuses, which goe about to maintaine and vphold their weakness and imbecillitie herein. And here an end of this matter.

As we haue hitherto declared, how vnlawfull a thing it is, for professors of the Gospell to resort to Masse, or Masse-seruice; and answered, what on the contrarie part may be objected: so now in the next place, we will deale against our Recusants, that refuse to come to the English Leiturgie, as it is now vsed in the Church of England: who being of two sorts, either popish, or schismaticall Recusants, wee will buckle with them both in order, with the popish first, and then with the other. And seeing these also are not all of one sort, for some will frequent our prayers, but not abide to heare sermons; others will resort to both these, but to the Communion in no wise. A third sort more slavishly addicted to poperie than the rest, refuse to bee present at any of them, either prayers, preaching, or Sacraments: we will put them all together, and ioyntly deale with them: first confuting their arguments, which they bring in defence of their recusancie, and then convincing them by contrarie arguments.

POPISH ARGVMENTS CONFVTED, COMMONLY alleaged in defence of Recusants.

Arg. 1. Their first argument is drawne from the matter of our Communion and seruice: they most blasphemously call our Communion, the cup and table of diuels, wherein the diuell (say they most wickedly) is properly serued, Rhemist. 1. Cor. 10. annot. in vers. 9. and that our Communion will come at length to the sacrifice of Ceres and Bacchus, Rhemist. 1. Cor. 10. 4. 4. And as for our seruice, they say, it is the seruice of Baal, and plaine Idolatrie, Rhemist. 2. Cor. 6. vers. 14. And therefore they will none of our Communion or seruice.

Ans. First, this new vpstart generation of Papists, in these their lyes and blasphemies, filleth vs the measure of their forefathers: for as they blasphemed, so doe these. One sometime a B. in this Church, vnreuerently calleth the Communion table, an oyster table: Bishop White, Fox pag. 176. Another saith, an houell is good enough for our Communion: they get them a tankard (saith he) and one saith, I drinke and am thankfull: the more ioy of thee, saith another, Weston Fox pag. 1459. These lyes and blasphemies they cast not at vs, but euen against Christs institution: for they shall neuer be able to shew, as long as the world standeth, that any thing is vsed in our Communion beside or contrarie to Christs institution: Christ tooke bread and wine and blessed it, so doe we: he said, Take, eate, drinke ye all of this; so both the bread and cup is distributed in the Communion: he bad vs doe it in remembrance of him; so wee doe celebrate the Communion, as a commemoration of Christs death and passion: and in all things, as neere as we can, we observe and keepe the first institution. Wherefore, if our Communion bee the table of diuels; if it be the feast of Ceres and Bacchus, then was Christs euen so, which to think, what horrible and irreparable blasphemie is it?

Secondly, they do but preuent vs: for the Idoll of the Masse is, as they say, falsely of our Communion; and as a notable Martyr vsd: It is Antichrists daughter, in which the diuell is rather present and receiued, than Christ: Doctor Taylor, pag. 1528. For in how many points doe they differ from the institution? Christ said, Take ye, eate ye, ministring to many; they make it priuate only to the Priest: Christ appointed it to be eate and drunk; they hang it vp in pixes and make an Idoll of it: Christ celebrated in both kindes; they take away the cup from the people: Christ calld it the fruite of the vine, and Paul bread after consecration: they say, there is neither bread nor wine, but onely the bodie and blood of Christ. See more of this matter, argum. 1. general. cont. Massam.

Beside these contradictions to Christs institution: One denieth that the Sacrament hath a promise of remission of sinnes: and yet Christ speaking of his blood, as it is represented in the Sacrament saith, which is shed for you, and for many, for remission of sinnes. The same partie also graunted another great absurditie, that Christ eate his owne bodie, Moreman in disput. conuocat. pag. 1412. Another denieth the Eucharist to be a Sacrament of the bodie of Christ, sauing onely of his mysticall bodie, which is the Church, D. Coole disput. Oxoniens. pag. 1434. col. 1. Another stout champion of theirs, denyed that Christ commaunded the Sacrament, or the vse of it: and that Take ye, eate ye, was no commaundement B. Winchell. p. 1611. col. 1.

Let any indifferent man now iudge, whether of vs are departed from the institution of Christ: and whether wee may not more iustly call their Masse-seruice, the seruice of the diuell, than they can to terme ours, being in euery respect answerable to Christs institution.

Thirdly, but are they not ashamed to charge vs with Idolatrie? What dare they not now say, seeing they herein, against all shew of truth, will not sticke to belye vs? I pray you where be our Idols of silver or gold? can you see your selues, or shew others any in our Churches? There are but two things requisite to Idolatrie; To haue and set vp Images, and then to bow downe vnto them and adore them. The Lutheranes haue Images, but adore them not; we neither haue them, nor adore them: Papists doe both: the Lutheranes come neerer Idolatrie than Protestants: if they be not Idolaters, much lesse are we.

I pray you this : if a Jew or Turke, which both of them hate Images, should come first into a popish Church, and see in every corner an Image, beautified and garnished, and the people kneeling before them, knocking vpon their breasts : afterward let him bee brought into a Church of the Protestants, where there is neither Image to bee seene, nor any crouching or bowing vnto them ; whether of these two now would he count Idolatrous Churches? or whether people would he call Idolaters? But thus blinde are the Papists, that they take bitter for sweete, and sweete for bitter, they call good euill, and euill good, as the Prophet saith. They would haue vs to bee counted Idolaters, which neither haue Images, nor yet doe worship them: and themselves to bee none, which doe both. Wee worship not Ceres and Bacchus, that is, Bread and Wine, as the Manichees sometime objected against the Christians, and the Papists doe now against Protestants. Wee use bread and wine in the Sacrament, and reuerence them as holie signes, but we bow not down vnto them, nor worship them. Our aduersaries indeed do make an Idoll of a piece of bread, when the Priest boweth himselfe to the host in the Masse, saying, I worship thee, I glorifie thee: what monstrous Idolatrie is this, so to adore a cake made of flower? Who are now the worshippers of Ceres & Bacchus but Papists? For that which they doe such homage vnto, in shew is Bread, in taste and feeling, Bread; in the eye, the mouth, and hand, Bread: what is it els then but Bread, whatsoever they say. Like vnto the old idolatrous Israelites, who, as the Septuagint translate, and as Augustine reads: Elegerunt nouas Deos, sicut apum delictum, ut panem hordeaceum: They chose new Gods, as barlie bread: thus, they changed their Gods, as men do change their bread, as Augustine expoundeth it, quod 30. in lib. Indicum. So the Papists haue chosen a new God, euen panem triticum, wheaten bread. We may put out deum, as bread; for they do worship, not barlie, (for that is the only difference) but wheaten bread indeed. Wherefore, seeing our Communion is the seruice of Christ, not the seruice of the diuel, as they blaspheme, & it is as far off from idolatrie, as that which hath the least agreement with it; in this respect they haue no cause to refraine our churches: & thus is their first reason answered.

Argum. 2. Another fault they finde with our congregations and assemblies; calling our Temples and people, schismaticall: and therefore they will not come at them, Rhemiſt. ann. 2. Corinth. 6. 14. Thus then they reason: It is not lawfull to assemble, or pray with schismatickes; you are schismatickes: Ergo.

Anſw. First, the proposition is not true, that it is not lawfull to pray with schismatickes: for Schisma, be nothing else, as it is defined in Augustine contra Faust. lib. 20. cap. 2. Quam eadem quoniam atque eodem riu colentem, quo ceteri, solo congregationis delectari discordia: For a man holding the same iudgement in religion, and the same manner of worship, onely to separate himselfe from the rest of the congregation: I see no reason, why it is not lawfull to pray with such, who faile not in any point of faith, though they breake the bond of charitie; but both haue the word of God, and Sacraments truly taught and administred: so that by our comming to them, we seeme not to approoue their schisme. Did not Saint Paul ioyne himselfe to the Iewish Synagogues, which were more then schismatically diuided from the true Church, both enduring to heare the lectures of the law read, as also himselfe to preach amongst them, yea and to pray (for their preaching was not without prayer?) reade Acts chap. 13. and 15.

Secondly, the assumption or second part of their reason, is more false and vntrue than the first, be it knowne vnto them, we are no schismatickes, theirs is the schismaticall Church. First, Saint Paul sheweth who are schismatickes: namely, They which depart, and play the apostates from the faith, giuing eare to the doctrine of diuels, as forbidding of marriage, and teaching to abstaine from meats, 1. Timoth. 4. vers. 1. 3. But they, not we, teach these doctrines: Ergo, they, not we, are the schismatickes and apostataes. Secondly, every departure maketh not a schisme. Wee are commanded to depart from Babylon, Apocal. 18. 4. that is, not to communicate with their sinnes and errors: so wee in leauing the Church of Rome, haue not forsaken the fellowship of the true Church, but onely shaken hands with their filthie and abominable doctrine.

Thirdly, every absolute kingdome and Church, may measure themselves by themselves: and may easily know who they are that diuide themselves from the society of that Church, where they liue, without comparison and respect had to other Churches: As to know who are schismatickes in England, we neede not runne to Rome, but they are such, as separate themselves from the lawfull congregations in England, which haue the right vse the Word, and Sacraments: to trie out this matter by their owne rules; who are the schismatickes in our Church? they that steale their Masses in corners, or they that heare diuine seruice, according to Gods word, publicly in Churches? Is the whole congregation schismaticall, or a few singular fellowes rather, that doe diuide themselves from the rest?

S. Augustine speaking of the Gentiles in his time, saith, Si non consentiant veritati vestra, erubescant paucitatis suae: If they will not agree to your veritie, let them be ashamed of their paucitie: in Matth. serm. 6. So may I say of popish Recusants in England, that although their number is not so small, as might be wished, and I trust in time may be, yet God be thanked it is not so great, as that is able to counteruaile by many parts the Lordes royall host of Protestants : whose number daily les vs beseech God to encrease : Ergo, wee are no schismatikes, and so haue they lost also this argument.

Argum. 3. Catholikes must haue nothing to doe with heretikes, speciallie in prayers : Ergo, they refuse to assemble with vs in our Churches, holding vs to be heretikes, Rhemist. annot.

Ans. 14.

Resp. 1. It is notindeede lawfull to pray with heretikes, because their prayers also are hereticall: but so are not our prayers, which most of them, I thinke, they themselues will not refuse to say Amen vnto : for many of them, the very same, they also vse in their seruice, as the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospell, the Creede, the Lords prayer, and many Collects and short prayers beside: (for what is good in their seruice and Leiturgie, and may be vsed without superstition, we thinke not much to retaine:) An heretike (saith Saint Paul) after two or three admonitions, anoids, Tit. 1. But what if prayers vsed by those, whom you count heretikes, haue not any thing worthie of admonition or reproofe? why then should such prayers bee shunned, and auoyded? but such are ours : Ergo.

2. The accusation of heresie, we do with much better right, and iuster title returne vpon your head, which you shall neuer be able to fasten vpon vs. First, if they will bee tried by Saint Pauls rule, he saith, He that loueth not the Lord Iesus, let him be accursed, 1. Corinth. 16. 21. Who is he now, that loueth not the Lord Iesus? Is it he, that ascribeth his saluation only to Christ Iesus, in whole and in part, the beginning, continuing, and end : or he rather who hopeth to be saued partly by the death of Christ, partly by his owne merits: who saith, the beginning of his iustification, which they call the first iustification, is of grace : the second (which indeede is nothing else but sanctification, the fruits of iustification) say they, is merited. I thinke the first loueth Christ : such I trust, are we: the second, I am afraid, loueth him not : for Christ will not part stakes, nor giue his honour to another : of this sort, I would our aduersaries were not. They therefore, if any, are the heretikes, and to be holden accursed.

3. Or will they stand to Augustines definition of an heretike : Hæreticus est, qui alienum temporali commodi, & maxime glorie & principatus causa, falsas & novas opiniones, aut gignit, aut sequitur : He is an heretike, who for some temporall commoditie, or glorie and chiefedome sake, doth either inuent and begin false and new opinions, or doth follow them : De utilitat. eridend. c. 1. Now we neither inuent nor follow false or new opinions: not false; for our desire is to be tried with our opinions by the touchstone of Gods word in Scripture reuealed, the only rule of faith : and therefore we looe not the errors of darknes, seeing we hate not y light: not new; for our faith is the ancient Catholik Apostolike faith, reuealed by Christ, preached by y Apostles, professed in y church many hundreds after, sealed with the blood of Martyrs : and this ancient freehold of our faith, they shall be neuer able to driue vs from. Againe, as wee are free from the false and straunge opinions of heretikes, so also wee desie their couetous and ambitious minde. What temporall commoditie (I pray you) did the Protestants looke for, in the late daies of persecution in England, when as for their conscience and faith sake, some lost their liuings and dignities in the Church, Bishopricks, Archbishopricks, Deanries, Archdeaconries, yea and their countrie withall? And as for vainglorie, it was farre from them, as it appeareth by their deepe protestations being charged therewith, as you may reade in Master Bradfords storie, Fox pag. 1606. And Master Philpot doth in great vehemencie of spirit in this manner discharge himselfe : I protest befoe God, and his eternall Sonne Iesus Christ my Saniour, and the holy Ghost and his Angels, that I doe not stand in any opinion of wilfulnes or singulartie, &c. pag. 1800. And who would not beleue them, both for their earnest protestation sake, but much more for that they declared it in deede? for what list, thinke we, or lesure had chose holy men, to seeke for the fame of this world, when they looked every day when their liues should be taken from them? Fame and estimation is much desired in the world, but hardly will a man purchase it by the losse of his life.

But what shall we thinke of our aduersaries? Is not the hope or rather hauing of gaine a great pillar of their profession, and the sayrest white, that they ayme at? Let their Pilgrimages, Masses, Dirges, Trentals, Suffrages for the dead, purgatorie doctrine, pardons, Indulgences, and the like trumpet speake in this case, if lucre were not the mother, that bare them, and the nurse that fed and nourished them. There was neuer any such gainfull religion to the professors thereof since the world began, as popery hath been to Popes, Cardinals, Abbots, Monkes, Friers, and the like. And what for principality? do they contemne and despise it? I thinke no. What els made Popes in times past so proud, as to make Emperors and Kings their slaues and vassals, to tread on their neckes, to make them dance attendance in frost and cold, barefoote, and barelegged at their gates, to cause them to kisse their feet, to hold their stirrop, and leade their horse by the bridle, and such like seruices they put them to? Is not this the prince of pride? Why doth the Pope chalenge to be head of Christs Church, to be the Lord of the whole world, aboue kings and princes, and propoſeth it to bee beleeued as an article of faith to all his ſubiects: if hee were not poſſeſſed with pride: Erasmus that famous learned Clerke well perceiued the pride and couetouſnes of this generation, when hee being asked by the Duke of Saxony, what hee thought of Luthers proceedings, wittily answered, that hee dealt with two things, which were in no wiſe to bee touched, The Popes crowne, and the Monkes belly: meaning the pride of the one, and the couetous deſire of the other. Wherefore, if the holding of falſe and ſtrange opinions on the one ſide, with hope and deſire of gaine or glorie on the other, doe make an heretike, who ſeeth not that this definition better agreeth to the members of the Church of Rome, then to Proteſtants? We are then no heretikes, much leſſe are our prayers and ſeruiſe heretikal: and therefore our Recuſants in this reſpect haue no cauſe to abſent themſelues from our congregations.

Argum. 4. An other reaſon of their recuſancie is drawne from the Miniſters of the word and Sacrament amongſt vs: Heretikes, ſay they, are not to be heard, though they pray and preach the truth, Rhemist. annot. Mark. 3. ver. 1. Ergo, they will not heare our Miniſters either preach or pray.

Anſw. 1. That the truth is not to be heard or receiued at heretikes hands, it hath neither warrant of Scripture, nor good ground of reaſon: Firſt, Auguſtine ſaith, reaſoning thus out of Scripture, Euaangelium Iudas ſine detrimento fidelium predicauit: Iudas preached the Goſpel, without any hinderance or loſſe to the faithfull: Nunquid Paulus gauderet de talium predicatione, quicquid erat, niſi ſciſet, quod illis permiſiſſum eſſet, rem caſſam non caſſe annuntiare, illis ſalubre qui per illud precerent ad ſalutem: Or would Paul haue reioyced of their preaching, which were contentious, as he doth, Philip. 1. 18. but that he knew, that it was hurtfull to them that preached the chail truth not chaſtly, but holeſome to them, that profited thereby to ſaluation? Lib. 2. cont. epiſt. Roman. ca. 11. Here be two examples out of Scripture, which ſhew, that the truth by whomſoeuer ſafely be preached: our Sauour Chriſt neither condemned Iudas preaching of the Goſpel, the child of perdition, nor yet Paul the contentious preaching of falſe diſciples.

Auguſtine addeth alſo a third example out of the Goſpel: Botrum carpe, ſpinam caue: Calice Moſis, vitis eſt: Phariſaorum mores & doctrina, ſpina: Take the grape, but beware the thorne: the vine, is the chaire of Moſes; the thorne is, the corrupt doctrine and manners of the Pharifies, Trid. in Iohan. 46. The Pharifies had many erroneous doctrines, and therefore our Sauour Chriſt good his Apoſtles warning to take heede of their leauen: yet ſo long as they taught the truth ſitting in Moſes chayre, our Sauour biddeth to heare them, Mat. 23. 2. Secondly, beſides thoſe examples out of Scripture, it is thus confirmed by reaſon: Auguſtine denieth that heretikes are worſen ethnikes and Iſidels: his reaſon is, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, If a man beare not the Church, let him vnto thee as an Iſidel: making that the extreameſt, and moſt dangerous caſe of all: But, ſiſible, In ipſis ethniciſ, quod rectum erat, approbaverunt apoſtoli: the Apoſtles in the very heathen allowed that was right, as Act. 17. S. Paul citeth a ſpate out of an Athenian Poet: Ergo, that which is right we may heare and allow, euen in heretikes.

2 Yet, though this were granted, that heretikes are not to be heard, no, not ſpeaking through, that our Miniſters are heretikes, or fauourers or followers of heretikes, or that they draw us vnto hereſie, they ſhall neuer be able to proue: So that they are ſatiſfied for this, and need not therefore be ſo ſcrupulous in this behalfe, in not comming to our prayers.

Argum. 5. A Catholike man, ſay the Rhemists, is bound to confeſſe his faith, Rhemist. Lib. 10. ver. 8. And, Annot. Iohan. 12. ver. 42. they doe ſharply rebuke and reprehend ſuch Catholikes, as dare not freely confeſſe their faith: hereupon it followeth, that a Pope Catholike profeſſor ought in no wiſe to reſorte to the Churches of Proteſtants: which cannot be done without diſſimulation of their faith, which they ſhould openly and boldly profeſſe.

Anſw. 1. The Rhemists iudgement in this place concerning the open profeſſion of faith, we doe willingly approue and allow: and we could wiſh, that all the Pope Catholikes in England at this day were of this minde, and hereon would followe the counſell and aduiſe of their ghottly Fathers of Rhemes: that is, that all Engliſh Papiſts were become Recuſants, and would openly ſhew what lyeth hidde in their breſts, that we might better take heede of them. But it is to be feared, that we haue many hollowe hearted Countrey men, that do openly reſort to our congregations in body, but in heart communicate not with vs; who haue Engliſh faces, but Romiſh hearts: Theſe are our moſt dangerous enemies, and chiefly to be feared: vnto whom we may vie that good olde ſaying, Aut appare quod es, aut eſto quod appares: Either appeare as thou art, or be that which thou appeareſt. So it were to be wiſhed, that theſe cunning fellowes would either appeare outwardly to be Papiſts if they be ſo in heart, or els be Goſpellers indeede, as they ſhew by their outward behauiour.

2 Faith in deed is publiſhly to be confeſſed: diſſimulation in all matters is to be miſliked, but it is worſt in religion: yet he, that will make publiſh confeſſion of his faith, had neede be ſure, he is in a right faith, least afterward he be ashamed of his faith: And so I would that Popish Recusants did confesse their faith, that is, to abide and endure the examining, sifting and tryall of their faith by the Scriptures, and not to refuse our Sermons, bookes, conferences, admonitions, whereby we declare vnto them the errors of their faith: For this is to confesse our faith, as S. Peter demeth it: To giue an answer to every one that asketh vs a reason, &c. 1 Pet. 3. 15. These Recusants then, are no open confessors of their faith, for as much as they are not ready to giue an account thereof: which course if they would take, I doubt not, but in the ende they should see the errors, wherunto they had been nulled, and so confesse, and set before their face their faith, as Augustine saith of sin: Tu peccatum tuum ante faciem tuam conuertere, si vis ut inde faciem Dei auertat: si peccatum tuum in dorso tuo ponis, Deus ibi faciem ponit: Set then thy sin before thy face, if thou wilt haue God therefrom to turne his face, but if thou place thy sinne behinde, as on thy backe; that is, hide it, thither also God turneth his face: that is, God will hide his face from thee, as thou hidest thy sinne from him. Thus let these selfe-willed Recusants confesse and acknowledge their faith, that is, set before their eyes their errors and false opinions, so would God forgive them their ignorances and errors, and thus they should be right confessors of the popish faith, confessors not to maintaine, but to forsake it and to be ashamed of it.

A man we graunt, is in no case to dissemble his faith: that is no right faith, or profession, which alloweth dissimulation, nor yet he a good professor, or faithfull man, that will dissemble: for we are not ignorant, what our Sauour Christ saith, that who so denieth him before men, him will he denie before his father in heauen. To this purpose may be remembered, what Augustine reporteth of the conversion of one Uictorinus a Rhetorician of Rome: who after he was become a Christian, frequented not the Christian assemblies: vnto whom Simplicianus a godly Priest was wont to say, Ergo non deputabo inter Christianos, nisi in Ecclesia videro: I will not for my part count you a Christian, vnlesse I see you in the Church of Christians. But he at the first scoffed, saying: Ergo peris facimus Christianos? then belike the walles of the Church make Christians? Afterward being better aduised, he resorted to the Church, was baptized, and openly (standing in an high place) confessed his faith before the congregation, whereas he might haue done it more secretly: giuing this reason of his so doing: Non erat salus (inquit) quam docebam in Rhetorica, & eam tamen publice professus sum: That tended not to saluation, which I taught in Rhetorike, and yet I publickly professed it: meaning that much more faith, whereby we are led vnto life, ought boldly and publickly to be professed, Augustine hb. conf. 8. cap. 2.

This then being fully determined and concluded, that faith is not to be cloaked, or dissembled: let vs see how much our aduersaries come short and fayle in this poynt, and so offend against their owne rules; amongst whom, it is an vsuall and common trade in the most, to cloake their popish profession with an outward countenance and semblance of the Gospel. And with Papists is no rare thing to dissemble both in religion and other affaires of life. Was it not said openly in the Council of Constance, when they brake the Emperors safe conduct granted to John Huss, that scilicet est seruanda hereticis, that faith is not to be kept with heretikes? The like answer was made 1526. by Hannart the Emperors Ambassadour, that whereas the Lady Katherine the Emperors younger sister was promised to John Fredericke Duke of Saxony in mariage, and writings were made thereupon, yet after the reformation of Religion in Saxony, the couenant was broken: for with heretikes, said Hannart, promise is not to be kept. Fox. p. 884. col. 1.

It is not long since here in England solemne promise was made, that the religion established in King Edwards dayes should not be altered, and it was made by one that then ruled the helme, yet was it not performed, vid. Fox. p. 1407. If they can thus dissemble, and breake their troth and faith in humane matters, who doubteth thereof, but that they will be changelings in Religion: for as S. James saith, A wandering minded man is unstable in all his wayes, Iam. 1. 8. that is, both toward God and men. He that knoweth the vertue of the Popes dispensations, which can dissolue othes and vowes, may easily thinke that Pope Catholikes may bee dispensed withall to dissemble in Religion: How else came it about, that so many Protestants in shew, in King Edwards dayes, were so soone transformed into Papists in Queene Maries: and so many Papists then, had so soone put on the face of Protestantes in Queene Elizabeths gracious raygne? I could wish with all my heart, that all the Papists at this present day in England, were Recusants, that we might the better take heed of them. But it is to be feared, that there be many close Papists in England, that are content for a while to temporize, watching for an houre, which I trust they shall neuer see: like vnto the heretikes called Priscillianists, of whom Augustine reporteth, that they thought it lawfull, mendacium occultare here, in, & se catholicos fingere: to cloake their heresie by a lie, and to faine themselves good Catholikes, Lib. 1. con. mendacium cap. 1. I would we had no such Romanists now in England, which faine themselves to be true Catholike Protestants.

Thus then are our aduersaries answered for this matter, whom first we desire to follow their owne rules, that is, to deale plainly with vs, and to shew themselves outwardly, as they are in heart:

heart: And then we doe wish, that they would glorifie God, and confesse their errors, and so be reformed both in heart, and changed also in their outward profession: so may they safely resort to our Christian assemblies, without dissembling their conscience.

Argum. 6. Another reason of their Recusancie is drawne from the sequell or event of their comming to our Churches, if they should yeelde thereunto: that is, they thinke that their presence would grace and countenance, and bring credite to our assemblies, which by all means they labour to discredit, and bring into contempt: for thus the Rhemists open their blasphemous mouth, It must needs be an honour to Caluines communion, when Catholikes are seene in the Idols temple, sitting at the abominable table. Annot. 1. Cor. 8. ver. 10.

Ans. First, we know no such Caluine communion amongst vs: that which we haue is Christ communion: and of his name both it and we are called: we depend not vpon men, though we praise God for such excellent instruments, as Caluine and Luther were, stirred vp of God to set forth his truth. It is your guise, and not ours, to call your professions, and Masses after the names of men: you haue Saint Gregories Masse, Saint Basiles Masse, Saint Iames his Masse, which you doe falsely father vpon him. And in England, you had the vse of Sarum, and the vses of other Churches: diuers formes of your Masse: Contrarie to the decree of the fift Councell Toletan. can. 2. Vnus modus in Missarum solemnitatibus, vnus in vestimentis officijs, nec diuersa sit vltra in nobis ecclesiastica consuetudo, quia in vna fide constitimur & regno: Let one and the same way be obserued at Masse and Euening prayer, neither let there be any longer a diuers vse in the Church, seeing we belong to one faith and Kingdome.

Secondly, ye are shameles men to call our Churches, Idols temples. We haue no Images or Idols at all to be seene in our Churches, much lesse doe we worship them: And as for the bread and wine in the Sacrament, though wee reuerence them as holy signes, yet wee adore them not, neither make idols of them as you doe. If our communion table be an abominable table, then so is Christ: for we say all that Christ said, and doe all that he did in the institution of his last supper: ye are not able to shew that in any one iot we haue swarued from the first institution, as you haue done diuers waies; as in taking away the cup, whereas Christ said, drinke ye, as well as eate ye; and making the communion priuate, whereas Christ saith, drinke ye all of this; in referring the Sacrament, whereas Christ would haue it eaten and drunke, and in many such things: your Masse altar therefore is that abominable table, not our communion table. And you are these worshippers of the Idols of siluer and gold, Apoc. 9. 20. for you haue such Images in your churches, you fall downe and pray before them, and offer incense to them, and so are most grosse idolaters: but we follow the rule of your owne Councils, Synod. Moguntin. cap. 42. Nos prae superstitioni viam pracludere volentes, omnibus locorum Ordinarijs idungimus, vt si forte in territorijs suis concursus ad imaginem fieri, & homines ad ipsius imaginis figuram respectum habere, & quasi quidam diuinitatis opinionem illi tribuere animaduertint, ipsam imaginem pro causa qualitate tollant, ac mutant: Wee willing to stop all way against superstition, doe inioyne the Ordinaries, that if they see in their territories the people to runne to images, and to attribute vnto them a diuine power, hauing respect to the figure of the Image, that they either take away, or change the Image. If they bee idolators that haue taken away Idols and abolished them, then will we also be Idolators.

Thirdly, now to answere to their argument: First, they shew of what making they are, and whose children they bee, in that they are afraid, that the trueth by them should bee graced, and *Christ*s institution honored. They will not come to Church, because they thinke it would be an honor, not to Caluine, but to *Christ*s communion: to whome wee may say, as Saint Stephen to the peruerse Iewes, Act. 7. 51. You stiffnecked and of uncircumcised hearts, and eares, you haue alwaies resisted the holy Ghost, as your fathers did, so doe you: And as the Psalmist saith, O yeannes of men, how long will ye turne my glorie into shame? Psalm. 4. 2. Doth it grieue you that Christ should be honored and his institution reuerenced? O enemies to God and all godlines! Secondly, though they doe come to our Churches, if their hearts bee not reformed, but doe cloake the superstition of their darke minds, with the shew of outward conformitie and obedience, they are so farre from gracing our assemblies, that they are a disgrace and a dishonour to them. And as Iude saith of such, They are spots in your feasts of charitie, verse 12. so these are foule blemishes in our holy meetings, when as hypocrites doe ioyne themselues to the assemblies of the Saints. They neede not feare, least thus comming, they should honour our communion, nay rather as much as in them lieth, they prophane and pollute it: when holy things are thus cast vnto dogges, and pearles before swine. Thirdly, but if they would resort to our assemblies duriffully, as it becommeth good Christians, to receiue instruction and comfort by the word of God and the Sacraments, they should not for all this bring grace or win credit to these publike exercises, but should themselves be graced, and receiue honour thereby. The Psalmist saith, Psalm. 149. 9. Such honor God vouchsafeth his Saints, that is, in giuing vnto them his word: so saith Moses, Deut. 4. 8. What nation is so from that harsh ordinance and lawes so righteous &c. The law of God maketh a people great, that is honorable: and thus also haue we answered this argument. Wherefore seeing they can now pretend no honest excuse for their Recusancie, for neither is our seruice in it selfe hereticall, neither yet our people that professe it, or Ministers that preach it, heretikes or schismatikes: seeing also they may be freed from dissimulation, when their hearts shall truly be conuerted vnto God, and so yeld obedience to our publike assemblies, and that by their comming God may be honored, I pray God giue them grace to acknowledge their wilfulnes, and forsake their errors, into the which their blinde guides haue led them, that they may now at length ioyne themselues vnto the true Church of Christ, in the profession of the right faith, to the saluation of their soules.

Here now I thought to haue inserted a treatise against the Brownists, wherein I haue at large confuted the arguments, which they vse against our Church, and likewise propounded our reasons in defense thereof, with a discouerie of diuers erroneous opinions by them held and maintained: but I altered my purpose vpon these reasons. First, the treatise was not fullie finished, and the Printer called vpon me earnestly to make haste. Secondly, because I intended to deale chiefly against the Papiests in this worke. Thirdly, though they be peeuishlie set, yet I iudged them the lesse dangerous enemies, seeing they dissent not from vs in the fundamentall poynts of our faith. Fourthly, many of their assertions are so absurd, that they are rather to be laughed at, then worthe of any confutation. Fifthly, I reserue those labours, to a speciall treatise hereafter as occasion shall serue. Therefore not staying the reader further in these digressions, I proceede to the rest of the Controuerfies that follow.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS CENTVRIE, OF THE FIVE POPISH SACRAMENTS.

HERE ENSVE THE CONTROVERSIES OF THE five other popish Sacraments: Penance, Matrimonic, Confirmation, Ordels, Extreme Vnction.

THE FOYRTEENTH GENERALL CONTRO- uersie, of popish Penance.

Vnto this Controuersie belong these questions following:

- 1 Of the name Penance, whether it be rightly giuen.
- 2 Whether that which they call Penance, but we much better, Repentance, be a Sacrament.
- 3 Whether there be any other Sacrament of repentance beside Repentance.
- 4 Of the essentiall parts of Penance, as the matter and forme, and of the three materiall parts, Contrition, Confession, Satisfaction: with an appendix, whether Repentance goe before Faith.
- 5 Of Contrition, 1. The cause thereof, 2. The quantitie thereof, 3. Whether it be aynd with faith, 4. Whether it be satisfactorie, 5. Whether Contrition be necessarie for veniall sinne, 6. Of Contrition which onely proceedeth of feare.
- 6 Of Auricular confession, 1. Whether it be necessarie, 2. Whether it be a diuine ordinance,
3. To whom it is to be made, 4. Of the time.
- 7 Of Satisfaction, with the seuerall branches of this question.
- 8 First, of penall iniunctions, 1. Whether necessarie, 2. By whom to bee imposed. Secondly, of indulgences, 1. Whether there be any such, 2. The ground of them, 3. In whole power they be.
- 9 The circumstances of penance, 1. Their habite, 2. Their workes, 3. Of the time of their Penance.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE name of Penance.

The Papists.

43. Error.

THe Latine word Pœnitentia, which they translate, Penance, being deriued of pœna, doth signifie (say they) not onely confession and amendment of life, but contrition and sorrow for the offence, and painfull satisfaction, Bellarmin. lib. 1. cap. 7.

Argum. Matth. 11. 21. The word must needs signifie, sorrowfull, painefull, and satisfactorie Penance, Rhemist. Matth. 3. 2. for no man doth sit downe in sackcloth and ashes, which hath not repented before: this therefore is a penall action that followeth the inward sorrow. So the Nini-uites are said to haue repented, Luk. 11. 32. which was in sackcloth and ashes, and prayers: Ergo, Penance consisteth in an outward penall action. Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. The places quoted out of S. Matthew and S. Luke, proue no such thing: where our Saviour saith, that Tyre and Sidon would haue repented in sackcloth and ashes, and Ninive had repented: which is no satisfaction for sinne, but an outward signe of true sorrow for sinne, inwardly conceiued: for repentance is begun inwardly, and continued and finished outwardly:
so then ashes, sackcloth, was no part of repentance, but an outward testification of their inward griefe.

Argum. 2. S. Paul saith, I shall bewaile many of them, which haue sinned and not done penance for their wickednes, 2. Cor. 11. 21. It cannot be said, which haue not repented, for, or because of their wickednesse: for then sinne should be the cause of repentance, which it is not: for inward repentance cometh of some good inspiration: but sinne is properly said to be the cause of outward penance. Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, sinne is, not the cause of inward repentance, but the occasion, no more is it of outward punishment: for as the inward repentance proceedeth from a good inspiration, so the outward punishment is procured by the inward sorrow, as the aphes and sackcloth of the Ninivites were outwardly vsed, because they first inwardly sorrowed. Secondly, that the Apostle speaketh here of inward repentance, it is euident: because 1. he saith, he shall bewaile: that is, because they haue not mourned for themselves, he will: as Ambrose in the like case; Si Saul desisset peccata: If Saul had mourned for his sinne, Samuel had not wept: lib. 5. in Luc. 2. And it was in the Apostles power to haue inflicted an outward punishment, as he did vpon the incestuous young man: but to cause them to repent, was not in his power: the Apostle then would not haue complained of that, which was in his power to haue enioyned them. 3. And he saith, I shall bewaile many: There was a great multitude of them, in which case no such penance could be inflicted, the disease being so generall; and thus Augustine expoundeth this place: Cum idem morbus plurimos occuparit, nihil respiciat gemitum: When as the same disease hath occupied many, there remaineth nothing but mourning: the Apostle doth not now bid them not to eat meat with such, as he gaue a charge concerning the yong man, dec. lib. 3. cont. Parmen. cap. 3. So that in Augustines iudgement no such external penance is here signified; a great part of the flocke being with this disease intuated.

The Protestants.

That this word (penite) vsed in the new Testament, is more fitly translated repentance, to signifie a change of the minde, then by them, penance, to betoken some outward penall satisfactorie act, thus it is proued.

Argum. 1. The Greeke word euery where vsed, is penite, which signifieth as Laurentius Valla noteth, emendationem mentis, the change or amendment of the minde; and no such outward satisfactorie Penance as they pretend. Wherefore it is more fitly englished, Repentance. And although the Latine word Poenitentia, doe not properly expresse the Greeke word, to the which resipiscere, and resipiscentia, repentance and to repent doe better answer: yet agere poenitentiam, in Latine, is not to doe penance, as the Rhemists translate it, but is all one, as to say, repent: yea, and so the Rhemists themselves reade, be penitent, Mark. 1. 15. and not, doe penance. And Act. 11. 18. they translate, poenitentiam, repentance.

Argum. 2. Matth. 3. 2. Iohn Baptist preached and said, repent, &c. not, as the Rhemists translate, do penance: that inward repentance is here signified, it appeareth by these reasons 1. Iohn is said To preach the Baptisme of repentance for remission of sinnes: Luk. 3. 3. That which hee preached, the people practised: but we reade not of any outward penall workes they did, but onely of contrition and confession for their sinnes, Matth. 3. 6. 2. Again, Baptisme is in the name of Christ: Penance, is a worke of man, whereby satisfaction is made vnto God, as they teach: how then can it be the baptisme of penance? for Christ to satisfie, and man to satisfie, are two contrary things. 3. Iohn also saith, Bring forth fruites of repentance, worthie or meet for repentance: outward penall acts then are the fruites of repentance, they are not repentance it selfe.

Argum. 3. Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized, not do penance and be baptized: for 1. they were immediately the same day baptized, vers. 41. What time was there here for any doing of penance? 2. And seeing you make penance a Sacrament, how could they do penance, before they had received Baptisme, the first Sacrament? 3. Thus their owne glosse expoundeth, caus. 33. distinct. 1. de penit. 2. 87. gloss. Petrus legitur dixisse, &c. Peter saith in the Actes, do penance, &c. Quod de interiori, &c. Which is vnderstood of the inward, not outward penance: so the same glosse v. 34. Conuersio est cordis versio: Conuerfion is the version or turning of the heart.

Augustine thus taketh this worde poenitentia, Relig. poenitens quicquid sordium contraxit, oportet ut abluit saltem mentis lachrymis: The true penitent man must at the least wash away his sinnes with the teares of the minde. If then repentance be in the soule, what is become of this outward satisfactorie penance?

Colensis part. 7. cap. 31. Poenitentia tunc rectè predicatur, cum arguuntur scelerum ac flagitiorum per verbum Dei, & inuenitur populo timor ira indignationis, quo, ac iusti iudicii Dei: Then Penance or Repentance is rightly preached, when mens sinnes are reprovved by the word of God, and a feare of Gods wrath and iust iudgement is striken into the people. This Councell calleth that Penance, when the people begin inwardly to feele Gods wrath, and so lament for their sinnes: they speake of no such outward satisfactorie Penance.

THE SECOND QUESTION, WHETHER

there be any Sacrament of Penance.

The Papists.

43. Error.

Christ (they say) instituted the Sacrament of Penance, when he breathed vpon his Apostles after his resurrection, and sayd vnto them: Receive ye the holy Ghost: whose sinnes ye remit, they are remitted: whose sinnes ye retaine, they are retained; Iohn 20.22. The facultie of the Priesthood consisteth in remitting of sinnes, is here bestowed vpon the Apostles, Rhemist annot. Ioh. 20. 22. Hereupon they are bolde to conclude, that Penance is truly and properly a Sacrament, Quil. Trident. sess. 14. can. 1.

Bellarmino addeth further, that here is externum symbolum, an externall sensible signe, the words of absolution, and a promise of grace, namely, remission of sinnes: Ergo, a Sacrament of Penance: Lib. 1. de penitentia. cap. 10.

Answ. First, if the power of remission of sinnes were here first instituted, how could the Apostles baptize or minister the Lords supper before, without power to remit sinnes to the penitent? Christ therefore in this place doth but renew and confirme the authoritie of their Apostleship, which was graunted to them before, Matth. 18. 18.

Neither is there here any externall visible signe to make a Sacrament, as euen now shall be scene: and as for the promise of remission of sinnes, it is not here annexed to any externall signe: but generally made to the Apostles to be executed as well without, as with a Sacrament: as the Councell of Cabilon saith: Deus saluati & sanitiis auctor plerumque hanc prebet sua potentia visibili administratione, plerumque medicorum operatione: God the author of saluation sometime such forgiveness of sinnes by his inuisible power, sometime by the working of his Ministers, our Pastors, Can. 33.

Secondly, this power here giuen, is principally exercised by preaching of the word of God, and denouncing publicly or priuately the promises of God, for remission of sinnes to the penitent, or the threats and iudgement of God, in binding the sinnes of the obstinate and impenitent: 2<sup>o</sup> Luke 20. 24. Christ commaundeth his Apostles to preach repentance and remission of sinnes in his name.

Thirdly, we confesse also a iudicarie power of the keyes, in binding and loosing, which is exercised in ecclesiasticall discipline, in punishing and absolving according to the word of God: as the incestuous person was bound, when he was deliuered vp to Sathan, 1. Cor. 5. 5. he was loosed againe, when he was restored to the Church, 2. Cor. 2. 7. But neither this nor the other was intended to the Church as a Sacrament.

Argum. 2. Bellarmino affirmeth, the Montanists and Nouatians were the first, that denie penance to be a Sacrament; for they did not, as some thinke, denie forgiveness before God to those that fell, but onely penance and reconciliation in the Church, Bellarmino cap. 9.

Answ. As Bellarmino is to be trusted in this, so let him be credited in the rest: but in this place he hath deuised a notable forgerie: first, those forenamed heretikes did not onely exclude those that fell in time of persecution from reconciliation to the Church by penance, but euen deprived them of all hope of remission of sinnes before God. Cyprian deserueth rather to be credited herein, than this Sophister: lib. 3. epist. 23. Puto his indulgentiam Domini non desaturam &c. I thinke that mercie with God will not be wanting to those, who once stood in the battell, though they afterward fell: thus he pleadeth against the Nouatians, in the behalfe of those, that were fallen. And Ambrose likewise, lib. de penitent. lib. 1. c. 9. thus witnesseth, alledging these words of our Saviour: Every one that beleueth in him, shall not perish, but haue life euerslasting: if thou desirest to call againe any that is fallen, dost thou exhort him to beleue, or not to beleue? surely to beleue: hee then that hath faith, hath euerslasting life, he that hath life, is not excluded from forgiveness. These fathers are euident witnesses, that the Nouatians did shut out grieuous sinners from forgiveness before God: and thus this Cauiller is taken in a notorious lie.

Secondly, it is one thing to take away penance altogether, another to denie it to be a Sacrament: the first these heretikes were guilty of, the second we affirme, but not the first.

Thirdly, if to denie penance be all one, as to denie it to be a Sacrament, then the fathers are further off (then we) from making it a Sacrament; for they did not graunt publike penance twice: Augustine epistol. 54. Penitentia in ecclesia non iteratur: Penance or publike repentance is not iterated in the Church: but we are not so strict, but that to the truly penitent, though they haue fallen againe, we admit a second reconciliation to the Church.

Argum. 3. Bellarmino, to proue penance a Sacrament, alledgeth the testimonie of the fathers: he produceth the witness of tenne of them: Tertullian, Cyprian, Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, with others: and yet not one of them affirmeth penance a Sacrament: but some do call it Alia sacramentum.

Lauacrum, another Lauer, and that it doth imitate Baptisme, Medicinam penitentiz, the Medicine of penitencie, and such like, but none of them calleth it a Sacrament: but onely one Viſitor Car- tennus, who is brought forth in the eleuenth place, but he is not ancient enough to be credited for this matter, nor of weight to sway againſt the reſt.

The Proteſtants.

Thus repentance we do acknowledge, which is a dying to ſinne, and a walking in newneſſe of life, Rom. 6. 4. But a Sacrament of repentance we finde none in Scripture, and therefore we deny it.

Argum. 1. In euery Sacrament there is an externall ſenſible element, as Water in Baptiſme, Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper: but there is none in their penance: Ergo, no Sacrament.

Belarmine answereth, that the words of abſolution and confeſſion, are the outward ſignes in penance: it is not neceſſarie it ſhould be a viſible ſigne: it is a ſenſible ſigne being audible, cap. 11.

Anſw. 1. There muſt be the word beſide the element: as Auguſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum: Let the word be ioyned to the element; and it maketh a Sacrament: the word it ſelfe cannot be the element: for the ſame thing cannot both ſanctifie and be ſanctified. And if the Audible word be the element, by this reaſon the preaching of the word alſo ſhall be a Sacrament.

Belarmine replieth. 1. That whether the outward ſigne be viſible, or audible, it ſkillett not, ſo it be apt to expreſſe the ſpiritual effect: as the ſigne in penance is, which conſiſteth in the words of the Prieſt abſolving, and the confeſſion of the penitent partie: and S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh onely of the Sacrament of Baptiſme, when he ſaith, Let the word be ioyned to the element, &c. Bellarm. 1. 1. ſeſ. ad 7. argum. Kemptij.

Anſw. If 1. an audible ſigne ſufficed, what needeth water in Baptiſme? for there the Miniſter ſaith, I baptize thee, as in the other, I abſolve thee. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, Euery thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1. Tim. 4. 5. If the word do ſanctifie, then is it not the thing ſanctified. 3. It cannot be ſhewed, that any of the Sacraments of the law, which did reſemble ours, had any ſuch viſible ſigne. 4. Auguſtine, though in that place, ſpeaketh chiefly of Baptiſme; yet elſewhere ſheweth this to be the generall condition of all Sacraments, to haue a viſible ſigne: as ſpeaking of the anointing of Aaron: Quod in genere viſibilium ſignaculorum ſacroſanctum eſt, ſicut ipſe Baptiſmus, &c. Which in the kind of viſible ſignes is holy, as Baptiſme is: So then he accounteth all holy ſignes, viſible, cont. Petilian lib. 2. c. 104.

Likewiſe, lib. 3. de doct. Chriſtian. c. 7. Deus nobis ſigna pauca pro multis dedit, ſcilicet facilia, &c. God hath giuen vs few ſignes for many, eaſie to be done, excellent in ſignification, moſt chaste in obſeruation, ſuch as is Baptiſme & the celebration of the bodie and blood of the Lord: the ſignes of the Sacraments are eaſie to be done, not eaſie to be ſaid: and as they are in Baptiſme and the Eucharist, but there they are viſible.

Argum. 2. There was repentance and abſolution of ſinnes both, in the old Teſtament: for both Dauid confeſſed and was ſorie for his ſinne, and the Prophet Nathan pronounced forgive- neſſe from God, 2. Sam. 12. 13. So likewiſe Iohn preached repentance for remiſſion of ſinnes, and the people came and confeſſed their ſinnes: here were all things neceſſarie for true repentance, yet was it no Sacrament all this while, as they themſelues confeſſe, which they hold to be Inſtituted by Chriſts reſurrection, Trident. Concil. ſeſ. 14. cap. 1. Why then ſhould it be rather a Sacrament now, then before?

Belarmine answereth. 1. That the power of remitting ſinnes was not giuen to any in the olde law: And that Nathan did not remit vnto Dauid his ſinnes, but onely ſhew, that God had remitted them: And if Nathan did abſolve Dauid, it was but one ſingular example, which maketh no law.

Contra. 1. If Nathan did declare vnto Dauid, that God had forgiven him, it was ſufficient: for the Apoſtles themſelues had no further power, then to declare on Gods behalfe remiſſion of ſins to the penitent, and to ſhew the way how they ſhall be forgiven. Synod. Cabilonenſ. ſub Carolo 33. Confeſſio, qua Deus fit, purgat peccata, qua ſacerdoti fit, docet, qualiter ipſa purgentur peccata: The confeſſion which is made to God, purgeth ſinne, that which is made to the Prieſt, ſheweth how ſinne ſhould be purged. So the people being pricked in heart at the Sermon of S. Peter, cryed, ſaying, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do? Act. 2. 37. then Peter himſelfe abſolueth them not, but onely ſheweth what courſe they ſhould take to haue their ſinnes forgiven. 2. The pronouncing remiſſion of ſinnes, is no extraordinarie thing in the old Teſtament, Iſay 1. 18. I though your ſinnes were as crimſon, Chap. 6. 7. thy ſinnes ſhall be purged: and more plainly, Ezech. 18. 32. Hos. 14. 3. Take away your words. And be it that Nathan did it but once, yet haue we once in the old Teſtament abſolution of ſinnes, which the Ieſuite denyeth.

Belarmine. 2. That Penance, which Iohn Baptiſt and our Sauour Chriſt preached, was no Sacrament, becauſe the words of abſolution were wanting, in Iohns penance; and confeſſion, in that which Chriſt preached: lib. 1. de penitent. cap. 11.

Cont. 1. The people confessed their finnes before Iohn, this they willingly grant: it is manifest also that he declared to them remission of finnes, for he preached the Baptisme of repentance to the remission of finnes, Luke 3. 3. And to what ende should, or would the people have confessed their finnes, if they had not expected forgiveness of the same at Iohns hands? 2. Concerning the repentance which our Saviour preached, there was both the words of absolution, Luke 7. 48. Thy finnes are forgiven thee; and the womans abundant teares, therewith washing Christs feet, stood for confession: and yet more planely, Luke 19. Zachew confesseth, vers. 8. Christ absolveth, vers. 9. This day is salvation come to thy house. Here therefore was as much a Sacrament of penance, as was after instituted by the Apostles.

Argum. 3. Act. 26. 20. S. Paul having set downe the summe of repentance: To repent, to turne to God, and to do workes worthis of repentance: afterward testifieth thus, vers. 22. Saying none other things, then Moses & the Prophets did say should come: Paul preacheth no other repentance, then the Prophets; but they preached no Sacrament of repentance, which they themselves confesse: Ergo.

Bellarmino. 1. Paul doth not recite the summe of the doctrine of penance, but it is an exhortation onely to penance. 2. And hee speaketh of Penance before Baptisme, which is no Sacrament. 3. And the things which the Apostle saith agreeable to the Prophets, are not concerning penance, but as touching the passion, and resurrection of Christ, as it followeth, vers. 3. resp. ad 4. argum. Kemniti.

Ans. First, 1. the summe of the doctrine of repentance, is to turne in heart to God, and to bring forth good fruits: as Augustine; Fructus est dignus penitentia transacta fieri peccata, et eadem non agere: it is a worthis fruit of repentance, to lament finnes past, and not to do the same againe: Serm. de tempor. 66. This summe of the doctrine of repentance, the Apostle here setteth downe, not 2. by way of exhortation onely, but he saith he shewed, Annunciauit, he preached or declared it vnto them, by way of instruction. Secondly, there is one and the same kind of repentance both before and after Baptisme, as followeth in the next argument. Thirdly, not the preaching onely of Christs suffering is the doctrine agreeable to the Prophets, but of remission of finnes, in his name, and so consequently of repentance, as S. Peter sheweth, Act. 10. 43. To him all the Prophets witness, that through his name all that beleue shall have remission of finnes.

Argum. 4. There is one and the same kind of repentance before Baptisme and after: but the first is not a Sacrament, as they confesse: Ergo, no more is the latter.

Bellarmino, Penance after Baptisme requireth particular confession of finnes and liberum workes, so doth not penance before Baptisme. Bellarmino. c. 11.

Ans. First, particular confession is not requisite at all, as afterward shall be shewed: but confession, and bringing forth of good fruits are necessarie in repentance before Baptisme, as may appeare, Matth. 3. 6. they confessed their finnes, vers. 8. Bring forth fruites, &c. Secondly, Augustine setteth forth Zachew as an example of true repentance, serm. 116. de tempore: who both confessed his finnes and made restitution, Luke 19. 8. being not yet baptized.

Serm. de Baptismo ad Infantiles.

Augustine thus writeth, Sacramentum idcirco dicitur, quia aliud videtur, aliud intelligitur: It is called a Sacrament, because one thing is seen, another understood. And then he saith, Quid idcirco si vident, aut alijs quoniam ostendere in eo quod sacramentum penitentia vocant: But neither do they see, or can shew to others, any such visible signe in that which they call the Sacrament of repentance. Here Augustine denieth repentance to be a Sacrament, because it hath no visible signe.

Bellarmino answereth here most absurdly, that Augustine by a visible signe vnderstandeth that which is sensible to any of the senses, though it be to the hearing, cap. 11. resp. ad 5. argum. Caluini. Thus that which is onely heard, shall be said to be visible, which is most absurd, and needeth no other confutation.

The Master of the Sentences propoundeth 2. reasons against the Sacrament of penance, which require a further answer: first, if outward penance be a Sacrament, then it would follow, that Non omne Sacramentum evangelicum id efficit, quod figurat: That every Sacrament of the Gospel doth not effect that, which it figureth: but inward repentance doth effect the outward, not conuersewise. The answer there is this, that the proposition is true onely of those Sacraments, that were instituted in the Gospel, but Penance and Matrimony had their beginning before: but seeing these new Sophisters make Penance a Sacrament of the Gospel, they must find out another answer: Lombard lib. 4. dist. 22. c.

The other reason objected is this; if externall Penance be a Sacrament, it will follow, that in sacramenti, the sacramentall thing or worke should goe before the Sacrament, as inward repentance is the sacramentall thing, and goeth before outward penance: the Master saith this may well be so, but we see not how; it would have a better answer, I would haue them demer further vpon it.

This trueth also is sealed: Agnes Snot burned for denying the Sacrament of penance: Fon pag. 18. 9.

THE THIRD QUESTION, WHETHER THERE BE any other Sacrament of repentance, beside Baptisme.

The Papists.

Baptisme serueth onely, they say, for remission of finnes done before : for finnes committed after Baptisme, the Sacrament of Penance, which is a distinct Sacrament from Baptisme, is appointed for a remedie : and therefore is fitly called, The second table of refuge after shipwracke : Contra Iudaeos. lib. 1. c. 2.

Argum. 1. Saint Iohn saith, If we confesse our finnes, hee is faithfull to forgive vs, 1. Epist. 1. 9. he saith not, that by the memorie of Baptisme, but by confession, which is a part of penance, our finnes are forgiven, Bellarm. cap. 13.

Ans. First, wee say not, that by the bare memorie or remembrance of Baptisme, finnes after committed are done away : but that the sacramentall force of Baptisme doth extend it selfe to our whole life, that is, to bee a seale vnto vs of remission of all our finnes in the blood of Christ. Secondly, the confession of our finnes is not a taking away of the force of Baptisme, but a more effectual applying thereof, as the people which were baptized by Iohn confessed also their finnes. Thirdly, it is no good argument, wee must confesse our finnes after Baptisme : Ergo, Penance is another Sacrament beside Baptisme : for confession of finnes is a fruit of the Sacrament of Baptisme.

Argum. 2. In the old law Circumcision was not appointed as a remedie for finnes committed afterward, but they had sacrifices and other expiations, &c. so in the new Testament Baptisme is appointed to purge sinne after Baptisme, but we haue the sacrifice of the new Testament, and absolution, &c. Bellarm. cap. 13.

Ans. First, the force and efficacie of Circumcision was seene in the reformation of the whole life : by the doct. Stephen thus charge the Iewes, Act. 7. 51. that they were of uncircumcised hearts : signifying thereby, that they did not expresse the force and vertue of their first circumcision in the renewing of their hearts, reforming of their eares : if then to circumcise the eares, be an effect of circumcision, but infants cannot be circumcised, because they neither heare, nor vnderstand : then it followeth, that the effect of circumcision was not limited onely so that time, but was to bee exercised and applied thorough the whole life. Againe, Circumcision being the seale of the promises of faith, Rom. 4. 11. and faith being the life of the soule, Rom. 1. 17. it followeth, that the whole righteous and spirituall life of man, not the beginning onely was then sealed in Circumcision, and now in Baptisme.

Secondly, as then they had sacrifices and Sacraments, not to begre a new faith, or to obtaine a new remission of finnes, but to confirme them in their first faith, and to apply the remission of finnes in Circumcision : so now beside Baptisme we haue the Eucharist, no sacrifice, but a Sacrament to cherish and renewe in vs our first life in Baptisme : like as food doth not giue a new life to the bodie, but onely sustaineth the first life receiued in the birth, &c.

Argum. 3. The Apostle saith, Hebr. 6. 6. that they which haue beene once lightened, (that is, baptized) if they fall away should be renewed by penance : they cannot bee renewed againe by that penance, which is by Baptisme : Ergo, by another : penance they may, vnlesse ye will say, that the Apostle excludeth such as fall after Baptisme altogether from Penance, which was the heresie of the Nouatians, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, to be lightened is not to bee baptized : the Apostle addeth further, verf. 7. They that haue tasted of the good word of God : but infants haue no taste of the word : therefore they are not illuminated in Baptisme. Secondly, it by penance you vnderstand Baptisme, then you haue made a good reason for vs, that hold no other Sacrament of Penance but Baptisme. Thirdly, S. Paul speaketh not of euery falling after Baptisme, but of manifest apostasie, and vtter renouncing of the grace receiued, for who there was no more hope at all : which was not the error of the Nouatians, that denied reconciliation to those that fell of infirmities : but the Apostles owne position, Hebr. 10. vers. 6. That there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinne as all for those, which after the knowledge of the truth haue willingly, that is, obstinately and with a malicious and peruerle minde, as the Apostle expoundeth himselfe, verf. 29. They tread vnder foote the Sonne of God, &c. and despite the spirit of grace : of such the Apostle speaketh in this place, that they doe crucifie to themselves the Sonne of God. Fourthly, if your exposition be admitted, you haue gained nothing but this, that there is repentance after Baptisme, which you call penance, and this we denie not : but any other Sacrament of repentance, we acknowledge not, which you should haue proued.

The Protestants.

We acknowledge no other Sacrament of repentance, but Baptisme.

Arg. 1. The Scripture so calleth it, The baptisme of repentance for remission of sins, Mar. 1. 4.

Belarmine answereth, that the Baptisme of Iohn was called the baptisme of repentance, not the baptisme of Christ, cap. 14.

Ans. 1. We haue proued before Contro. 12. quest. 7. that the baptisme of Iohn, and of our Sauiour Christ was all one, and therefore this distinction faileth. 2. That Christs baptisme was a baptisme of repentance, S. Paul sheweth Rom. 6. 4. We are buried by baptisme into his death, &c. that we should walke in newnes of life. Christs baptisme then teacheth vs to dye vnto sinne, and to rise vp to newnes of life: but this is repentance, Hebr. 6. 1. Repentance from dead workes: Ergo, Christs baptisme preacheth repentance.

Deinde ad Petrum cap. 19.

So Augustine calleth Baptisme, Sacramentum fidei, & penitentia, the Sacrament of faith, and repentance: what need we then seeke for a new Sacrament of repentance, which cannot any where be found in Scripture?

Belarmine. First, Augustine calleth Baptisme the Sacrament of faith, and Penance which goeth before Baptisme, not of that, which followeth after. Secondly, Iohns Baptisme is called the Baptisme of repentance to remission of sinnes, not that it gaue remission of sinnes, but it wrought repentance, and repentance remission of sinnes: but Christs baptisme worketh not repentance, but repentance goeth before, cap. 14. respo. ad argum. 3.

Ans. First, How 1. can baptisme be the Sacrament of faith and Penance before going, seeing children, that haue baptisme, haue as yet neither faith nor repentance? 2. And you contradict your selues: for you hold Penance before Baptisme to be no Sacrament, and yet you say that Augustine calleth Baptisme the Sacrament of Penance before going. Secondly, 1. Repentance went before Iohns baptisme: for they confessed their sinnes before they were baptized, Matth. 3. 6. but without repentance, there can be no confession. 2. And that Iohns baptisme sealed remission of sins vnto them, it is euident, because they did thereby escape the wrath to come, Luk. 3. 7. But Gods iudgements cannot be auoided, where sinne is not first remitted.

Argum. 2. If baptisme and the vertue thereof cannot bee abolished by sinne, then there is no neede of another Sacrament of repentance: but the first is true, Ergo the second.

Belarmine. The grace of regeneration had in Baptisme, may afterward be lost and out by sinne:

Ans. First, as touching the grace of election, whereby infants are saued in Baptisme, being taken away in their infancie, it is diuellish doctrine to say it may be lost: for whom Christ liueth, he liueth to the end, Ioh. 13. 1. Secondly, the grace of regeneration, which is not conferred in Baptisme, but onely sealed, and afterward by the worke of the spirit effected in the hearts of the full, cannot be lost where once it is wrought: for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, Rom. 11. 2. And your owne Canons confirme the same: Diuina clementia dimissa peccata non redire in ultimum non patiuntur. The diuine clemencie doth not suffer sinnes once remitted to returne againe vnto punishment, Gelasius caus. 33. qu. 3. distinct. 4. c. 24.

Argum. 3. Baptisme is of no lesse force and efficacie, than circumcision: but that was durable and permanent Sacrament, effectually through the whole life, being the scale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11. But 1. faith sanctifieth both the first and latter repentance: For neither faith it is impossible to please God, Hebr. 11. 6. Ergo, euen repentance following depended as then vpon circumcision, so now vpon Baptisme. 2. And if Baptisme be the scale of righteousness, but without finall and continuall repentance there is no righteousness, it is therefore the scale and Sacrament of all and euery repentance.

Decret. par. 2. caus. 23. qu. 1. c. 40. in the title thus: In extremopositis etiam ab heretico penitentiam accipere valet: At the point of death a man may receiue penance of an heretike. And in the Canon it selfe: Sine sancti baptismi sacramento: Without the holie Sacrament of Baptisme he would not goe out of his life. Heere Baptisme is interpreted to bee the same thing, that is called before Penance.

Synod. Colonienf. Docendus est populus, quod in baptismo aboletur vetus homo, remisso omni peccato, & quo natus est, &c. The people must bee taught, that in Baptisme the old man is abolished, all sinne being taken away, and the new man beginneth. But to put off the old man with his works, Coloss. 3. 9. is nothing else but repentance, which is from dead workes: Ergo, Baptisme is the Sacrament of repentance.

THE FOVRTH QUESTION, OF THE ESSENtiall parts of penance.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of popish penance.

The Papists.

The forme of this Sacrament, say they, consisteth in the words of absolution, pronounced by the Minister, the matter thereof is the contrition, confession, and satisfaction of the penitent. Concil. Tridentin. sess. 14. cap. 3. Bellar. lib. 1. cap. 15.

Arg. Bellarmine here hath no argument out of Scripture: and as for the popish Councils of Florence and Trent alleaged by him, we hold them not worth the answering. He only obtrudeth this reason: A sensible signe of iustifying grace instituted of God is a part of the Sacrament: but the action of the penitent partie, weeping, and confessing his finnes, is a sensible signe that hee is iustified: Ergo Bellarm. cap. 14.

Ans. First, a sensible signe sufficeth not, it must be a visible element; that is the matter of the Sacrament, as water in Baptisme, bread and wine in the Eucharist: but the action of the penitent is no visible element. 2. Againe, no humane action, such as this of the penitent is, can bee a part of a diuine Sacrament. Thirdly, it is no signe of grace, for an hypocrite may doe all this, as Abab did, and not be iustified.

The Protestants.

Neither is their penance a Sacrament, neither can these be parts of a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. In euery Sacrament there are two things required: res terrena, and actio externa, the earthly thing or element, as is water in Baptisme; and the externall action: neither doth the element alone, nor the action alone make a Sacrament: as in Baptisme there is both water, which is the matter; and the washing, that is the action. Wherefore seeing in their penance there is nothing but the action of the Minister, and the action of the receiuer, it can bee no Sacrament.

Argum. 2. The parts of euery Sacrament, as the forme, the matter, must be instituted of Christ: but this are they not able to shew for the forme and matter of penance, namely, the institution of Christ: Ergo it is no Sacrament. For in these words of our Sauour Christ, Whose finnes ye remit, &c. which is the onely place of institution, which they are able to alleage for this their deuised Sacrament, though wee should graunt, that the wordes of absolution may bee picked out of this place, which they say containe the forme; yet there is no mention of contrition, confession, satisfaction in the partie absolved, wherein consisteth the matter. If Bellarmine answer, as elsewhere he saith, that these also may be gathered out of this place, because finnes must not be forgiven, but to those that confesse them; Bellarm. cap. 10. We replie againe: 1. That in the institution of a Sacrament there must be expresse mention of the materiall parts thereof, as it was in the institution of Baptisme, and the Lords Supper. 2. By the same reason we will conclude against the Iesuiste, that our Sauour Christ absolved not, but vpon confession going before: for it is not like that he would forgive finnes, where finnes were not acknowledged: and thus there being confession and absolution in the penance that Christ preached, it must needs bee a Sacrament after their definition, which Bellarmine instantly denieth.

Argum. 3. Some of the principall Schoolemen are of a contrarie iudgement to Bellarmine: one thinketh, namely Gropperus, that the action of the Priest is the materiall part of this Sacrament, and not the action of the penitent partie, Enchirid. Colon. Other, as Scotus, in 4. sentent. dist. 14. qu. 4. and Ockam, Iohannes Maior doe thinke, that the absolution of the Priest is the onely essentiall part of penance. They reason thus:

First, that is a Sacrament which is conferred by the Minister: but onely absolution is conferred by the Minister, not the confession of the penitent: Ergo.

Bellarmino answereth, that the penitent partie is cooperator ministri, is the helper of the Minister.

Contra. 1. Yet dare he not say he is the Minister: 2. He may as well say, that the people, which eateth and drinketh and communicateth in the Eucharist, is the Ministers fellow-worker in the Sacrament.

Secondly, that onely is of the essence of the Sacrament, which is cause of the Sacramentall effect: but absolution onely is the cause of remission: Ergo, it is onely of the essence.

Bellarmino answereth, that as a man consisteth of two parts, the soule, and bodie, yet he vnderstandeth onely by the soule: so the Sacrament consisting of two parts, may worke onely by one of them.

Contra. First, if the Sacrament haue two parts, and work only by one of them, then is the other superfluous. Secondly, the spirit or soule of man onely vnderstandeth formally; but the matter and object of the vnderstanding is deliuered by the outward senses: so likewise to the sacramental work must concur as well the matter, as the forme thereof. Thus the Papists disagree among themselves, and each doe confute another: which sheweth that their Sacrament of Penance is but a new deuice, seeing they know not themselves what certaintie to hold.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QUESTION, OF the three materiall parts of popish penance, contrition, confession, satisfaction.

46. Error.

The Papists. These three (they say) are the true and proper parts of penance, contrition; and painfull sorrow of the heart, confession to the Priest, and satisfaction to God for our sinnes; Concil. Trident. sess. 14. cap. 4. Rhemist. Matib. 3. sect. 2.

Argum. 1. Contrition is proued, Psal. 51. 17. A contrite heart is a sacrifice to God. Confession, Matth. 3. They were baptized in Iordane confessing their sinnes. Satisfaction, Matth. 11. 21. They would haue repented long agoe in sackcloth and ashes, Bellarmin. cap. 19.

Ans. First, that godly sorrow and contrition of the heart, is necessarie to true repentance, we neuer will denie: but that this sorrow is any satisfaction to Gods iustice, we abhorre it as a monstrous blasphemie. Secondly, Confession and acknowledgement of our sinnes vnto God; and in some cases, where the conscience is not satisfied, to the Minister or some other faithfull man, we doe willingly graunt: but that it is necessarie to make generall confession of sinnes to the priest, that place proueth it not: for Iohn had had shriuing worke enough for many yeeres, to heare euery mans particular confession. Thirdly, that sitting in sackcloth and ashes, was no satisfaction for sinne, but an outward signe of true sorrow for sinne.

Argum. 2. In Dauids repentance, there was contrition: his heart smote him, when he had numbered the people, 2. Sam. 24. 10. Confession, I haue sinned exceedingly. Satisfaction, by his prayer and offering of sacrifice, &c. In the Publicane, Luk. 18. there was contrition in that he durst not lift his eyes to heauen: Confession, Lord be mercifull to me a sinner: Satisfaction, in smiting vpon his breast, Bellarmin. cap. 19.

Ans. First, contrition we graunt in both these, as a preparation to a further repentance, not as any part of satisfaction to Gods iustice. Secondly, here is also confession, but not auricular, by particular enumeration of sins. Dauid maketh confession but of that one sin at that time committed, the Publicane confelleth in generall, and both confesse vnto God; what is this to auricular confession to the Priest? Thirdly, Dauid offereth sacrifice onely 1. as a testimonie of his thankfulness vnto God, not by way of satisfaction: 2. and it was a small satisfaction in the Publicane for all his notorious sinnes to smite vpon his breast: 3. Doe you thinke, that oppression, forgery, extortion, such as the sinnes of the Publicanes were, Luk. 19. 8. are of so small waight, that they may bee done away with a knocke vpon the breast? 4. This smiting vpon the breast was a signe of contrition, no part of any satisfaction: And so Augustine saith, Tundere pectus quid aliud est, quam arguere, quod latet in pectore, &c. To knocke vpon the breast, what is it else but to reprove that, which lieth hid in the breast? in Matth. serm. 8.

The Protestants.

WE doe make two parts onely of true repentance, according to the Scriptures, that is, the mortifying of the old man with his workes, by dying vnto sinne: vnto the which belongeth true sorrow, and contrition of heart for our sinnes, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. acknowledgement and confession thereof before God, 2. Sam. 12. 13. and a perfect hatred and detestation of sinne, and indignation with our selues for the same, 2. Corinth. 7. 11. The other part is the renewing and quickening of the new man in vs, which consisteth partly in setting our consciences at peace with God, our sinnes beinge forgiven vs, Rom. 5. 1. and working in vs a zeale, studie, care, and desire of newnes of life, 2. Cor. 7. 11. These two parts onely we finde in Scripture.

Argum. 1. Isai. 1. 17. Cease to doe euill: Learne to doe good: wee must dye vnto sinne, and walke in newnes of life, Rom. 6. 4. Put off the old man, put on the new, Coloss. 3. 9.

Bellarmin answereth, 1. Partes sunt iustitia, non poenitentia: These are parts of righteousness, not of repentance: namely, to cease to doe euill, and learne to doe good, cap. 20. 2. And againe, cap. 19. propos. 4. Penance is onely from dead workes, and all men need not repentance, Luk. 11. 7. but the mortifying of the flesh, and to bee renewed in the spirit, appertaineth to all. 3. Neither can it bee shewed any where in Scripture that it is called repentance to decline from euill, and to doe good.

Contra

Contra. First, it followeth not, they are parts of iustice or righteousnes, therefore not of repentance: To make satisfaction is a part of repentance, by their own confession, yet is it also a worke of righteousnes; as Zachari, Luk. 19. 8. restoreth what he had wrongfully gotten: And the Apostle saith, Being made free from sinne, ye are made the servants of righteousnes, Rom. 6. 8. Freedom from sinne, which is nothing else but repentance from dead workes, Hebr. 6. 1. is the seruice of righteousnes, which is our sanctification: for here we speake not of our iustice before God in Christ, but of iustice which is wrought in vs.

Secondly, it is an hereticall position, that any are so iust, which neede no repentance: 1. For if they neede no repentance, they should haue no sinne: and whosoever saith he hath no sinne is a liar, 1. John. 1. 8. then it followeth, if we acknowledge our sins, he is faithfull to forgive vs our sinnes. The Apostle excludeth not any (no not himselfe) that haue sinnes, from confession of sinnes, which is a part of repentance. 2. Our Sauour speaketh of such iust persons, as in their owne presumptuous opinion were such: so he saith, I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, Matth. 9. 13. Think you that any were so iust, that Christ needed not to haue come into the world for their sakes, as here he saith, I came not; then needed he not also to haue dyed for them. 3. Againe, heare what was decreed, Concil. Milenitan. can. 8. where Augustine was present: Placuit, ut quicumque verberetur. They which hold, that they which say those words of the Lordes prayer, for give vs, &c. doe rather say them in humilitie, than in truth, let them bee accursed. If euery man truly craueth in the Lordes prayer forgiuenes of his sinnes, then euery man is truly a sinner, and so hath neede of repentance.

Thirdly, it is more boldly than truly, or wisely said, the Scripture no where doth call it repentance to cease to doe euill, &c. Isay. 58. Is not this fasting, to loose the bands of wickednes, &c. ver. 7. to deale thy bread to the hungry? By fasting here is vnderstood repentance, as ver. 3. Wherefore haue we fasted, &c. and punished our selues? but punishment belongeth, euen in their owne sense, to repentance.

Argum. 2. Remission of sinnes doth alwaies followe true repentance, Act. 3. 19. Repent and turne that your sinnes may be put away, when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord: but remission of sins doe not alwaies follow contrition, confession, satisfaction: as all these three were in Indas, and yet he hanged himselfe: therefore these three, contrition, confession, satisfaction, are not the parts of true repentance.

Bellarmino answereth: first, Indas was baptized, and receiued the Eucharist, and hanged himselfe, yet were they the right Sacraments. Secondly, Indas had not true contrition, which alwaies is ioyned with hope, neither did he make particular confession of all his sinnes, nor yet was satisfaction enioyned him by the Priest.

Ans. First, there is difference betweene the Sacraments and repentance: for the Sacrament is one thing, res sacramenti, the vertue of the Sacrament another: the first may bee receiued to death, or to life: for they that receiue unworthily, are guilty of the bodie and blood of Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 27. but the other, is omni homini ad vitam, nulli ad exitium, is to life vnto all, not to destruction, Augustin. tract. 26. in Iouan. So is true repentance not vnto death vnto any, but vnto life: Secondly, you make contrition a part of repentance, Non vi in corde sedem habet: Not as it is in the heart, but as it is manifested by signes, Bellarmino. cap. 17. therefore hope is no part of popish contrition being in the heart. 2. Indas also confessed his sinne in particular, I haue sinned in betraying the innocent blood: he made not a particular confession of all, no more did Dauid or the Publicane, acknowledged before as examples of repentance. 3. His satisfaction was not enioyned by the Priest: if he should haue expected their sentence, they would haue enioyned none at all: and who I pray you enioyned Dauid his satisfaction, when he offered sacrifice to God? or the Publicane, when hee smote vpon his breast, for these (you say) were their satisfactions?

Argum. 3. Durand (one of their owne writers) denieth contrition and satisfaction to bee parts of penance: the first, because contrition is not sensible, but every part of a Sacrament should bee sensible. The second, because satisfaction in act is not necessarie, but it sufficeth if it bee in vow and desire, Durand in 4. distinct. 16. qu. 1. Thus we see how well they agree together.

Bellarmino thus answereth: first, contrition is a part of penance, not as it is in the heart, but as it is manifested by signes. Secondly, penance may be without satisfaction: but then it is as it were maimed, and imperfect.

Contra. First, contrition by signes may bee in hypocrites, and so dissembled: such as the Prophet speaketh of, to bow themselves like bulrushes, Isay. 58. which the Lord denieth to be repentance: In this asst that I haue chosen? &c. They shewed their contrition by fasting and humbling themselves, yet the Lord refuseth it: wherefore such contrition is no part of true repentance, which is acceptable to God.

Secondly, if penance may bee without satisfaction, then is it no part of a Sacrament: for a Sacrament can want none of the materiall parts: take water from Baptisme, or bread and wine from the Eucharist, and they are no Sacraments at al. Again, repentance may be perfect without actual satisfaction, as was the repentance of the theefe vpon the croſſe. But I need not labour to ſtrengthen or fortifie Durandus arguments, it is ſufficient that the truth hath evidence from the ſeries thereof.

Likewiſe for the parts of true repentance, their owne Canons doe witneſſe: Decret. p. 2. can. 33. diſtinct. 1. de penitentia. c. 39. Penitentia eſt mala vterita plangere, & plangenda iterum non committere. It is repentance to bewaile the finnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe.

Serm. 66.

Auguſtine ſaith, Fructus eſt dignus penitentia, tranſacta deſtere peccata, & ea iterum non agere: This is true repentance, to lament for finnes paſt, and not to commit the ſame againe: Though this bee no perfect definition of repentance, yet wee ſee that both confeſſion and ſatisfaction were concluded.

Coloniens. part. 7. cap. 39. Sacerdos mouebit conſcientiam, ut quod admiſſum eſt deſeſtetur, & ſe homini vitium inſiſtituat, ne in vltimo letale crimen poſtea incidat: The prieſt muſt moue him that conſcienced, to deſteſt that which is committed, and ſo afterward to frame his life, that hee fall into no deadly ſin. Here alſo are theſe two things required to repentance, to hate ſinne, and embrace righteouſneſſe.

This truth alſo is ſealed: Iohn Lambert Martyr, I know none other penance, except it be renouation of liuing, by caſting away old vice, and taking them to new vertue: ad artic. 10. pag. 116.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER RE- pentance goe before faith.

The Papiſts.

47. Error.

Their opinion is, that repentance goeth before iuſtification by faith, and that it is a way vnto faith and iuſtification in the remiſſion of finnes: Penitentia eſt via ad remiſſionem peccatorum, & prior iuſtificatione, Bellarmin. cap. 19.

Argum. Act. 2. 38. Repent and be baptized in the name of Chriſt for the remiſſion of finnes: Remiſſion of finnes followeth repentance: Ergo, iuſtification alſo and faith follow repentance. Act. 8. 22. Repent of this thy wickedneſſe, and pray God, if it be poſſible, the thoughts of thy heart may be forgiven thee. Here forgiveness followeth repentance.

The Proteſtants.

Anſ. Firſt this place prooueth not, that remiſſion of finnes followeth repentance, becauſe baptiſme was giuen after repentance: for Baptiſme doth not giue remiſſion of finnes, but is a ſeale onely and confirmation of our faith, in the remiſſion of finnes. Secondly, neither is remiſſion of finnes obtained before God, by the act of our repentance: but wee are already being once called, iuſtified before God, by the remiſſion of our finnes, and imputation of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 30. Whom he called, he iuſtified: Iuſtification immediately followeth our calling: by repentance, and other workes that follow, our calling is made ſure, 2. Pet. 1. 10. our iuſtification finiſhed, that is, aſſured to our ſelues: Philipp. 2. 12. Make an end of your ſaluation by feare and trembling. So then feare and trembling which worketh repentance, beginneth not our ſaluation, but onely doth aſſure vs of the ſame. So wee muſt diſtinguiſh, as the Apoſtle ſaith, betwene the beginning of faith and iuſtification before God, and the perfection and aſſurance thereof to our ſelues: faith is firſt whereby wee are iuſtified, and our finnes remitted before God, then followeth repentance whereby our hearts are aſſured to our ſelues of this remiſſion.

Thirdly, 1. Saint Peter ſo ſaith to Simon that hypocrite, not that he doubted of remiſſion of finnes vpon true repentance, but that hee doubted of Simons true repentance, as it followeth verſ. 23. I ſee thou art in the gall of bitterneſſe. 2. Or he ſo ſaith, to ſhew vnto Simon how difficult, or hard a thing remiſſion of finnes was. 3. And though remiſſion of finnes be already decreed before God, yet is it not felt in the hart, nor the conſcience aſſured thereof, til after effectual repentance, as Nathan preſently when Dauid had ſaid, I haue ſinned, ſaith, the Lord alſo hath put away thy finnes, 2. Sam. 12. 13. This notwithstanding Dauid yet felt not the comfort thereof in his ſoule, for the which he praieth, Pſalm. 51. 12. therefore when remiſſion of finnes is placed after repentance, it ſheweth the aſſurance thereof made vnto our hearts after repentance, not the firſt decree or graunt thereof with God, which goeth before repentance.

Argum. 1. Iuſtification goeth before ſanctification: for this is the fruit of the other: but repentance is part of our ſanctification, renouation, or regeneration, being called by S. Paul, Making in newnes of life, Rom. 6. 4. Ergo, it followeth and commeth after our iuſtification. And ſeeing without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Hebr. 11. 6: how ſhould our repentance be acceptable to God, vnleſſe it proceeded of faith? Faith then is initiate and begun in vs before repentance, which we denie not, by true repentance and other fruites of ſanctification, to be daily ſtrengthened and encreaſed.

Argum. 2. Bellarmine himselfe, forgetting belike his owne positions, proueth that Faith goeth before repentance, by the example of the Ninivites, Ion. 3. 5. They beleemed God and proclaymed a fast. Whereupon he concludeth, that Faith is the cause of Repentance. Bellarmin. cap. 19. propos. 2. And he vnderstandeth iustifying faith, propos. 4. Mortification, fructus fidei iustificantis, is the fruite of iustifying faith, Ergo, iustifying faith goeth before repentance. The Master of the Sentences affirmeth the same out of S. Augustine, Non satis fit, quod debeat, sed ex fide debeat: Let it not suffice, that he is grieved, but let his griefe be of faith, Lib. 4. distinct. 14. a. And Distinct. 15. c. Inmundi sunt omnes, &c. They are all vncleane, whom faith cleanseth not, by faith purifying their hearts: Act. 15. 9. And in the same Distinction, d. Sine charitate non potest esse vera penitentia: Without charitie there can be no true repentance, and without faith there can be no charitie: Galath. 5. 6. Each working by love.

Augustine sayth, No man is iustified but by the grace of Iesus Christ: Non solum remissione peccatorum, sed prius ipsius inspiratione fidei & timoris dei, donec sanet omnes languores nostros: Not onely by remission of sinnes; but first, by inspiring into vs faith and the feare of God, till he haue cured all our maladies. He sayth (as wee heare) that faith is inspired before we haue remission of sinnes and the feare of God, without the which there is no true repentance.

Ioh. 1. decret. 11. Fides omnes actus hominis precedere debet: Faith must goe before all the workes & doings of man: Ergo, before repentance.

THE FIFT QUESTION, OF CONTRITION: the first part of their Penance.

There are certaine poynts which we doe agree vpon.

1. We grant, that true contrition and sorrow of the heart is necessarie vnto repentance, and that it standeth very well with the libertie of the Gospell, and is profitable for Christians.

2. Corinth. 7. 10. Godly sorrow causeth repentance to saluation.

3. That true contrition is ioyned both with a full hatred and detestation of sinne committed, 1. Corinth. 11. 31. We must indige and condemn our selues, as also with a full purpose to amend our liues, Act. 11. 23. This point is handled by Bellarmine against other Papists, which denied a formal purpose of amendment of life to be requisite in contrition, lib. 2. cap. 6. 7.

4. That true contrition before God is sufficient, before the absolution of the minister, so that the partie haue a purpose afterward to be reconciled to the congregation: which point Bellarmine handleth also against some other of his sect.

Let vs then now see what difference of opinion there is betweene vs concerning contrition.

The Papists.

1. They hold that contrition is neyther wholly of mans free will, nor yet wholly of God: but that man by his free will, holpen of God, is able to repent: so that he doth only, Deo adiuvante, penitere, He is brought to repentance, God only helping and assisting him, Bellarmin. de penitentia lib. 2. cap. 3.

2. Argum. 1. Isa. 2. Rent your hearts: Matth. 3. Agite penitentiam: Repent ye: To what end should God command those things that are not in our owne power: Ergo, contrition is in mans power and free will: Bellarmin. cap. 2. propos. 2.

3. Ans. First, it is no rare thing in Scripture to finde, that God commandeth vs impossible things: as S. Paul saith, Rom. 8. 3. that the precepts of the law are impossible: the reason thereof is rendered, Galath. 3. 24. The law was a schoolemaster to bring vs to Christ: So God commandeth hard things, that we finding no strength in our selues to doe them, we should seeke for helpe at his hand: as Bernard saith well, Non latuit preceptorum precepti pondus hominum vires excedere, sed indecens vtile ex hoc ipso sua illas insufficientia admoneri, &c. Our master was not ignorant, that his commandements did exceede our strength, but he thought it good hereby to admonish vs of our insufficiency. Secondly, another reason of these precepts, is this: to let vs know, that although the will of man hath of it selfe by nature no inclination to that which is good, yet it is otherwise when a peece of clay, and God speaketh to men otherwise then vnto beasts, Consensus voluntarius voluntatis a bestijs, as Bernard saith, Our voluntarie or free consent doth discern vs from beasts. So it is in the power of man, velle, to will, that is somewhat; but velle bonum, to will that which is good, is of God. Thirdly, though God giue repentance, and all other good gifts; yet he worketh them by meanes, as by the preaching of his word, by precepts, exhortations, and (such like): whereby wee are stirred vp to seeke that at Gods hand, which wee finde not to bee in our selues. Fourthly, those places doe as well conclude, that it is wholly in mans power to repent, as in part: for to what end should God command, that which is not wholie and fullie in mans power to performe; as the Iesuite obiekteth.

4. Argum. 2. Contrition is an acceptable sacrifice to God, Psalm. 51. 17. but that which is coast,

not voluntarie, is not acceptable: Ergo, contrition is voluntarie. Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. We deny not but that contrition is a voluntarie and free offering vnto God, as the Prophet saith, Psalm. 119. 108. Accepte the free offerings of my mouth. But as Augustine saith, Deus volentibus volentes facit: God of nilling maketh vs willing: so then it is made a voluntarie sacrifice, not by the power of mans will, but by the worke of Gods grace.

The Protestants.

TRue contrition of heart, as all other good thoughts in vs, as they are good, come onely of God: our cogitations indeed are our owne, but all the goodnes of them is the meere gift of God, 1. Iam. 1. 17.

Argum. 1. 1. Tim. 2. 25. If at any time God will giue the repentance: Repentance then is the gift of God. And Augustine writing vpon these very words, sayth, Quantumlibet praebeat penitentiam, nisi ipse dederit, quis agit penitentiam? Although he neuer so much giue occasion of repentance, yet velle he bestow vpon vs the full gift of repentance, no man is able to repent. Thus he plainly distinguisheth betweene praebeat penitentiam, to offer occasion to repent: as he proueth out of S. Paul, Rom. 2. 4. the bountifullnes of God calleth thee to repentance; and dare penitentiam, to giue or graue repentance. But if God should only helpe our free will, and work together with vs to repentance, and not do al alone himselfe, he should rather praebeat, then dare penitentiam: offer occasion by stirring of vs vp to repentance, then grant vs repentance it selfe, which were contrarie to the Apostle.

Argum. 2. The Prophet Dauid saith, Create in me a cleane heart, Psal. 51. 10. Like as then God in the creation of the world, had no helper, or assistant, but all was his worke: so in the renewing of the heart, to create is onely Gods worke, to inspire good thoughts, and to make a new heart, is to create, or make a new creature, as S. Paul calleth it, 2. Cor. 5. 17. Ergo, it is onely and wholly the worke of God: as S. Ambrose saith, Gratia tota repellitur, si non tota suscipitur: Grace wholly refused, if it be not wholly receiued: Epistol. 84. Hieroni. Quodcumque in suo rinulo fuit ad suum referri: Whatsoeuer floweth in the riuer must be referred to the fountaine. ad Ctesiphont.

Bernard sayth: Non partim gratia, partim liberum arbitrium, sed totum singula peragunt, totumque totum illa, sed ut totum in illa, sic totum ex illa: Not partly grace, partly free will, but each of them wholly worketh, this wholly and that wholly; wholly indeede in free will, but wholly of grace: so he maketh the will of man onely to be as the passiue matter, wherein grace worketh: they worke not both together actiuelly.

The Master of the sentences agreeth, Lib. 4. distict. 20. c. 4. Opus est non hominis, sed Dei fructus penitentiae, inspirare enim potest, quandoque vult suam misericordiam: Fruitfull repentance is not the worke of man, but of God, which he can inspire, when he will, of his mercy. Repentance then proceedeth altogether from the mercie of God.

Council. Arausican. 2. can. 7. Si quis per naturae vigorem, bonum aliquod quod ad salutem pertinet aeterna cogitare, eligere, &c. If any man say that by the strength of nature man can thinke or chuse any good thing belonging to eternall life, or giue consent to holesome preaching, he is deceived by the spirit of heresie, seeing the Lord saith, you can doe nothing without me. This Council leaueh not any strength at all in mans free will.

In defence of this truth dyed Thomas Spicer, Iohn Denis, Edmund Poole, that man hath no free will of himselfe to doe any good thing, pag. 1912. articul. 7.

The Papists.

THEY affirme, that contrition, which is ioyned with an inward terror of the minde, and proceedeth from the sight and consideration of our sinnes, doth not appertaine to the law; but to the Gospell. Bellarmin. lib. 2. c. 2. propos. 3.

Argum. 1. Christ preached repentance; to the which contrition belongeth, Matth. 4. 17. Repent, for the kingdome of God is at hand: but Christ was a Minister of the Gospell, not of the law. Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, repentance hath part from the law, part from the Gospell: from the law it hath the sight of sinne and terror of minde for the same; from the Gospell it hath hope and comfort; springing of faith in Christ; wherefore this reason sheweth not, that repentance in euery parte thereof is of the Gospell: Secondly, though the law and Gospell are in nature and propriety distinguished, yet they may be ioyned in vse: so Moses the Minister of the law may preach Christ, and Christ the Minister of the Gospell doth also establish the law, and by the terrors of the law call men to the knowledge of their sinne, where repentance beginneth.

Argum. 2. The law hath no promise of grace, contrition hath a promise of grace, as Ilay 66. 2. Who shall look, and see him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit: Ergo, contrition is not of the law. Bellarmin. ibid.

Ans. First, it is true, that the law hath not in it selfe, the promise of grace annexed, For grace and truth cometh by Iesus Christ, Iohn 1. 17. Yet by grace the law is made as a readie way and instrument to bring vs to Christ, in whom we finde grace, and so contrition wrought by the terrors of

Lib. de libera arbitrio.

John 1. 17.

of the lawe, doth prepare a way vnto grace. Secondly, contrition, as it is a worke of the lawe, being but yet begun in terror and feare, obtaineth not the promise, but being perfected by faith in Christ, and in the comforts of the Gospell, it findeth grace and mercie: as here in the Prophet, to contrition of heart is ioyned poornenes of spirit, which is a deniall of our selues, and an apprehension of Christ by faith.

The Protestants.

The terrors of a contrite heart, and the sight of sinne, where contrition beginneth, cometh by the knowledge of the lawe, the Scripture is plaine.

Argum. 1. Rom. 7. 7. I knew not sinne, but by the Lawe, I had not knowne lust, Vnto the Lawe had I not knowne lust: therefore by the lawe cometh reuelation of sinne, which is the beginning of true contrition.

Argum. 2. S. Paul calleth the lawe, the killing letter, and the ministerie of condemnation, 2. Cor. 3. 6. But the Gospell is the ministerie of righteousness and life: Wherefore contrition, as therein is set before vs our damnable state by sinne, and ministreth to vs a sight of condemnation, is of the law. So likewise, Galath. 4. 3. We are in bondage and feare vnder the law, but by the Gospell we are made sons, and so receiue the spirit of the Sonne: Ibid. ver. 6. Ergo, the feare, terrors, and as it were bondage of the soule, is of the lawe. Ambrose saith, Lex iram operatur, fides gaudium: The lawe worketh wrath, faith bringeth ioy: In 3. ad Roman. Ad hoc data lex: ut terrori esset, &c. Therefore was the lawe giuen to be a terror to men, to prouoke them to good life.

The Papists.

Some of the Papists affirme, that in Contrition it is not necessary to haue a formall, that is, a resolute and expresse purpose of newnesse of life, but that this is alwayes included in the detesting of sinne; which implicite or inclusiue purpose is sufficient: So Iohann. Maior in 4. sententiar. dist. 14. qu. 1. Reg. lib. 13. in concil. Trident. x. 13.

Argum. David onely confessed his sinne, saying; Lord I haue sinned: so the Publican; Lord be mercifull to me a sinner: there is no expresse purpose of amendment of life mentioned. Likewise, the thief vpon the Crosse had no such expresse purpose: Ergo, it is not necessarie.

Ans. First, that David had a full purpose of the heart, euen in that instant to turne vnto God, it is euident, Psal. 51. 13. Then shall I teach thy wayes to the wicked: this Psalme was made by the Prophet, as a testimonie of his repentance, for that sinne, for the which Nathan reprobued him: and here he professeth, that he will become a new man.

Secondly, the Publicane finding mercie and departing iustified, no doubt had also an expresse purpose in himselfe for euer to forsake his sinne, for otherwise hee could not haue bene iustified, nor found remission of finnes: for this is the law and perpetuall rule of forgiveness, Ezech. 18. 21. If the wicked turne from his finnes, &c. and keepe all my statutes: his transgressions shall not be mentioned to find remission then, these two things are required, forsaking of sinne, and doing that which is right: and this is signified in the Publicanes smiting vpon his breast: as Augustine saith; Pectora iudicamus, non ut super peccata nostra panimentum solidemus, &c. Let vs knocke vpon our breasts, not to make a pauement, as it were, and beaten floore vpon our finnes: for hee that beatech vpon his breast and is not corrected, doth harden his finnes, he taketh them not away: so then the Publicane in this smiting vpon his breast, was amended and corrected, and thought with himselfe, neuer to doe the like againe.

Thirdly, 1. The thief vpon the crosse, being in the very agonie of death, and not expecting life, could not in that short time expresse euery part of his vnfeigned repentance. 2. Yet there appeareth in him, as that short moment could afford, both a detestation of sinne in condemning himselfe and his fellow, and a loue of righteousness, and desire thereunto, if hee had liued, in commending the innocencie of our Saviour.

The Protestants.

Wehold, that as in true Contrition, there must be perfect hatred of sinne; so also there is ioyned with it a determinate purpose of amendment of life.

Argum. 1. The place before cited out of Ezechiel, proueth it: Ezech. 18. 21. Likewise I say. 1. 16. When you make you cleane; cease to do euill, learne to do well: Act. 11. 23. They exhorted all, that with purpose of heart, they would turne to the Lord, Ephes. 4. 22. Cast off the old man; put on the new, &c. All these places do euidently proue, that in true contrition and repentance, there is required a forsaking or dying vnto sinne and liuing vnto righteousness.

Argum. 2. Beilarmine is a notable witness for vs, against this error, which hee labourerth to confute, lib. 2. de penit. ca. 6. 7. in two whole Chapters: and herein hee is also a witness against himselfe, for lib. 1. c. 20. he confuteth the contrary opinion, that to cease to do euill, and learne to do well, are not two parts requisite to repentance, and answereth that place by vs alleaged, I say. 1. 16. Cease to do euill, &c. But now much forgetting himselfe, but the truth preuailing more with him, he produceth this very place, to proue, that in true contrition or repentance, there must be a purpose

De Disciplin.
Christian.
cap. 1. Tom. 9.

pose of amendment, which is the same thing, that we defend, both before qu. 4. part. 2. and in this place. Augustine vpon these wordes of the Prophet Iſay, Lauamini, be yee washed, &c. Lauamini, & mundus est, qui & præterita plangit, & iterum non admittit: He is washed and is cleane, which doth bewaile his finnes past, and doth not commit them againe: de tempor. serm. 66.

The Papists.

1. Error.

4. They teach, that Contrition ought to be perfect, because it must proceed from the louest God, which is the most perfect kinde of loue, Catechis. Roman. pag. 439. and that the greatnesse of the griefe ought to be answerable to the quantity of the sinne: so they conclude, that a man shall neuer know when hee is sufficiently contrite, Thomas Aquinas: for hee must be contrite for euery great sinne hee hath committed, Tileman. Hesluf. loc. 9. de poenit. error. 27. 28. 32.

Argum. 1. That perfect Contrition is required, Bellarmino pretendeth to proue by these scriptures, 1 King. 8. 48. If they turne againe vnto thee with all their heart, &c. Isa. 1. 2. Turne vnto me with all your heart, &c. Bellarmino. c. 10.

Ans. 1. Those places do well proue, that our sorrow ought to be vnfeigned, and that we should neither dissemble, nor be indifferent in our sorrow: but we must giue our whole heart vnto God, that is, not to haue a double heart, and as the wordes are; a heart and a brayn, Psalm. 123. 2. So then in our Contrition a godly endeouour, and a diligent care is required, a sufficiencie in our sorrow cannot be performed: No, though our eyes were as fountaines of teares; as the Prophet wisheth, Ierem. 9. 1.

The Protestants.

What is this else but a plaine doctrine of desperation? for when is a man able so perfectly to be contrite, as his loue toward God ought to be perfect? or how can his sorrow be equiualent to the waight of his finnes? or can a man remember all his finnes, that hee should be sorry for?

Argum. 1. The sorrow of Christians is not infinite or vncertaine, but it is determined and limited, Saint Paul saith, That he should not be swallowed vp of too much heavinesse, 1 Corinth. 2. 7. And againe, My Epistle made you sorie, though for a season. 2. Corinth. 7. 8.

Argum. 2. Iob. 3. 2. We cannot answer God one thing of a thousand: our greatest sorrow is not sufficient for our least sinne: therefore there can be no proportion betwene the greatnesse of our sinne & the quantitie of our sorrow: Peter committed a great sinne in denying of his Master, and yet vpon his bitter weeping he was receiued to mercie, as Hierome saith, Petrus ter negauit, et in sumum locum resituit lacryma: Peters bitter teares after thrice deniall restored him to his place: Was Peters sorrow any way answerable in measure or quantitie to his sinne? We must indeed wepe bitterly as Peter did, and after we are thoroughly humbled, we are certaine, that God will looke vpon vs, as he did vpon Peter: and the inward feeling of Gods fauour will be the boundes and limits of our sorrow.

Their owne Canons are more equall, which do not enioyne so strict penance, and such infinite contrition, as these new masters require: as decrees Grægor. lib. 5. tit. 38. c. 5. Alexander. concerning certaine that in their confession say, that they cannot abstaine from those sinnes, decreeth, Eorum confessionem recipere debes, &c. You must receiue their confession, for though it be no true repentance, yet it is a true confession.

De tempor.
nata. Sermon. 3.

Augustine saith, Ita est vera penitentia, quando quis se conuertit, et non reuertatur: This is true repentance, when a man doth so turne vnto God, that he returne not vnto sinne. When a man therefore hath in this manner repented, he may be sure that hee hath mourned sufficiently: it is therefore vntue, that a man is vncertaine when he hath sorrowed enough.

Synod. Colonienf. part. 7. cap. 19. Quamuis quis peccato mordeatur, si tamen peniteat, et de cetero peccandi voluntatem nullam habeat, considerens de Domini misericordia accedat ad Eucharistiam, &c. Although a man be grieved in conscience for his sinne, yet if he repent him, so that he haue a purpose not to sinne againe, trusting to Gods mercie, let him come without feare to the Communion: If he thus sorrowing be without feare, it followeth, that God in Christ accepteth his sorrow as sufficient.

Bellarmino hath here a certaine fond conceite of his owne, bringing in this distinction of sorrow in contrition: that there is Dolor summus intensiue, and appreciativus: The greatest and highest sorrow, intensiue, and by way of estimation: of this sort he giueth an example, as a good man may weepe more for the losse of his children, then for his finnes; yet in his choyce he had rather lose his children, then offend God: this is that kinde of griefe by way of estimation, though intensiue he grieue more for his children, yet when he maketh an estimate of the one and the other, he preferreth that in his iudgement, which is the least, in his affection: this kinde of griefe when as the affection goeth before the iudgement, hee thinketh is sufficient for contrition.

2. ad Rom. cap. 11.

Argum. Joel. 2. Turne unto God, with all your heart: this must be vnderstood of this greatest kind of griefe, by way of estimation, &c.

Ans. Whereas it is said, 1. King. 8. 49. If they turne vnto thee with all their heart and soule, &c. how can they turne with the whole heart and affection, when as they in their affection can sorrowe more for other things? wherefore as God will haue the whole and entire soule, that is the iudgement, so the whole heart also and affection. As Augustine saith, Iammi tristitem, &c. I finde one very heauie, I aske him, Friend, why art thou heauie? saith he, I haue lost my money: Locus immundus fructus nullus: This is an vncleane place, there can be no fruite: De tempor. serm. 151.

The Protestants.

Though I denie not but a right good man, may sometime breake out more into affection for some temporall losse, than for the committing of sinne, as Matth. 2. 18. The women mourne for their children, and would not be comforted: yet this is not a vertue to be commended, but an infirmie to be amended, as it was commendable in Elk, who hearing patiently the heauie newes of the death of his sonnes, when mention was made of the taking of the Arke, could hold no longer, but through feeblenes caused by sudden griefe, fell backward and brake his neck, 1. Sam. 4. 17.

Argum. This hath been the continuall practise of the Saints to lament more for sinne, than for any other temporall losse whatsoever: as Dauid saith, Plalm. 6. 6. I cause my bed every night to swimme, and water my couch with teares: Plalm. 119. 136. Mine eyes gush out with rimers of water, because they keepe not thy law. Matth. 26. 75. Peter went out, and wept bitterly: No earthly matter could haue drawne from them such plentiful store of teares: wherefore the Saints did euen weep most inwardly, that is, earnestly and effectually for sinne.

Your owne canons are cleere in this point: Dee. par. 2. caus. 33. dist. 3. c. 42. Satis durum est cuiusmodi dolorem, &c. Hee is very hard whose griefe of minde the teares of his bodie cannot deduce: but let him know, si culpabiliter durum, that he is very culpable in his hardnes, which doth lament the losses of time, the death of his friend, &c. and doth not shew the griefe for sinne with teares: Let none therefore excuse themselves, that they haue not a fountaine of teares, who with teares doe shew the griefe of temporall things. This sentence is rehearsed out of Augustine, and approved by the Master of Sentences, lib. 4. dist. 15. f. whereby they are defined to bee culpable, which doe more expresse the losse of things temporall, by their teares, than of spirituall: which is that which Bellarmino alloweth as good and commendable.

The Papists.

Contrition (they say) as it is not altogether without hope to obtaine mercie: so can it not be Error, Chaucer certitudinem remissionis peccatorum, a certaine or vndoubted assurance of remission of sinne, Council. Trident. sess. 6. cap. 9. Bellarm. lib. 2. cap. 2.

The Protestants.

Godly sorrow and contrition bringeth ioy and comfort to the soule in the end, with vndoubted assurance of the forgiuenes and remission of sinnes.

Argum. 1. Godly sorrow worketh in the true penitent person, a clearing of the minde, 2. Coloss. 3. 12. but the soule and conscience cannot be cleered and set at rest, vnlesse we bee persuaded that our sinnes are forgiuen vs: Ergo.

Argum. 2. All hope is certaine, and bringeth vndoubted assurance, and therefore it is called the anchor of the soule, Hebr. 6. 19. Wherefore either contrition is voyde of hope altogether, (which they will not graunt) or if it haue any hope, it is sure and stable, and worketh a full perswasion and assurance of the mercie of God.

Augustine saith, Petrus mox à Domino indulgentiam accepit, qui amarissimè sinita trina negationis De tempor. serm. 66.

Peter straightway received pardon and indulgence, when hee had most bitterly bewayled the deniall of his three-fold deniall of Christ. How could Peter immediatly haue felt and received the remission of that great sinne, if the Lord had not assured his conscience thereof?

The former Canon of the Cullin Councell saith, That when a man hath sorrowed for his sinne, supposing not to doe the like, Securus & intripidus accedat: Let him draw neere without feare, and confidence. He that is secure and without feare, doubteth not: Ergo, he is assured of the forgiuenes of his sinne.

Bernard also saith: Animum penitentis lacrimis afflicti spiritus paracleti libenter consolatur, propius visitat, & ad vera salutis plenè reformat: A soule afflicted with penitent sorrowe, the spirit of comfort doth comfort, often visite, and fully bring it to the trust of pardon: de interior. domo cap. 37. The soule then may haue a full and assured trust of forgiuenes.

Their owne Canons are cleere for vs: Dee. par. 2. caus. 33. dist. 1. cap. 50. Nemo potest bene agere in misericordia, nisi qui sperauerit indulgentiam: No man can truly do repentance, if he do not hope for indulgence.

6. They affirme, that contrition is a neceſſarie meane vnto iuſtification, and that a man cannot be iuſtified, till he have been truly contrite for his finnes, Bellarmin. lib. 2. de penitent. c. 1.
Argum. Luk. 13. 3. Except ye repent, ye ſhall likewiſe periſh. Act. 3. 19. Repent, and turne, that thy finnes may be put away, when the time of reſreſhing ſhall come: Ergo, contrition is neceſſarie to iuſtification, Bellarmin. ibid.

Anſw. Firſt, it followeth not, without repentance and true contrition there is no iuſtification: Ergo, repentance is a meane vnto iuſtification: for faith cannot bee without workes, yet workes are no meane vnto faith: ſo repentance and contrition are the fruits of iuſtification, not a meane thereunto. Secondly, there is difference betweene iuſtification, and ſaluation, or glorification: contrition is a meane and way to ſaluation: by repentance thorough the merice of God in Chriſt wee are preferred from perishing and everlaſting deſtruction: and repentance goeth before our conſummation, and perfect abolition of our finnes in the day of reſreſhing at the coming of Chriſt: But it followeth not, that contrition therefore is a meane vnto iuſtification: for ſee we are iuſtified, then afterward glorified: our ſaluation is accomplished, Rom. 8. 30. Thirdly, contrition is a meane to aſſure vs of our iuſtification, but not to iuſtifie vs: as the Apoſtle ſaith, Philap. 1. 12. With ſcare and trembling ſuſtayne your ſalvation,

The Proteſtants.

That true contrition is neceſſarie, we willingly graunt, and that without it remiſſion of finnes cannot bee had: but wee denie that it is a neceſſarie meane vnto iuſtification: a neceſſarie ſigne, fruite, or worke of iuſtification it is, but not a meane or cauſe.

Argum. 1. We are iuſtified by faith, Rom. 4. 5. To him ihuſ beleeueth in him, that iuſtified hee godly faith is counted for righteousnes: But faith goeth before repentance, as Bellarmin. hath before confeſſed by the example of the Niniuites, who firſt beleeued, and afterward repented. Bellarmin. lib. 1. cap. 19. propoſ. 2. Ergo, iuſtification is before repentance, and ſo conſequentially repentance is no meane vnto it.

Argum. 2. Good workes are no meane to iuſtification, for then they ſhould goe before iuſtification: but as Auguſtine ſaith, Bona opera non procedunt iuſtificationem, ſed ſequuntur iuſtificationem: Good workes doe not goe before him that is to bee iuſtified, but they follow him that is iuſtified.

But contrition is a good worke: confeſſed and proued by Bellarmin. lib. 2. cap. 2. Ergo, it is a meane vnto iuſtification.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non vult Apoſtolus nos preſumere de operibus ante fidem, ac ſi meritis operum iuſtificationem accepiffemus, preſtoremus enim ſe fides inuonit: The Apoſtle would not haue vs preſume of workes before faith, as if by the merite of workes wee had receiued faith: for faith found thee ſinner in Pſal. 31. If then good workes goe not before faith, and faith and iuſtification come together, as I haue ſhewed, then contrition, being a good action, precedeth not iuſtification.

The Papiſts.

7. They make contrition a part of ſatisfaction for our finnes, and to be a cauſe of iuſtification: and remiſſion of finnes, not onely in diſpoſing and preparing of vs thereunto, but whereby wee verily obtaine and deſerue remiſſion of our finnes, Bellarmin. lib. 2. de penitent. cap. 1.

Argum. 1. Luk. 7. 47. Many finnes are forgiven her becauſe ſhe loued. Not onely faith, but loue or charitie obtaineth remiſſion of finnes, Bellarmin. ibid. Reſponſ. in huius locum.

Anſw. The argument is. 1. not from the cauſe to the effect, but from the effect to the cauſe: for Chriſt doth not reaſon thus, ſhe loued much, therefore many finnes are forgiven her: but contrariwiſe, Many finnes are forgiven her, therefore ſhe loued much: As the next wordes ſhew, Idcirco quia parua remiſſio, be loueth little. 2. And our Saviour ſaith in plaine wordes in the laſt verſe, that he ſaith had ſaued her, whereof her loue was an effect. 3. And further, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1. Joh. 3. 14. he ſaith not, we are tranſlated, but wee know wee are: ſo this woman by her loue might know or bee aſſured that her fins were remitted her. And Bellarmin. hath a ſaying not much vnlike, that theſe wordes of Chriſt, Many finnes are forgiven her, confirmant abſolutionem ſuſceptibilem illam, do confirme the abſolution inuiſibly giuen before, lib. 2. c. 14. reſp. ad obiect. 1. Her loue was a meane then to confirme her abſolution, which was inuiſible giuen before.

Exe. 18. 27. When the wicked turneth away from his wickedness he shall save his soule. Psal. 51. 10. Make you a new heart and new spirit, and cast away from you all your transgressions. The turning then away from sinne is the cause of life and of newnes of soule. Ergo, of iustification, Dan. 4. 24. Redeeme thy sinnes by thy almes, &c. Ergo, good charitable workes are the cause of the forgiveness of sinnes, Bellar. c. 12.

Ans. First, the places 1. in Ezechiel, if they bee taken in his sense, would prooue, that it is in a mans power to conuert his soule, or to renew his owne heart, whereas the Prophet acknowledgeth it wholly to be the Lords worke, Psal. 51. 10. Creue in me a new heart: and Iere. 31. Conuert you O Lord, and we shall be conuerted: 2. But why the Lord thus speaketh to man, in bidding him conuert, Saint Augustine rendreth the reason: Quia non sicut in lapidebus inueniatur Deus saluatiua nostrum: Because God worketh our saluation in vs, not as in senselesse stones: com. Pelag. lib. 1. c. 3. Man therefore sanctifieth his soule, or maketh his heart new, but as Gods instrument; as the axe in the workmans hand: it is Gods spirit that maketh man to make his heart new. 3. Bellarmin himselfe answereth vs with a sufficient answer, that remission of sinnes is first inuifible giuen; and then by our earnest repentance, it is confirmed and assured vnto vs: so then repentance is a meane to the obtaining of forgiveness, as these places prooue; but not to the inuifible grace or gift of remission.

Secondly, 1. The word in Daniel signifieth not to redeeme, but to breake off. for so is this word phara used, Gen. 27. 40. Thou shalt breake thy yoke from thy necke. 2. By (redeeming) admitting that reading, may be vnderstood not redemption to be made before God, but recompence to be made to men, whom he had injured. 3. Neither doth the Prophet speake of the forgiveness of his sinnes, but of the prolonging of his peace and prosperitie: for these words, For sian ignoscei Deum: God perhaps may forgive your sins, are not read in the Hebrue. 4. And how could the almes of an vbelieuer, such an one as Nabuchadnezzar was, be a cause of forgiveness, seeing without faith nothing is acceptable to God? 5. Lastly, the Kings righteous and mercifull dealing should be only a testimonie to his conscience, that his sinnes were forgiven. 6. Cantil. Cabilanens. c. 36. It is declared that sinnes, de industria, committed willingly, or wittingly, are redeemed by almes: Sic enim saluatur Deum mercede conuocare: So they should seeme to hire God with a reward.

The Protestants.

The contrition of the heart meriteth not, neither is any cause of the forgiveness of sins, which doth issue only out of the fountaine of Gods mercie by faith in Christ, the Scriptures doe

Cor. 1. Rom. 3. 24. We are iustified freely by grace. If freely, then is not our iustification merited, caused by any worke of ours.

Solus answereth: first, that we are iustified freely, though it be by the merit of contrition, because contrition is the gift of God. Secondly, contrition meriteth not, ex condigno, of condignitie or worthines, but ex congruo, of congruitie: which kinde of merite is founded not in Gods iustice, but in his benignitie and bountie, Bellar. cap. 12.

Curia. First, this is the very answer 1. of the old Pelagians, who did in like manner affirme, that the good will of man was of God, because it could not be in a man, vnlesse man were, vs habuerimus in a Deo habet, but for a man to be, is of God: for if therefore remission of sinnes bee of grace, and the gift of God, because contrition, whereby it is merited, is the gift of God; then say al that wee may bee saued by nature, and yet by the gift of God, because the nature of man is the gift and worke of God. 2. But the Apostle confuteth this glosse, in saying further, We are iustified freely, &c. thorough redemption in Christ Iesus: if thorough redemption, then not thorough contrition. 3. And againe, men first must be reconciled vnto God, and of enemies bee made friends, before he giue them gifts: as the Apostle saith, Christ first led captiuitie captiuo, that is, subdueth and remoueth sinne that led vs captiue, and then gane gifts vnto men, Ephes. 4. 8. Then must we first bee reconciled vnto God, which consisteth in the forgiveness of our sinnes, Rom. 3. 25. before wee can haue the gift of contrition. Wherefore if reconciliation and forgiveness of sinnes goe before contrition, it can be no meritorious cause of the remission of sinnes.

Secondly, 1. No merite or worke is of mercie, but of iustice, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 4. 4. To him that worketh the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt: wherefore the merite of congruitie is no merite, being founded in Gods mercie. 2. Neither is there any congruitie or consequence at all, but God should respect vs being his enemies: but enemies wee are before wee are reconciled by the remission of our sinnes: wherefore contrition, going before remission of sinnes, and so reconciliation, cannot deserue so much as of congruitie, if there were any such merite.

Ans. 2. That the contrition of the heart is no cause of our iustification, neither doth merite or deserue remission of sins: Saint Paul sheweth, Rom. 4. 5, 6. To him that beleeueth faith is counted for righteousness: And Dauid declareth the blessednes of that man, to whom God imputeth righteousness without works. It is faith then only that obtaineth remission of sins: and a man is iustified without any respect had to his workes. Therefore neither contrition, nor any other worke inward or outward, procureth remission of sinnes, but faith onely is the meane.

The fourteenth generall Controversie

So Augustine saith, Opera sequuntur iustificatum, non precedunt iustificandum: Workes followe a man already iustified, they goe not before to iustification, De fide & operibus. cap. 14. Therefore the worke of contrition is not available to iustification.

Interuello. Casarea. cap. 17. Ille satisfactio, qua culpam & eternam poenam expiat, soli Christo tribuenda est: That satisfaction, which taketh away the fault and eternall punishment, is onely to bee attributed to Christ: Ergo, contrition doth not satisfie for the sinne.

Lastly, Iulius 1. Decret. 11: thus testifieth, Fides omnes actus hominis precedere debet: Faith must goe before all the acts of men. Cyrill. Alexand. exposit. Nycen. symbol. Sicut fides absque operibus mortua est. As faith is dead without workes, so we may turne it and say, workes are dead without faith. Contrition then is either before faith or after; if before, being without faith, it is a dead worke, as is here specified, and so cannot merite: if after faith, then it commeth after iustification and remission of sinnes: for by faith are we iustified; Rom. 3. 26. That he might be a justifier of him, that is of the faith of Iesus.

We want not the evidence of some of their owne side: Capreolus in secund. sentent. dist. 40. Dominicus à Soto lib. 2. de natur & grat. cap. 4. doe denie that contrition any way either of congruie, or condignitie meriteth remission.

Augustine saith, Non solum propter vitia huius ignorantiam, sed etiam propter ipsum puluerem mundi huius, qui pedibus adhaerescit, quotidianam habere debemus poenitentiam: Not onely for the ignorances of this life, but euen for that drosse and dust of the world, which hangeth vpon our feete, wee ought daily to repent vs. He meaneth the lesser and smaller scapes of our life. And againe, Homo dum isto vivit in seculo, humanis affectibus veluti pedibus terram calcans ipsa conuersatione vitalem contrahit, unde dicat: dimitte nobis debita: Man, as long as he liueth in this world, with his affections, as with feete treading vpon the ground, he gathereth drosse, for the which he had neede to say, forgiue vs our sins, &c. in Iohan. tract. 57.

8. There is a kinde of contrition that proceedeth onely from the feare of punishment, when a man doth leaue sinning, not for any loue or delight he hath in God, but onely for feare of damnation: Euen this contrition also is good and profitable: yet this seruile feare is at length cleane driven out by charitie. But there remaineth still in the godly an awe and feare of God and his iudgements, with mistrust, and feare of hell and damnation; as Matth. 10. Feare him that can cast bodie and soule into hell: Rhemist. Ioh. 4. scil. 6. And Bellarmino saith, that if a sinner, solum poenae fugienda causa, &c. onely to auoide punishment, doe take heede of sinne, this is a good and profitable feare, lib. 2. 17.

Argum. Ierem. 5. 22. Feare ye not me (saith the Lord) which haue placed the sand for the bound of the sea? Malach. 1. 6. If I be a father, where is my honour? if I be a master, where is my feare? Mat. 10. vers. 28. Feare him which is able to destroy both soule and bodie in hell. Here wee see that God exacteth euen the feare of seruants, and the feare of hell punishment, which is a seruile feare, Bellarmino cap. 17.

Answ. First, the Lord in these places by his Prophets speaketh vnto the prophane wicked of those times: as Ierem. vers. 21. Hear O foolish people and without understanding: and Malach. 1. 2. it followeth in the same verse, O ye Priests that despise my name: These prophane persons had neede to be terrified with the feare of Gods iudgements: but it followeth not, that this feare is necessarie for the seruants of God. Secondly, the Prophet Malachie ioyning the honour of sonnes, and feare of seruants together; vnderstandeth not a seruile, miserable, and slauiish feare, but such as dutifull and obedient seruants yeeld vnto their masters as fathers, which is a commendable feare, and fit alwaies to bee retained. Thirdly, our Sauour speaketh by way of comparison: that they should not feare them which kill the bodie, &c. he preferreth a seruile feare of God, before this worldly feare of men: yet so that hee would not haue them stay here, or rest in this feare, for the which he diuers times reproveth them: as Luk. 12. 32. Feare not little flocke, it is your fathers will to give you a kingdome. Fourthly, we confesse that this seruile feare is profitable to make a beginning and further entrance: as Prou. 1. 7. The feare of God is the beginning of wisdom: but afterward loue must succede in the place thereof.

The Protestants.

First, we acknowledge that the feare of punishment is necessary in the beginning, to make a way for true loue to enter, as the bristle or needle (as Augustine saith) maketh rouse for the threed to enter. Wee also confesse, that there is a continuall feare and reuerence of God in the godlie, such as children haue of their parents: but as for any mistrust or feare of hell and damnation, after loue be once entred, and we made the children of God, which breedeth terror and anxietie of conscience, it is cleane expelled, and thrust out of the doores by loue.

Argum. 1. So saith the Apostle, There is no feare in loue: but perfect loue casteth out feare, and maketh vs to haue confidence in the day of iudgement, 1. Iohn 4. 17, 18. But hee that feareth damnation and is afraid of the day of iudgement, cannot haue confidence in that day. So Augustine: Quid dicitur de illo, qui capis timere diem iudicii? si perfecta in illo esset charitas, non timeret? What say we to him, that feareth the day of iudgement: if loue were perfect in him, he would not feare it?

Argum. 2. Matth. 23. 25. The slothfull seruant saith to his master, I knew thou wast a hard man, &c. and therefore I was afraid. This seruant was not commended for this feare, but blamed and reprov'd, and cast into vtter darknes: for his master said, Thou euill and slothfull seruant. And Origen heretofore writeth well: Nec est bonus huiusmodi timor, nec liberat nos talis timor a tenebris exterioribus: Neither is this feare good, neither doth it deliuer from vtter darknes: Tract. 33. in Matth.

Belarmine replieth: that to feare God cannot be euill; but they that haue this seruile feare, doe notwithstanding feare God: Ergo. c. 18.

Coma. First, the diuels feare God and tremble, Iam. 2. 19. doth hee thinke there is any good feare in diuels? Secondly, neither doe those feare God, but hell: for if there were no hell, they would not feare God at all.

Argum. 3. God is not to be loued for hope of reward: Ergo, neither to bee serued for feare of punishment.

Belarmine answereth, that the reason is not alike: for the obiect of loue is good, the obiect of feare is euill: God is good, and therefore to bee loued for himselfe: but he is not euill, and therefore to be feared for another, cap. 18. resp. ad argum. 6.

Coma. First, the obiect indeede of seruile feare is euill, but the obiect of a godly feare is good; as Eccl. 12. 13. Feare God and keepe his commandments: will he say that the obiect of this feare is euill? Secondly, if God be onely to be feared for another thing, then all feare shall be seruile, and the shall feare is abolished, when God is feared and reuerenced as a father for himselfe. Thirdly, Thomas sheweth the reason to be alike: Qui diligit, &c. He that loueth, keepeth the commandment, not because he is compelled with feare of punishment, or greedines of reward, but because, that which is commaunded is good: Tom. 4. de filio prodigo.

Synd. Moguntin. cap. 10. Libertatem Christianam intelligimus, &c. non ut alij homines penarum metu imperio legis compellantur, &c. We vnderstand Christian libertie, not that wee should not doe those things which are commaunded, but that we should not as others are, be drawne or enforced to keepe through feare of punishment, &c. Ergo, there remaineth no feare of punishment in the righteous.

We haue most cleere testimonies beside: Ambros. epist. 84. Timoris, quo Deus metuitur nulla distat, &c. There is no difference in name of that feare, wherewith God is feared, &c. there is feare of punishment; here is carefulnes for the reward: Of the seruile feare it is said, perfect loue expelleth feare, but of the liberall feare; The feare of the Lord is holie and remaineth for euer.

And againe, epistol. 7. Velle sapientis, seruire insipientis: To be willing, is the part of a wise man; to serue, of a foole: in the Law there is seruitude, in the Gospell libertie, &c. Seruis peccator formidat: A sinner is a slaue to his feare.

Hieron. de 42. Mansionib. Duplicia sunt in scripturis vincula, &c. There are two sorts of bands in Scripture, &c. but Christs bands are voluntarie, Et vertuntur in amplexum, and are turned into embracing.

Deus. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 41. c. 8. Qui ex timore facit preceptum, aliter quam debeat facit, & ideo iam non seruus: That of feare doth the commaundement, doth it otherwise then he should, and therefore doth it not at all. By all these testimonies it is euident, that this seruile feare of punishment hath no place where the loue of God is.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, OF AVRICVLAR

Confession, the second part of penance.

The Papists.

38. Error.

None can rightly seeke for absolution at the Priests hands, vnlesse they confesse particularly at the least all their mortall sinnes, whether they be committed in minde, heart, will, and cogitation onely, or in word, and worke, with all the necessarie circumstances and differences of the same, Rhemist. loh. 20. fcl. 5. And this sacramentall confession, as they call it, must be made secretly to the Priest, Council. Trident. sess. 14. can. 6.

Argum. 1. This wonderfull power of remitting and retaining of sins, which was giuen to the Apostles and their successors, loh. 20. 22. were giuen them in vaine, if no man were bound to seeke for absolution at their hands: which cannot be had of them without distinct vtterance to them of our sinnes: for they cannot rule the cases of conscience, vnlesse they haue exact knowledge and cogitation of their sinnes, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. God hath not made his Ministers in Christs stead iudges of cases of conscience, as though there were in them an actuall power to remit and absolue sinnes: but their office is only to declare and set forth vnto all penitent persons, the promises of God for remission of sinnes, and the seueritie of Gods iudgement against impenitent persons: which is especially performed in the preaching and applying of the word either publikely or priuately: as Saint Paul calleth the Gospel committed vnto him, the word of reconciliation, 2. Cor. 5. 16.

2. A man therefore may by their ministerie, which are the preachers of reconciliation, finde remission of sinnes, without a particular declaration thereof: neither is it necessarie for them to haue so exact a knowledge of our sinnes, seeing they are not absolute iudges of the conscience, but the ministers and ambassadours of reconciliation, 2. Cor. 5. 20.

3. And Ministers are not to stay while suite is made vnto them for their helpe, but they ought to exhort and desire men to be reconciled to God by their ministerie.

Bellarmine answereth, that the Priests are truly and properly iudges of mens sinnes, and haue iudiciarie power not to declare or testifie the forgiveness of sins, but truly to binde, or loose them. First, they are called the keyes: which doe verily open and shut the doore, not signifie the opening and shutting: as Christ is said to haue the key of Dauid to open and shut, which power Christ communicateth to the Apostles and their successors. Secondly, to binde and to loose doe not signifie, to denounce and declare, but in deede to put on, or take off the bondes; so are they said to retaine sinnes: and what is it else to retaine, but not remitters, not to be minded to remit? Thirdly, the words are, whose sinnes, not all mens sinnes are remitted, but whom the Priest shall iudge meet but the word is preached to all, remission of sins is not giuen to all: therefore this is not vnderstood of the preaching of the word, but of the iudiciarie power of the keyes. Fourthly, in that Christ breathed vpon them, it sheweth, that as a blast doth extinguish the fire, and chase the clouds, so they had power verily to extinguish sinnes, and not to declare onely: Bellar. lib. 3. c. 2.

Contra. First, the keyes 1. of the Church doe truly open and shut, being executed according to the will and minde of the master of the house: the seruant to whom the keyes are committed, doth open and shut, yet but as a seruant, and according to his masters direction: so the keyes of the Church are committed to men; but as ministers of the keyes, not to open and shut at their pleasure, but as Christ prescribeth. 2. But it is not farre from blasphemie, to say that the true power of the keyes, which Christ hath, is communicated to the ministers of the Church: for he openeth, and no man shutteth, &c. Reuel. 3. 8. but man may open to some, to whom Christ may shut, and he shut the doore against others, to whom Christ may open: yea and when the Pharisees had said, Who can forgive sinnes, but God onely? Mark. 2. 7. Christ reproveth them not, but sheweth, that hee (being both God and man) had authoritie also to forgive sinnes. Christ therefore onely properly forgiveth, the Apostles forgive as his ministers. 3. And that these keyes are dispensed in preaching the word, and not onely in the discipline of the Church; it is euident, Act. 14. 27. a doore of faith is opened by the preaching of the Apostles, Matth. 23. 13. The Pharisees by not preaching this doctrine are said to shut vp the kingdom of heauen. Thus their owne canons testifie, apost. Clem. Per ipsum, per verbum Dei, & salubre consilium curatur: He that is troubled with his sinne, and confesseth to the Minister, &c. that by him thorough the word of God, and wholesome counsell he may be cured. Sinnes then are cured and healed by the word of God.

Secondly, the Apostles and they which succede them, doe truly binde and loose, remit and retaine sinnes, but as ministers, and so long as they execute this authoritie according to Christs will: as Peter hath the keyes, but he is first built vpon the rocke, Matt. 16. 18. the Apostles haue power to binde and loose, Matth. 18. 18. but they must doe it in Christs name, vers. 20. otherwise, a curse causelesse shall not come, Pro. 26. 2. And, though men curse, God will blesse, Psal. 109. 28. The blind man was cast out by the Pharisees, but he was received in by Christ, Iohn 9.35. S. Ambrose saith, De ministerio sacerdotum est, &c. Quis tamus est, &c. In giving the spirit, the gift is Gods; the ministerie the Priests, &c. who is so great, as to arrogate to himselfe the bestowing of this gift? Lib. 1. de spirit. sanct. c. 7.

Thirdly, 1. As the word of God is not to be denied to any, that will receive it; so neither is remission of finnes to be withheld from any by the will of man, that doe desire it: the word is not to be cast before swine and dogges, Matth. 7.6. no more is remission of finnes to be granted to the impenitent. 2. If the Minister shall at his pleasure denie remission to the penitent, his sentence bindeth not before God: as Origene well saith: Si aliquis non recto iudicio, &c. If any man by the erroneous iudgement of those, which gouerne the Church be cast out, if he haue not deserved to be cast out, is not any thing by this error of iudgement, &c. Hom. 14. in Leuitic.

Fourthly, the breathing which Christ vsed, betokened the giuing of the holy Ghost, which truly and properly doth remit and retaine finnes, as the winde chafeth away the cloudes. This sheweth not a iudiciall authoritie in men, that are but the ministers of the spirit, but an absolute power in the spirit: as Ambrose excellently saith, Per spiritum sanctum peccata donantur, &c. Finnes are forgiven by the holy spirit: but men to the remission of finnes doe exhibite their ministerie: Non ius alicuius potestatis exercent: They do not exercise any right of power, &c. they pray, God forgieue; the seruice is mans, the munificence is from a superne power; lib. 3. de spirit. c. 19.

Argum. 2. As the Priests in the law had only authoritie to discern the leprosie of the people, and therefore Christ sendeth the lepers to the Priest, Luk. 17.14. so men must reueale the spirituall leprosie of sinne to the Priest, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. First, the leprosie was not healed by the Priest, but onely declared to bee healed: so finnes are declared to be forgiven by the Priest, not properly forgiven. Secondly, the Priest retained not knowledge of all diseases, but of this, that was contagious: therefore it would not follow hereupon, that all finnes are to be confessed to the Priest; but such as are notorious, where publique confession is by Church discipline inioyned: and such confession we denie not. Thirdly, the argument followeth not from the Priests of the law, to the Ministers of the Gospell: for the Priesthood of the law is translated wholly vnto Christ, who hath all knowledge to discern, and power to heale our spirituall diseases.

Argum. 3. Act. 19.18. Many that beleued, came and confessed, and shewed their works: Hence the Iesuite would inferre the necessitie of auricular confession, Lib. 3. de penitent. cap. 4. Bellarm.

Ans. This place serueth nothing at all for his purpose: First, all that beleued came not to confesse, but such as were pricked in conscience, with remembrance of some especiall finnes, as it followeth, ver. 19. they that vsed curious Arts brought their bookes: but the papistes inioyne auricular confession of necessitie to all. 2. It is not said they made particular rehearfall of all their finnes, but generally confessed themselves to be sinners: as Daniell confesseth, cap. 9.5. We haue sinned and done wickedly, &c. 3. It was no confession made in the eare, but publicly before all the multitude: but auricular confession is made only in the eare of the Priest. Fourthly, these beleued came but once, that we read of, in the beginning of their conuersion to confesse, and they came willingly without constraint: But they exact a yearly confession of the people, and enforce them to it. They must seeke better grounds for their care confession then this, or else they are in misse of it.

Belarmine replieth, 1. That they confessed all their finnes: for when the Scripture speaketh absolutely of finnes, all must be vnderstood: as Matth. 9.2. Thy finnes are forgiven thee: that is, all thy finnes. 2. The Ephesians might confesse oftner, then this once, though it be not mentioned; for we may say as well, they were not baptized, because it is not expressed. 3. Neither are all with bound to confesse, but they which are touched in conscience. 4. Neither is it expressed, whether they confessed priuately or publicly. 5. They came willingly to confession, because there was no law to enioyne them. Bellarm. cap. 4.

Ans. First, where 1. mention is made of forgiveness of finnes, all must be vnderstood, because there is a necessitie, that all be forgiven: but of confessing all finnes there is no necessitie, 1. And they confessed their workes, id est, but the Papists exact confession of thoughtes and words. 3. Neither confessed they all their workes, but such as were notorious and offensive, as it followeth ver. 19. such were the workes of them that exercised curious artes.

Secondly, 1. There is no question but they were baptized, because it is Christs generall ordinance; so is not auricular confession. 2. Neyther could they confesse, as they did, to S. Paul yearly, because he was not alwayes with them. 3. Neither afterward could the beleuers confesse such workes, as they did in their infidelitie.

Thirdly, it is untrue, that you say; for you require confession of all whatsoeuer, neither do you give absolution, but vpon such confession: but all that sinne haue neede of absolution: therefore all must confesse.

Kkk 4

Fourthly,

Fourthly, it is evident, that this confeſſion of their workes was publike, as it is expreſſed verſ. 19. They which uſed curious artes, burned their bookes: In conſpectu omnium, in the ſight of all. Fifthly, if the Scriptures authorize not any law to enioyne confeſſion, it is great presumption for you, to lay ſuch a yoke vpon the Lordes people.

Argum. 4. 2. Cor. 5. 19. He hath committed to vs the word of reconciliation, now wee are ambassadors for Chriſt, &c. But how can men be reconciled, vnleſſe they make their caſe knowne, and confeſſe their finnes. Bellarmin. cap. 4. loc. 2.

Anſw. 1. If thoſe Embaſſadors reconciled to themſelves, it were fit confeſſion ſhould be made to them, but ſeeing they pray to be reconciled to God, it ſufficeth to confeſſe to God. 2. The word of reconciliation is committed vnto them: Ergo, by the preaching of the word men are reconciled: but confeſſion of finnes is not requiſite at euery preaching of the word.

Argum. 5. 1. Tim. 5. 16. Confeſſe your finnes one to another, and pray one for another: that is the Elders and Prieſtes ſpoken of verſ. 14. muſt pray for them, and to them they muſt confeſſe: Bellarm. ibid.

Anſw. This place is very direct againſt them. 1. If to confeſſe one to another, be vnderſtood of the people and the prieſt, then muſt the prieſt confeſſe to the people, as the people doth to him: for ſo the word confitebor ſignifieth, as 1. Theſſ. 4. 18. Comfort your ſelves one another, &c. 2. The Apoſtle addeth, The prayer of a righteous man availeth much; hee ſaith not, the prayer of a righteous Prieſt, but of any righteous: ſo verſ. 19. If any of you hath erred, and ſome man hath corrected him, &c. He ſpeaketh not onely of the Miniſter, but of any other faithfull man.

Argum. 6. 1. Iohn 1. 9. If we acknowledge our finnes, he is faithfull and juſt to forgive vs our finnes, and to cleaſe vs from all vnrightheouſneſſe: this is not vnderſtood of confeſſion made to God. 1. For Gods faithfullneſſe is in keeping his promiſe; but there is no promiſe extant in Scripture, of forgiveness to thoſe, that confeſſe to God, but to thoſe, that confeſſe to the Miniſters, &c. 2. And if it ſufficed to confeſſe to God; then would not care to ſeek for forgiveness at mans hand, and ſo Chriſt had ſaid in vaine, Whoſe finnes ye remit, &c. Bellarmin. c. 4.

Anſw. Firſt, it is boldly and vntreuly affirmed, that there is no promiſe, &c. to them that confeſſe to God: there is 1. nothing more evident in Scripture, as 1. King. 8. 47. If they ſinne againſt thee, &c. and returne and pray, ſaying, Wee haue ſinned and done wickedly, then beare thou in heauen, and be mercifull: here is a direct promiſe of mercie to thoſe that confeſſe to God. 2. Neither is the Miniſtrie to be deſpiſed, but there is great vſe thereof: 1. both by the preaching of the word, in calling vpon the people to repent, and confeſſe their finnes to God: 2. And where the grieſe of ſin is ſuch, as the ſoule of the penitent cannot waſtle againſt it, in this caſe he is to reſort to the Miniſter. 3. And it is the Miniſters part, where hee ſeeth evident ſignes of repentance, to declare the mercie of God, and looſing of finnes vnto ſuch, though not confeſſed vnto him: Peter confeſſed not to Chriſt, but only wept, and was forgiven: the inceſtuous partie confeſſed not to Paul, but by his great ſorrow ſhewed his repentance, yet the Apoſtle forgave him, 2. Corintha. 10. 4. Like as then the Leper being firſt cured of Chriſt, was bidde to ſhew himſelfe to the Prieſt, Matth. 8. 4. according to the law: ſo they, which confeſſing vnto God, do finde remiſſion, muſt notwithstanding by the miniſtrie of the word labour to be confirmed therein.

Secondly, this place is chiefly to be vnderſtood of confeſſing vnto God. 1. The Apoſtle ſpeaketh generally of all, excluding not himſelfe: but to whom ſhould the Apoſtles confeſſe but vnto God. 2. The Apoſtle ſaith, to cleaſe vs: but man can not cleaſe vs, this is onely Gods worke. 3. And God onely cleaſeth from all vnrightheouſneſſe: for all our finnes cannot be made manifeſt to men, no, not to our owne conſcience: but, though our owne heart condemne vs not: God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things. 1. Iohn 3. 20.

Argum. 7. In the laſt place Bellarmin. produceth many testimonies out of the councils and fathers, to proue auricular and particular confeſſion, making them to ſpeake that, which they neuer knew: the places alleaged, I purpoſe not particularly to anſwere, for theſe reaſons. 1. Be- cauſe my purpoſe is to deale chiefly with places of Scripture. 2. For that I intending chiefly the good and profite of the vnlearned, I would not diſtract them, or hinder them from more profitable knowledge, by the curious diſcuſſing of the fathers. 3. This worke would by this meanes haue grown to a greater volume, then was fit for euery mans vſe. 4. I thought it not needfull to handle at large theſe testimonies, writing in our owne language, which the aduerſarie, that firſt gaue occaſion vnderſtandeth not. 5. Be cauſe ſome other learned men of our Church, with a godly zeale and good ſucceſſe, haue already vnderſtand the thorough confutation of all popiſh allegations: to whom I wiſh both all diuine aſſiſtance, and humane encouragement, to proceed in ſo excellent an enterpriſe. 6. The Printer haſtening the worke, which was more then halfe printed, before all was finiſhed, neither time nor leſure ſerued to deale in the testimonies of the fathers.

Yet thus much ſhall ſuffice for a generall anſwere at this time: that none of the testimonies alleaged, alleged, till we come to the yeere 600. and after, when superstition began to entcrease (asid the testimonies of the times following we much regard not) do witness for auricular confession: but all of them, if a suruey be taken of them, do speake of one of these five confessions: eyther 1. of confession to be made to God: as Tertullian; Exomologesis est, qua delictum Domino confitemur: That is confession, whereby wee do confesse our sinne vnto God, Apolog. cap. 4. Or els 2. of publike confession made before the whole Church, for some publike sinne; as the same Tertullian: Ergo, cunctis fratrum genua preteritis, Christum exoras: When thou bowest thy selfe to thy brethrens feet, thou entreatest Christ. Thirdly, they speake of a confession, which they made each to other, Beda in 5. Iacob. Quotidiana leniaq; peccata alternitrum coequalibus confiteamur, &c. Our daily sinnes let vs confesse to our equals, one to another. Fourthly, they commend confession made to the Priest, when the conscience otherwise cannot be settled: so Origen hom. 2. in Psal. 37. Sine i qui habet intus inclusam escam indigestam, &c. As they, which haue meate vndigested in the stomacke, if they do vomite, are eased; so they that sinne, while they conceale it, are in a manner choaked, but vomiting of it vp by confession, &c. Fifthly, a generall confession to bee made, with reconciliation before the receiuing of the Communion, Cyprian maketh mention of: Nec ad communicationem venire quis possit: But none might come to the Communion, before hee had confessed, &c. lib. 3. epist. 16. All these kinds of confessions we acknowledge to haue been well knowne to the fathers, neyther do wee mislike them: but none of the ancient writers for 600. yeeres after Christ do witness for auricular confession, and particular enumeration of sinnes.

The Protestants.

Confession of sinnes, such as the Scripture alloweth, we doe acknowledge: as namely these foure kinds: There are priuate confessions, either to God alone, as Daniel confesseth, 9. 4. or for the easing of our conscience, to man also, as to him whom we haue offended, Matth. 5. 24. or to any other faithfull man, the Minister or some other, that we may be holpen and comforted by our mutuall prayers, Iam. 5. 16.

And herein we thinke and say with Bishop Ridley holy Martyr: Confession to the Minister, which is able to instruct, correct, comfort, and enforme the weake, wounded, and ignorant conscience, indeed I euer thought might doe much good in Christs congregation, and so I assure you I thinke euen at this day, pag. 1728. Epistol. ad West.

There are also two kinds of publike confession, either of the whole congregation together, Neh. 9. 3. or of some one or more, that make publike confession of their sinne, for the satisfying of the congregation, whom they haue offended: which belongeth to Ecclesiasticall discipline, 1. Corinth. 2. 6. Beside these kinds of confession, it is commendable also, which is practized in some reformed Churches, that before the receiuing of the Sacrament, particular examination should be had of such as are to communicate, not so much to confesse such sinnes to the Minister, as to grieue their conscience, and so to finde ease for their griefe; as it is vsed to be done to this day in the reformed Churches of Bohemia. Harm. sect. 8. c. 5. confess. Bohem. And of Auspurg, sect. 1. c. 3. and of Saxonie, sect. 14. confess. Saxon. Neither are any admitted to the Communion, except they first heard and absolved of the pastor: but chieflie that every one may be particularly examined and made fit concerning their faith, and so prepared to come worthilie to the Lodes table: this vse Kemnitius thus writeth of, in 2. part. exam. c. 5. de confess. Confessionis usus apud nos &c. The vse of confession is reteyned with vs, &c. In this priuate colloquie, the pastors doe make triall of their auditors, whether they vnderstand the doctrine of sinne, of the degrees of sinne, of the wages thereof, and of faith in Christ, they are brought to a consideration of their sinnes, and asked if they doe earnestly repent for the same, if they haue a purpose to amend their life, and whether they doe not continue in certaine sinnes, &c. Master Caluine also approbeth this vse: Lib. 3. institut. cap. 4. sect. 13. Interim quia sistant se omnes pastori, &c. That the sheepe should present themselves to the Pastor, as often as they receive the Communion, I am so farre from reclayming against it, that I would haue it euery where obserued. And Epistol. 302. he sheweth, that the like vse is retained in Geneva. That no man may come to the holy table, before it be knowne to the Minister, that he hath profited in religion in some measure, and once a yeare the Minister in euery quarter goeth to euery house, to make triall both of their life and faith. Such confession, triall and examination, as these Churches haue receiued, I hold very conuenient and profitable, and the like to be desired and much wished for in our Church. But this particular confession, yea 1. of all sinnes, euen of them which are 2. secret, 3. and vpon paine of damnation, 4. and to none but the Priest, how vsitic soeuer; is an Antichristian yoake.

Argum. 1. It is not necessarie to make confession at all vnto men: the Prophet David confesseth onely vnto God. Against thee O Lord onely haue I sinned, Psal. 51. 4. Augustine also sayth, Quidam enim hominibus vt audiant confessiones meas, quasi ipsi sancturi sint languores meos? What haue men to doe to heare my confessions, as though they were able to heale my sores? Confession. 16103.

Argum. 2. If a man otherwise cannot finde ease of conscience, but will open his finnes to make it is not alwayes necessarie he should seeke to the Minister, though it be most convenient, if he be a sinner; any other faithfull godly man may serue: for so the Apostle biddeth vs, Acknowledge our faults, not to the priest, but one to another, Iam. 5. 16. Whereupon Augustine writeth, Pecata vestra debemus non solum Deo, sed etiam sanctis & Deum timensibus confiteri: We must confesse our finnes not onely to God, but to men also that feare God: He sayth not Sacerdotibus, only to the Priests, Homil. 12.

Argum. 3. Such a particular enumeration of finnes is not necessarie, neither is it possible: it sufficeth, where our finnes are kept from our sight, to say with the Prophet, Cleanse mee from my secret finnes, Psal. 19. 12. Augustine sayth, Quot habes in corde compunctiones facinorum, tot habes illic punitiones confessionum: Looke how many finnes doe pricke thy conscience, so must thy confession be. It is an vncomfortable doctrine to teach men to labour to remember all their finnes, and to make a particular catalogue of them: they haue worke enough to be eased of those finnes that lye heauie on the heart.

Bellarmino answereth, that if the enumeration of finnes to men be impossible, and vncomfortable, so is it in our confession to God, to whom also wee are to confesse, whatsoeuer finnes we know, and remember, and otherwise men are not enioyned to confesse to the Priest. Bellarmino lib. 3. c. 16.

Contra. First, the Lord himselfe doth not exact such a particular enumeration, as the Penite law doth: for Christ teaching his Disciples to pray, taught them to say thus, Forgiue vs our trespasses, &c. not willing them to make a particular rehearsal of their finnes; but the Popish Priests will accept no confession, if it be not particular. Secondly, in making confession to God, the Lord may bring our finnes to remembrance, Psal. 50. 21. I will set them in order before thee, which the Priest cannot doe. Thirdly, there is more comfort in confessing to God, because he hath power onely to forgiue, the other is but as Gods minister, and it is more comfortable to goe to the Master, then to the seruant: and we may more boldly open our infirmities to God, which we often are ashamed to shew to men.

Argum. 4. Christ saith, As my father sent me, so send I you; and when he sayd, receive ye the holy Ghost, whose finnes ye remit, &c. Here our Sauour Christ giueth authoritie and power to remit finnes, to his Apostles, as he himselfe executed the same in earth: But Christ forgauē finnes without any such particular confession, as to the woman, Luk. 7. that washed his feete with her teares: Ergo, remission of finnes may be pronounced without auricular confession, whereas by other signes the sorrow of the heart may be made knowne.

Bellarmino. The Apostles had not the like power to remit finnes, as Christ himselfe had: for Christ was able to iustifie and forgiue finnes without a sacrament: But the Apostles did it by meane: Bellarmino cap. 18. Neither as yet was the sacrament of confession instituted. cap. 17.

Answ. 1. The difference between Christs and his Apostles working is this, that Christ by his owne power did forgiue finnes, the Apostles in Christs name onely, as his Ministers and instruments: But concerning the outward meanes of saluation, Christ vsed the same which his Apostles did: he preached the Gospell, called for faith, and repentance, as his Apostles afterward did: and as Christ then forgauē finnes without a sacrament, so did hee by the ministerie of his Apostles: Paul hath the word of reconciliation committed to him, 2. Cor. 5. 19. he reconcileth to God by the preaching of the Gospell, which was no sacrament. Council. Cabitanens. can. 33. Deus saluatis & sanitatis author plerumque hanc prabet sua potentia inuisibilibus administratione, plerumque medicorum operatione: God the autor of health and saluation, often giueth remission of finnes by his inuisible power, often by the ministerie of the spirituall Physician. Sinnes are euen now forgiuen without the ministerie of man, and without auricular confession, and consequently without your popish sacrament of Penance: this therefore maketh no difference betweene Christs working, and his Apostles working.

2 But be it granted that Christs power herein was greater then his Apostles to forgiue finnes without confession: was also the power of the Prophets greater then theirs? I thinke they will not say so: yet Nathan pronounced absolution of Dauids finnes, without particular confession, he only sayd in generall, I haue sinned: therefore the Apostles did, and so the ministers of the Gospell may remit finnes without auricular confession.

3 If your Sacrament of confession were not instituted by Christ (which is the reason that you giue, why he vsed it not) then is there no such Sacrament at all: for Christ onely instituted Sacraments, the Apostles instituted none, but deliuered to the Church, as they had receiued from Christ. 1. Cor. 11. 23.

Argum. 5. A notable euidence against auricular and priuate confession we haue out of Socrumen his storie, lib. 7. c. 16. What thus reporteth, that Nestarius Patriarch of Constantinople, by reason of an adulterous acte committed betweene a Deacon of the Church, and a noble Matron, that that came to confesse to the penitentiarie Priest, deposed the said Priest, and abolished that kinde of confession, And permitted, that every man should doe according to his owne conscience in coming to the said confessor.

Nellarius answereth, that Nellarius discontinued publike, not private confession, because the woman publicly confessing her fault, there followed a tumult among the people: 2. and after Nellarius time, private confession was vsed in the Greeke Church: Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 14. 3. Yea, they themselves allow private confession. Ibid.

First, Nellarius abolished private not publike confession: 1. For the office of the Penitentiarie, was to receive their confession secretly, Quia grane visum est Episcopis in media plebe, vel in theatro, &c. It seemed hard to the Bishops, that in the midst of the people, as in a theater, they should confesse their sinnes: Nicephor. lib. 12. c. 28. Further, 2. Socrates saith, that the women coming to the Penitentiarie, did particulatim, particularly confesse her sinnes: lib. 5. cap. 19. 3. The tumult might arise not upon hir publike confession, but the publike notice thereof.

Secondly, private confession was not after this vsed in the Greeke Church: 1. Origine saith, lib. 1. in Psalm. 36. Si malorum tibi confitearis, &c. If thou art guiltie to thy selfe of any sinnes, reuolue them by confession to the Lord; trust in him, and he will heale thee. 2. Chrysostome hom. 2. in Psalm. 140. Si confunderis alicui dicere, &c. If thou be ashamed to confesse to another, confesse thy sinnes in thine owne soule, I say not, thou shouldest confesse to thy fellow seruant, to cast thee in the way, but to God, &c. 3. Deer. p. 2. caus. 33. dist. 1. c. 90. Some doe say that we must confesse only to God or to God, as the Grecians. Bellarmino saith, that these words, et Graeci, are like to haue bene thrust into the text. Aufu. So he saith, that Saxamen the reporter of this storie, telleth many things: These are his grosse shifts. 4. Thom. Waldens. a Popish writer graunteth, that Nellarius did simplie abrogate confession.

Thirdly, private confession with examination and triall of every mans faith, we acknowledge in such manner as I haue before expressed, but a particular enumeration of sinnes, with a necessity of conscience, which breedeth superstition, rather then instruction, without any godly consolation or exhortation at all ministred, we refuse and condemne as Antichristian.

We want not here the testimony of antiquitie: Alexander epist. 1. Confessio non extorquetur debet, sed sponte proferri: Confession must not bee violently extorted, but voluntarily confessed: but now in the Popish Church every man is bound of necessity to professe: Concil. Cabilonens. can. 33. Es peccata confiteamur Deo, &c. Let vs both confesse our sinnes vnto God, and say with Dauid, against thee haue I sinned, or confessed my sinne, and according to the infusion of the Apostle, let vs confesse one to another, that we may pray one for another to be saved. As wee must pray one for another, so we must confesse our sinnes one to another: Now the Priest only prayeth not for the people, but the people also for the Priest: Eccl. 2. neither must they confesse their sinnes onely to the Priest.

Fourthly, Caspar cap. 17. Quia in mentem non continent generali confessioni velle includuntur, & nihilominus remittuntur, quam si ea confitendo enumerasset: Those sinnes which come not to thy minde, are not included in a generall confession, and they shall notwithstanding as fully be remitted as they were particularly numbred. A particular enumeration therefore of sinnes is if necessary as now in the popish Church is required.

We haue sufficient euidence out of their owne decrees. Deer. part. 2. caus. 33. dist. 1. cap. 112. Non inquit, quid dixeris Petrus; inquit, quod sciebat, &c. I finde not what Peter said, I finde he did weep, Eccl. Lachryma lacrima delictorum, &c. Let teares wash away the sinne, which is a shame to confess.

Aug. gloss. ad Romanum sacerdotibus ora nostra ostendimus: Before wee shew our face to the Priest, we confesse our sinnes, we are cleansed from the leprosie of sinne. Cap. 47. gloss. Si circumcisio data est Abrahamo: As circumcision was given to Abraham as a signe of iustice, not as a cause of iustification; so confession is offered to the Priest, in token of pardon receiued, not as a cause of remission to be obtained.

Magist. lib. 4. dist. 12. c. 17. a. Ore tacente interdum veniam consequimur: Sometime wee obtaine pardon, the mouth being silent: if therefore remission of sinnes may be had, where there is no confession at all; and, where confession is vsed, it is a signe of remission already had, not a cause of remission afterward to be obtained, then is not such confession necessarie to obtaine remission of sinnes, as is by the Papists affirmed.

This is also hath the scale of the holy martyrs: Leonard Keyser of Bauaria burned for denying particular confession: yet three kinds of confessions be granted: the first of faith; which is alwaies necessary to the second of charitie; when a man hath offended his neighbour: the third not to be despised, which is a counsell of the ancient Ministers of the Church, pag. 88.

John Bradford holy Martyr, setteth downe these reasons against auricular confession: first, they make make it meritorious. Secondly, they make it of necessitie, taking him for no good Christian, that vseth it not: Thirdly, it requireth an impossibility, that is, the numbring and telling of al our sin. Fourthly, it alloweth praying to Saints: Procur sanctam Mariam, you must say, or the Priest for you. Fifthly, it is iniurious to the libertie of the Gospel, &c. pag. 1653.

AN APPENDIX OF OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES of Auricular confession.

The Papists.

19. Error.

1. This order and custome of Confession, they hold to be a diuine ordinance, no humane addition, Concil. Trid. sess. 14. can. 6. 8.

Argum. 1. The antiquitie of confession sheweth it to be a diuine ordinance, seeing it hath bin alway vsed in the Church, euen from the beginning, Bellarm. lib. 3. 12.

Ans. First, It is vntrue, that auricular confession hath been of ancient time vsed in the Church. In Chrysostomes time it was not: who sayth, I require thee not, that thou shouldst confesse thy sinnes to thy fellow seruant: in Psal. 30. homil. 1. Your owne glosse sayth: This institution of penance began vnder of some tradition of the vniuersall Church, then of any authoritie of the old or new Testament: De penitent. distinct. 5. in principio. Erasmus saith, apparet tempore Hieronymi institutam non fuisse: It appeareth, that in the time of Hierome, this secret confession of sinnes was not ordained, &c. But hinc our Diuines not aduisedly considering, what the olde Doctors doe say, are deceived: that which they say of generall and open confession, they wrest by and by to this secret and priuie kinde of confession. Secondly, it is apparant, that there was no publike constitution for auricular confession before the Laterane Councell, anno 1215. held by Innocentius 3. so that from thence it seemeth to take beginning.

Erasm. in schol. in epitaphium Fa-bri.

Argum. 2. Auricular confession seemeth so hard and difficult a thing, that it is like the people would neuer haue endured it, if it had not been by some diuine authoritie established: And againe, such is the vtilitie and profit that ariseth thereby, that God must needs be the author of. Bellarm. lib. 3. cap. 12.

The commodities that confession bringeth, he rehearseth to be these. First, Gods mercie appeareth, not in condemning vpon confession (as the iudges of this world doe) but in forgiving: his iustice, in that first, men are humbled by confession. Secondly, the Pastors themselves are benefited, in knowing by this meanes the diseases of their sheepe, that they may minister remedies the better, and applie the word against such sinnes. Thirdly, the commonwealth is profited, when as by this meanes men are reconciled, things are restored, &c. which things by the civill Courts cannot be amended. Fourthly, the parties themselves doe finde mercie for sinnes past, and strength to resist the like afterward. Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. 1. Auricular confession in deed is a grievous and hard yoke, which because the people haue borne, it followeth not, it should be of Gods institution: It was 1. an hard thing, for the idolatrous Israelites should sacrifice their children to their idols, that Baal's Priests should haue to their flesh with knives. The Pharisees 2. also did lay heauie burdens and grievous to be borne vpon the people, Matth. 23. 3. yet none of all these were of God. Many things beside were hard in poperie: as that the Pope should 3. tread vpon Emperors neckes, and make them his vassals and slaves, that he should with his taxes, annates, Peterpence, rob and pill the people, all these were hard yokes: to the which the people were made subiect, not wittingly, nor by the working of any diuine power; but as S. Paul prophesied: God sent them strong delusions so beleene lyes. 2. Thim. 1. 1. they were befotted with a superstitious feare, and so became slaves to this yoke of confession and other obseruances. And 4. againe, in that the Iesuite saith, it is an hard yoke, he hath made an argument against himselfe; for Christ saith, my yoke is ease: therefore this yoke being hard, is none of Christs.

2. Concerning the fruite and vtilitie, that commeth by auricular confession, you shall see what it is. Concil. Lateranens. pars. 50. ca. 21. Significasti nobis quendam Presbyterum cum alterum confessoris habito in finem in ecclesia frequenter dormuisse: You signified to vs that a certaine Priest of a diuillish motion, did often lie with an other mans wife in the Church. Here we see adulterie is one fruite of such confession. Further saith Robert Smith holy Martyr, it hath been a bewrayer of Kinges secrets, and the secrets of other mens consciences: and it hath been vsed as a meane to picke mens purser as he reporteth a storie of his owne knowledge, how a Gentleman his Matter, confessed to a Priest, was bound by the Priest to forgieue a great summe of money to one Master Grisbam, whereof the Priest had a good share, and so robbed his wife and children: and how afterward a great part of that debt by the gentlemans brother, some two or three hundred pounds was recovered. For. pag. 1692. Here be other fruites of auricular confession, treason, cousonage, robbetrie: And therefore it was well said of one Richard Bofstocke, (who was persecuted for it) that auricular confession had had killed more soules, then all the billes, clubbes, and halters haue done, whence King Henry was King of England, pag. 1107. col. 1.

As for those particular commodities rehearsed, they arise not of auricular confession. First, Gods mercie is more seene in forgiveness without confession made to men, when as we confesse only to God, Psal. 32. 5. I confessed my wickednes to the Lord, and then forgavest me, &c. His iustice also, in that he forgiveth not, but where men are first humbled by true sorrow and contrition: as Peter wept bitterly before he found mercie, and yet confessed not.

Secondly, it is not any way profitable to the Pastor to know mens particular faults, a generall confession, with some rehearsal of the manifest and greater sinnes sufficeth for the knowledge of the Pastor: neither should the Minister be so vndiscreete, as to bring mens secret infirmities into the pulpit: this maketh nothing for auricular confession.

Thirdly, I shewed before, that this auricular confession was the occasion of adulteries, treasons, revealing of secrets, of couenage, and such like: therefore the Common-wealth was hindered thereby, not benefited any thing at all.

Fourthly, the parties confessing, did neither find true remission for their sinnes past, (being taught rather by their owne satisfactorie workes to merite their forgiveness, than to depend vpon Gods mercie:) neither were they armed against sinne afterwards, but rather emboldened to commit the like; seeing by confession in the eares of the priest, and by procuring his fauour, they might yeerely be cleared from their offences.

Fifthly, all these afore said benefits the Church enioyed in the Apostles time: Gods mercie and iustice appeared in forgiveness of sins: the pastors and teachers tooke knowledge of the diseases of their flocke; many notorious sinners were corrected and amended; the penitent persons found comfort and strength against sinne: yet was there then no auricular confession heard of, nor many yeares after.

Sixthly, for the profite and vtilitie that cometh by auricular confession, their owne Canons witness: Caus. 30. qn. 1. c. 10. Non debet Episcopus aut Presbyter commisseri. &c. The Bishop or Presbyter must not companie with the women that come to confesse: Such trickes as these, were very common, when popish confession was vsed. Caus. 33. dist. 6. c. 2. Deponatur. &c. Let him be deposed, that revealeth the sinnes of the penitent person: This was an other of the fruits, to reveale the secrets of them which confessed.

The Protestants.

They are neuer able to shewe that it had any diuine institution: but it was a mere deuise and inuention of men. First, we reade that Nestarius a good Bishop of Constantinople, did abrogate this custome of confession vpon this occasion, which had before time been vsed in that Church: for it was found out, that a certaine woman of the citie, vnder this pretence of confession, had vnlawfull companie with the Priest to whom she confessed: whereupon the good man abolished that custome, seeing more harme than good to come by it. And this act of his was approved by that famous preacher Chrysostome, who succeeded him in that See: but if it had been the ordinance of God, it ought not for some abuse to haue been abolished.

Bellarmino answereth: First, that Sozomenus the reporter of this storie, Multa esse mentium, hath said many things therein. Secondly, he denyeth, that Nestarius the author of this act, was, Vir iudicatus, & eruditione clarus: A man famous for his holines and learning; as Caluinus speaketh of him. But these are but sillie shifts: to blame the author and the reporter: he answereth therefore in the third place, that Nestarius onely abolished publike confession, because the woman publicly acknowledging her adulterie, caused a tumult and vpror among the people. Bellarmino cap. 14.

Answer. It appeareth rather that Nestarius abolished priuate confession, than publike. 1. He did remoue the Priest from his office, that was appointed to take the confessions: which Priest was elected from the rest, Probatu vita, taciturnus & prudens: Such an one as was of an honest life, and could keepe counsell. But what neede he deepe counsell in publike confessions, made in the hearing of all? Bellarmino answereth: that some sinnes he heard publicly, some privately, which required secrecie. Answer: But Nestarius abrogans Presbyterium penitentiarum, did abrogate the whole office of the penitentiary Priest, as the Iesuite confesseth, so that he had no power, no more to heare priuate confessions. 2. Publike confession could not be any cause of the woman's adulterie, but was a meane rather to restraine it, and therefore Nestarius should not haue done well, to haue remoued that, which was a bridle to sinne; neither would Chrysostome his successor haue consented thereto: but priuate confession hath giuen very fit oportunitie to the committing of vnicennes, as we heard before out of the Laterane Councell: this therefore was abrogated, not the other. 3. Publike confession remained a long time after Nestarius dayes in the Church: as Augustine reporteth of one Victorinus a Rhetorician, who being conuerted to the faith, plenus edito loco professus est, did professe the Christian faith solemnely out of an high place in the Church;

Dist. 6. de poenit. c. 1. Sacramenti meliori confiteatur: Let a man confesse to the best Priest: C. 3. Prius alloweth to confesse to another priest, pro ignorantia, for the ignorance of their owne priest: Secr. Inter al. lib. 3. tit. 10. c. 2. Bonifac. 8. The Bishop may giue leaue to his subiect, Idem non debet confessorum: To choose a fit confessor: Therefore it is not necessarie to confesse to the parish priest: Clement. lib. 3. tit. 3. c. 2. Licence is graunted to the Friars to heare confessions. Extr. inu. inu. lib. 5. tit. 3. c. 2. Iuan. de Poliac did hold, that seruam confitendum est: That notwithstanding confession made to any other, they must confesse to their owne priest, which is by Pope Inno. 12. condemned for an error: so that they themselves are euident witnesses, that it is not necessarie to confesse to the parish priest.

That the actes of penance, as contrition, confession, are meritorious; is both contrary to the Scripture: for after Dauid had confessed his sinne in the presence of the Prophet Nathan, 1. Sam. 11. 19. yet he prayeth vnto God in this manner, Haue mercie vpon me according to the multitude of thy mercies: he ascribeth all to Gods mercie, nothing to the merite of his confession.

Saint Ambrose witnesseth the same, in 1. ad Ephes. Homines sic benedicis Deus, &c. God so blest them, that he bestoweth the gift of grace vpon them, not according to their merits, but according to his mercie.

The Gloss vpon their bannie Canons, dist. 1. de poenit. c. 37. thus testifieth, Fit confessio ad elationis penitentiam, non ad imputationem venia: Confession is made to shew repentance, not to obtaine pardon.

That also is sealed: Richard Collins troubled for saying, That in all thinges wherein he offended God, he should onely striue himselfe to God; and in which thinges he offended man, he should striue himselfe to man; Fox. pag. 832. Ergo, not necessarie alwayes to be confessed to a Priest.

The Papists.

It is enough for men once a yeare in the time of Lent, to confesse themselves, Council. Trid. 61. Error.

The Protestants.

Against this contrarie, Non tantum laici sed etiam sacerdotes vna die esse non debent sine poenitentia. Not onely lay men, but not Priests ought to be one day without repentance, In Apocalyp. 2. His reason is, because they cannot be one day without sinne.

Againe, the communion is often to be receiued: saith our Sauiour, This doe as oft as ye drinke it in remembrance of me. S. Ambrose: Accipe quotidie, quod tibi quotidie prodest: Take that euerie day, which may euerie day profit thee. He that deserueth not, or is not fit to receiue euerie day, is not fit to receiue after a yeare, De Sacram. lib. 5. c. 4. Therefore also we are often to examine and confess ourselues, seeing that without triall and examination, we must not approach to the Lordes table. 1. Cor. 11. 28. Let a man examine himselfe, &c.

Marbens Dymetrius Martyr at Lyons, anno. 1553. The true confession ought to be made, vnto the Priest once a yeare, but euerie day to God, and vnto such whom we haue offended. Fox. pag. 808.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, of satisfaction.

This question containeth these parts: First, whether the sinne being forgiven, there remaine any punishment.

Whether the temporall punishment of this life may bee redeemed by good workes.

Whether the wrath of God may be satisfied for sinne; and the punishment due vnto the same.

Whether one man may satisfie for another: of these now in their order.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE PUNISHMENT
remaine, the sinne being once pardoned.

The Papists.

They doe affirme, that it may stand with the iustice of God to forgive the sinne committed, 61. Error. yet reserue the punishment, Council. Triden. sess. 14. can. 14.

Argum. The Lord forgave vnto Dauid the sinne of adulterie and murder, which he had committed, yet hee punished him in the death of his child, 1. Sam. 12. 13. 14. Bellarmine. lib. 4. cap. 1.

That Crosse was laid vpon Dauid, not as a punishment of his sinne, but as a fatherly correction or chastisement, to exercise him and make him more carefull for the time following: as

De peccat.
merit. & remiss. lib. 2. 34.

Augustine saith, writing vpon the same example: Subsecutus est illum comminatio iouis offensa, ut plura hominis in illa humilitate exerceatur, atque probetur: The effect of the threatening immediately followed, that Dauid's godlines might thereby be tried and proued: Hee saith not, that Dauid might thereby be punished.

Bellarmino answereth: First, but the Scripture saith, that Dauid's sinne was the cause of the death of his child, because by this deede thou hast caused the enemies of God to blaspheme, the child that is borne, shall dye, 2. Sam. 12. 14.

Ans. This place rather maketh against the Iesuite: for Dauid is not bere punished in his child for the deede which he had done, but because in the deede doing he had giuen offence to the enemies of God, both to stop their mouthes, that they should not accuse Gods iustice in sparing Dauid; and to make him more carefull afterward, the Lord sent this crosse: as (Christus) saith, Dauid de peccatis: Propter hoc imponit nobis penam non de peccatis sumens supplicium, sed ad futura nos corrigens: For this cause God laicth punishment vpon vs, not to reuenge our sinnes, but to correct vs for afterward.

Bellarmino 2. Death is the punishment of original sin, and yet although that sinne be forgiven, death notwithstanding followeth: Ergo, the punishment remaineth after the sinne remitted.

Ans. 1. Though death came in first by sin, yet is it not now vnto the children of God a punishment of sin, but an end of their miserie, and an entrance to a better life: sinne indeede is a king of death, but our sinnes being forgiven vs in Christ, death hath lost his sting, 1. Cor. 15. 55. So death remaineth, but without a sting, it is no more a punishment of sin to the children of God, so then, as the gail of sin is taken away, but not the blot or staine thereof, so the sting of death, which is the guilt of sin, is gone, though corruption and mortalitie remaine. Secondly, the cogitation also and remembrance of death, is a notable meane to withdraw our minds from earthly things, and to prepare vs for the Lord: for this cause also death remaineth, so it is not vnto vs a punishment of sin.

Thus Augustine excellently saith: Mors in corporis Deus hominis, &c. God inflicted vpon man the death of the bodie for sinne: but after the remission of sinne, propter exercendam iustitiam, he hath not taken it away for the exercise of iustice: de peccatorum remission. lib. 2. c. 34.

Arg. 2. 1. The Israelites were punished for the golden Calfe, and yet God at Moses request had pardoned their sinne, Exod. 32. 2. Likewise when the people murmured, Numb. 14. God at the prayer of Moses, forgave their sinne, vers. 20. I haue forgiven it according to thy request: yet they all for this sinne dyed in the wilderness. 3. So Moses and Aaron because they did not glorify God at the waters of strife, receive this punishment, that they should not enter into the land of promise, Numb. 20. 12. and yet no man will say; but that Moses and Aaron after this were reconciled to God. 4. Amongst the Corinthians diuers were punished with death, for vnworthie receiving the Sacrament, yet were they reconciled to God: therefore the punishment of sinne of necessity remaineth, euen after the sinne is forgiven, Bellarmino lib. 4. de penitent. c. 2.

Ans. First, the two first examples haue the same answer: 1. That in some of them who perished through vnbeleefe, neither their sinne was remitted, nor yet the punishment: but the temporall plagues were beginnings and forerunners of eternall: as Augustine saith, Vnde illa de heri incipit, & ardebit usque ad extremam damnationem: The Lords reuenge beginneth here, and burneth to extreame condemnation. Your owne Canons affirme the same: Moses pro peccatis populi, &c. Moses entreated for the sinnes of the people, but yet obtained no pardon, de cr. par. 1. de 50. c. 37. 2. Againe, God at Moses request did onely pardon that great punishment, which he had determined in the vtter overthrow, and destruction of that nation: Numb. 14. 22. I will smite them, and make thee a greater nation than they. And thus the Psalmist expoundeth this place, Psalm 106. 23. Therefore he wounded to destroy them, but not Moses his chosen stood in the breach, so turne away his wrath, lest he should destroy them. 3. And those iudgements were not so much punishments to that nation, as examples vnto others, both to acknowledge Gods iustice and to glorifie him: Numb. 14. vers. 20. I haue forgiven it according to thy request, notwithstanding all the earth shall be filled with the glorie of the Lord: as also to take heede to offend in the like. 1. Cor. 10. 6. These are examples to vs, so the intent that we should not lust after such things, as they lusted.

Secondly, concerning the examples of Moses and Aaron, and of the Corinthians, I doe answer, that these were not punishments of their sins, (for there is no proportion betweene temporall punishment, and the greatnes of sin) but as Augustine well saith, as he is also cited in the Decrees, distict. 3. de penitent. c. 7. Vel ad demonstrationem debitis miserie, vel ad emendationem libilis vite, vel ad exercitacionem necessaria patientie, &c. Either to demonstrate the deserued miserie, or for the amendment of our vncertaine life, or the exercising of necessarie patience, the punishment abideth a man temporally, whome the sinne condemneth not eternally. So God doth chastise his children temporally, either to make them more heedfull, & to draw them more effectually to repentance, or to exercise their patience, or for the good example of others: but that their correctios are properly punishments for sinnes, it is not to be thought; neither doe these examples proue so.

Thus

That Moses was corrected, not punished, both that others might take warning by his example, and that he himselfe should be more carefull not to offend in the like, and that he might thereby be the better prepared, being deprived of the earthly Canaan, to seeke for the heavenly.

The Protestants.

That our finnes being once freely forgiven vs in Christ, there remaineth no punishment either temporall or eternall, to be by vs for our finnes endured: we proue it thus.

Argum. 1. Christ said to the sick of the palseie, Mark. 2. 5. Sonne, thy sins are forgiven thee. Whereby our Sauiour would haue them to vnderstand, that the sinne being once forgiven, the sicknesse of the bodie, which was the punishment of sinne, could not continue: for the cause being removed, the effect ceaseth.

Arg. 2. Ierem. 31. 34. The Lord saith, I will forgive their sins, and remember their iniquities no more. Ezech. 18. 22. His transgressions shall be mentioned no more vnto him. Isay. 44. 22. I haue put away thy iniquities as a cloud. Mich. 7. 19. He will cast all their sins into the bottome of the sea. Plal. 32. 1. Their sin is covered: but the finnes of the righteous being once forgiven, are not covered, no more remembered, cast into the bottome of the sea, if they be againe reuiued by punishments: Ergo, where sinne is once freely forgiven before God, there remaineth no more punishment. arg. Caluyn.

Belarmine answereth, that God is said, not to remember sinne, to couer it, to blot it out, though hee doth temporally punish for it, because hee doth not remember it vnto euerlasting punishment.

Contra. First, the Lord saith, I will remember their iniquities, not for euer, but no more: If then our sinne should be remembered againe, how can it be true, they are remembered no more? to remember no more, and not to remember for euer, are two diuers things. Secondly, Ezech. 18. 22. it followeth, he is in his righteousness, that he hath done, shall be liue: The righteous after his finnes are forgiven, and no more mentioned, liueth in his righteousness: but to bee punished for sinne, is not to liue in his righteousness: for sinne yet liueth, and is reuiued by the punishment: Ergo, the righteous after forgiveness obtained, is not punished for sinne. Thirdly, Isay. 44. 22. As a mist or cloud is chased of the Sunne, so are our finnes: but the mist is wholly disperfed and dissolued that nothing of it remaineth: Ergo, so are our finnes. Fourthly, like as that which cast into the sea, and descendeth to the bottome, riseth not againe; as the Egyptians are sayd to haue sunke downe to the bottome like a stone, Exod. 15. 5. And Ierem. 51. 63. the Prophet vseth this signe to signifie the finall destruction of Babel; he bindeth a stone to the booke of the curses against Babel, and throweth it into the midst of Euphrates, saying, Thou shalt Babel be drowned, and shall not rise, &c. Wherefore our finnes in this sense being cast into the bottome of the sea, when they are freely forgiven vs in Christ, shall rise no more to iudge vs either in this world or the next.

Argum. 3. The Prophet Isay saith, The chastisement of our peace was vpon him, 53. 5. And hee hath reconciled vs in the bodie of his flesh, to make vs vblameable, &c. Coloss. 1. 21. 22. Therefore Christ hath borne all punishment due to our sinne, not onely eternall, but temporall. He hath borne our iniquities, Isay. 53. 5. euery all of them, and hath deliuered vs from the whole curse of the law, Gal. 3. 13. from temporall punishments, which are part of our infirmities, and belonging to the cur.

Belarmine answereth, that Christ hath immediatly satisfied for our sinne and eternall death: but for temporall punishment mediately onely, giuing vs power by his death to satisfie for them: lib. 4. de penitent. cap. 15. respons. ad argum. 4.

Ans. Christ hath immediatly in his owne bodie satisfied for the whole punishment of sinne. 1. Christ hath immediatly taken away the curse of the law, because he was made a curse for vs: but temporall punishments for sinne are part of the curse, which if they remaine still, then are we yet vnder the curse. 2. Christ also hath borne our infirmities; but if he giue power onely to vs to beare, then we beare them, and not he. 3. Againe, if any punishment for sin yet remaine, then are we not yet at perfect peace with God, because his wrath is not yet fully satisfied: But Christ hath vpon the Crosse set vs at peace with God, 1. Coloss. 1. 20. Ergo.

The afflictions of this life are the louing corrections of God to admonish vs, not plagues to punish vs: as Augustine saith well, Tota miseria generis humani dolor medicinalis, non sententia poenalis: The miserie of man is but a medicinall griefe, not a sentence of punishment: in Psal. 138. And againe, Homines cum ista patiuntur, &c. Men when they suffer these things, either as in Iob their merites are examined; or as in Herod, their finnes punished, epist. ad Hieron. Not the righteous then as Iob, but the wicked as Herod are punished for their finnes.

Let vs see what further euidence we haue euen from the lawes of men. First, the Ciuill law thus testifieth: Cod. lib. 4. tit. 14. leg. 6. Seruus liber factus non tenetur, &c. A seruant being made free, can not bee chalenged for any thing committed against his master before his freedome. Cod. lib. 9. tit. 51. leg. 1. Antonin. Restitutio à principe concessa, &c. Restitution graunted by the Prince, in inrogat, doth restore a man fully and wholly. Leg. 4. Ex indulgentia reuersus ab exilio, &c. He that that by the Princes pardon is returned from exile, is not bound to his former creditors. If then the making free of a ſervant, doth exempt him from all former daungers and penalties; if the indulgence of the Prince doth reſtore a man fully, and freeth him from all debts and creditors, if this equitie bee in the law of man; how much more ſhall not the true libertie, which wee have in Chriſt, and the moſt bountifull indulgence of God, together with our reſtitution in Chriſt, charge vs from all debts and puniſhments whatſoever belonging to our finnes?

The Canon law is a witneſſe alſo for vs: Diſtinct. 3. de poenitent. c. 83. Subſecutum illius commiſſionis effectum, &c. That which God threatned to Dauid, came to paſſe after his ſinne was forgiven him, ut pietas hominis in illa humilitate exerceretur, &c. that the mans godlines might by humilitie bee exerciſed and tried. It remained not then as a puniſhment, but as a triall and admo- nition.

The Maſter of the Sentences to the ſame purpoſe: Lib. 4. diſt. 4. f. Solus ventus peccati pena tem- poralis manet, &c. The guilt of ſinne being diſſolved, the temporall puniſhment remaineth, that that life ſhould more ſtudiouſly bee ſought for, which is free from all paine. And yet more evi- dently: Diſtinct. 14. a. Quinque modis flagella contingunt, &c. The Lord laeth his ſcourges five man- ner of waies, that by patience their (merite) or vertue may bee encreaſed, as in Iob: ad caſtandum virtutum, to bee a ſafeguard to their vertue, that pride tempt them not, as in Paul; to correct their finnes, as Mary became leprous, Moses ſiſter; or to the glorie of God, as in the man borne blind, Ioh. 9. or for the iudgement of puniſhment, as in Herod. None of all theſe reaſons wee reſuſe: ſo then corrections or chaſticements the righteous talke of; iudgements and puniſhments for ſinne are proper to the wicked.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER THE TEM- porall puniſhment of this life may be redeemed by good workes.

The Papiſts.

63. Error.

THAT we may redeeme and buy out as it were the puniſhments due to ſinne in this life by our good workes, ſaving whereas God hath certainly determined to puniſh, as in *Dauid*es caſe, is their generall ſentence. They hold alſo that the temporall paines of Purgatorie may bee in like manner redeemed.

Argum. 1. God purpoſed to deſtroy the citie of Niniueh: but that, being pleaſed with their faſting, ſackcloth and prayers, he ſaved the citie. Ierem. 18. 7. I will ſpeake ſuddenly againſt a nation to deſtroy it, &c. but if the nation repent of their wickedneſſe, I alſo will repent of the plague. Wherefore tem- porall puniſhments may be by good workes redeemed, Bellar. lib. 4. c. 3.

Anſw. Firſt, the argument followeth not: God ſheweth mercie vpon our repentance: Ergo, repentance redeemeth the puniſhment due, &c. for if it bee of mercie that God ſpareth vs, as the Apoſtle ſaith, the bountifulneſſe of God calleth thee to repentance, Rom. 2. 4. then is it not of our workes. Secondly, prayer and faſting are but effectuall ſignes of repentance, they are not meritorious cauſes of forgiveness. Dauid faſted and prayed, yet he ſueth vnto Gods mercie, Pſal. 51. 1. Accord- ing to the multitude of thy mercies doe away mine offences.

Argum. 2. Daniel ſaid to Nabuchadnezzar the King, Redeeme thy finnes by righteousnes, and thine iniquities by ſhewing mercie to the poore, chap. 4. 24. Bellar. cap. 3.

Anſw. The text is rather thus to be read: 1. Breake off thy finnes by righteousneſſe: that is, leaue off to doe euill: as it is by Tremellius tranſlated more agreeable to the Hebrue: ſo is the word me parach, interpreted, Genel. 27. 40. Thou ſhalt breake his yoke from thy necke: 2. For if redemption bee here properly vnderſtood, it would follow that men may redeeme not onely the puniſhment of their finnes, but the finnes themſelues: for Daniel ſaith, redeeme thy ſins, not the puniſhment of thy finnes: and ſo take Chriſts office out of his hand. 3. By true and faithfull re- pentance, and other good workes proceeding of faith, wee may auide Gods heauie iudgement due to our finnes, yet not for the merite or ſatisfaction of any worke, but through the merits onely of Chriſt. See this argument answered more fully before, queſt. 5. part. 6.

The Proteſtants.

CONCERNING the paines in Purgatorie to be redeemed in this life, we haue prooued before ſuf- ficiently, that this purgatorie place is but a popiſh dreame, and therefore no ſuch paines there to be feared: And for the chaſticements of this life, where God ſeeth they are neceſſarie, he inflit- teth them vpon his children; when as he ſeeth other cauſe, he ſpareth vs for his mercie, his iu- ſtice is not bought out with the price of our workes.

Argum. 1. As our finnes are forgiven, ſo is the puniſhment due vnto them: but our ſins are forgiven vs freely in Chriſt, Ierem. 31. 34. Ergo, ſo is the puniſhment.

S. Paul alſo ſaith, We are freely iuſtified by grace, Rom. 3. 24. by the forgiveness of our ſins, through the redemption that is in Christ: Ergo, not by the redemption of our owne workes: argum. Melanctib. Caluin lib. 3. Institut. c. 4. sect. 25.

Bellarmino answereth, that it is of grace, that our workes doe redeeme the temporall punishment, because they haue this grace and power in Christs death: so then Christ doth freely forgieue our sinne, and the euermlasting punishment doe vnto it, he doth freely forgieue also the temporall punishment, in giuing vs grace freely to satisfie for it, cap. 13. respons. ad 5. argum. c. 14. res. ad lib. 4. de penitent.

Contra. This is an impious distinction, and contrarie to the Scriptures. 1. The Apostle saith freely, thorough the redemption of Christ, verf. 24. Ergo, not by the redemption of our workes. 2. Again, the punishment of sinne is taken away in our reconciliation vnto God: for God punisheth the wicked and his enemies, not those which are reconciled: But our reconciliation is by faith in Christs blood, Rom. 3. 25. Ergo, not by workes. 3. Further, the forgiveness of our sinnes (saith the Apostle) thorough the patience of God: but Gods patience is seene in the forbearing the punishment of sinne: So then Gods righteousness in forgiving our sinnes, and his patience in forbearing or doing away the punishment, are here by Saint Paul ascribed to faith in Christs blood: Ergo, satisfaction is no more made for the punishment, than for the sin it selfe. 4. Lastly, grace and workes cannot satisfie or worke together, Rom. 11. 6. If it be of worke, it is no more of grace; if of grace, it is no more of worke: How then is it possible that wee should satisfie both by grace and worke together?

Argum. 2. That purgatorie paines are not redeemed by any workes of this life; that place sheweth Matth. 3. 8. Bring forth wortheie fruits of repentance: By these workes, testifying repentance, men doe flye from the wrath to come, verf. 7. and the tree that bringeth not forth these fruits, is cast into the fire, verf. 10. This is the euermlasting wrath of God and fire, which wee doe not satisfie for, but preuent by these fruits: so these are workes to bee performed by the liuing, they pertaine not to the dead: they preuent euermlasting destruction through faith in Christ, for the which, they themselues suffice, our workes doe not satisfie.

Again, there must bee some proportion betweene the price of redemption, and the thing redeemed: but so is there not betweene our good workes, and the punishments due to our sinnes: for as Isa. 60. We cannot answere him one thing of a thousand, Iob. 9. 3. Bernard also saith, Quis amplius grauius dicens, nimium laboramus, nimium ieiunamus, cum nec millefina, immo nec minima pars debitorum suorum ualet respondere: serm. de quadrup. debiti. Who will now murmur and say, wee labour too much, fast too much, when as wee are not able to answere the thousand part, no not the least part of our debt? But how can wee redeeme our punishments by our workes, vntill our workes were in waight and number answerable vnto them? Ergo, wee cannot redeeme them by any such meanes.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER A MAN

may truly satisfie the wrath of God, for the punishment due vnto sinne.

The Papists.

It is not a sufficient satisfaction, to beleue that Christ hath abundantly satisfied for vs; neither yet is it enough to amend and correct our liues: but God also must bee satisfied for our sinnes, by the punishment and chastisement of our selues, as by affliction layd vpon vs by God, or penance inioyned by the Priest, or by prayer, fasting, almes-deedes, which we do take vp our selues: Concil. Trid. sess. 14. can. 13. Rbemis. Matth. 11. 21.

Bellarmino also affirmeth, that Gods grace assisting vs, wee may satisfie God for the temporall punishment of sinne, ex proprijs, of our own, ad equalitatem, to an equalitie, ex condigno, condignly, or worthilie, cap. 8.

Argum. 1. Matth. 3. 8. Bring forth fruits wortheie repentance: he preacheth satisfaction by doing wortheie fruits of penance, as fasting, prayer, almes, and the like, Rbemis. Bellar. c. 8.

Ans. 1. Fruits wortheie of repentance, are no satisfaction for sinne, or the punishment thereof, but arguments of true repentance, effects, not any part thereof. 2. Again, in this place mention is made of euermlasting destruction, verf. 10. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe and cast into the fire: wherefore if by wortheie workes, they vnderstand satisfactorie workes, then will it follow that satisfaction may bee made not onely for temporall, but eternall punishment. 3. Further, wortheie workes, are expounded to be good workes, verf. 10. And Bellarmino expoundeth this, To doe workes wortheie repentance is so to worke, as it becometh him that is penitent: Bellarmino. ibid. This therefore is nothing else, but newnes and holines of life, whereby we doe shew our effectuall repentance. 4. This place proueth neither equalitie, nor condignitie, nor a propriety of our owne in satisfaction; which all three are against the Scripture: there is no equalitie, we cannot answere God one of a thousand, Job. 9. 3. No propertie, 1. Cor. 4. 7. If thou hast received it, why reioycst thou, although thou haddest not received it? No condignitie, Luk. 17. 10. If thou hast done all that is com manded, thou art but vnprofitable seruants. 5. Neither will this euasione serue, that by grace our workes satisfie: for grace and workes are so diuers, that they cannot concurte together: Rom. 11. 6. If it be of workes, it is no more of grace, &c. grace taketh away workes, and workes take away grace, if they be ioyned as working causes together.

Argum. 2. Iudge your selues, that you be not iudged, 1. Cor. 11. 31. We must punish our selues according to the waight of the sinnes past, Rhemist. And againe, saith the Apostle, What great punishment hath it wrought in you? 2. Cor. 7. 11. This is nothing else but the satisfactorie punishment for our sinnes, Bellarm. lib. 4. cap. 8.

In Psal. 51.

Ans. The Apostle meaneth nothing else, but an heartie and earnest sorrowe for our sinnes, whereby we doe iudge and condemne, and as it were punish our selues, yet we are farre from making any satisfaction hereby for our sinnes: as Augustine saith, Omnis iniquitas puniatur uoce offi, aut a penitente homine, aut vindicante Deo: vis non puniat t puni tu: antequam ipse interdat ut punit in confitendo praueni & punit. All sinne must needes bee punished either of man himselfe repenting, or God reuenging: if thou wilt not haue him punish, punish thou: before he intend to punish, prouent him by thy confession, and punish thy selfe. So then this punishment of our selues is nothing else, but true repentance and confession of our sinnes.

2. Again, this punishment, of which the Apostle speaketh, was wrought in the, it was not imposed them by the Priest. 3. Beside, this repentance, whereof this punishment was an effect, was in saluation, vers. 10. which was the escaping of euerlasting death: but for euerlasting punishment they themselves dare prescribe no satisfaction but in Christ. 4. The Apostle sheweth the end and vse of this punishment, which was to cleare themselves, and to worke in them a zeale and desire: not to satisfie.

Argum. 3. If good workes may merite or deserue eternall life, much more may they merit and turne away temporall punishment: but the first is true, Matth. 20. vers. 8. the kingdome of God is called wages or rewarde: 2. Timoth. 4. vers. 8. it is called the crowne of iustice, which God the iust iudge shall giue. So it is a rewarde iustly giuen to mens deserts: Ergo, good workes may much more redeeme temporall punishment, Bellarmin. cap. 8. lib. 4. de penitent.

Ans. We vtterly denie, that heauen can bee merited with good workes. First, Saint Paul hauing first said, the wages of sinne is death, addeth further, the gift of God is eternall life, Rom. 6. 23. he calleth it a gift, and not wages.

Secondly, it is called in the parable, a rewarde or wages; but not in respect of the workmans labour, but of Gods couenant and promise. For 1. if it were by desert, then he that laboured twelue houres, had deserued more, than he that wrought but one. As Saint Ambrose saith, de uocas. Gentium. lib. 1. 3. Hora undecima intro missos in vineam, &c. They which were sent into the vineyard at the eleuenth houre, the diuine indulgence made equall to the labourers of the whole day, not paying the wages of their labour, but powring out the riches of his goodnesse, &c. that they which endured much labour, and receiued no more then the last, should vnderstand, Secundum gratia non operis accepisse mercedem: that they received a gift of grace, not a reward of the worke. 2. And the Lord saith, vers. 15. Is it not lawfull for me to doe as I will with mine owne? but if they had deserued it, it had been their owne. 3. Saint Paul also directly affirmeth, Rom. 4. vers. 4. that wages is not counted of fauour, but by debt: let them say then if they dare, that to obtaine heauen is not of Gods fauour.

Thirdly, 1. it is a crowne of iustice, but not of ours, but of the iustice of faith in Christ: as the Apostle saith, vers. 7. I haue kept the faith. 2. And it is Gods iustice to giue it in respect of his promise, not of our desert, as Augustine saith, Ex misericordia promissum, sed iam ex iustitia solutum: Promised of mercie, but now in iustice to be paid: serm. 2. de verb. Apostoli.

Argum. 4. Bellarmin bringeth in a great troupe of ancient writers to speake for satisfaction, but they are not so pregnant to serue his turne: our generall answer to them all is this:

First, that the most of his witnesses are partiall, and not old enough to bee credited, such as lived in the latter ages of the Church, as Isidore, Rhabanus, Damianus, with other.

Secondly, many writings passe vnder the names of Cyprian, Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, which were not theirs: as there goeth vnder Cyprians name, a booke De inuentione capiti Baptistæ, &c. Of the inuention of Iohn Baptists head: In which treatise mention is made of Arbanasius, and Theophilus of Alexandria, and Pipinus, that were long after Cyprians time. The like exception may be made against some of the rest.

Thirdly, the authentike fathers speake of three satisfactions: first, of satisfaction made vnto men, as vnto the whole Church, or to any other y are offended: and in this sense speaketh Cyprian, epistol. 3. ad Cornelium, speaking of schismatikes, Si cum presibus & satisfactionibus ueniam, audiamus, &c. If they come with entreating and satisfactions, let them bee heard: Si minus & malis illis impertiamus

Argument: If they threaten or curse, let them be refused: the satisfaction is to be made to them, when they threaten, but they threaten not God, but men: in this sense also, the olde translation saith, Act. 24. 10. That Paul satisfied, that is answered for himselfe: and 1. Pet. 3. 18. Be ready to satisfie every man, that asketh a reason, &c. this satisfaction then is made vnto men.

Secondly, there is a satisfaction made vnto a mans owne conscience, as 2. Cor. 7. 11. What clea-ning of your selues, defence, or satisfaction, (as Erasmus readeth, and the old interpreter in other places tranlateth the word vindicta,) hath it wrought: so Ambrose ad virgin. lapsam c. 8. cited by Bellarmino. Grande, grandem satisfactionem: a great sinne, requireth great satisfaction, that is, great sorrow, to satisfie and settle the conscience.

Thirdly, they speake of satisfying God, but eyther in hyperbolicall speech, commending thereby the necessitie of repentance, whereby God is, as it were, satisfied, the better to stirre vp men thereto: or els, they vnderstand a satisfaction, not of Gods iustice, but of Gods commandement and will, in obeying his voyce, by comming to repentance, which God in mercie accepteth of: so Tertullian saith, Habes cui satisfacias, & quidem volens: You have one, who is willing to be satisfied: lib. de penitent.

The Protestants.

This Satisfaction ought to be made vnto men, either by restitution, as Zachew restored that which he had wrongfully gotten; or by reconciling our selues to those, whom we haue offended, as Matth. 5. 24. we do willingly grant: but that the wrath of God may be appeased, and satisfied for our sinnes, or the punishment due vnto the same by any worke of ours, it is a great blasphemie, and cleane contrary to the course of Scripture.

Argument. 1. That it is sufficient to returne vnto God by true repentance and amendment of life, without any satisfaction, either for our sinne, or the punishment of sinne: the Prophet Ezechiel sheweth, where speaking of the conuersion of a wicked man, he saith, His iniquities shall no more be mentioned, or laid to his charge, chap. 18. 22. But if after the sinne remitted, there should remaine some punishment behind, his sinnes should still be remembred and mentioned: there is therefore no satisfaction for the punishment of sinne, because none remaineth.

Bellarmino answereth, God remembreth no more their sinnes, in that he doth not punish them by eternall death, cap. 15. respons. ad argum. 1.

Argument. 2. When the righteous suffer temporall chastisements, hath God their sinnes then in remembrance, or hath he not? If he haue, then the Prophet should speake vnto us, who saith, Their iniquities are not mentioned: if hee haue not, it cometh to our saying, that God doth chastise his children without respect had to their sinnes, or remembrance thereof. I suppose this Dilemma will put the Iesuite to some businesse before it be well answered.

Againe, vers. 20. the Prophet saith, The righteousnesse of the righteous shall be vpon him, and the wickednesse of the wicked shall be vpon him: but now if the righteous be punished for his sinne past, the wickednesse shall be vpon the righteous man, which is contrary to the saying of the Prophet.

Further, Ezech. 33. 12. Impietas impij non nocet ei: The wickednesse of the wicked shall not hurt him, in that day he turneth from his wickednesse: but if he be punished for his wickednesse, he shall be returned, then doth his wickednesse hurt him. Bellarmino answereth as before, that his wickednesse doth not hurt him, or hinder him from euerlasting life, lib. 4. c. 11. Cap. 11. Chastisements and corrections, which God layeth vpon his children, to make them more careful and circumspect, are profitable, and not hurtfull at all, as the Prophet David saith, Psal. 119. vers. 71. It is good for me, that I haue bene afflicted: But punishments and iudgements for sinne, how are they not hurtfull, and a wound vnto the soule? 2. So then, as the righteousnesse of the righteous shall deliuer him in the day of his transgression; so the wickednesse of the wicked shall not hurt him. vers. 12. but the former righteousnesse shall not deliuer a man, no nor from temporall iudgements: Ergo, the former wickednesse of a man shall not hurt him, but deliuer him from temporall punishments. 3. Further, vers. 17. The way of the Lord is equall, the way of man is unequall: man many times punisheth, where he forgiveth; but Gods way is not like vnto mans: wherefore God punisheth not after forgiveness. See a further answer to Bellarmino, exception before, in the second argument of the first part of this Question.

Argument. 3. Our Sauour Christ required no satisfaction to be made vnto God, for her sinnes that was accused of adulterie; but saith onely to her, Go, sinne no more, Iohn 8. 11. Ergo, no satisfaction for sinne is required by the Scripture, argum. Lutheri.

Bellarmino answereth, 1. That Christ doth not absolue her from her sinne, but onely from the punishment, which was to be stoned to death. 2. Or he might see so great contrition in her, that it was a sufficient satisfaction; as we reade of Maria Magdalene. 3. And Christ might by his authority at once pardon the fault and the punishment, but Ministers must keepe themselves to the Law, Act. Bellarmino c. 11. resp. ad 2. argum.

Concl. First, that Christ did pardon her sinne, it is appeareth, in that hee saith, Go, sinne no more.

more: for though she sinned no more, if this were not pardoned, it was sufficient to condemn her before God. 2. As for the outward punishment of death; Christ doth not deale in it, it belonging to worldly gouernours: he refused to be Iudge of an inheritance, Luke 12:14. which is lesse than to be Iudge of life and death.

Secondly, 1. It is like there was not such an extraordinarie contrition in this woman, being immediately before deprehended in adulterie. 2. And if there had beene such a perfect change, which cannot be without a full purpose of amendment; why doth our Sauour say vnto her, Giue I thee no more? 3. Maries teares did not satisfie for her sinne; shee was saved by her faith: her teares declared her loue, Luke 7:47. 50.

Thirdly, though Christ had all power in himselfe, and was aboue his law, yet he came to fulfill all righteousnesse: Matth. 3:15. and as he sent the Leper being cleansed to the Priest, so offer according to the Law, Matth. 8. so healing the spirituall leprosie of this woman, hee would not haue committed the law of satisfaction, being as necessarie in this spirituall case (if any such thing were required) as the resorting of the Leper to the Priest.

Argum. 3. Isai. 43:25. I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne sake. Likewise 33: vers. 4. He hath borne our infirmities, and carried our sorrows: the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. God of his free mercie doth forgive our sin: Christ also hath fully satisfied for vs: Ergo, there is no satisfaction in vs: we are made whole by his stripes, and not our owne.

Likewise the Apostle saith, that Christ is the propitiation for our sinnes, 1. John 2:2. Behold the Lambe of God, that taketh away the sinnes of the world, John 1:29. Christ his owne selfe bare our sinnes in his bodie on the tree, 1. Pet. 2:24. Ergo, Christs death fully and wholly redeemeth vs, there neede no other satisfaction.

Bellarmin. First, we grant, that Christs death is sufficient to redeeme all the sinnes of the world, but Christs death profiteth not, vnlesse it be applied by faith, the sacraments, and other applicatorie meanes and instruments, among the which, satisfaction is one, for the expiation of temporall punishment. Secondly, it is true, that by Christs merite we are only iustified and reconciled; yet this seereth not, but that we may satisfie also by the vertue of Christs death for temporall punishment. Bellarmin. c. 14.

Contra. First, there 1. is no other meanes appointed for the application of the fruits of Christs death, but faith: Rom. 3:26. He is a iustifier of him; that is of the faith of Iesus: vers. 22. The righteousness of God by the faith of Iesus: vers. 25. To be a reconciliation through faith in his blood: if through faith wee are reconciled, iustified wee haue righteousness; all other meanes of application are vnecessary and superfluous. 2. Again, no workes of ours can applie Christs death, no, not good workes: Ephes. 2:8. 9. Ye are saved by grace through faith, not of works; ye are of good works: vers. 10. Which God hath willed: 3. That which applieth Christs death, applieth his righteousness for remission of sinnes: Rom. 3:25. but satisfaction applieth not Christs death for remission of sin, but onely to remoue the punishment: Ergo it applieth it not at all.

Secondly, 1. If we be reconciled and iustified by Christs death, then are wee at peace with God; Rom. 5:1. but God doth not punish those for their sinnes, with whom he is at peace. 2. Again, Rom. 8:33. God with Christ hath giuen vs all things beside: Ergo, not remission of sinne onely, but the punishment also. 3. Vers. 33. Who shall accuse the chosen of God, it is God that iustificth: Ergo, sinne is not laid to the charge of them that are iustified, and so consequently, they are not for the same iudged or punished, seeing they are not for the same accused.

Argum. 4. If men should satisfie by their owne workes, both Christs honor is 1. empayred, seeing the whole worke is not left to him; our conscience 2. cannot be quieted, depending vpon our owne satisfaction. 3. And beside it is impossible, seeing that man sinneth every day, and every houre, and how can he satisfie for sinnes past, continually multiplying new? Argum. Caluini. lib. 3. iustit. c. 4. fol. 27.

Bellarmin. answereth, 1. Christs honor is more increased, in that he himselfe doth not onely satisfie for our sinnes, but giueth power to his members in some sort to satisfie likewise. 2. The conscience may be secure and at peace being assured of the remission of sin, though some temporall punishment remaine. 3. One act of contrition euen in a moment of time may satisfie for many mortall sinnes, how much more one houre, one day of contrition, &c. Bellarmin. c. 14.

Contra. First, he may as well say, it had been for Christs honor, to haue taken vp to him vpon the crosse some one of his members, and to haue giuen him power by his death to satisfie: but the Scripture saith contrary, Isay. 48:11. I will not give my glory to another: Psal. 113:1. Not unto thee, O Lord, shall thy Name give the praise. Secondly, the Prophet saith, There is no rest in my bones because of thine anger, and of my sinne, and I roare for the griefe of my heart. Psal. 38:3, 8. As long as he was chastised for his sinne, he could find no rest, neither in bodie, nor soule: how then can the conscience be at quiet, being vnder the punishment of sinne. Thirdly, it 3. seemeth, you thinke it an easie matter matter to satisfie for sinne, being not ashamed to say, that it may be done in a moment: ye know not what true repentance or true contrition is: it worketh in vs, 1. care, 2. clearing of our selues, 3. indignation, 4. feare, 5. desire, 6. zeale, 7. punishment, 2. Cor. 7. 11. Can all these be wrought in a moment? 2. And seeing that continually a righteous man falleth, when seven times a day and repeth againe, by repentance, Prou. 24. 16. he hath enough to doe still to wretele against present sinnes: and being alwaies in transgression, how can he satisfie God for his transgression: for if thou thoughtest thyselfe iniquities, saith the Psalm, quis sustinebit who is able to sustaine it? Psal. 130. 3. Therefore man being compassed alwaies with sinne, cannot sustaine Gods wrath, much lesse satisfie or appeale it.

Argum. 5. The Prophet Isay saith, chap. 1. 17, 18. Cease to doe euill, learne to doe well, &c. Though your sinnes be as crimson, I will make them white as snow. Here is no satisfaction required. Likewise, Jerem. 50. vers. 20. In those daies the iniquitie of Iacob shall be sought for, and there shall none be found. Ezech. 36. 22. I doe not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine owne holie name sake, &c. The people did not satisfie God for their temporall deliuerance out of captiuitie, but it proceeded of Gods mercie: arg. Caluin.

Below. First, the Prophet Isay promisseth the perfect remission of sinne to those that did cease and repent themselves by contrition, repentance, and other good deedes, which are their satisfaction: this place rather maketh for satisfaction, than against it. Secondly, the Prophet Ezechiel speakech there of the grace of the new Testament, which is not ascribed to the merits of the Israelites: and if it bee vnderstood of their temporall deliuerance, wee graunt that the temporall punishments of the next world is alwaies redeemed by satisfaction, but not the temporall punishment of this life: this maketh not therefore against satisfaction, Bellar. cap. 15. resp. ad arg. 3. 28. 6.

Contra. First, by making of their sinnes as white as snow or wool, is vnderstood the perfect remission of sinne: and the condition required before, is to cease to doe euill, to learne to doe well, to wash themselves. If these be satisfactorie workes, and goe before remission, then will it follow, that not the punishment onely, but the sinne it selfe is by these workes redeemed: if they come after, what punishment can remaine to bee satisfied for, seeing there is no rednes, or bloodines remaining, (whereby the punishment of sinne is signified) but all is as white as snow.

Secondly, 1. It is euident, that the Prophet speaketh directly of their temporall deliuerance, vers. 24. I will take you from among the heathen, though vnder this temporall benefice is included also the promise of spirituall grace. 2. Neither is the question, whether the temporall punishment of this life be alwaies redeemed, but whether, when it is removed, it be by satisfactorie workes redeemed. This place euidently sheweth, that this deliuerance of the Israelites (though they endured some yeres captiuitie, with much affliction, which were as like to satisfie, as any painfull workes that can bee suffered) is not attributed to their merits, but to the bountifull mercie of God. 3. And if satisfaction may be made for Purgatorie penance, much more should it be allowable against the iudgements of this life: But seeing your satisfaction saith in the lesse, which wee daily haue experience of, and you send vs to finde the force thereof, in a greater punishment, which no man ever did see, you giue iust occasion to them, which are not wilfully blind, both to scorn your deniue of Purgatorie, and to reiect your sandie foundation of satisfaction.

Argum. 6. In the Law there were no satisfactorie 1. workes appointed for the expiation of sinne, but onely the sacrifice, 2. which were not counted as the 3. workes of men, but did depend on the onely sacrifice of Christ, whereof they were shadowes: 4. yet in the Law all rites of expiation were diligently prescribed: argum. Caluin.

Bellarmino answereth: first, the sacrifices of the law were appointed as satisfactions for the temporall punishments of sinne: for they did neither take away the sinne it selfe, nor the eternall punishment: Psal. 51. 16. Thou desirest no sacrifice the sacrifice of God is a contrite heart. Secondly, neither did the sacrifice serue for all sinnes: for blasphemie, homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, no sacrifices were appointed, but althes and sackcloth, &c. Thirdly, God hath not in the law exactly let down all the rites of expiation: Fourthly, the sacrifices, as they were diuine workes being instituted of God, so were they also the laborious workes of men, and consequently satisfactorie, in that they were an hindrance to their substance, and depended vpon the faith of the offerers, cap. 19. respons.

Argum. 5. argum. 5. First, the sacrifices of the law were appointed for the forgiveness of the sinne it selfe, Leu. 17. The Priest shall make attonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him. 1. How could attonement or reconciliation be made, without remission of sinne? 2. If sacrifices were not to that end, then had they no means at all to assure them of remission of sin. 3. Yet in themselves those sacrifices could not purge the conscience, Heb. 9. 9. but did onely purifie as touching the flesh, vers. 13. that is, away the legall and outward uncleannes: but they did also sanctifie inwardly, being offered by faith, as they were types and shadowes of Christs sacrifice, which is that Diana affirmeth Phil. 3. 16.

Secondly,

Secondly, 1. The sinnes of homicide, adulterie, idolatrie, blasphemie, were sinnes punishable by death, and therefore no such expiation by sacrifice was appointed for them, as for other sinnes: Blood could not be expiated, or purged, but by blood. 2. David notwithstanding after he had committed two of those sinnes, having first sacrificed a contrite heart vnto God, did afterward finde comfort and further assurance of remission, in offering the sacrifices of righteousnesse, Psal. 51. 19. that is, right and lawfull sacrifices applied to the right end, which is to testifie their faith and repentance. 3. But ashes and sackcloth were no satisfactions for such sinnes. 1. For Bellarmino himselfe saith, that sinne cannot be satisfied for, but the punishment onely. 2. And David having repented thoroughly for his sinne, yet pretendeth no satisfaction, but sueth for mercie, Psal. 51. 1. 4. Wherefore either the sacrifices of righteousnes and faith, were the propitiation for such sins, as they were Sacraments of Christs death, or else they had no meanes of expiation at all, which is not to be admitted.

Thirdly, it is a great vnttruth, that the Lord by Moses did not exactly set downe all manner of expiations fit for that time, seeing the Scripture saith, that Moses was faithfull in all the Lords house. Heb. 3. 2.

Fourthly, seeing he graunteth that the sacrifices depended of the faith in the offerer, and faith is the gift of God, and is founded in Christs death; he hath made a good argument against himselfe, that the sacrifices were not satisfactions, but workes of faith, applying the vertue of Christs death: the sacrifices then of the law were applicatorie, not satisfactorie.

Argum. 7. Hosh. 14. 2. Take away all iniquitie, and receive vs graciously, so will we render the calves of our lips. If all iniquitie be taken away, then none remaineth to bee satisfied for: if after forgiveness, nothing but thanksgiving be required, then no satisfaction is to bee performed: argum. Calvin. ibid.

Bellarmino answereth: first, iniquitie may bee removed, though the punishment doe remaine. Secondly, after forgiveness, though wee bee not acquitted of the temporall punishment, wee are to giue thanks. Thirdly, if God sometime do so forgive, that he require no satisfaction but of praise, it followeth not that he should doe so alwaies, Bellarmino. c. 15. resp. ad argum. 6.

Contra. First, how 1. can all iniquitie bee removed, when as the punishment yet remaineth? there must be some sinne to be punished, or else God punishing without sinne should bee vnjust. 2. Againe, the Prophet speaketh directly of removing the punishment also, vers. 1. They shall fall by the sword, vers. 2. Thou hast fallen by thine iniquitie: But now vers. 3. vpon their repentance the Prophet sheweth, that they shall fall so no more: all iniquitie, both the sinne and the paine shall be removed. 3. Againe, vers. 5. Mine anger is turned away: but when God punisheth for sinne, he is angrie.

Secondly, thanksgiving followeth after 1. full remission had, and all iniquitie removed: but where satisfaction is to be done, there is not yet full remission: for Bellarmino confesseth, that Peccata remissa, quoad omnem poenam reatum: Full remission is in respect the guilt of all punishment removed, cap. 15. resp. ad loc. 3. Therefore the calves of the lips could not yet be offered, when as some what remaineth to be satisfied. 2. Reioycing and giuing of thanks cannot bee without comfort and perfect assurance of remission: but where God yet iudgeth for sinne, and the punishment remaineth to be satisfied for, there can be no such assurance.

Thirdly, this courte here prescribed by the Prophet, is perpetuall, and generall for all the faithfull of God: he speaketh to all Israel, vers. 2. yea vnto all the faithfull seruants of God, vers. 10. who is wise, and he shall understand these things. And the Prophet David saying, What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me? I will take the cuppe of salvation, and call vpon the name of the Lord: Psalm. 116. 13. 14. sheweth, that God requireth no other satisfaction at our hands, but giuing of thanks.

Argum. 8. The Publicane vpon his repentance was iustified, and no satisfaction required: so likewise Peter was forgiven, without any satisfaction: So to the man sicke of the palse, Christ said, Arise, by sinnes are forgiven thee, Mark. 2. 9. Neither is the contrarie to bee scene in the rest of the examples in Scripture of remission of sinnes, but they were forgiven freely without any satisfaction required: argum. Calvin. ibid.

Bellarmino. First, the Publicane was not iustified without satisfaction, as smiting vpon his breast, confessing his sinne. Secondly, Peter also satisfied by his teares. Thirdly, 1. Christ forgiveth to the sicke man his sinne, but not the temporall punishment. 2. His long sicknesse might satisfie God for his sinnes. 3. Christ might at his pleasure together pardon both the sin and the punishment; but his ministers cannot doe so, cap. 16. resp. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, the 1. smiting of the breast in the Publicane was a signe of his contrition, no part of satisfaction. 2. He saith, God be mercifull to me a sinner: here he could not satisfie, because he crieth onely for mercie. 3. And was the Publicanes sinne so small, thinke you, that he could satisfie for it, with knocking vpon the breast? 4. But this his contrition went before, he was iustified satisfied afterward : but satisfaction goeth not before justification, no not in the popish doctrine : for they say sinnes are first remitted, and then afterward the punishment is satisfied for.

Secondly, 1. Doe you thinke, that Peter's deniall of Christ, was so small an offence, that he could satisfie with his teares? 2. Peter wept before he found forgiveness, as Ambrose saith : Verenda lacryma sine horrore culpam loquuntur: Shamefast teares without horror doe confesse the fault. But satisfaction followeth forgiveness, wherefore Peter did not satisfie by his teares. Ambrose saith: Lacryma veniam non postulat, sed meretur: Teares doe not aske pardon, but they are worthie or fit to be pardoned. Peter then was not as yet pardoned, weeping for his sinnes, Ambrosian loc. 22.

Thirdly, 1. The sicke man had not onely his sinne forgiven, but his temporall punishment redressed: for Christ said to him, Arise take up thy bed and walke. 2. Neither did his sicknes satisfie for his sinne, it was then faith that healed him, vers. 5. neither was there any place for satisfaction, his sinne being not yet forgiven. 3. And that Christ did not this by his extraordinary authoritie, but by the same power which he hath committed to his Apostles and their successors, the Rhemists do fully affirme, in their annotations vpon this place: neither was this extraordinarie: for in all the examples alleaged, Christ tooke the same course in forgiving sinne without any satisfaction.

Lastly, we haue plentiful evidence from the Fathers, Councils, and their owne decrees, against this superstitious doctrine of satisfaction:

Cyprian. lib. 3. ad Quirinum. cap. 4. 2. Fidem tantum prodesse, & tantum nos posse, quantum credimus, Marc. 9. Omnia possibilia credenti: That faith onely profiteth, and we are able to doe as much as we beleeve: as Mark. 9. All things are possible to him that beleeueth. If faith onely profiteth, what neede is there of satisfaction?

Ambros. lib. 2. de penitent. cap. 8. Veniam tanquam ex fide speramus, non tanquam ex debito: Let vs hope for forgiveness, as of faith, not of debt. But satisfaction is of debt.

Baronius. ad Marc. 11. Tantam in nobis fidei stabilitatem esse dominus desiderat, &c. God requireth such stabilitie of faith in vs, vt certius esse, quod credimus, quam quod patimur indicemus: That we should iudge that more certaine, which wee beleeue, then that which wee suffer. But the Papists contrarie, doe hold no certaintie of remission of sinnes by faith, without suffering by satisfactorie works.

Concl. African. 1. decret. ex Gratian. Auctoritate Dei, &c. By the authoritie of God, and the indowment of his spirit, we doe thrust them out of the bosome of the Church: quousque respiciunt gratia Dei satisfaciunt: till they repent and satisfie the Church of God. Here are two things required, repentance toward God, and satisfaction to his Church, not to God.

Deinde de penitent. 1. c. 1. Non inuenio quid dixerit, &c. I finde not what Peter said, I finde that he wept: Lacrymas lego, satisfactionem non lego: I reade his teares, I reade no satisfaction.

Baronius answereth, that by satisfaction, here is vnderstood excuse or defence of his sinne, as it followeth, Quod defendi non potest, &c. That which cannot be defended, may be washed.

First, the Master of the Sentences vnderstandeth it otherwise for true satisfaction, and maketh this answer, That Peter might satisfie, though it be not exprest, or that confession was not precluded, lib. 4. dist. 17 f. Secondly, Gratian also doth so vnderstand it, alleaging to the like purpose saying of Chrysostome, ibid. c. 2. Lacryma lauent delictum, &c. Let teares wash away the sinnes, which is a shame to confesse: And proueth hereby, that contrition may suffice without confession: to speake of excuse or defence had bin impertinent. Thirdly, S. Ambrose expoundeth himselfe: Inuenio tacuit, &c. I see the reason why Peter held his peace, least that the crailing of pardon so soon might offend. Peter was farre from excusing his sinne, or Ambrose from so imagining.

Augustine saith, Peccasti in fratrem? fac satis, & sanatus es: Hast thou offended thy brother? satisfie him, and thou art healed. Qui multos offendit peccando, placare multos debet satisfaciendo: Hee that hath offended many in sinning, must appease many by satisfying them. These kinds of satisfaction both publickly and priuately wee acknowledge: but satisfaction to God, neither hee, nor we acknowledge.

Baronius. cap. 3. Qui precioso Christi sanguine redimitur, & cui meritum passionis Christi applicatur, &c. He that is redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, and to whom the merit of Christs passion is applied, he is straightway iustified. And S. Paul saith, Whom he iustificeth, he glorifieth Rom. 8. 30. Satisfaction therefore to be performed by man is superfluous, seeing Christs death bringeth iustification, and glorification.

This truth is sealed: Master Tindall holy Martyr thus witnesseth: Satisfaction is a full recompence or amends making to him, whom wee haue offended, which recompence wee are able to make one to another, and are bound so to doe: but to God none can make any mends or recompence, but onely Gods owne sonne Christ Iesus our Sauour: For pag. 1249. col. 2. artie. 1.

THE FOVRTH PART, WHETHER ONE man may satisfie for another.

The Papists.

67. Error

Satisfactorie workes are not only profitable to the sufferers themselves, but also for other their fellow members in Christ, and one may beare the burthen, and discharge the debt of another: Rhemist. Coloss. 1. sect. 4.

Argum. The passions of the Saints are suffered for the common good of the whole bodie, as Saint Paul saith, Now I reioyce in my sufferings for you, and fulfill that which is behinde of the afflictions of Christ for his bodies sake, which is the Church. Coloss. 1. 24. Here S. Pauls afflictions are meritorious and satisfactorie for the Colossians, Rhemist.

Auf. 1. The Apostles sufferings were for the glorie of God, and the confirmation of their faith: and in this sense he saith, his afflictions were for Christs bodie, that is, his Church sake: but therefore it followeth not, that they were meritorious, either for himselfe, or others. 2. His sufferings are said to be Christs, who suffereth in his members, not that they receiue any force from Christ to be satisfactorie, but because he was made like and conformable by his sufferings vnto Christ, Rom. 8. 17. Augustine also thus expoundeth the place: Non dixit, pressurarum mearum, sed Christi, quia membrum erat Christi: He saith not, of my sufferings, but of Christs, because he was a member of Christ. They are not then the sufferings of Christ, as though they receiued a satisfactorie power from Christ: but because he was a member of Christ, who suffered together in and with his members. Thus also answereth Sir Iohn Barwick holy confessor: That where Saint Paul saith, for the Church he doth not vnderstand thereby, the redemption, satisfaction, or expiation of the Church, but for the edifying and profiting of the same: And by the afflictions of Christ, he vnderstandeth those which he now suffereth in his members: And so he concludeth, and scaleth this doctrine, that if the Scripture teacheth that no man can worke his owne saluation, but when wee haue done all this is commanded, wee shall be found but vnprofitable seruants: much lesse can any man worke anothers saluation: For pag. 1261.

The Protestants.

None can merite or satisfie for themselves, much lesse for others: neither can one man beare the burthen, or pay the debt of another mans sinne.

Arg. 1. The Scripture saith, 7 he soule that sinneth, the same shall die, Ezech. 18. 20. Every man shall beare his owne burthen, Galat. 6. 5. None can redeeme his brother, or giue a price to God for him, Galat. 3.

Augustine vpon those words, Ioh. 16. 23. What soeuer ye shall aske in my name, he will giue it you: Et audiuimus quippe omnes sancti, pro seipsum: non autem exaudimur pro omnibus, vel amicis, vel inimicis. The Saints are heard praying for themselves: but they are not heard praying for all their friends or enemies, because it is not said simply, he will giue, but, he will giue to you: Ergo, much lesse can they satisfie for others, if their prayers be not heard alwaies for others.

Leonardus. 81. De fortitudine fidelium exempla nata sunt patientia, &c. From the fortitude of the faithfull wee haue examples of patience, not gifts of righteousness: their deaths were onely for themselves, neither did they thereby pay any others debt, Christ our Lord only is he, in whom all men are dead and crucified.

Argum. 2. We cannot doe for our selues all that which is required at our hands: But when wee haue done all, wee must say, wee are vnprofitable seruants, wee haue done that which was our duty to doe, Luk. 17. 10. Ergo, it is not in any mans power to satisfie for another. So Ambrose writheth vpon this place: Quis tanta salutis beneficia, digno possit aquare seruitio? Who can with his seruice answer in equalitie so great benefits of saluation? Quis potest soluere, quod accepit? Who can pay that he hath receiued? serm. 10. in Psal. 119.

Bernard also saith, writing vpon these words of the five foolish virgins, Give vs of your oyle: Sustinetis, vix iustus saluabitur, &c. A foolish request, the iust man shall hardly be tamed: the oyle of the Saints doth scant suffice themselves, how much lesse sufficeth it themselves and others: Alas, Daniel, Iob, shall not deliuer, no not their children, but as the soule that hath sinned shall dye; so the soule that hath done righteously shall onely liue. Here are three notable arguments included: first, mens righteousness sufficeth not themselves, much lesse others. Secondly, by the testimony of the Prophet, that those holie men there named, should but saue themselves. Thirdly, from the like: as wicked men do onely by their owne sinne condemne themselves, so the righteous onely liue by their owne righteousness.

But here they will come in with a stale distinction, that, Si iustitia rigorem spectamus: si uero respectu rigoris Gods iusticie, no mans iustice is sufficient for himselfe, sed ex Dei misericordia & liberalitate, &c. But of Gods mercie and liberalitie, they may profite themselves and others: Interrogat. Casar. cap. 23.

Auf.

Ans. Gods mercie in Christ, and the workes of supererogation cannot stand together, Rom. 11. v. 6. If of grace, then not of workes. And Paul counteth all things doun, in respect of Christ, Phil. 3. 8. The Psalm also saith, that no man can redeeme his brother, Psal. 49. 7. And Christ onely hath workes to supererogate to others, Of busines we haue all receiued, &c. Ioh. 1. 16.

Distin. 1. de penitent. Non alium statuat nuntium, &c. Appoint not another messenger, who should offer your gift for you: Per vos peccastis, per vos erubescitis: Ye haue sinned by your selues, by your selues be ashamed. Every man must repent for himselfe.

August. sentent. lib. 1. distin. 48. e. Nulius passione redempti sumus, nisi Christi: We are not redeemed by any mans passion, but Christs: The passions of the Saints did profite those, which endured them, and they are profitable also to others, (that is for example) but they are not our redemption. lib. 3. distin. 18. e. Vix unicuique sua virtus sufficiebat, &c. Euery mans vertue doth scarce suffice himselfe: much lesse then is he able to satisfie for another.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF INDVLGENCES and penall iniunctions.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER PENAL

and painfull workes are necessarie vnto repentance.

The Papists.

Not onely amendment, and ceasing to sinne, or repentance in heart before God is alwaies enough to obtaine full reconciliation, but there must be outward penaltie, correction, and chastisement beside, Rhemist. 2. Corinth. 2. sect. 2. 67. Error.

Argum. The incestuous person was rebuked of many, 2. Cor. 2. 6. which word implieth, beside inward repentance, outward correction and chastisement.

The Protestants.

Ans. WE acknowledge, that in notorious sinnes, and offense to the Church, as this of the young mans was, inward repentance is not sufficient, but that after sharpe discipline, by the outward reformation of sorrow, and publike confession, satisfaction must be made to the Church: but it followeth not that this course should bee taken for all sinnes, which a man repenteth him of. And yet wee graunt that outward signes of our sorrow are alwaies necessarie in repentance, not as satisfactorie meanes to redeeme our sinnes, but onely as infallible tokens and effects of our repentance. As Augustine saith, Satis durus est, cuius mentis dolorem oculi carnis non possunt declarare: He is hard hearted, the griefe of whose minde, the eyes of his flesh doe not shew forth. de penitent. cap. 9.

Argum. 1. There are but two essentiall parts of repentance and true conuersion vnto God: To turne from our sinnes, and leade an holy life. So saith the Lord by the Prophet, If the wicked will turne from his sinnes and keepe all my statutes, Ezech. 18. 21. This is all God requireth, without any other penall workes: wherefore ceasing from sinne and amendment of life, which necessarily include the true sorrow and conuersion of the heart, are sufficient for repentance.

Argum. 2. Peter was receiued to mercie without any satisfaction; so was the Publican, Luc. 18. likewise Christ said to the sicke of the palsey, Arise, thy sinnes are forgiven thee, without any penall iniunction: Ergo, such penall workes are not necessarie. See more of this argument before, part. 3. argum. protestant. 8. and all the other arguments concluding against satisfaction, may be applyed against the necessitie of penall and satisfactorie workes.

Augustine. Conscientiam bonam faciunt, praeceptorum malorum condigna satisfactio, & instantium malorum cautia prouidique declinatio: condigna satisfactio est malefacta corrigere, & correctam non vitare. The interior dom. proem. The worthie satisfaction for euils past, and a warie declining of euils present, doe make a good conscience: Worthie satisfaction is this, to correct that is euill, and being amended, not to fall into the same againe. Here satisfaction is nothing else but true repentance, and no other workes of satisfaction but to cease from euill, and doe good, which are the parts of true repentance.

THE SECOND PART, WHICH BE THE Penall Satisfactorie workes.

The Papists.

Player, fasting, almes, are those satisfactorie workes, whereby we doe satisfie God for the temporal punishment due vnto sinne: and beside these, there are other, opera indebita: workes 68. Error.

which

which we are not bound vnto, as whipping and beating of the body, and ſuchlike : Bellarm. lib. 4. de penitent. c. 6.

68. Error.

Argum. Firſt, that prayer, faſting, and ſuch other workes commaunded are ſatisfactions, the Scripture teſtifieth, Pſalm. 10. 15. Call vpon me in the day of trouble, I will deliuer thee, &c. Joel. 2. 17. Turne vnto me with all your heart, with faſting, weeping, and mourning : who knoweth if he will returne and repent, &c. Ergo, with prayer and faſting God is ſatisfied : Bellarm. c. 6.

Contra. Firſt, prayer is a fruit of faith, Rom. 10. 14. How ſhall they call vpon him, vpon whom they haue not beleued : and faſting is a meanes to make our repentance more effectually, being ioyned with weeping and mourning : all theſe are fruits and effects of faith, by the which God is reconciled to vs, and his wrath appealed, and we at peace with God, Rom. 3. 24. &c. Secondly, it is not then the prayer which ſatisfieth or is available before God, but faith, Iam. 1. 5. The prayer of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke. Thirdly, and this is euident by the circumſtance of theſe places, Pſalm. 10. 15. And thou ſhalt glorifie me : if God haue the glorie of our deliuerance, it is to be aſcribed to his merities, not to our ſatisfaction : and Joel. 2. 13. The Lord is mercifull, gracious, &c. but if faſting doe ſatisfie Gods iuſtice, what need they flee to his mercie?

69. Error.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul whipped and beate himſelfe, 1. Cor. 9. 27. I beat downe my bodie : for ſo the word ſignifieth, to beat till the bodie be blew. The Publicane beat vpon his breaſt : Iohn Baptiſt was apparellled in Camels haire, &c. Ergo, painefull and laborious workes not preſcribed or commaunded, are acceptable to God, and ſatisfactorie : Bellar. ibid.

Contra. Firſt, it is a vaine ſurniſe, that Saint Paul ſcourged or beate his owne bodie, as your Friars Flagellants vſe to do : 1. the Apoſtle taketh his ſimilitude from champions that vſe to fight, and one bear another, which the word ſignifieth ; and ſo continuing the metaphore, ſaith, I doe beat downe, &c. 2. The ſame word is vſed, Luc. 18. 5. I will doe her right, leaſt ſhe come and ſay we aerie : Obiurgat me, it were abſurd to ſay, leaſt ſhe beat me. 3. The Apoſtle ſheweth, how he doth beat his bodie, by bringing it into ſubiection, which may be done otherwiſe than by beating : 4. the Apoſtles doctrine is contrarie, Ephel. 5. 29. No man hateth his owne fleſh, but nourſheth and cheriſheth it.

Secondly, the beating vpon the Publicanes breaſt, was a ſigne of his great ſorrow, and of the diſpleaſure taken againſt his ſinne ; hee did not in ſo doing wound or offer violence to his bodie. Auguſtine ſaith, Tundere pectus, quid aliud eſt, quam arguere quod laet in pectore, &c. To knocke vpon the breaſt, what is it elle, but to checke or to reprove ſinne lying hid in the breaſt, ſo Maſch. Serm. 8.

Thirdly, all theſe workes are commended in Scripture : as to mortifie and ſubdue the fleſh, which Saint Paul did, Coloſſ. 4. 5. Mortifie your earthly members : to teſtifie ſorrow by the ſmiting of the ioynts and parts together, as the Publicane is warranted, Nahum. 2. 10. The heart melteth, the knees ſmite together. Iohns auſtere life and conuerſation was agreeable to his calling, which was to be a cryer in the wilderneſſe, Matth. 3. 2. and our Sauour commendeth him for his ſtriſt life, Matth. 11. 7, 18. Wherefore theſe examples ſerue not at all to warrant laborious workes, not preſcribed nor commaunded.

Fourthly, admit theſe workes to be laborious and painefull, yet were they not ſatisfactorie. Saint Paul ſaith, he was crucified with Chriſt, he had mortified, and ſubdued his fleſh ; yet he chal- lengeth no ſatisfaction thereby, but ſaith, I live by the faith in the ſonne of God, Galat. 2. 20. The Publicane maketh ſuite for mercie, Lord be mercifull to me a ſinner, therefore intended no ſatisfaction : and Iohn was ſo farre from ſeeking any merit or ſatisfaction by his life, that he confeſſeth, he was not worthy to beare Chriſts ſhoes, Matth. 3. 11. Wherefore by theſe places, no ſatisfactorie penall workes can be warranted or perſwaded.

The Proteſtants.

Fiſt, prayer, faſting, almes, are the liuely fruits and effects of faith, neceſſarie to be done, and through Chriſt acceptable vnto God, but there is no merit or ſatisfaction in them.

Argum. No workes which are commaunded, and wherein we are indebted vnto God, are able to ſauſſie, becauſe wee haue done no more, then was our dutie to doe, Luk. 17. 10. Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Nemo in operibus gloriatur, &c. Let no man glorie in his works, becauſe of right we owe obedience to the Lord, &c. Nec in te patitur dominum vnus uſum eſſe operis, aut laboris, &c. God doth not ſuffer thee to haue the vſe of any one worke or labour, becauſe while we liue, we muſt be alwayes working, Ambroſ. in 17. Luc. But prayer, faſting, almes are commaunded, and ſo our due debt vnto God : Ergo, they are not ſatisfactorie.

Hierome ſaith, Cane, ne ſi ieiunare caperis, te putes eſſe iam ſauclam, &c. Take heed leaſt thou thinke thy ſelfe holy, when thou beginneſt to faſt ; for this vertue is but an helpe, it is not the perfection of holineſſe, ad Calant. but ſatisfaction is the very perfection of workes.

This is alſo the opinion of ſome of the Popiſh writers, Non ſatiſfieri per opera alia debita : That we cannot ſatisfie by workes that are due, or debted : I Thomas, Durandus, Paludanus in 4. diſt. 15. Wherefore

Wherefore prayer, almes, and other workes being commaunded, and so our due debt vnto God, cannot satisfie.

Secondly, neither is God so much as pleased with voluntarie punishments inflicted vpon the bodie, much lesse doe they worke any satisfaction.

Argum. Coloss. 2. The Apostle calleth it, a shew of wisdom in voluntarie religion, in not sparing the body, &c. is no true wisdom, but a shew of wisdom; not religion prescribed, but voluntarie: like as Baals priests did lance and cut themselves with knives, being therefore derided of the Prophet, 1. Reg. 18. Such are the painfull workes which monkes and heremites doe afflict their bodies with: God requireth no such things at their hands.

Bellar. S. Paul reprocueth those, that of superstition afflict their body, not for the health of their soule: lib. 14. de penitent. c. 4.

Contra. First, those also pretended by afflicting of the body to humble the soule, in humbleness of mind, and not sparing the body: Secondly, all voluntarie or will-worship, voluntaria (which Hieronymus translateth, falsa religio, false religion, or false worship, Algasia. qu. 10. tom. 4.) is superstition: wherefore the Papists that offer vnto God workes not commaunded, euen of their owne deuising, to be satisfactions for them, are also guiltie of superstition.

Bellarmino also is a witness for vs against himselfe: Satisfactoria opera non in observationibus ab hominibus excogitatis, &c. We doe not place satisfactorie workes in obseruations inuented of men, but in fasting, almes, prayer, which in the Scriptures haue precepts, examples, and large promises, Job. 4. c. 13. resp. ad arg. 7. a more euident testimonie against voluntarie satisfactions cannot be produced.

Lastly, Augustine saith, Qui tundit pectus, & non corrigitur, solidat peccata non tollit: He that beateth his breast, and is not corrected, doth harden or consolidate his sinnes; he taketh them not away: Tom. 9. de disciplin. Christian. c. 10. Ergo, beating of the flesh, being not a mollifying of the heart, doth worke no satisfaction.

THE SECOND PART, BY WHOM PENALL

workes are to be inflicted.

Three waies, they say, God is satisfied: 1. by bearing patiently the punishment that God layeth vpon vs: 2. by assuming voluntarily the laborious and painfull workes of penance: 3. and in willing vndergoing the sentence of the priest in his penall intunctions. Of the first, there is no question betwene vs, that we are patiently to endure the Lords crosse, though thereby wee neither merit, nor satisfie: the other two they would proue thus.

First, that penall workes may voluntarily be vndertaken, these examples shew it: Job saith, 70. Error. I reprehend my selfe, and repent in dust and ashes: Job. 42. 6. David, of himselfe fasted and praied; 1. Sam. 12. he was not enioyned to doe it. So likewise Abab humbled himselfe with fasting and sackcloth, 1. King. 21. he was not bid so to doe; yet God was well pleased with it: Bellar. 14. c. 4.

Contra. First, these were not voluntarie workes, to humble themselves with fasting and sackcloth, but such as God called for, and were by the Prophets prescribed to the people, when they by repentance did turne vnto God: Joel. 2. 12. Turne vnto the Lord with fasting and weeping, &c. Wherefore by these examples they haue not proued, that voluntarie and vnbidden punishments, as whipping and scourging of the bodie, and such like, are of our selues to be inflicted: Secondly, none of these were penall or satisfactorie workes of penance, but lively and euident signes of true repentance: Thirdly, it is very absurd, that Abab a wicked hypocrite, is matched herewith Job and David, the faithfull seruants of God, in the exercise of true repentance: that God pardoned Abab, it was not of his satisfaction, but of Gods mercie, remitting temporall punishment for temporall repentance: for how could Abab satisfie God, that did sell himselfe to worke wickednesse. And they themselves graunt, that a man being in deadly sinne, cannot satisfie: Bellarmino. 13. resp. ad argum. 7.

Secondly, the Priests haue power to enioyne workes of penance, as affliction of bodie, mulct, 71. Error. penance, correction, by almes-deeds, fasting, abstinence, and such like, Conc. Trid. sess. 14. can. 15. lxxxiij. 2. Corin. 2. felt. 2.

Argum. To them is giuen authoritie to bind and loose: Ergo, to enioyne penance: As they loose their sinnes, so they bind them vnto the penall workes of penance: and as they haue power to reme sinnes, in respect of the faule and euillasting punishment; so to retaine sinnes, for the temporall punishment: Bellar. Job. 4. c. 3.

Ans. 1. Some kind of mulcts, Church discipline is not to deale withall: as bodily punishment, and pecuniarie fines, which are to be imposed at the discretion of the Magistrate: Synod. Mogunt. cap. 77. Archidiaconus multa pecuniaria punire non praesumat: The Archdeacon shall not presume to punish with pecuniarie mulct. Secondly, wee graunt an holosome vse of the keyes in Church discipline, discipline, in punishing and cleansing of notorious offenders in the open face of the congregation: but priuately to enioyne men penance for their secret finnes, is an Antichristian yoke. Thirdly, yet publike penance enioyned notorious offenders, is no part of their satisfaction to Godward, but a signe of their reconciliation to the Church, which they haue offended; and it is profitable for the example of others, that they by such publike shame may be terrified from the like offending. Fourthly, binding and loosing are contrarie actes, when the ministers by the word of God bind, they loose not; when they loose, they bind not: but the popish priest doth both loose and binde together; loose the sinne, binde the punishment: and the authoritie which Christ giueth, is to remit and retaine sinne: As for remitting or retaining of the punishment, it belongeth to the iudge of the world, Christ himselfe.

The Protestants.

First, for a man to lay any voluntary or deuised punishment vpon himselfe to be a satisfaction for his sinne; it is contrarie to the Scripture.

Argum. 1. Mark. 7. 7. In vaine do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men but the inflicting vpon the bodie such punishments, as in whipping, scourging, beating of the flesh, is the doctrine and commandment of men: Ergo, it is a vaine worship. Bellarmin. Answ. 1. Obedience to men displeaseth not God, but when they commaund things contrarie to God. It is the commandment of God, that we should repent with fasting, sackcloth, &c. ib. 4. 24.

Contra. First, nothing can be more contrary to Gods word, then to teach men by their owne punishment, to satisfie the wrath of God: for the Scripture teacheth, that Christ is our peace; that he hath reconciled vs to God by his crosse, and slaine hatred thereby, that was before betweene God and vs, Ephes. 2. 14. 16. there remaineth therefore nothing to be satisfied for, by vs: Secondly, repent with fasting; to make our sorrow more effectually, which they also shewed in those times by ashes and sackcloth, was the commandment of God, and the practise of the Saintes; but to make bald the head, to cut and afflict the flesh, was the vse of idolatrous priests, 1. Kings. 18. neither liked nor allowed of God.

Argum. 2. The Apostle saith, Heb. 12. 9. We haue had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected vs, &c. should we not much rather be in subiection to the Father of spirits, that we might liue? And ver. 10. They chastened vs after their owne pleasure, but he for our profit &c. Here the Apostle maketh two sorts of. Correctors, man for the body, God for the soule: and two kinds of corrections, inflicted either by earthly parents, or by the Father of spirits: From whence I conclude, that all corrections tending to the life of the soule, are applied by the Father of spirits: therefore as children are chastened of their fathers for offences toward them, they do not chastise themselves; so our heavenly Father correcteth his children, they do not punish themselves.

Origene saith in 14. Matth. Si quando &c. If at any time wee fall into the necessitie of temptation, let vs remember, Quid Iesus nos compulsi ingredi nauem illam: That Iesus constrained vs to go into the shippe: as the Apostles went not into the shippe of themselves to saile on the troublesome sea, but Iesus compelled them, Matth. 14. 22. so no man is willingly to runne into any affliction, but when he is thereto appointed of God.

Secondly, penall iniunctions imposed for satisfaction by Priests, are not warranted by the word of God.

Argum. 1. Such workes as God requireth necessarie to repentance, cannot be refused without sinne, as such, whereof the Prophet speaketh, Isay. 1. 17. Learn to do well, seek iudgement, &c. But the iniunctions of the Priests may be refused without sinne, as some of their popish diuines hold: as Scotus, Gabriel, and this Bellarmin denieth not, though the rest he saith be of another minde, ib. 4. 13. therefore the Priests penall iniunctions are not those, which the Lord requireth in his word. argum. Philipp. apolog. confess. Augusten.

Argum. 2. The Indulgences of men may dispense with the satisfactions enioyned by the Priest, but they cannot free them from those precepts, Bring forth fruits worthie of repentance: Ergo, such satisfactions are not prescribed or commanded of God.

Bellarmin answereth, that the Indulgences of men, do not free any from Gods precepts, but onely from the paines, and punishments: as it is the Apostles precept, to pay tribute to whom tribute belongeth: Rom. 13. Yet the Prince may pardon the tribute, but for all this hee freeeth not any from the Apostles precept. Bellarmin. ib. 4. 13.

Contra. First, the reason is not alike; man may remit a debt or duxie vnto man: Ergo, man may dispense with a debt due vnto God: nay, seeing one man cannot remit the debt of another, how vnreasonable is it, that any should presume to remit any thing due vnto God. Secondly, the argument is not answered, neither do I thinke that father Robert doth well vnderstand himselfe in his answer: for if penal satisfactions be comprehended in this commandment, Bring forth worthie fruites, &c. as they pretend they are; this being a precept of Scripture; if they can dispense with this, then do they dispense with Gods precepts: wherefore they must either confesse, that their satisfactions penititions are not these verba frater; and so they haue no ground in Scripture: or if they be, they haue no power to dispense with them.

Argum. 3. True repentance is a free worke, not of compulsion, or coaction: Saint Paul exhorteth men to iudge themselves, that they be not iudged, 1. Cor. 11. 31. But now when penance is layd vpon a man, and not voluntarily taken of himselfe, he is iudged rather of another, he doth not iudge himselfe. Augustine saith, Quem puniet, punit seipsum, prorsus aut punit, aut punit Deus, ut illi puniat, punit tu: He that repenteth, punisheth himselfe: either thou punishest, or God: if thou wilt not haue God to do it, punish thyselfe. A man therefore must punish himselfe, he must not be punished of another in his repentance to Godward: for of outward chastisement to the world, now is not the question.

Augustine saith, de temp. serm. 181. c. 16. Nunquam spernis penitentiam, &c. God neuer despiseth repentance, if it be simply & sincerely offered vnto him: Etiam si quis explorare non poterit omnem satisfactionis ordinem: Though a man cannot fulfill all the order of satisfaction? Here wee see repentance, without satisfaction prescribed and enioyned, is sufficient. Likewise ad fratres in eremo. serm. 11. O Monache, fac ut mens tua sit liber, quem vidit, &c. O thou solitarie fellow. (Monke) let thy minde be that booke, which Ezechiel saw, wherein were written Lamentations: Ad has Lamentationes te conuersas: Turne thee to these Lamentations: Here are no outward Satisfactiones enioyned, but inward Lamentations.

Deus Gregorius. 5. tit. 38. c. 1. Manifesta peccata non sunt occulta correctione purganda: Manifest finnes must not be purged with secret correction. But popish priests many times enioyne secret penance for great finnes, wherein they do contrarie to their owne Canons.

THE THIRD PART, OF PAR- dons and Indulgences.

The Papists.

1. The principal Magistrates of the Church are no lesse authorized to pardon, then to punish, 72. Error. And to remit the temporall punishment due to sinners, the offence being first forgiven, which we call an Indulgence or pardon, Rhemist. 2. Cor. 2. 4. Concil. Trid. sess. 25.

Argum. To whom you forgieue any thing, I forgieue also, 2. Cor. 2. 10. Here the Apostle forgieue the young man a piece of his punishment, when he might haue kept him longer in penance for his offence, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. We denie not, but that the Church may release such publike exercise of humiliation, which is inioyned offenders for triall of their repentance, and some satisfaction of the Church, when it seeth that they are sufficiently humbled. But it followeth not, that the Church therefore may dispence with any necessary part of repentance towards God. 2. Whereas you say, the Apostle notwithstanding his rebuke was sufficient, might haue kept the young man still in temporall punishment: it is cleane contrary to the Apostles owne rule, who perswadeth the Corinthians to forgieue him, least he should be overcome of too much heavinesse, vers. 7. The Apostle therefore would neither forgieue nor release him, before they had forgiven him, and he had satisfied the whole Church, vers. 10. Neither would he keepe him longer in punishment, having once forgiven sufficiently, vers. 6. The Apostle therefore did neither binde nor release him at his owne pleasure, but as he saw repentance to be wrought in the offender.

The power which the Pope and popish Bishops do challenge vnto themselves, in giuing Pardons and Indulgences, is most blasphemous.

1. They doe take vpon them to release both the punishment of this life, and the paines of Purgatorie also: and say, that their pardons profite both the dead and the living, Bull. Leon. 1. cap. 1.

1. Contrarie to their owne Canons, par. 1. can. 24. q. 2. c. 2. Gelasius: Ecclesia viuentes potest absolue, non mortuos: The Church may loose or binde those which are liuing, but not the dead. And it is grounded vpon that saying of our Saviour, What soeuer you binde in earth, &c. Super terram (inquit) He saith vpon the earth: for hee that dieth being bound, nusquam dicit absolui, hee is nowhere absolued. And Clement 5. reproveth certaine pardoners, and depreceth against them which made them beleue, that gaue them almes; Quid animas uorum (ut mendedicti afferunt) de purgatorio extrahunt: That they drew out of Purgatorie their friends soules, as they lyingly said: Clement 5. tit. 9. c. 2.

2. They pardon not onely the punishment, but the sinne both past, and to come, for dayes, yeres, hundreds, thousands of yeeres: howsoever the Rhemists would beare vs in hand, that an indulgence is a release but of the punishment. Such was the first Iubile pardon granted by Bonifacius 8. anno 1300. And another by Leo the 10. anno 1513.

3. Clement 6. in his bull of the Iubile yere, saith thus, Mandamus Angelis quatenus animam am- viam accedentium, &c. We command the Angels, to carrie all the ſoules of thoſe that come to Rome this yeere, out of Purgatorie into Paradife: Et concedimus cruce ſignatis, & ad eorum vota, diuini tres animas, quas vellent, & Purgatorio liberarent: And we graunt to all thoſe, that haue taken vpon them the holy Croſſe, to deliuer two or three ſoules at their pleaſure out of Purgatorie. See what monſtrous blaſphemies here are. See alſo the Boſton pardons graunted by Pope Innocent, Pope Inlie, Pope Clement, which gaue them releaſe of all their ſinns for hie hundred yeeres, Fox. p. 1178.

2. Contrarie to their owne Canons: Clem. lib. 5. tit. 9. c. 2. Certain Pardoners, and Queſtors are condemned, quia à pena & culpa abſoluant: which tooke vpon them to abſolue both from the fault and puniſhment.

3. They giue indulgences for temporal ſeruices; as for giuing towards Subſidies for the maintenance of warre, for building of bridges, and ſuch like: for the which the Councell of Baſil is reprehended, epiſtol. ſynod. 7. But the Apoſtle graunteth indulgence to the inceſtuous perſon onely becauſe of his true ſorrow, which teſtified his repentance, 2. Cor. 2. 7.

4. They tooke vpon them to grant plenarie and general indulgences, as to all that do ſuch and ſuch things: as in the yeere of Iubile, to all, that viſite Rome: So the Councell of Baſil gaue plenarie indulgence to all reſiant in the Councell, ſeſſ. 45. Thus did not Iohn Baptiſt, who miniſtered Baptiſme of repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes, (which is the true indulgence) not to all indifferently, but to thoſe which confeſſed their ſinnes, Matth. 3. 6. the reſt hee rebuked, and threatened with Gods iudgements: Yea their owne Decrees teſtifie: Diſtinct. 50. c. 27. Satis temerarium & quicquid remiſſionem peccatorum ſe dare poſſe putet: He is very raſh, that thinketh he is able to giue remiſſion of ſinnes to all.

5. They graunt indulgences to many that are abſent, and vknowne, not examining their contrition and repentance: ſo did not our Sauour, who viſed to heale thoſe onely in whom hee ſaw faith, Mark. 5. 34. Thy faith hath made thee whole, Mark. 9. 23. Luk. 7. 50. Yea and their owne Canons ſay, Peccati venia non datur niſi correctio: Pardon of ſinne is not granted, but to thoſe which are amended: ſext. decretal. regul. iur. 5.

6. Their indulgences were reſtrained to ſeueral limits and circuites: Decret. Greg. 16. c. 18. c. 14. Indulgentia non proſumit non ſubditis: Indulgences doe not proſite thoſe which are not ſubiects to the Biſhop, that is of his diocelle. But Christs indulgence is generall to all, Ioh. 3. 15. Quiſcumq; beleuerit in ihm ſhall not periſh.

7. They giue indulgence not for the time paſt only, but for the time to come, giuing as it were thereby a libertie to ſin. Chriſt doth otherwiſe: after he had freed the adulterous woman, Ioh. 8. he ſaith, Que uel ſinne nunciat: he doth not abſolue her for the time to come, but onely giue her an admonition: See the Canon of Gelaſius following.

8. Their indulgences did flye in euery corner like flies in the ayre, or moates in the Sunne: whereof there hath beene an ancient complaint: Finis hodie tot indulgentia, &c. There are ſo many indulgences now adaies, that they grow into contempt, opus & ripari. lib. 3. c. 9. But the Scriptures make not ſaluation ſo eaſie or common a thing, but that euen the righteous doe finde it through much difficultie obtained, 1. Pet. 4. 18.

9. By their indulgences they could giue power to other to deliuer ſoules; as before in the bull of Clement 6. but Chriſt gaue power onely vnto the Apoſtles and Miniſters to remitt or retaine ſin, to binde, or looſe: they can haue no committies on this behalfe.

10. And that which filled vp the meaſure of iniquitie, they ſet their pardons to ſale: as in Pope Leo his time, his pardons for ten ſhillings would giue to any man power, to deliuer one ſoule at his pleaſure out of Purgatorie.

Argum. The Scripture ſaith, that God onely forgiveth ſinnes, Mark. 2. 17. And that Chriſt too otherwiſe, then as God, forgane ſinnes, verſ. 10. His Apoſtles onely as his Miniſters and Ambaſſadors, in his name, declare and pronounce remiſſion of ſinnes, 2. Corinth. 5. 19. Wherefore there is no ſuch power giuen vnto men, at their pleaſure to binde or looſe.

Auguſtine ſaith, Non ſecundum arbitrium hominum tenentur, aut ſoluantur peccata, ſed ad arbitrium Dei, & orationes ſanctorum: Sinnes are not looſed, or retained at the pleaſure of men, but according to the will of God, and prayers of his Church.

Gelaſius epiſtol. ad Sanctum Andream ſubſcribo dulo non legitur, quod eorum voce deprecatur: dicit uobis certam, dum ſameos in errore ducimus: Neſcio inter que mundi prodigia hoc poſſit aduolui: Remitti culpa de praeterito poſſeſt, correptione ſine dubio ſubſequentis, &c. It was neuer heard of in the world (as they ſay,) giue vs pardon, but let vs continue in error ſtill: this may bee well counted a monſtrous thing: the fault that is paſt, may be forgiven, if aſſendement of life follow after. This learned Biſhop rebueth it a monſtrous thing, to forgive ſinnes to come, then ſtill continuing in ſin: but this is an vſuall praſtice in the Popes Conſiſtorie at Rome, to forgive ſinnes for many yeeres to come.

This doctrine alſo hath bene ſealed: Thomas Clarke persecuted for ſaying the Pope had no authoritie

Fox. p. 844.

De Baptiſm.
lib. 3. cap. 18.

authoritie to giue pardon, and to release any mans soule from sinne; and so from paine, For. pag. 830.

John Fortune Martyr, being asked if he did not beleene, that the Pope had power to forgive sins, answered; The Pope is but a man, and the Prophet David saith, No man can deliuer his brother, nor make agreement for him vnto God. Psal. 49. For pag. 1918.

Here also may be remembred, how one William Button apposed a pardoner with this question: Whether the holy father the Pope could deliuer soules out of Purgatorie? There is no doubt of that said the other. Why doth hee not then (quoth Button) of charitie deliuer all soules from thence? For this speech the good man was troubled, For pag. 1230.

This also was Master Latimers question: W<sup>h</sup>y the Pope, who could with a word of his mouth (as they say) haue spoiled all Purgatorie; doth suffer notwithstanding so much money to be bestowed in that way, and to paye of so many Parrones in heauen, as he might deliuer out of Purgatorie. pag. 372. col. 1.

The Papists.

The satisfactorie and meritorious workes of the Saints which doe abound, being communicable, and applicable to the faithfull that want, are the very ground of the indulgences and pardons of the Church, and the very treasure thereof, and to be dispensed according to euery mans neede by the pastors of Church, 2. Corinth. 1. sest. 5. Coloss. 1. sest. 4. Rhemist.

The Protestants.

Here are many blasphemies and vntruths couched together: That a mans penalties may exceede and be greater than his sinnes, and that abundance may supplie another mans want. For thus the Rhemists say: Which cannot stand with the iudgement of God, to punish a man more then he hath deserved; And it is contrarie to the Scriptures: Enter not into judgement with thy seruant: for in thy sight shall none that liueth be iustified. Psal. 143. 2. And as for the Lord should call him to account, he should not answere one to a thousand, Eccl. 3. 21.

How can the Church-gouernours dispense the merites of one to another? Who made them stewards of another mans good? Ye say also the contrarie your selues, That the abounding passion of the Saints are applicable to others by the sufferers intention; Rhem. 1. Coloss. 2. 2. Then not by the Churches dispensation.

It is a great blasphemie, that one may be holpen by another mans merites, and it doth derogate from the death of Christ, whose only merites are the treasure and store-house of the Church: The most righteous man that euer was, can but saue his owne soule, Ezech. 14. 4. And that onely by Christ.

Augustine saith: Vnusquisque pro se rationem reddet, nec alieno testimonio quisquam adiungetur apud Deum; vix sibi quisque sufficit. &c. Euery man shall giue account for himselfe, before God no man is holpen by the testimonie of another: the testimonie of his owne conscience doth hardly suffice for himselfe. In Matth. term. 22.

The Papists.

The dispensing of pardons and indulgences, is onely committed, they say, to the chiefe Magistrate the Popes and Bishops: and as the Bishops in their Diocesse haue especiall cases reserved to themselves, wherein inferiour Priests are not to deale; so the Pope hath also his proper reseruations, wherein other Prelates are not to meddle, Concil. Trident. sess. 14. cap. 7. The cases reserved to the Pope are 5. in number, For pag. 785. The Bishop of Paris, ann. 1515. reserved these caluities to himselfe, to dispense in murder, witchcraft, sacrilege, heresie, simonie, adulterie, &c. Titelm. Heshus. loc. 9. de penitent. err. 63. Likewise the yeeres of their pardons are limited: Bishops may not exceede 40. daies pardon: the Pope may be lauiish in his hundreds and thousands; yea, and this reseruatiō of cases, standeth not onely with the externall policie of the Church, but is of force euen before God; Concil. Trident. sess. 14. cap. 7.

The Protestants.

We will not much contend with them about reseruatiō of cases, for we acknowledge no such power to giue pardons, or indulgences, either in superiour or inferiour Priests: yet we will shew how this deuice of theirs standeth not with their owne doctrine.

Argum. 1. It is a greater power to remit the sinne, than to release the punishment: but euery Priest hath the greater power, as they say, to remit sinnes, yea as fully as hath the Pope himselfe: Aluiss in his booke of pardons, cap. 2. Ergo, why haue they not the lesse power, which is by indulgence to dispense with the punishment? And that of these two, the remission of sinnes is the greater, is confessed by the Rhemist. 2. Cor. 2. sest. 6.

Argum. 2. In the point of death, the reseruatiō of cases hath no place: but at that time euery Priest may absolue from all manner sinnes and punishment, Concil. Trident. sess. 14. cap. 7. But euery house is with some, and ought to be with all, the point of death: because wee are vn certaine when it cometh, and therefore ought alwaies to be in a readines. Therefore euen by their owne rule euery Priest hath at all times authoritie to absolue in all cases.

Again,

Again, if these wordes of Christ bee spoken to all Ministers and Preachers of the Gospell, Ioh. 20. 22. Whose sinnes ye retaine, &c. (which cannot be denied) to them all then is committed equally that power of binding and loosing, which is exercised by the preaching of the word.

Their owne Canons doe giue authoritie to every Priest to enioyne penance; Decc. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 3. c. 12. and they do bind every man, in iudicium sibi penitentiam adimplere, to fulfill the penance inioyned; or els, vinens ab ecclesia ingressu arcentur: He that refuseth must be kept out of the church as long as he liueth, and want Christian buriall, when he is dead. If every Priest then by their law hath power to inioyne penance; why not also to release penance? Wherefore herein they doe their Priests wrong.

And seeing we are entred to speake of the abuse and vsurpation of the keyes in the popish Church, as in reseruatiō of cases, and such like, I will briefly touch other notable abuses and corruptions among them in the dispensation of the keyes, and especially concerning excommunication: wherein they apparently transgresse their owne canons.

ABUSES IN THE POPISH CHVRCH, IN THE administration of the Keyes, and namely about

Excommunication.

THe ancient Canons forbid, that the dead should be anathematized, or excommunicate. Ambros. decc. 2. Monente nos apostola, &c. The Apottle admonishing vs, &c. least any of fen comight rise in the Church, while we goe about to iudge of them, which are passed out of this life, &c. Whether we liue or die, we are the Lordes: Why doeſt thou iudge another mans ſeruant? And to the ſame effect Paulinus thus answereth Iulianus the Emperour: Quibus recitabitur ſententia damnationis noſtre, &c. To whome shall the sentence of our condemnation be recited? To what end should we warre with the dead? &c. But nothing is more common with Papiſts, than to excommunicate the dead.

2. Excommunication in time paſt in the purer ages of the Church, was not vſed to be denounced againſt Kings: Epistol. Laodienſ. cont. Paſchal. 2. Si quis vetus & nouum teſtamentum, &c. If any man turne ouer the old and new teſtament, he ſhall evidently find, quod aut nimis, aut difficile poſſunt, that kings and princes may hardly or not at all be excommunicate; they may be admoniſhed, reprooued, &c. Behold Pope Hildebrand was the firſt, qui leuauit ſacerdotum lanceam contra diademate regum, that liſt vp the prieſtly weapon againſt the crown of Princes. But now they take vpon them at their pleaſure to excommunicate princes, and it hath been the praſtiſe of the Popes a long time.

3. They did not vſe of auncient time to excommunicate vpon diſpleaſure, but for ſome notable ſinne: Origen. tract. 24. in Matth. Eſt videre multos doctores, &c. Wee may ſee many doctores and teachers, that ſuffer not to enter into the Church, &c. Non propter peccata, &c. They doe not excommunicate for ſinne, but of diſpleaſure and contention; and they are better many times than themſelues, &c. But this was vſuall in Poperie, to excommunicate men vpon diſpleaſure, as Arundell Archbiſhop of Canterburie ſuſpended all the Churches in London, that did not ring their belles at his coming: Fox. p. 554.

4. The vſe hath been, that none for light or ſmall offences ſhould be excommunicate. Council. Aurel. 5. can. 2. Nullus ſacerdotum quouquam recte ſidei hominem, &c. That no prieſt for light cauſes or matters, ſuſpend any man from the communion: But the contrarie is praſtiſed among them; as Courtney Archbiſhop of Canterburie ſuſpended certaine poore men, becauſe they brought litter for his horſe in ſackes. Fox. p. 555.

5. It hath been decreed, Diem peremptorium ad primam citationem non ſtatendum, maxime cum de rebus Eccleſiaſticis agitur: That a peremptorie day ſhould not be ſet vpon the firſt citation, eſpecially in Eccleſiaſticall matters, but that the partie ſhould be further expected: Late- rauenſ. ſub Alexand. 3. part. 2. c. 9. The contrarie is with them praſtiſed, vpon the firſt citation to excommunicate.

6. Likewiſe it was decreed, Penitus interdiciamus, ut cauſa cupiditatis nullus, &c. We do inhibit, that none vpon couetouſnes doe excommunicate, or abſolue, eſpecially where the cuſtome is; that the excommunicate partie when he is abſolued, ſhould pay money. Late rauenſ. ſub Innocent. 3. c. 49. But they vſe to excommunicate for want of their fees.

7. Another fault before this time complained of, quod res hodie ſunt excommunicationes per officiales: That there are now ſo many excommunications by officials, that they are contemned and turned to laughter: Opus. tripart. lib. 3. c. 9. Senonenſ. council. decret. m. 31. We ſtraightly charge, ut cauſent ab earum multiplicatione, &c. That they take heed of multiplying excommunications, ne in ſolpendium deducantur, that they be not made nought worth. But nothing is more common with them, than for popiſh curſes and excommunications to flye abroad.

8. Late rauenſ.

8. Lactantius. sub Alexand. 3. par. 1. c. 3. Nisi admonitione canonica premissa, &c. That the prelates should not pronounce the sentence of excommunication, but vpon canonically admonition going before; so also was it decreed, Council. Oxiens. sub Stephano: But it is their vse, to excommunicate at the first, without any other admonition.

9. It hath been the vse, that for publicke and notorious sinnes, men should be excommunicate: Council. Cabilon. sub Carol. c. 25. Si quis publice peccat, &c. If any man sinne publickly; secundum ordinem canonum pro meritis suis excommunicatur. &c. let him according to the canons be excommunicated for his demerite, and so be reconciled: But it is a rare thing with them to excommunicate for adulterie, blasphemie, vsurie, and such like, but to enioyne a little popish penance, and so to reconcile them.

10. Carthag. 4. c. 84. Episcopus nullum prohibeat ingredi Ecclesiam, &c. Let the bishop forbid none to enter into the Church, and to heare the word, whether a Gentile, Iewe, or heretick, vntill the Masse, &c. which was then nothing else, but the communion: But with them excommunicate persons are excluded from hearing the word at all, wherby they might be brought to repentance for their sinne.

11. None in the purer times of the Church were excommunicate; before their cause was heard: Epistol. Lendens. Nec a Papa Romano nos excommunicatos credimus, &c. Neither doe we believe, that we are excommunicate of the Pope, for we know he is not ignorant, what Nicodemus saith; our lawe condemneth no man, vnlesse it heare him first: But they vse to excommunicate without presence of the partie, or hearing of the cause.

12. It is their law, that excommunicatus non potest excommunicare, that they which are excommunicate, cannot excommunicate others: Caus. 24. qu. 1. c. 4. But the Papists stand ipso facto excommunicate, as all heretickes and idolators doe: and Master Bona saith, he told them to their face in Pisicam, that there was none of all the popish hierarchie, which by the present and auncient constitutions of the Church is not ipso facto to be pronounced excommunicate: Epistol. 1. p. 88.

13. Their owne canons make two kinds of excommunications: the greater, which is a communione fidelium, from the communion of the faithfull; and the lesse, a persequione sacra, from the receiuing of the Sacraments: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 59. And the greater excommunication is not to be vsed, but vpon great offences: Synod. Coloniens. part. 13. cap. 5. Cum excommunicatio prima sit, quae nulla maior in Ecclesia: Seeing excommunication is a punishment, when the which there is no greater in the Church, let no man be excommunicate, in propeccata delicta, but in deadly sinne. Now the contrarie is practised with them, which draw out euen the greater excommunication vpon euery small occasion, neuer vsing the lesse at all: And that is the greater excommunication, both their practise sheweth, in separating not from the communion only, but from the entrance into the Church; and the Canon likewise witnesseth, excommunicatio simpliciter lata, an excommunication simply pronounced, without any condizon, is vnderstood of the greater: Decr. Greg. lib. 5. tit. 39. c. 59.

14. By the auncient Canons, it is not lawfull to haue any fellowship with excommunicate persons: they all stand excommunicate, qui cibo, potu, osculo, &c. which doe communicate with them in meate or drinke, &c. Caus. 11. q. 3. c. 3. Nicolaus. Sine spe siue reconciliationis; Hei without hope to be reconciled, that doth companie with the excommunicate: C. 2. Martin. Non palam vel secretum eis loquendum: They must not openly or secretly talke with them. C. 18. Iohannes, do is not lawfull to go to the house of one excommunicate. C. 26. Communicare non licet: It is not lawfull to communicate with those, that keepe companie with the excommunicate. C. 35. Greg. Now then the Canons beeing thus strict, that not onely they, that keepe companie with the excommunicate, but they which communicate with the companions of the excommunicate, that doe eate, drinke, and talke with them, doe stand also excommunicate: by this meanes, thousands of people (excommunications being so common as they are) shall stand subiect at once to the temperance of excommunication.

15. Because excommunication was counted so heauie a sentence: anathema, actus uerbis damna: It is the damnation of eternall death, to be anathematized by excommunication. Caus. 11. q. 3. c. 41. In the same place it is decreed, that the sentence of excommunication, non ferenda sine consensu Episcopi, should not be giuen without the knowledge of the bishop or Archbishop himselfe. But the contrarie is practised amongst them; euery officiall, deputie, or surrogie, hath as great power to excommunicate as the bishop himselfe.

16. Beside, excommunicate persons (by the Canons and Imperiall constitutions) are deprived of ciuill priuiledges and immunities: Excommunicandus non audiendus in iudicio: An excommunicate person is not to be heard in iudgement. Decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 19. c. 1. Non sumus homines. They are not guiltie of murder, that take armes against the excommunicate: Caus. 23. qu. 2. 47. Urbanus. In nullum testimonium recipiendi: They must not be receiued as witnesses in any cause: Calixtus. epist. 2. They are subiect Banno imperialis to the imperiall outlawrie, if they stand one yeere yeere excommunicate: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 13. Frederic. Who ſetteth not, what inconveniencies will enſue, that thouſands being wrapped in the ſentence of excommunication at once, as 1. ſteward artie. 14. ſhall alſo incur the penaltie and danger of the Princes lawes.

17. It is prohibited by the Canons, that any man ſhould excommunicate in his owne caſe, Pro vindicta propria iniuria, quod ſacris regulis prohibetur: to be revenged for any iniurie done to himſelfe, which is forbidden by the ſacred rules: cauſ. 23. qu. 4. c. 27. Gregor. The contrary is pro-titled by popiſh Prelates: as ſee an example before artie. 4.

18. Nicen. 2. cau. 4. It is decreed, that no man, Propter auri exactionem vel alienius alius ſpici-verandum templum claudere: Should for the exacting of gold or ſilver, or ſuch like ſhut up the Church doores, that is, interdict it, that the diuine myſteries be not ſolemnized in it: The popiſh practiſe is contrary, who for the omiſſion of the leaſt dutie, or fee, belonging to them, and upon other ſmall occaſions, do interdict Churches; an example hereof ſee in Arundell artie. 3.

19. By the old Canons, he that was excommunicate, was ſolemnely reconciled to the Church, Terra proſtratus veniam poſtulat: Falling downe to the ground, he muſt aſke forgiveness: and pub-like prayer was to be made for him in this manner: Proſta quaſumus Domine huic famulo tuo. Graunt Lord, we pray thee to this thy ſervant worthe fruite of repentance, that he may be reſtored to the holie Church, from whoſe integritie hee hath erred by ſinning, cauſ. 11. qu. 1. c. 1. Tell: But now among them abſolution is done in ſecret, without any notice giuen, or ſubmiſſion made before the congregation.

20. Laſtly, to end where I began, in time paſt the Presbyters were ioyned with the Biſhops in the adminiſtration of the keyes of the Church, as in binding, and looſing: but the Pope & po-piſh prelates were the firſt that brought in reſervation of caſes, and appropriated al to themſelves, excluding the reſt, as it may appeare by this reſervation of caſes: and for the truth of antiquitie in this behalfe, theſe authorities I had at hand.

1. Cauſ. 11. qu. 3. c. 106. Debeant 12. ſacerdotes episcopum circumſtare, &c. Twelve other Priests muſt ſtand by the Biſhop, when hee pronounceth excommunication, &c. C. 108. Likewise, when the penitent partie was to be reconciled, the Biſhop muſt be aſſiſted with as many.

2. Cauſ. 12. qu. 2. c. 31. Nec episcopi ſine preſbyteris, nec preſbyteri ſine episcopis res eccleſie vendunt, &c.
Neither the Biſhop without the Presbyters, nor the Presbyters without the Biſhop muſt ſell the goods of the Church. If they were ioyned together in diſpenſing of the temporall goods of the Church, much more in the ſpiritual.

3. They were ioyned together in deciding and ending of controverſies of the Church.
Cauſ. 13. qu. 7. c. 2. Preſentibus ſenioribus episcopis, &c. The Biſhop ſhall heare the cauſes of the Clergie, the Seniors or Elders being preſent. C. 6. Nullius cauſam audiat episcopus, &c. Let the Biſhop heare no mans cauſe without the preſence of the Clergie. *Decret. Gregor. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 9. Lucius 3.
Episcopi cum conſilio Clericorum, &c.* The Biſhops with the counſell of the Clergie muſt iudge of heretikes.

4. Innocentius 3. decreed; that omnis utriuſq. ſexu, &c. that every one of both ſexes upon paine of excommunication, ſhould confeſſe proprio ſacerdoti, to their owne Prieſt, and ſhould fulfill in ſtam penitentiam, penance inioyned by him, decret. Greg. lib. 1. c. 38. c. 12.

5. Synod. Auguſt. 2. 19. Poſteſt quilibet confeſſor pro peccatorum magnitudine, ex cauſa, qua ſibi inſit videtur, ad ſcripſum communione interdiceret: Every confeſſor may according to the greatnes of the ſinnes, as he ſhall ſee juſt cauſe, for a time to interdict from the Communion. If then the Prieſt haue power to binde, why hath he not power to looſe? and if to looſe, then alſo to binde? Their owne Canons allow them to inioyne penance, to interdict the Communion; why not alſo to giue indulgence.

6. Origen ſaith: Episcopi & preſbyteri, quibus ſunt credita cathedra, qui tradunt eccleſias, quibus non oportet, &c. Biſhops and Presbyters, to whom the chaires or ſeates of the Church are committed, which doe deliuer Churches to thoſe, whom they ſhould not, are they that ſell Doves, &c. He ſaith that to both of them the chaire of the Church is committed: Origen tract. 15. in Math.

7. Ambroſe thus writteth: Lib. 2. de Cain & Abel. 4. Remittuntur peccata per Dei verbum, miniſter Leuitas interpret & executor eſt, Leuitas igitur miniſter remiſſionis eſt: Sinnes are remitted by the word of God, whereof the Leuite is the interpreter, and executor, the Leuite then is the miniſter of remiſſion: &c.

8. To this agreeth our Engliſh confeſſion, Harm. ſell. 11. Seeing one manner of word is giuen to all, and one onely key belongeth to all, we ſay, there is but one onely power of all Miniſters, as concerning opening and ſhutting.

9. To this accordeth a reuerent learned man of our Church, writing thus: After Biſhops were appointed, &c. at length by cuſtome Presbyters were vtterly excluded from all aduice and counſell, whereof Ambroſe complaineth, and Biſhops onely entremitted with the regiment of the Church. This manner of ſubiection in Presbyters, and prelation in Biſhops, grew onely in con-nuance

of time, and not by any ordinance of Christ or his Apostles: B. Bilson. Of the regiment of the Church. p. 237. Whereby this reuerend author insinuateth, as the truth is, that at the beginning Presbyters were ioyned with Bishops in the regiment of the Church and dispensation of the keys, howsoever it is come to passe, that they are now vtterly excluded.

We haue the testimonie of the holy Martyrs: Richard Fournu holy Martyr, In preaching of the word shall the power contained of binding and loosing, Fox p. 913. col. 2.

James Bainham Martyr: He that preacheth the word of God, and liueth thereafter, hath the key that bindeth and looseth both in heauen and earth: the which key is the same Scripture that is preached, and the Pope hath no other key to binde or loose, but the key of Scripture, Fox p. 1029. col. 1.

THE NINTH QUESTION, OF THE CEREMONIES AND CIRCUMSTANCES OF PENANCE.

The Papists.

1. They inioyne their penitent Clients to poll their heads, and their women to weare a vail, 75. Error. To goe in blacke, to put on sackcloth, to looke sowerly: and such like presumptions they haue concerning the habite of those that doe penance, Bellarm. lib. 1. de penitent. cap. 22.

The Protestants.

Ov Sauiour cleane contrarie biddeth his Disciples, not to looke sowerly, nor to disfigure themselves, when they fast and repent, or to shew any other outward token of their sorrow, but to doe it secretly betwene themselves and God, to wash their face, to annoynt themselves with oyle, that it appeare not to men that they fast, Matthe. 6. 16. 17.

They also answering a certaine obiection, that yong men newly married might make: How De tempor. calthau my head, or change my habite? saith thus, Vera conuersio sufficit tibi, sine vestimento - Item. 67.

The true conuersion of the heart may suffice thee without changing of thy vesture.

The Papists.

2. They inioyned them to fast bread and water certaine daies in the weeke, to lie hard, to abstaine from mariage, or to doe some great aunes, besides to satisfie for their sinne, Bellarm. lib. 1. de penitent. cap. 23. And to goe a pilgrimage, and such like workes of penance were prescribed them.

The Protestants.

True repentance consisteth not in such outward exercise of the bodie, but is a conuersion rather of the heart. It was the manner of hypocrites, idolators and superstitious men, to seeke to appease their gods with afflicting of their flesh, as the Gentiles did cut their haire, Deut. 14. 1. And priests did launce their flesh. 1. King. 18. 28.

What is to bee thought of such punishing of the car kasse, Saint Paul sheweth, Col. 2. 23. He calleth it voluntarie religion or superstition in not sparing the bodie: when men do not such outward exercises of fasting and abstinence for the chastisement of the flesh, to subdue it to the spirit, but with an opinion of meriting thereby, preferring them before the faith and conuersion of the heart, as the Papists doe.

Augustine saith, Non fit satis, quid doleat, sed ex fide doleat, & non semper doluisse, doleat: Let it not suffice to be sorrow full, but let his sorrow proceede of faith, and let it grieue him, that hee is not grieued for his sin. So then true repentance is especially an inward work of faith, rather then an exercise of the bodie, and it ought alwaies to continue. Wherefore it consisteth not in such laborious workes, which if a man should long endure, he should end his life sooner than repentance. De penit. cap. 11.

Their owne Canons thus testifie: Caus. 33. qu. 2. c. 13. 14. Leo, Coniugia post penitentiam legitimam non interdicuntur: Let not mariage bee denied after due penance. Concerning the interdicting of meate, the Councell of Cabilon. c. 35. Quidam, quibus in penitentia vini & carnis vsus, &c. Some, to whom in penance the vse of wine and flesh is interdicted, they not changing their mind but their meate, doe liue more delicately of other things. Spiritualis autem penitentia maxime in penitentibus regere debet. But spirituall repentance ought most of all to flourish in penitent persons.

And against this heauie yoke of penance in prescribing so many superstitious obseruations, thus standeth in the Canon: Caus. 26. qu. 7. c. 12. Homini, cui graue pondus penitentia imponis, &c. The man, vpon whom you impose so heauie a yoke of penance, must either of necessity reject your penance, or receiuing it, and being not able to beare it, hee must be more scandalized or offended.

The Papists.

3. They measure their penance by number of yeeres and daies: They haue their quadragesima, 78. Error. For the daies penance: superannus, seuen yeeres penance: Ex Telemu. Heshus. loc. 9. de penitent.

N n n

Err. 83.

Err. 83. And they lengthen or cut short the time of penance at their pleasure, to continue three, seuen, or ten yeeres, yea sometime more. Bellarm. lib. 1. de penitent. c. 22.

The Protestants.

That true repentance is not to be measured by the time, but by the right sorrow and contrition of the offender, Saint Paul teacheth vs, who writeth for the young man to be released, because of his great and sufficient heauines for his fault, 2. Cor. 2.7.

De tempor.
serm. 66.

Augustine also saith, Penitentia vera, non annorum numero, sed amaritudine animi censetur: penitentia quamuis sit exigua temporis, &c. True repentance is not measured by number of yeeres, but by the bitterness of the soule: though it be but for a short time, yet it is not despised before that iudge which regardeth the heart.

Synod. Cabilouens. sub Carolo. cap. 34. Non pensanda est penitentia quantitate temporis, sed ardentia mentis: Repentance must not be weighed by the quantitie of time, but seruencie of minde.

Can. 35. Multi, quod sine dolore dicendum non est, in penitentia non tam peccati remissionem, quam temporis constitutionis expectant expletionem: Many, which wee say not without griefe, in repentance respect not so much the remitting of their sinne, as the fulfilling of the let or appointed time of penance.

Decret. par. 2. caus. 26. qu. 6. c. 12. Iulius: Deus inspector cordis, non temporis: God is a beholder of the heart, not of the time. C. 13. Celestin. Vera conuersio mente asstimanda, non tempore: True conuersion is to be measured by the minde, not the time. Distinct. 1. de penitent. c. 84. Non tam consideranda mensura temporis, quam doloris: The measure of the time is not so much to be considered of the griefe of the heart.

THE FIFTEENTH GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, OF MATRIMONIE.

The severall questions belonging to this Controversie are these:

- 1 Whether Matrimonic be a Sacrament properly so called.
  - 2 Of Polygamie, that is, the marring of many wiues either successiue, or at once.
  - 3 Of the causes of diuorce, and whether it be lawfull to marrie after diuorce.
  - 4 Of the degrees in mariage: First, the manner of supputation or accounting of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit. 18. may be dispensed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may be by humane law prohibited.
  - 5 Of the impediments of mariage, of two sorts: first, of those that may hinder the contract of mariage onely. Secondly, of such impediments as may both dissolue the contract and the mariage also consummate.
  - 6 The comparison of mariage and virginitie, whether either be preferred before the other before God.
  - 7 Of the times of mariage prohibited.
  - 8 Of the ceremonies and rites of Mariage.
- Of these in their order.

THE FIRST QUESTION, WHETHER Matrimonic be a Sacrament.

The Papists.

76. Error.

That it is properly and rightly a Sacrament instituted of God, and not deuised of men, Concil. Trid. sess. 24. can. 1.

Argum. 1. Ephes. 5. 32. This is a great Sacrament: Matrimonic is here a signe of an holy thing, representing the coniunction of Christ, and his Church: Ergo, a sacrament.

Answ. First, the words are thus to be read rather, This is a great myserie. Or if wee reade sacrament, ment, they haue no great aduantage, seeing they are not ignorant, that the originall word mysterion, which they translate sacrament, is attributed to other things then sacramentes: as 1. Timoth. 3. vers. 16. Mysterion of godlines: Apocal. 17. 5. A mysterie great Babylon. Neither doe they themselves much vrge this argument. Secondly, the Apostle saith not, that Matrimonie is a mysterie, but I speak of Christ and his Church, vers. 32. Thirdly, Matrimonie wee confesse to be instituted of God, and to be a signe of a holie thing: yet no sacrament: for so was the Sabbath ordained of God, and signified the rest in Christ, Heb. 4. 8. yet was it no sacrament. Wherefore all significative and mysticall figures are not sacraments.

Hierome replyeth, that this mysterie whereof the Apostle speaketh, is to be applyed vnto marriage, as it is a signe of the coniunction of Christ and his Church. First, Hierome and Chrysostome so expound it; and Nazianzen likewise. Secondly, this Pronounne demonstratiue, hoc, must be referred to that which went before, where he spake of marriage. Thirdly, the argument of the whole chapter sheweth it, for by the example of Christ and his Church, the Apostle exhorteth men to loue their wives; but if this mysterie appertained nothing at all to marriage, the Apostles argument faileth. Fourthly, the Apostle saith in Christo, not in ecclesia; not in Christ, but in Christ: shewing hereby, that the mysterie in marriage is referred to Christ. Beza de Matrim. c. 2.

Comes. First, Hierome speaketh onely of the marriage of Adam and Eue. Adam Christum, &c. Adam prefigured Christ; Eue the Church: this maketh nothing for marriage now: for that marriage was before sinne in the state of innocencie, and before the time of grace: it followeth not it was a figure then, and therefore a signe now. Chrysostome onely saith, Magnum mysterium, salutis inquit gentis, &c. This is a great mysterie, that woman forsaking him that begat her, should cleaue to her husband, &c. he speaketh not of any mysterie in marriage referred to Christ. Nazianzen rather maketh against them: Scito, quia locus iste, &c. I know, that this place is full of Sacraments; but thinke it to be vnderstood of Christ and his Church: he saith no more than the Apostle, making no mention of marriage.

Secondly, this demonstratiue hoc is in Scripture referred to that which followeth, as well as to that which goeth before: as Mark. 16. 17. These signes, &c., shall follow them that beleue; and then the signes are rehearsed.

Thirdly, it followeth not, because the Apostle draweth his exhortation from the loue of Christ to his Church, that whatsoever hee speaketh of Christ and his Church, should be represented in marriage: as vers. 26. He gaue himselfe for it, that he might sanctifie it, and cleanse it, &c. Can he shew any such mysterie in marriage?

Fourthly, he sheweth his ignorance in the Greeke tongue: for in is often times taken for in, in a church, &c. To sit in the Church: Aschin. in ecclesia. To write in a pillar, Demost. So that in this place in, in, may very well be taken for in, in.

Lastly, Ambrose vpon this place, Mysterium sacramentum grande, &c. This mysterie is a great sacrament, in the vnity of the man and woman: nec hoc prodest, &c. yet he bringeth not forth this, but rendereth another cause of the Church and the Saviour.

Why. 2. Matrimonie giueth grace of sanctification to the parties married. Shee shall be fruitful in bearing of children, if they continue in faith and loue, 1. Timoth. 2. 15. These are the graces giuen by matrimonie: Ergo, a Sacrament.

Ans. First, we denie that any sacraments giue or conferre grace, they are instruments onely of grace. Secondly, wee also graunt, that by matrimonie God giueth to the faithfull this speciall grace, To liue in holines and purenesse, from the filthie pollution of the flesh: but the sacraments are scales of spirituall graces, and serue for the encrease of faith: it is not sufficient to be a meane of any common gift, but of the spirituall and iustifying grace to make a sacrament. Thirdly, whosoever if by faith and loue here they vnderstand onely the fidelitie and dutie of wedlocke, they are not those spirituall graces, whereof sacraments are scales: if wee take them for the true faith and loue, which are the common graces of the faithfull, as the very meaning is, they are as well to be had out of wedlocke, as in it. Lastly, if they will receive Hieromes exposition of this place (which I doe not greatly vrge) they can haue no colour at all out of this place: for this sentence Supermanferunt. If they continue, he referreth to the children: Si illas eruditus in fide, &c. If they bring them vpon faith and loue, &c. And this seemeth to be more agreeable to the letter, because here the Apostle chaungeth the number, speaking in the plurall, If they continue; but before in the singular: Shee shall be saved, &c. And where it is objected, That then the saluation of the women should depend vpon the faith of their children: the answer is, That the Apostle speaketh not of the causes of saluation, but of remoouing the impediments, that women notwithstanding bearing of children in sorrow, which was laid vpon them for a punishment shall be saved; their bearing of children shall be no impediment vnto their saluation, if they haue a care to bring them vp well. If therefore Hieromes interpretation beare any credite with them, aduers. lxxviii. the graces here named, doe appertaine to the children, not to the women.

The Protestants.

That matrimonie is no sacrament of the Gospell, speaking now properly, and vnderstanding a sacrament, for the seale of the grace of God in the remission of our sinnes by Christ, is thus prouoed:

Argum. 1. Matrimonie was instituted by God, before sinne in Paradise, therefore it can be no sacrament of the Gospell.

Matrimonie also may be betweene Infidels, who are not capable of the sacraments of the Church: Ergo, Argum. Luther. Calvin.

Bellarm. answereth: 1. the ioyning together of Adam and Eue, had no promise of grace, or spirituall benediction, but onely a corporall: Increase and multiply: and therefore there is great difference betweene that marriage, and ours now: Bellarmin.

Contra. 1. Looke what promise of grace the marriage of Christians now hath, the same had matrimonie in Paradise: as marriage hath now a promise of fecunditie and mutuall consort, and to be a remedie against vncleannesse: the two first were promised in Paradise: Fecunditas, Gen. 1. 28. mutuall helpe and comfort, 2. 26. the third was not then needfull, sinne as yet nothing knowne in the world: Secondly, S. Paul speaking of the marriage of the faithfull, Ephes. 5. 31. vseth the same forme of wordes which Adam did at the very first institution, Therefore shall man leaue father and mother, &c. hereby shewing the institution and substance of that matrimonie, and ours, to be all one. Thirdly, the master of the Sentences saith, Lib. 4. dist. 2. b. Coniugium sacramentum institutum est ad sacramentum: Marriage was instituted before sinne, to be a sacrament. Dist. 22. c. Sacramentum penitentiae, sicut & coniugij ante tempus gratiae à primis diuinitus institutum fuit: The sacrament of penance, as likewise the sacrament of marriage, were from the beginning of mankind before the time of grace: then it followeth, that matrimonie is no sacrament of the Gospell, being instituted before.

Bellarmin. 2. The matrimonie betweene Infidels is but a ciuill contract to performe the duty of nature: but the marriage of Christians is more, Bellar. lib. 1. de Matrimonio. cap. 5.

Contra. Though Christians know, how better to vse marriage, than Infidels; yett the end and scope of them both is all one, as for mutuall consort, for propagation, and to auoid fornication: these be the chiefe ends of marriage, which in some sort are to be found among Infidels: and therefore it is no sacrament.

Argum. 2. Our aduersaries are contrarie to themselves: for they call matrimonie a propagation of Orders, Martin. sect. 15. cap. 11. And they say it is more tollerable for a Priest to take many concubines, than to marrie: Pighius ex Tileman. Helms. loc. 21. Err. 2. Doe these words incaine in good sooth, that matrimonie is a sacrament, which they make so vile, polluted, and vncleane a thing?

Page 679. Also applyeth this saying of S. Paul, against marriage of Ministers, They that are in the flesh, submit y<sup>e</sup>selues to God, Epist. ad Himerium Tarraconens. But if matrimonie were a sacrament, why should it not agree with Orders, one sacrament with another?

Bellarmin. answereth, that Siricius condemneth not marriage, but sacriledge, that is, the vncleane marriage of ministers: Secondly, it cannot be denyed, but that in the act of matrimonie there is vncleannesse, & turpitude, filthinesse: for why else should the priest say to David, They shall be holie, & shall be in the flesh? 1. Sam. 21. And what else is the cause, why men are ashamed to exercise this additione others? and the Apostle saith, That the virgin careth for the things of the Lord, &c. she may be holy both in bodie and spirit, 1. Cor. 7. 34. Ergo, they haue an holinesse in bodie, which the married haue not: and therefore in some sence it may be said of marriage: They that are in the flesh, cannot please God: resp. ad arg. 1.

Contra. First, 1. the marriage of ministers is commendable, and allowable by the word of God, as I haue shewed before in that controuersie: and the Scripture saith, Hebr. 13. 2. Marriage is honourable in all mens eyes: againe, that place Rom. 8. 8. They that are in the flesh, are carnally minded, and are not subject to the law of God, neither can be, v. 7. they are not Christ, nor his members: if ye dare of married persons: 4. the Apostle also speaking to such as were married men, as to Titus and Priscilla, whome he greeteth by name, Rom. 16. 3. saith, greete one another as the church doth.

Secondly, 1. how far is this fellow from the heresie of the Marcionites, & Tatianites, they counted marriage vnlawfull, & he calleth it vnclean: 2. the priest speaketh of a legal kind of cleanness, as in that respect the virgin Mary was to be purified, Luce. 2. 22. will ye therefore iudge her vnclean? neither is euery thing done in secret, vnclean: Christ biddeth vs to pray in secret, Mat. 6. and a virgin is oft ashamed, that his humble behaviour should be seene in publick: it therefore vncleane & modestie also teacheth man to couer the vncomely parts, 1. Cor. 12. 23. will ye say therefore, that any of the parts of the body are vncleane? Augustine saith, Nihil in sanitate carnis and does, or not neglects, accusers, quod debet: Marriage is suffered to exercise that which is lawfull, so that it hide that which is vncomely; he saith not, vnclane: Lib. 2. de grat. c. 7. 4. The virgin is said to take care to please God, and to be holy, &c. not because she married are vnholie: for the Apostle saith the contrarie, If their children be holy, 1. Cor. 7. 14. how are they vnholie: but it is spoken comparatively, because the vnmarried haue better helpe, and are void of those impediments which accompanie marriage. 5. Lastly, the Apostle saith, the marriage bed is vndefiled: Heb. 13. 2. how dare he say it is defiled; wee speake not of the abuse, but of the right vse of marriage. Ambrose saith, Copula nuptialis, non quasi culpa vitanda, &c. The marriage copulation, is not to be shunned as a fault. Augustine saith, Libidinis voluptas non propter nuptias cadit in culpam, sed propter nuptias accipit veniam. The pleasure of lust is not culpable because of marriage, but pardonable: De nupt. & concup. lib. 1. c. 14.

Secondly Beilar. answereth, That matrimonie is forbidden those that take orders, not as it is a sacrament, but because it bringeth worldly cares and other impediments.

Contra. Nay they prohibite marriage to such, as it is a sacrament: for a principall part of this their sacrament consisteth in the matrimoniall act and copulation: which although Beilarmin instantly denie, is prooued thus euen by his owne confession: he graunteth that matrimonie is a mysticall signe of the spirituall coniunction of Christ and his Church, cap. 2. but this is represented in the matrimoniall coniunction: They two shall be one flesh, this is a great secret: Ergo, herein consisteth the sacrament; and this act of matrimonie (they say) is a pollution of orders: and thus one sacrament is polluted by another.

Beilarmin replyeth, that the act of copulation, or carnall act in Matrimonie, is no essentiall part of the Sacrament. Secondly, it is not absurd, that they which haue one Sacrament, should be without another; as the Apostles refused the ministerie of Deacons: Act. 6. Beilarmin. respons. ad quon. 6.

But, the Canon of Leo is directly contrary: Cum societas nuptiarum à principio ita sit instituta. Seeing the societie of mariage was so instituted at the first, Vi prater coniunctionem sexuum, coniunctio in se nuptia: That beside the coniunction of sexe, Mariage hath not the Sacrament of coniunction of Christ and his Church, it is not to be doubted, but that the woman doth not appertaine to marriage, with the which there hath beene no matrimoniall act or ministerie. This Canon saith directly, that the sacrament of mariage is in the matrimoniall copulation.

Beilarmin answereth, that the Canon must be read without the negative, Vi prater, &c. habemus, &c. that beside the coniunction, mariage hath the Sacrament, &c.

Contra. First, if the negative be taken away, there is no sense in the Canon: for a woman not carnally knowne, is proued to be no wife, because the Sacrament of mariage onely consisteth in the carnall act. Secondly, the Master of sentences rehearseth this Canon with a negative, lib. 4. dist. 26. g. Beilarmin thinketh most absurdly, that the Master must be read without a negative, whereas he alleageth the Canon to proue Illam mulierem, &c. That a woman pertainereth not to marriage, that is not carnally knowne, which this Canon proueth not, if the negative be omitted. Thirdly, other Canons do agree, ibid. c. 18. Benedict. Non posse fieri vnam carnem, &c. They cannot be one flesh, but by carnall copulation: but the myserie is in being made one flesh, as S. Ambrose calleth it Mysterium unitatis, the myserie of vnitie. Fourthly, Beilarmin himselfe graunteth, that when the contract is made onely per verba de futuro, by words of the future time, then the carnall copulation is an essentiall part, and that then ex opere operato, by the worke wrought, the coniugall act doth conferre grace: Beilarmin. ibid. Where by the way let it be remembred, that the carnall act, which before he proued to be vnclane, is now affirmed to be so holy, that it doth conferre grace.

Secondly, 1. He is neuer able to proue, that he which hath one Sacrament of Christian religion, is simply to be denied the other, as they denie Ministers that haue orders, to be married, which both are sacraments in their religion: but the true Sacraments of the Church, as Baptisme, and the Eucharist, are general and free for all, that are fitte for them. 2. The Apostles refused not the office of Deacons as vnlawfull, but as inconuenient: neyther is this any Sacrament, and the Apostles did execute the office of Deacons at the first themselves. 3. Though it should be graunted, that the Sacraments may be diuided, in respect of persons, that some may haue one and not another; yet it is not to be endured, that one Sacrament polluteth another; as they say, Matrimonie is a defiling of Orders: wherefore they themselves denie it to be a Sacrament: for Sacraments to all are holy, but marriage in Ministers they make vnholie and vnclane.

4. In every Sacrament there ought to be an externall sensible element, as the matter, and a sanctifying worde, as the forme: But in Matrimonie there is neither: Ergo, it is no Sacrament. Argum. Remittit. Calvin.

Beilarmin. The forme, are the words pronounced by the parties themselves, when they contract Matrimony: I do take thee, &c. They also themselves are the matter, and the Ministers of the Sacrament too: For the Iesuite holdeth, that it is a Sacrament in the very contract and giuing of mutuall consent; before it be solemnized in the Church, De matrim. cap. 6.

Ans. First, the Sacrament is one thing, and the receiuers another: therefore the married parties cannot be the sacramentall matter, being the receiuers. Secondly, it is not euery word that sanctifyeth, but the word of God, 1. Tim. 4. 5. but these words, I take thee, are no part of the word: Ergo, they want also the forme of a Sacrament. Thirdly, the Ministers of Christ, and preachers of the word are only the dispensers of the mysteries and Sacraments of the Church, 1. Cor. 4. 1. Wherefore the parties themselves could not be Ministers of Matrimonie, if it were a Sacrament.

Fourthly, I will adioyne the reasons of some of the Papiſts: Espeſſus de clandestin. matrim. 2. 4. Ad huius Sacramenti rationem, patres verbum fidei requisierunt in lege &c. The fathers in the law required the word of faith to this Sacrament, how much more in the Gospell: but this, I take thee, is not the word of faith: cap. 13. ex Groperto: Vt venerabilem Eucharistiam idem et porrigat & caput, cetera non item Sacramenta: The Eucharist, one and the same man may giue and receiue, but it is not so in other Sacraments: no man doth baptize or confirme himselfe: and so consequently, if priuate Matrimonie were a Sacrament, no man could marrie himselfe.

Arg. 4. We haue plentifull testimonie of the Papiſts themselves, some affirme Matrimonie a sacrament of the old Testament, not of the new: as Alphonſus à castro, lib. 11. com. hæreses hæres. 3. p. 1. trus à Soto, lect. 2. de Matrim. Some hold it no Sacrament at all, as Durandus, whose reasons do here follow: other denie priuate Matrimonie to be a Sacrament, being contracted onely, not solemnized, as Cannus, whom Ballamini confuteth, cap. 8. Of the same opinion is Gropertus before alleged: Catharinus also affirmeth, priuate contract of mariage, without the consent of the parents to be no Sacrament, because it is no mariage: ex Espeſſ. de clandestin. matrim. 2. 13.

Now Durand his reasons, to proue mariage properly no Sacrament, are these.

First, in euery Sacrament, there is some spirituall thing signified, that exceedeth naturall reason; as in baptisme by the washing of water, the remission of sinnes is shewed forth: but in mariage, when two are presented to be ioyned together, a naturall man may comprehend why they are coupled together. It may be answered, that the spirituall thing in mariage, is the coniunction of Christ and his Church. Contra, Sacraments doe effect that, which they signifie; but matrimonie doth not effect the vnion of Christ and his Church, but onely the vnion of the male and female: Ergo, that is not the principall signification of mariage.

Bellar. answereth, that not the vnion onely, but such an vnion as is insoluble; and as well the vnion of their soules and bodies is signified in marriage, which exceedeth naturall reason.

Contra. First, the vnion of the married parties to be insoluble, is naturall; for both among the Gentiles, as the Romans a long time, there was no diuorce in marriage knowne or heard of: the Turtle Doves by nature are taught to keepe themselves inseparably one to the other: therefore this exceedeth not humane reason. Secondly, the vnion of the mind is no essentiall part of mariage, for the marriage holdeth in the vnion of the bodie, though there be no vniting of the affections: they two shall be one flesh, it is not said, one soule.

Secondly, Durand, in a sacrament, there must be some holy thing applyed to the recipient by the minister: as in baptisme, water; in matrimonie it is not so: there is neither any outward holy signe, nor no minister necessarie beside the parties, nor yet any receiuer need be present, for matrimonie may be solemnized by a Proctor betweene parties that are absent: Ergo, it is no Sacrament.

Bellar. answereth; The reason why matrimonie is vnlke other Sacraments in these points, is, for that it is of the nature of a contract: now in a contract, the parties themselves suffice; and it may be done in their absence, Bellar. c. 5. resp. ad argum. 11.

Contra. In humane contracts it is so, as he affirmeth, no such things are required; but in diuine contracts it is otherwise; of which nature all sacraments are: for as it is said of circumcision, it was a signe of the couenant, or contract betweene God and his people, Genes. 17. 11. so all sacraments are badges of our profession, and the cognisance of our obedience promised vnto God: so that in this behalfe there is no difference betweene one sacrament and another; they being all solemn contracts and couenants made betweene God and vs.

Thirdly, Sacraments giue grace, as the Papiſts affirme; they are seales and pledges of grace, as the Protestants hold; but matrimonie neither conferreth nor sealeth grace; nor the first grace, which is remission of sinnes; nor the second, which is encrease of grace. The master of the Sentences saith, that some sacraments doe conferre grace as baptisme, some in remedium tantum sunt, are onely appointed for a remedie, as matrimonie: Lib. 4. dist. 2. a. Durand.

Bellar. answereth, that the meaning of the Master is, that matrimonie was not principally ordained to this end, for remission of sinnes; and yet it doth after a sort remit sinnes, as the Eucharist and the Sacrament of order: resp. ad argum. 12.

Contra.

Contra. First, the Master saith, that matrimonic is in remedium, is onely for a remedie : onely, then it serueth not chiefly, but altogether to that end. Secondly, we deny any sacrament of order : the Eucharist properly serueth to assure our faith of the remission of finnes, because it is a shewing forth of the Lords death : and our Sauour saith, which was shed for you, for remission of finnes : but there is no such promise of remission of finnes annexed to matrimonic. Thirdly, Belarminus affirmed before, resp. ad arg. 7. that some sacraments (as matrimonic) are not instituted for remission of finnes ; and now (forgetting himselfe) he saith, it serueth for remission of finnes : so well he agreeth with himselfe. Fourthly, the Church cannot alter or appoint the essentials of any sacrament, the Church doth appoint the essentials of matrimonic, as in determining what persons are to be married, and in what degrees : Ergo, it is no sacrament, Durand.

Determinans answereth : first, that the ordinance of the Church is of the necessitie of the sacrament, as in penance it is no absolution that is giuen to one of another diocesse. Secondly, the material part of Matrimonic, is not simply the ioyning together of man and woman, but of such persons as are lawfull : for otherwise the sacrament of Matrimonic might be betweene the father and the daughter, and such like neare degrees.

Contra. First, as for Penance, this sheweth sufficiently that it is no sacrament, because it dependeth of the ordination of the Church : so doe not true sacraments which onely depend of Christs institution : as the Apostle deliuered no other thing as touching the Sacraments, but, that which he had receiued of the Lord, 1. Corin. 11. 23. Secondly, such degrees in Mariage, as the Scripture prohibiteth, are necessarie to be obserued, as betweene the father and daughter, &c. But the Church of Rome presuming to forbid other degrees, and to make more persons illegitimate for marriage, then the Scripture doth, taketh vpon her to alter and chaunge the material part of Matrimonic : which no Church hath power to doe in true Sacraments.

Fifthly, without Baptisme none are capable of any Sacrament : but a man before Baptisme is capable of Matrimonic : Ergo, it is no sacrament. Durand.

Idem. Though it be Matrimonic afore Baptisme, it is no sacrament : but after they are conuerted to the faith, it beginneth to be sacrament.

Contra. The Matrimonic before Baptisme, must either be contracted anew, or else it remaineth the same still : but a new contract is not to be made : for if God haue ioyned them together before, no man must put them asunder, Matth. 19. 6. to be contracted and conioyned againe : if they were not ioyned of God, then was it no Matrimonic. Again, what if but one of the parties be conuerted, the other remaineth an Infidell, and so refuseth to be contracted againe : yet is this Matrimonic holie, and the issue thereof holie, 1. Cor. 7. 14. though there be no new contract. If the same Matrimonic remaine still without alteration, how is it more a sacrament after Baptisme then before, seeing the same essentials, both the matter and forme were in the Matrimonic before ? Of the first opinion are Capreolus, Eckius, that a new contract is needfull : of the other, Thomas de Aragon, Paludanus : so well they agree together. And thus are Durands arguments fortified against the sacrament.

Apostolus thus writeth : Ne quis istam magnitudinem sacramenti in singulis quibusque hominibus uari habentibus intelligeret, ego autem dico, inquit, &c. Least any man should thinke when the Apostle had said, this is a great sacrament, that this great sacrament is to be understood of all married persons, the Apostle addeth, but I speake of Christ and his Church. But if so be Matrimonic were a sacrament, why is it not to be found in all married folke ?

Concil. Florentin. in fine : Sacramenta tribus perficiuntur, rebus tanquam materia, uerbis ut forma, & personis ministris conferentis sacramentum : quarum si aliquid desit, non perficitur sacramentum : The sacraments are perfected of three things, the things or elements as the matter, the words as the forme, and the person of the minister conferring the sacrament ; if any of these be wanting, the sacraments are not perfect. According to this rule Matrimonic is no sacrament : for in the contract, where it should begin to be a sacrament, there want both the matter and the element, which can not be the parties themselves, and the Minister which should conferre the sacrament : neither haue they words of institution to be found in Scripture.

The holie Martyrs haue sealed this truth : Richard Woodman : There neede not be a signe of an holie thing, where the holie thing is it selfe : Matrimonic is an holie thing it selfe, and is ended outwardly : Ergo, it is no sacrament, Far pag. 1990. col. 2.

Mathes Benbridge Martyr, he denieth Matrimonic to be a sacrament, but confesseth it to be a sacrament, &c. and gaue his life in defence hereof. pag. 2046. artic. 10.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF POLYGAMIE, of the marriage of diuers ſucceſſively. Part. 1.

The Papiſts.

to Error.

Their decrees ſeeme vtterly to condemne and exclude ſecond marriage. Can. 31. c. 3. Penance : It is inioyned ſecond marriage, and a Miniſter is forbidden to be preſent at the celebration of them. C. 9. Second marriage is called, honest a fornicatio, honest fornication. Theſe Canons Bellarmino is aſhamed of, and refuseth them : why then doe they ſuffer them to ſtand among the reſt of the decrees collected by Gratian? But yet Bellarmino cannot ſo ſhift off the matter: for it appeareth that they haue a very baſe conceite of ſecond marriage, ſeeing they barre all ſuch from orders, as haue been twice married : as in their owne decrees, C. 31. c. 10. this reaſon is giuen: Quam ſanctiſſe digamia hinc offenditur, &c. How holy a thing it is to be twice married, it appeareth by this, that ſuch are not choſen to the Clergie. And againe, they denie publike bleſſing vnto ſecond marriage. Bellarmino would ſalue vp the matter thus, becauſe the bleſſing giuen in the firſt marriage continueth ſtill, cap. 9.

The Proteſtants.

Concerning the denying of orders to them that are twice married, I haue entreated elſewhere in the generall Controverſie of the Clergie : that publike benediſtion is to be vſed in ſecond marriage as well as in the firſt, we proue it thus :

Fiſt, I reaſon thus from their owne principles : Enery Sacrament at the celebration thereof muſt be bleſſed : for, Every thing is ſanctified by the word and prayer, 1. Timothy 4. 5. But ſecond marriage with them is a ſacrament : Ergo, publiquely to be bleſſed. And whereas it is alleaged, that the former bleſſing remaineth. I anſwere : firſt, the firſt Matrimonie remaineth not : Ergo, neither the benediſtion. For the firſt couples being parted by death, and ſo the marriage knot diſſolued, how can that bleſſing remaine, which was pronounced ouer them but while they liued? Againe, Matrimoniall benediſtion is no more effectually, than the benediſtion in the Eucharift : but that is often renewed : Ergo, ſo may the other.

Secondly, Raguel bleſſed the marriage of young Tobie and Sara, which was giuen in marriage to ſeuſen men before, Tobie 7. 11, 13. Ergo, ſecond marriage may be bleſſed. This booke is Scripture with them, and therefore concludeth againſt them ſtrongly.

Further, where God bleſſeth, there man ought to bleſſe much more : but Gods bleſſing is vpon the married couple being fit for procreation, though it be in their ſecond, or third marriage, Encrease and multiply : Ergo, the Miniſters bleſſing is to be adioyned.

Laſtly, Lea ſaith, Epistol. 9. c. 4. Ancillam à tero abicere, & uxorem certā ingenuitatis, atque poſt duplicatā coniugij ſed poſſeſſum honeſtatis eſſe : For a man to reiect his maide, or concubine from his bed, and to marrie a wife that is a freewoman, is not a doubling of marriage, but a proſſing in honeſtie. I reaſon thus : Marriage after fornication doth receiue publike benediſtion, becauſe it is not the ſecond, but the firſt marriage : Ergo, much more ſhall marriage after lawfull marriage be publiquely bleſſed : vnleſſe they will make marriage worſe than fornication.

THE SECOND PART OF POLYGAMIE, which is the marriage of diuers wiues at once.

The Papiſts.

to Error.

It is their opinion, that it was lawfull not onely for the Patriarches of the Hebrews, but for the Gentiles alſo by way of diſpenſation to haue many wiues.

Argum. 1. Sara gaue conſent to Abraham to take him another wife, which ſhe would not haue done, if it had been vnlawfull : ſo *Jacob*s wiues offered vnto him two other wiues: Bellarmino cap. 11. propoſ. 4.

Contra. Firſt, from the infirmities of holy men, or women, the argument followeth not, to proue the thing lawfull. Sara twice diſſembled, and in affirming to be *Abraham*s ſiſter, conſequently denied to be his wife : ſo did Rebecca once : it followeth not, that it is therefore lawfull. Secondly, thoſe were *Abraham*s and *Jacob*s concubines, not their wiues : they may as well inferre, that they had a diſpenſation alſo to haue concubines beſide their wiues : that Hagar was not *Abraham*s wife, while Sara liued, whatſoever ſhe was afterward (for ſome think, that Keturah his ſecond wife was Hagar) it appeareth : 1. Becauſe ſhe is ſtill called *Sara*s maide, and vnder her correction, Gen. 16. 6. 2. And the Angel biddeth her humble her ſelfe to her dame, verſ. 9. 3. At the length, ſhe is caſt out with her ſonne, Gen. 21. 4. 4. She is alſo ſtill called a bondswoman, Gen. 21. 10. But if ſhe had been *Abraham*s wife, ſhe ſhould haue been free.

Argum. 2. That it was lawfull alſo for the Gentiles by diſpenſation to haue many wiues, he propoſeth propheth by the example of Laban, who was an idolater, and gaue to Jacob two wiues: Eſau also, who belonged not to the people of God, had many wiues, imitating therein, as it is like, the example of Abraham: Beſarm. c. 11. propoſ. 5.

Auſt. First, neither Laban, nor Eſau were altogether ſtraungers from the people of God, and therefore are not well brought forth, as example of the Gentiles: for if Laban had bin a iueere Gentile, he had not been ſent to take his wife from thence: and Eſau when he tooke his two wiues, was yet in his fathers houſe, Genes. 26. 35. and ſo one of the familie. Secondly, the fact of these propeth no more the lawfulness of many wiues, than Labans Images doe warrant the worship of many Gods. Thirdly, it is not like that Eſau herein imitated Abraham: 1. for Sarah was dead before Eſau was borne, and therefore in Eſaus remembrance hee had not two wiues. 2. And his father Iſack example was nearer to him to be imitated, who had but one wife. 3. If he had respected the imitation of Abraham, hee would not haue married out of the Hittites, to grieue his parents. Lastly, Auguſtine ſaith of the Patriarches, Contugio vi sunt propter dei populum propagandum: They vied marriage for the propagation of the people of God: Their Polygamie he thinketh was tolerated for the encreaſing of the Church. But the Church among the Gentiles was not encreaſed: Ergo, there was no reason of any ſuch toleration amongst them. Auguſt. de Virginitate. cap. 20.

The Protestants.

Concerning Polygamie, or the hauing of diuers wiues at once, our ſentence is this: first, that it was neuer lawfull, being either a tranſgreſſion, of, or at the leaſt a digreſſion from the first institution in the creation. Secondly, yet in the Patriarches wee denie not, before there was yet no law written, in reſpect of the neceſſitie of thoſe times, it was by vse and cuſtome tolerated, though not by any diſpenſation authorized: Thirdly, among the Gentiles, where there was not the like reason or occasion, it was neither lawfull, nor tolerable. Fourthly, after Moses law written, and the Church in them encreaſed, we doubt not but that the multitude of wiues was a ſinne and corruption.

First, the Prophet Malachi ſaith, chap. 2. 15. Did he not make one, yet had he abundance of ſpirits? alioſe ſunt vni? because he ſought a godly ſeede. Here the Prophet ſheweth, that the first institution in the creation, was of one wife: So our Sauour, Matth. 19. 8. doth ſend vs to the first institution, From the beginning it was not ſo, verſ. 4. At the beginning God made them male and female: one male, and one female: and they two ſhall be one fleſh, not three, or foure, but only two are made in one: therefore Polygamie is a breach and tranſgreſſion of the first institution.

Secondly, that there was neuer any diſpenſation graunted to make it lawfull, it is evident: 1. Chriſt ſaith, Moses for the hardnes of your hearts, &c. verſ. 8. wee reade of no diſpenſation; but a toleration in Moses, and by reason of the hardnes of the Iewes hearts. 2. A diſpenſation muſt be as high a nature as the institution: but the first institution was given in the creation, and delivered by tradition, though it were not written, not onely by inspiration (as he ſuppoſeth) this ſanction muſt be ſhewed for the diſpenſation. 3. If there had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why did not the righteous first take benefit of it, to whom it was ſpecially graunted, but wicked Lamech was the first that tooke two wiues. 4. And the diſpenſation being generall, for the propagation of the righteous ſeede, they ſhould haue offended, that vſed not that libertie being for a common good: as Iſack, that had onely Rebecca, and by her but one birth. 5. Auguſtine ſaith, Nam legimus Iacob petiſſe: prater unam, &c. neque hoc faceret, niſi uxores flagitaſſent: Iacob deſired but one, neither would hee haue vſed more, if his wiues had not requested it: lib. 14. de Civitate. cap. 16. Where had been any ſuch diſpenſation, why ſhould he haue deſired one rather than two? and wherefore did he to haue the conſent of his wiues? it was then a permiſſion onely, no diſpenſation.

Thirdly, Polygamie among the Gentiles was altogether vnlawfull: first, they ſerued not for the propagation of the Church, for the which Polygamie was tolerated. Secondly, the fathers recorded, Quia caſtius habebant plures, quam nunc vnam: Becauſe they vſed many wiues more chaſtly, than now one, as Auguſtine ſaith: But the Gentiles had no knowledge, how to poſſeſſe themſelues in holineſſe, but in the luſt of concupiſcence, 1. Thieſ. 4. 5. They could not vſe one wife chaſtly, much leſſe many.

Fourthly, after the law of Moses written, Polygamie was a corruption and tranſgreſſion: first, there was then no neceſſitie of propagation, as Auguſtine ſaith: Cum copia ſpiritualis cognationis abundaret: When there was plenty of the ſpiritual kindred: de Virginitate. cap. 16. Secondly, it was contrary to the law: Deut. 2. 17. The King ſhall not take many wiues, leaſt his heart turne away. The author of the queſtions vpon Deuterion vnder Auguſtines name, cap. 27. ſaith, that Dauid did not tranſgreſſe this lawe but Solomon, Quia habuit paucas, non multas: Dauid had a few wiues, not many.

Answ. 1. David had not so many as Salomon, and therefore was not so deepe in transgression: but yet he had with Michol and Bathsheba eight wives, 2. Sam. 3. which are many: yea any number about two with the Hebrews maketh a pluralitie. 2. The reason of the law is, lest his heart turn away. This fruite of Polygamie was in David; for his heart was turned away from iustice by the loue of women, as appeareth in the storie of Uriah. 3. The Prophet Malachi calleth it grosse forde, which commeth of single marriage after Gods institution: and therefore David transgressing herein, was chastised with vngodly children.

Lastly, thus their own decrees testifie: Caus. 31. c. 10. Primus Lamech homicida vnam carnem duxit in duas uxores: fraticidium & digamiam eadem cataphysis delinit pena, &c. Lamech the murderer was the first that diuided one flesh into two wiues: fraticide and digamie, the same punishment of the flood tooke away: Quantum distat in numero, tantum in crimine: As thou exceedest in number, so likewise in sinne.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE CAUSES OF diuorce in mariage, and whether it be lawfull to marrie after diuorce.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THERE may be more causes of diuorce, than fornication onely.

The Papists.

81. Error.

Diuorce, as Bellarmine defineth it, is either from the duties of mariage, as from bed and boord, as wee say, which is properly called diuortium, or it is a dissolving of the knot and bond of mariage, which is called repudium.

First then, they affirme, that the very bond and knot may be dissolved in the mariage of Infidels, if one of them after mariage become a Christian: his reason is, because mariage contracted in Infidelitie is no sacrament, and therefore may be dissolved, Bellarmin. cap. 12. So hee affirmeth those three things: first, that if the Infidell refuse to dwell with the beleeuing partie, the parte refused and forsaken, may marrie againe. Secondly, that though the Infidell be content to dwell together, the other is at his or her libertie to refuse, and may marrie againe. Thirdly, if the Infidell be content to dwell with the beleeuer, but yet so, that he is alwaies enticing & prouoking to idolatrie and infidelitie, the beleeuing partie may depart. The first of these is not by vs granted: the other two Bellarmin proueth thus.

Argum. Saint Paul saith, If the Infidell partie will depart, let him depart, a brother or sister is not in subiection in such a case, 1. Cor. 7. 15.

Answ. First, Saint Paul giueth not libertie to the one partie at their pleasure vterly to renounce the other, as though they were no longer man and wife: for Saint Paul had said before, that if the Infidell partie be content to dwell with the other, he or she is not to be put away. But his meaning is, that if one partie wilfully depart, the other is no longer bound, nor in subiection for the performance of the mutuall duties of mariage. Secondly, though the Infidell partie be yet froward and obstinate, if he be content to dwell with the other, let her not forsake him, saith the Apostle: and he giueth a reason thereof, vers. 16. What knowest thou O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? &c. Though he or she be yet froward, or obstinate, yet in time they may be conuerted.

The Papists.

82. Error.

Secondly, separation from bed and boord may be admitted, they say, for diuers causes, Concil. Trident. sess. 24. can. 8. Bellarmin nameth three: Fornication, according to Christs rule, Mat. 5. Hereticke, Tit. 3. An heretike must be auoyded. Thirdly, when one is a continuall offence to another and a prouocation to sinne: If thine eye offend thee, pull it out, Mat. 5. 29. Bellarmin. cap. 14.

Answ. 1. Fornication wee admit is a iust cause of separation and diuorce, but not heretie: for Saint Paul would not haue a woman to forsake an Infidell, 1. Cor. 7. 13. therefore not an heretike. 2. We must auoyde such, that is, take heed of their poysoned opinions, and shun their companie also, where wee are not otherwise bound. 3. Neither is the eye to be cut off, where there is any hope: but who knoweth whether the offensive partie may returne to grace? 4. And this place proueth as well a finall cutting off of mariage, as a separation or disunction.

The Protestants.

First, that there is no cause of vter dissolution of mariage by way of diuorce, neither that it is lawfull to dismisle or put away the wife, but onely for adulterie and fornication: it is plaine by our Sauour Christs words, Mat. 5. 32. and 19. 9. where neither infidelitie nor any cause beside is excepted, but onely fornication: Who soeuer shall put away his wife, (saith our Sauour) except it be for fornication, &c.

Bellarmin

Belarmine answereth: first, our Sauour speaketh of marriage 1. betweene the faithfull: so that the rule bindeth not, if either partie be an Infidell. 2. And againe, such separation is here spoken of, as is by way of some crime, not when it tendeth to greater perfection, and where there is feare of adulterie; as in the separation of Infidels there is not, when the partie forsaken may marry againe. Secondly, he answereth, our Sauour only mentioneth the proper cause of separation in marriage, which is fornication; the other for heresie, and inducement to sinne he leaue generall to all societies: for these causes the Ioune may leaue the father, the seruant the master, and the wife likewise the husband.

Thirdly hee answereth, that Christ in this place speaketh of such a dimission onely, or putting away, as is to continue for euer during their liues: but the other dimissions are to endure but for a time: of the first kinde of dimission there can be no cause but fornication, Bellarm. cap. 14. resp. ad di. 2.

Contra. First, 1. The words of our Sauour are generall: Whosoever shall put away his wife, vers. 9. And 2. he speaketh to the Iewes, that were not baptized; therefore hee meaneth euen marriage before Baptisme. 3. And our Sauour reasoneth from the first institution of marriage in the creation: but the law of the creation bindeth all both Infidels and beleeuers. 2. Againe, when any departeth for heresie, or infidelitie, it is a departure for a crime. 3. And when the beleeuing party departeth not being forsaken, but voluntarily (for where there is desertion, the case is otherwise, as shall be after ward shewed) how can it be without feare of adulterie, when in this case, the marriage is not dissolued betweene them?

Secondly, 1. It is a false position, that a sonne is to forsake his father, or a seruant to denie seruice to his master for heresie, or infidelitie, the Apostle teacheth the contrarie: 1. Timoth. 6. 1. Let among seruants, as are vnder the yoke, count their masters (hee meaneth Infidels) worthie all honour. 2. And againe, if any other causes of dimission might be pretended, though generall, then were not the rule giuen here by Christ sufficient, nor vniuersally true: except for fornication, &c. if for other things, they might be dissolued.

Thirdly, it shall soone appeare how insufficient his third answer is: first, Belarmine is contrary to himselfe: for here he maketh fornication the onely cause of perpetuall dimission, much forgetting himselfe: for he affirmeth likewise, that the married parties by mutuall consent may separate themselves, and vow continencie: and after their vow thus made, it is not lawfull for them to come together againe: here then is another kind of perpetuall separation. Secondly, neither is divorce or separation for fornication necessarily to continue, during their life time: they may be reconciled: and so both Belarmine and the Rhemists thinke, expounding that place, 1. Cor. 7. Let belarmine unmarried, or be reconciled: of such as are diuorced for fornication. So Leo epistol. 77. cap. 1. determineth thus: Quod debent femina, quae captis viris nupsierant alijs, regressis de captiuitate vni prius copulari: That women, which marrie to others, their husbands being taken captiues, should be restored to their husbands after their returne. Here women falling into adulterie must returne to their husbands. Againe, the Scripture speaketh for vs: that as God after spirituall fornication is readie vpon their repentance to receiue his people againe, Ierem. 3. 1. Thou hast played the harlot, yet returne vnto me (saith the Lorde:) so Christian charitie requireth, that if it be possible, reconciliation should be made betweene man and wife, vpon humble submission for the fault committed. Thus we see, that euen in case of fornication the way is not shut vp against compulsion: therefore the Iesuite hath answered nothing.

Argum. What God hath ioyned together, let no man put asunder: Matth. 19. 6. But the Papists, in deuising so many separations from bedde and boord, do put asunder those, whom God hath coupled: for where the duties of marriage are broken off, there marriage it selfe is also dissolued: if the man and wife be no longer bound to render the carnall debt one to another, and other seruices of loue, the bond of marriage it selfe is loosed betweene them: this then is but a friuolous distinction, that there are two separations of marriage: Quoad iborum, quoad vinculum: One from the bed, another from the bond of marriage: they then making so many separations from the one, do also dissolue the other: and so man diuideth, where God hath coupled. argum. Kemnig.

Belarmine answereth, that the bond of marriage is one thing, the debt or dutie of marriage another: for otherwise, when the married parties are absent by some distance of place, and so the debt not paid, the bond also should presently be dissolued, and they cease to be man and wife: cap. 14. resp. ad di. 2. 5.

Contra. First Belarmine granteth, that these words, Whom God hath coupled, &c. are vnderstood of the bond of marriage, not of the carnall debt, communion of bedde and boord: ex concessis, I reason thus: That whereby they are coupled and made one flesh, is the bond of marriage, but the carnall debt maketh them one flesh; They twaine shall be one flesh, Matth. 19. 5. therefore the carnall debt is the very bond of marriage: the proposition is proued by the words of our Sauour, vers. 6. wherefore they are no more twaine, but one flesh: Let no man therefore put asunder, that which God hath coupled coupled together: here the making of two one flesh, is said to be the very coupling, wherewith God ioyneth them together.

Secondly, S. Paul vlieth all these words indifferently, for one and the same thing, debt or duty; 1. Cor. 7. 3. to be in seruice or subiection, vers. 15. to be bound to a wife, vers. 27. So then debt, duty, seruice, deu, bond: are with the Apostles all one: where then the debt of the flesh is not due, nor the seruice of the bodie, there also the bond is loosed.

Thirdly, that in mariage the debitum, debt, and vinculum, bond, are all one: and that releuatio debiti, the releasing of the debt, is solutio vinculi, the dissoluing of the bond: beside that the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 7. 27. Art thou bound to a wife, seeke not to be loosed; where he speaketh vnto believers of the dissoluing of mariage; but they allow no dissolution of mariage, but onely in the case of infidelitie: S. Ambrose also saith, speaking of the dissoluing of mariage, Non debetur reuerentia coniugij ei, &c. the reuerence of mariage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of mariage. in 7. 1. ad Corinth. The dissoluing of mariage, and not paying the debt, with him are all one. Canf. 32. q. 2. c. 2. Non est ei fides seruanda coniugij, &c. The faith of mariage is not to be kept to him, which departeth because he would not heare Christ: not to keepe the faith or debt of mariage, and to dissolve mariage are the same.

Canf. 32. qu. 7. c. 18. Simuliter non valet debitum reddere: If the woman be not able to render her debt, or due to her husband, he may marrie another: Ergo, where the debt is not payed, the mariage bond is dissolved.

Fourthly, when the parties are absent vpon necessarie occasion, or by consent, here is neither refusal, nor acquittall of the carnall debt, as there is in forced separations; but in affection and desire, they remayne still subiect one to the other: therefore the reason is not alike: so then I conclude, that they separating, where God alloweth no separation, do contrarie to the Scripture, as afunder, where God hath ioyned together.

We haue also the full consent of antiquitie, that no dimission of mariage is to be admitted, but for fornication: Concil. Anglican. an. 670. can. 10. Nullus coniugem proprium nisi ut sanctum sacramentum docet, fornicationis causa relinquat: That no man put away his wife, but as the Gospell teacheth, for fornication.

Toletan. 12. can. 8. Preceptum domini est, ut excepta causa fornicationis uxor à viro dimitti non liceat, &c. It is the commandement of the Lord, that except for fornication, the wife should not be dismissed from her husband: and therefore whosoever vpon any other occasion, except the former crime, doth dismiss his wife; because he separateth that, which God hath ioyned, let him be put from the Communion, so long, till he receiue his wife againe.

Nicholaus 1. de matrimo. can. 6. Quicquid mulier contra te cogitauerit, non est excepta causa fornicationis reiicienda: Whatsoever thy woman doth practise against thee, she must not be cast off but for fornication. What greater evidence of antiquitie can any man require? This Canon is rehearsed, canf. 32. qu. 3. c. 22.

We haue further evidence: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 38. leg. 11. Constant. Quis ferat, liberos à parentibus à viro coniuges separari? Who can endure, that children from parents, wiues should be separated from their husbands? Yet I denie not, but that some Imperiall lawes allow other causes of separation, beside adulterie, as homicide, sacrilege, robbery, manstealing, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 17. leg. 8. and impotencie or imbecillitie of nature, ibid. leg. 10. yet the Canons of the Church haue otherwise decreed: as here I haue set them downe.

Canf. 29. qu. 7. c. 19. Gregor. Excepta causa fornicationis: It is not lawfull for any man to dismiss his wife, except it be for fornication: so likewise Zachar. canf. 29. qu. 2. c. 2. Canf. 32. qu. 5. c. 18. Quicquid excepta causa fornicationis cogitari potest horribile, sustineat maritus: What horrible thing soeuer may be imagined, except the cause of fornication, the husband must sustaine it. 21. Communionem priuetur, &c. Let him be deprived of the Communion, Qui citra culpam fornicationis occiderit, rem quauunque occasione diuiserit, which beside the fault of fornication vpon any occasion doth dismiss his wife.

Now concerning the mariage of Infidels, Augustine sometime was of opinion, that the wife might bee dismissed for Infidelitie: but hee reuoketh and retracteth that opinion, Lib. retract. 1. cap. 19. For elswhere hee flatly concludeth thus: A viro non fornicante non licet omnino discedere: That it is not lawfull for a woman at all to leaue her husband, if he commit not fornication, De adul. coniug. 1. 7.

And yet further, to make this matter more plaine, we acknowledge no other cause of lawfull diuorce in mariage but that onely, which is prescribed in the Gospell, namely, for adulterie or fornication, Matth. 5. 32. and 19. 9. There is notwithstanding another cause whereby the mariage knot may be dissolved, though not for fornication: as when one of the parties doth wilfully renounce, leaue and forsake the other vpon no iust cause, but either of lightnesse or for diuers religion, as when an Infidell forsaketh a Christian; a Papist, a Protestant; an heretike, a true protestor liberty vpon any other vnlawfull or vniust cause: for the Apostle saith plainly, A brother or sister is not in subiection in such things, 1. Cor. 7. 15. that is, is freed from the yoke or bond of marriage.

First, it is plaine that the Apostle is so to be vnderstood in this place: for the word which hee useth is, Adhuc, is no longer a seruant, or in subiection: which is to be taken in the same sence, as if he should say, Adhuc, hee or shee is no longer bound or tyed: which word the Apostle vteth ver. 10. And againe the Apostle hath relation here to the fourth verse, where he saith, The wife, as the Lord hath no power of her owne bodie, and the husband likewise: But now, saith he, the Infidell hauing wilfully separated himselfe, Adhuc, the innocent partie is no longer in subiection, but is, Libera, hath now power ouer his owne bodie: and is now become, Libera, free, exempt from the marriage knot or bond, in which sence the Apostle vseth the word, ver. 39.

Secondly wee must know, what kind of desertion it is, that causeth a dissolution of marriage, and in what manner. First, it must be malitiosa desertio, a malicious departure without any iust cause: But when as the husband is absent by consent about necessarie affaires, as the Merchant beyond the seas: or is employed in some weightie businesse, as in warfare, in ambassage, or such like: or is violently detained in prison or captiuitie, amongst the Turkes, or elsewhere: In these and the like cases the wife is bound to wait and expect the returne of her husband, vnlesse she be otherwise aduertised of his death: According to the decree of the Trullane Synode, can. 93. Mulieres quae non expectant viri peregrinantis reditum, sed alteri nupserint, antequam certa sint de viri, moribatur: Souliours wiues, which doe not expect their husbands returne, being in trauell, but doe marrie others, before they be certaine of their death, doe commit adulterie. Secondly, the innocent partie must vse all means to reconcile, reclaime, and bring home againe the wilfull and obstinate partie so departing, if it be possible. Thirdly, if he continue in his obstinacie, and depart, hauing no purpose to returne, the matter must be brought before the Iudge or Magistrate in such cases: who after publike citation of the obstinate partie, and certaine knowledge that he refuseth wilfully to appeare being cited, and is not otherwise letted to come, may with mature deliberation pronounce the innocent partie free and at libertie to marry, according to S. Pauls rule, A brother or sister is not bound in such things.

Thirdly, neither is Saint Paul contrarie to our Sauour Christ, who alloweth no diuorce but onely for fornication: for that is a diuers case from this, whereof S. Paul treateth: And there is great difference betweene lawfull diuorce, and vnlawfull and wilfull desertion: for there the innocent partie first claimeth the priuiledge of separation: here the guiltie partie first separateth himselfe: there diuorce is sued and required: here the innocent partie seeketh no diuorce, but seeketh all meanes of reconciliation: So that properly the setting free the innocent partie in this case, cannot be called a diuorce. Christ therefore speaketh of lawfull diuorce, not of euery dissolution of marriage: for then mention should haue been made in that place of naturall death and departure, which is confessed by all to be a dissolution and breaking off of marriage.

Thus haue I shewed mine opinion with Beza and others concerning this point: herein further win all the rest, referring my selfe to the determination of our Church, and the iudgement of our learned brethren, Beza. 1. Cor. 7. vers. 15. Hemingius. Tileman. Heshus. Luther. de captiu. Baby. la. cap. de Matrimou. Melanct. loc. theolog. tit. de coniug. Caluin. in 19. Matth.

We haue also the consent of Antiquitie: Concil. Lateranens. part. 50. cap. 33. wee finde this decree: A certaine man for the space of ten yeeres was absent from his wife, the woman came and complained, that shee could no longer expect his returne: then it followeth thus: Episcopus sicut vir praesens, parentibus suis mandauit, ut pro eo mitterent, & ipsum ad propria renouarent. Cumque elapso longotempore spatio, vir ad propria non remearet: Episcopus in conspectu Ecclesiae inter eos dinortij sententiam promulgauit, & mulieri, ut alium virum duceret plenariam facultatem indulgit: The Bishop as a prouident man, did enioyne their parents to send for him and call him home: And after a long time, when he came not, the Bishop in the sight of the congregation did pronounce the sentence of diuorce betweene them, and gaue the woman libertie to marrie another. Which sentence of the Bishop was approued of the whole Councell. The same Canon, see decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 17. c. 8.

Further euidence also we haue for marriage in the case of wilfull desertion: Ambros. in 7. 1. ad Corin. vpon these words, a brother or sister is not in subiection, &c. Non debet reuerentia coniugij ei qui heret ambrorem coniugij, &c. The reuerence of marriage is not due to him, which abhorreth the author of marriage, &c. Ac per hoc non est peccatum ei qui dimittitur propter deum, &c. And so it is no sinne vnto him, which is dismissed for Gods cause, if he marrie another.

Cal. lib. 5. tit. 1. leg. 2. Constant. Sponsa post biennium, &c. The spouse after two yeere expecting the returne of her husband, may marrie another: Tit. 2. 7. leg. 2. Post triennium, after three yeeres she may marrie: leg. 7. Post quadriennium, after foure yeeres, if she heare no newes of her husband. If the lawe giue this libertie, when the husband is absent vpon other occasion, and supposed to be dead, much more in the case of voluntarie desertion.

Ooo

Likewise

Likewise decreeth the Canon lawe, Canf. 28. qu. 1. c. 4. Vxor sine vlla culpa relinquitur, &c. The wife is left without any fault at all, if she refuse to dwell with a Christian husband.

Ibid. qu. 2. c. 2. Greg. Infidelis discedens, &c. An infidell departing sinneth against God, and the faith of matrimonie is not to be kept with him.

Decret. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 19. c. 7. Qui relinquitur ad secunda si voluerit, vota transibit: He or shee that is forsaken, may if shee will, goe vnto second marriage.

The Papiſts themselues allow the partie forsaken, to marrie againe; but the difference betwene vs is this: first, they affirme, that where the one partie is an Infidell, the marriage is dissolved, whether the vnbeleeuing partie will remaine or not; contrary to the Apostle, 1. Cor. 7. 13. If he be content to dwell with her, let her not forsake him. Secondly, they hold this to be desertion onely, where the one partie is an Infidell: and in this case of infidelitie only matrimonie vpon desertion to be dissolved: whereas if there be a wilfull desertion of the one partie, the case is all one, whether he be a professed Infidell or not: for he that is carelesse of his wife and family, by Saint Pauls rule, is worse than an infidell, 1. Timoth. 5. 8.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER IT BE LAW- full to marrie after diuorcement for adulterie.

The Papiſts.

84. Error.

FOR adulterie one may dismisſe another, but neither partie can marrie againe for any cause during life, Rhemist. Matth. 19. sect. 4. no, not the innocent partie may marrie againe: for the marriage knot is not dissolved because of adulterie, Concil. Trident. sess. 24. can. 7.

Argum. 1. Mark. 10. 11. Whosoever shall put away his wife and marrie another, committeth adulterie against her. Likewise, Luk. 16. 18. Ergo, it is not lawfull to marrie againe at all after the wife be put away, Bellar. c. 16. argum. 2.

Ans. Saint Marke and Luke must be expounded by Saint Matthew, who saith, Whosoever shall put away his wife except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: whereupon it followeth, that not euery one which putteth away his wife and marieth another, committeth adulterie: wherefore the other Euangelists must be vnderstood to speake of other ordinarie and common occasions, such as were vsuall among the Iewes, for the which then did vse to put away their wiues, and not to include in their generall sentence, this exception of fornication; for then the Euangelists should be contrarie each to other.

Bellar. 1. When Marke did write his Gospell at Rome, is it like that he would send the Romanes to Matthew for an exposition thereof. 2. It followeth not, whosoever putteth away, &c. except for fornication, and marieth againe, committeth adulterie: Ergo, he that putteth his wife away for fornication, &c. doth not commit adulterie: and that for diuers reasons, Bellar. ibid.

Contra. First, the Apostles and Euangelists liuing, who did write and preach the Gospell, they needed not to send one to another to know the sence, themselues being directed of the spirit: but now, the best direction we haue, is to expound the Scripture by it selfe, and to make it accord together. Secondly, this exception except, or unless, doth alwayes inferre the contrarie to that which is affirmed: as Luk. 17. 18. There are none found to returne to giue God praise, save this stranger: Ergo, this stranger had to returne to praise God: Likewise Matth. 5. 20. Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes, &c. ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heauen: Ergo, if it did exceed, &c. they should enter: After the same manner, If whosoever doe put away his wife, &c. except for fornication, do commit adulterie; then he that for fornication doth put away and marrie againe, doth not, &c. As for the reasons alledged to the contrarie, they shall be examined in the answeres to our arguments. Thirdly, if they vnderstand Marke and Luke thus generally without exception, then it shall not be lawfull at all to dismisſe for fornication. Bellar. answereth, that this may be prooued out of Saint Matth. c. 5. v. 32. Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull to dismisſe. Contra. 1. Doth not he now send vs for the vnderstanding of Marke and Luke, to Matthew? 2. And doth not he himselfe conclude the contrarie vpon the exception? thus he offendeth against his owne rules, and alloweth that in his owne argument, which he misliketh in ours.

Argum. 2. Matth. 5. 32. Whosoever shall marrie her that is diuorced, committeth adulterie: This must be vnderstood generally, without the exception of fornication; for if it be lawfull to marry an adulteresse that is diuorced for adulterie, and not the innocent partie, that is dismisſed, but not for adulterie, then should the case of the adulteresse be better then of the other: Bellar. s. 16. arg. 1.

Ans. The adulteresse is not straightway to be admitted to second marriage, but it is fit that some restraint should be made in the discretion of the magistrate, least it might be made an vsuall practise for incontinent persons to get them new mates: therefore in this behalfe the adulteresse case is not so good. 2. The innocent persons case is much better, because she is free from so great a sinne as the adulteresse is guiltie of. 3. The innocent partie may be reconciled to her first husband: 1. Cor. 7. 11. which is better than to haue a new husband. 4. If she cannot be reconciled, if the forward partie fall into the sinne of incontinencie, as hee is most like in this case (refusing the companie of an honest wife) to be giuen ouer, then hath the innocent partie the same remedie, with much better conditions, than the other. 5. Neither doth the argument follow, as it may appeare by this instance: Your penance you call the second table after shipwracke: she that sineth not need not this remedie, the adulteresse is admitted to it; is the adulteresse therefore the better because of this second table? no more is she for her second husband. 6. Wherefore the exception in the first clause of the sentence, except it be for fornication, must be supplied also in the latter, as it is euident Matth. 19. 5. where the exception is ioyned to both members of the sentence, both of dismission, and marrying againe.

Argum. 3. Rom. 7. 2. The woman is bound by the law to her husband, so long as he liueth: nothing but death dissolueth the bond betweene man and wife: therefore not lawfull to marrie againe after diuorce, Rhemist. ibid.

Ans. 1. Saint Paul must be expounded by our Sauour Christ, who maketh exception of fornication, Matth. 5.

Neither doth Saint Paul denie, that marriage may be dissolved, while they liue, without breaking of wedlocke: but that although the knot hold during their life, yet by death it is dissolved. Again, Saint Paul hauing no occasion to intreat of diuorce, speaketh of marriage as it standeth whole and sound by the ordinance of God, that if a woman ioyne her selfe to another man, her former wedlocke being not lawfully dissolved, she is a wedlocke breaker.

Therefore the Apostle saith, Qua sub viro est mulier, the woman that is in subiection to the man: But so is not a woman diuorced and separated, any longer in subiection to her husband: therefore of such an one the Apostle speaketh not.

Lastly, we must consider the scope of the place, and how the Apostle applyeth this similitude. As ver. 4. he saith, that the lawe being dead by the comming of Christ, we are freed from it, from henceforth to liue vnto him; as the woman is free after the death of her husband to marrye another: so that the Apostle speaketh not of the continuance of the bond of wedlocke vntill death, but of the dissolution thereof after death: which onely serueth for his present purpose. And thus also is that other place to be expounded, 1. Cor. 7. 39. where the Apostle sheweth, that although marriage remaine firme and sure vntill death, yet then it is dissolved: To this effect also saith Cassianus a learned Papiſt.

Argum. 4. 1. Cor. 7. 11. If she depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled: Ergo, the parties separated for fornication may not marrie againe, Rhemist.

Ans. Saint Paul speaketh of other separations, which are caused by dissensions in marriage, and not of diuorce for adulterie: for he saith, 1. If she depart; not, If she be put away: 2. neither wisheth vsuall a thing for reconciliation to be sought after solemne diuorce. 3. Again, hee saith, Let not the woman depart, as being in her choice, whether she would depart or not: but in the case of fornication, she was to depart, or rather be put away, whether she would or not. Neither would Saint Paul haue said in case of diuorce, let her not depart, seeing the Gospell graunteth dissolution to be made betweene the man and wife in such cases.

Ans. 2. answereth, 1. That the Apostle in the first place, v. 10. Let not the wife depart from her husband, speaketh of vnlawfull and vnjust departure: In the next v. 11. but if shee depart, let her remaine vnmarried, or be reconciled, he speaketh of lawfull departure for fornication. 2. If the Apostle had spoken of any vnlawfull or vnjust departure, he would not haue put it to the woman's choice, whether to be reconciled or not; but simply haue enioyned her to be reconciled.

Ans. 3. First, the same kind of departure is vnderstood in both places: 1. because they make but one full sentence, and these wordes; quod si, but if, haue relation to the other, and they are a coherence of the sense: 2. and againe, the same wordes; sed is vsed in both verses, shewing one and the same kind of separation.

Secondly, 1. the Apostle doth not put it to the woman's choise to be reconciled or not, but by deniying libertie of marriage, doth driue her to seeke reconciliation: and saith thus much in effect: that, if she did not reconcile her selfe, shee should remaine vnmarried. For otherwise it was not in the case of dismissal for adulterie in the offenders power to be reconciled, but in the innocent partie to receiue her to reconciliation: but here it is in the power of the guiltie partie to reconcile her selfe: therefore it was for other offences beside fornication.

Argum. 5. If marriage should be graunted after diuorce, these inconueniences would follow. First, the children should be euill provided for; that are constrained to liue vnder a stepmother or stepfather. Secondly, by this meanes, the married parties being discontented, would take occasions and picke quarrels one to the other, that they may be diuorced and marry againe.

Thirdly, if the marriage be utterly dissolved, then the guiltie partie is either to marrie againe, or not to marrie: if the first, they of purpose may commit adulterie, that they may marry where they list: if the second, what reason is there to restraine the weaker partie of the remedie? Beelar. s. 16.

Contra. First, 1. The same daunger will be to the children, vpon second marriage after death, as well as after diuorce, to endure stepfathers or stepmothers; shall therefore all second marriage for this be restrained? 2. If the innocent partie hauing not the gift of continencie, should be forced to keepe an adulteresse still, there would ensue a greater inconuenience, the father being uncertaine of his children.

Secondly, 1. As it may be feared, least diuorces should be procured and sought, where a way is open to second marriage; so if the way were shut vp, a greater matter would be feared; lest where by diuorce they cannot helpe themselves to new wiues, they should practise by other meanes one to take away another. 2. Again, where diuorce is by pretence or consent, to please their owne lust, the magistrate in his discretion hath power to moderate and ouerrule such inordinate practises. 3. But where Christ hath graunted a libertie, the wisdom of man must not controul it, but leaue the successe to Gods prouidence.

Thirdly, 1. As the guiltie partie by Moses lawe was to die for adulterie, so now also; if some grieuous mulct be laid vpon the offender, according to the nature of the offence, they would haue small list to practise by adulterie. 2. The guiltie partie doth not sue for diuorce, but the partie griued; and therefore if there be offence willingly committed, yet the innocent partie may expect amendment and reconciliation; without whose consent and liking, diuorce is not to be graunted. 3. Some haue thought, that the guiltie partie should not take benefite at all of second marriage, as Luther, Erasmus; some otherwise, as Melanct. in annot. ad c. 5. Matth. Howsoeuer, he is not so easily to be admitted to it; but with due punishment and rebuke before, and the mature aduise and discretion of the Magistrate.

The Protestants.

For no other cause in the world; but onely for fornication, may there be either a small separation, or cleane dissolution of marriage, by way of diuorce: But for that cause our Saviour hath graunted libertie, both to dissolve matrimonie, and to marry againe.

Argum. Matth. 5. 32. Whosoever putteth away his wife (except it be for fornication) committeth adulterie: Ergo, for fornication it is lawfull for a man to dismiss his wife. Likewise Matth. 19. 9. Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrie another, committeth adulterie: Ergo, for adulterie it is lawfull for the man both to put away and renounce his wife; and the wife likewise her husband (for there is the like reason for both) and for them to marrie againe. This libertie graunted by our Saviour Christ, by no humane lawe can be restrained or cut off.

This place troubleth our aduersaries very sore, and therefore they haue found out many twisting holes, but all to small purpose.

1. Durand a cunning Papist thus answereth: That when Christ vttered these words, before of the Jewes was, that the adulterous woman should be put to death, and so the husband might haue libertie to marrie againe.

Contra. Bellarmino overthroweth this answer, 1. Because Christ here giueth a rule not onely to the Jewes, but to all Christians, not being ignorant, how that in euery nation, that use of putting the adulteresse to death, should not be in force. 2. Christ might as well haue exempted other crimes that were punished by death, as murder, and the like, that in those cases they might marry againe, because by the lawe their wiues were to die, as well as in the case of fornication. 3. Christ speaketh of dismissal: but properly the wife is not said to be dismissed, when she is put to death: Christ therefore is not so to be understood.

2. Bellarmino therefore approoueth this exposition: Whosoever shall put away his wife (except it be for fornication) and marrie another: hee would haue the exception restrained to the first clause, in this sense: hee that putteth away his wife, which it is not lawfull to doe but for fornication: so that the crime of fornication maketh it lawfull to dismiss, but not after dismissal to marrie againe.

Contra. 1. This exposition is contrarie to the Iesuite, for he alloweth a separation of matrimony in other cases, as of heretie, infidelitie, vniuersal continencie: but here he teacheth, that onely separation and dismissal is to be made in the case of fornication. 2. This answer of Christ had not been sufficient, if he had spoken onely of diuorce, and not of libertie to marry againe: for the Pharisees moued the question concerning the manner of diuorce permitted by Moses law; after the which it was lawfull for them to marry againe: And therefore it was expected that our Saviour should answer to both these points; both in what cases they might dismiss their wiues, and marrie againe. 3. The sentence cannot stand in any good sense, vntill hee be read wholly together; vntill you will say, that he which putteth away his wife onely, committeth adulterie: he may cause her to commit adulterie, as the Euangelist hath in another place, Matth. 5. 32. but commit adultery hee doth not, vntill whether he marrie another; so that this must needs be the sense, he that putteth away his wife and marrieth another, vnlesse it be in the case of fornication, committeth adulterie.

Answer. further answereth with Augustine, that these words (except it be for fornication) are only negatively to be taken in this sense: that hee which putteth away his wife, and marrieth elsewhere there is no fornication, sinneth: but he determineth not of the affirmatiue part, where there is fornication, whether the partie in marrying againe sinne or not: so that it followeth not, he that marrieth againe, his wife being put away without fornication, sinneth: Ergo, he that marrieth his wife being dissolved for fornication, sinneth not: it may be a lesse sinne, or not so grieuous a kind of adulterie; but it followeth not, that it is not at all. Bellar. cap. 27. resp. ad obiect. 3.

Ans. 1. This answer had been more sufficient than the other: for Christ is not determining this question should haue left them in suspence, and vntertaine what to doe: whereas Christ in forme to be most full: as well he committeth adulterie, that marrieth vpon diuorce for fornication, as he that marrieth where there is no fornication, then our Saviour Chrits exception is vniuersall: he might haue said in generall termes, that whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth elsewhere, excepting no cause, committeth adulterie. And so indeede S. Marke and S. Luke set downe this speech in generall words: who are to be expounded by Martha, least they should seeme contrary one to the other. But farre be it from vs to thinke, that Christ vsed any needlesse or vniuersall word: 3. This word of exception, except it be, vnlesse, or except, in Scripture is vniuersall: it signifieth a contrary disposition in that, which is excepted to: that which is set downe, so that if shoulde be affirmed, the other is denied: as 1. King. 3. 8. None was in this house, excepting my maide: therefore were, other were not: Luk. 13. 3. Except you repent, you shall perish: Ergo, if you repent, you shall not perish: Luk. 17. 18. None are found to returne to praise God, except this heathen: therefore this stranger did returne. So when Christ saith, Who so putteth away his wife, except it be for fornication, and marrieth another, committeth adulterie; wee inferre negatively, that he that putteth away his wife, and marrieth elsewhere where there is fornication. Thus farre their shifting euasions, the truth cannot be obscured.

Ans. 2. S. Paul saith, Let every man loue his wife, as his owne selfe: as the church loueth her selfe, and is ready to sacrifice her selfe for the church, to cleanse it by water with the word, that he may present it to himselfe a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing: that he may shew himselfe holy, without blemish. Wherefore it is lawfull, the first marriage according to the word of God being broken, both for men and women to vse the remedie against incontinencie, and to be married againe: for he speaketh generally of all. To this purpose Alernus excuseth the marriage of Fabius, Repudiato marito, &c. Her first husband being refused: Alernus (inquit de pastolus) nubere, quoniam &c. The Apostle saith, it is better to marrie then burne: she was young, and could not keepe her widow hood, and therefore thought it better to confesse her infirmitie, and to enter into a shadow of marriage, then vnder the shew of single life to play the hypocrite. Occurrunt &c.

Ans. 3. If after diuorce for adulterie no marriage should be lawfull, then the innocent partie should be punished without his fault: and beside, he not hauing the gift of continencie, and long denied the remedie, eyther shall liue in continuall burning, or else be tempted to fall into adulterie: so it had been better forno diuorce at all to be granted, then vpon diuorce no marriage: Ans. 4. Kamptis, &c.

Ans. 5. The guiltie partie may be reconciled againe, and so be retained still: 2. Or if that be not expedient, the remedie of continencie is readie for all those, that will sue for it, and aske it of Gods hands: 3. And in this case the innocent partie must endeouour to containe, as in the long absence, or sicknesse of the wife: B. 17. respons. ad obiect. 3.

Ans. 6. For the partie that offendeth, vpon his or her repentance to be receiued againe; we denie not, but to be a very charitable, and simply the best course: but all the matter is, when as there is no hope of amendment, shall a man retaine a serpent still in his bosome? 2. The gift of Continencie is not giuen to euery man: for 1. our Saviour saith, Mat. 19. 11. All cannot receiue this thing, save they to whom it is giuen: It is not then giuen to all, for then all might receiue it, which is here denied: 2. And the Apostle saith further, 1. Cor. 7. 7. Every man haib his proper gift of God, as the Lord will: some are called to continencie, some to marriage. But if euery man may haue the gift of continencie, it is no proper but a common gift. 3. Where Gods hand is vpon either partie, as by long sickness, or by necessity of inuoluntarie absence, as in captiuitie, there being no other remedie left, God will not deny the necessary gift: but where there is an ordinary remedie by marriage, we must not flie to the extraordinarie gift, which were to tempt God: as Peter leaped out of the ship, to walke vpon the water, and began to sink; so they which leaue the ordinarie meane, trusting to extraordinarie helpe, may be deceived. 4. If continencie were such an easie and vsuall remedie vpon diuorce; why did Pope Gregorius 3. giue this libertie, Caus. 32. qu. 7. r. 18. that if a woman, by reason of her infirmitie, be not able to render her due, the man, qui se continere non poterit, nubat, which cannot containe himselfe, may marrie? And ibide. 2. 4. If a man lie with his stepmother, Vir cum potest aliam uxorem, si se continere non potest: Her husband may take another, if he cannot containe. It is euident dent by these Canons, that every man cannot containe, and that mariage after lawfull diuorce, is the next and best remedie against incontinencie.

Argum. 4. If vpon lawfull diuorce mariage were not lawfull, then the law of diuorce should be altogether superfluous and vnecessary; neither should Christ haue provided as good a remedie in this case, as Moses did, by whose law the adulteresse was to die, and so the innocent partie at libertie to marrie againe. But none of Christs precepts are vnecessary or superfluous: Erge.

Belarm. Yes, diuorce is to great purpose, though it be not free to marrie afterward: for otherwise the innocent partie should be constrained to the great danger of his soule, sometime to live with an heretike, &c. Belarm. c. 17. ruff. ad obiect. 2.

Contra. 1. Separation for hereſie is not lawfull, but onely for adulterie, and therefore this instance is impertinent: 2. The innocent partie may sequester or separate himselfe of his owne accord from the guiltie partie, though there were no publike law of diuorce, as Belarm. confesseth, Diuortium quodlibetum propria auctoritate fieri posse: That diuorce from the bed may be done by a mans owne authoritie: c. 14. obſeruat. 1. and by this private separation, all those pretended dangers may be auoided.

Argum. 5. This obſection was made in Augustines time, lib. 2. de adulter. coniug. c. 17. Contra tur mariti adulteras occidere, &c. If marriage after diuorce be adulterie, then the husbands shall be urged to conspire against their wiues, to take them out of the way, that they may marry againe.

Augustine answereth: 1. The same inconuenience may follow, when as the wife is separated for any other cause than adulterie, that some may practise against the life of their husbands in this case also, to marrie their wiues. 2. Another inconuenience may be feared on the other side, that men will first dismiſſe their wiues to cause them to fall into adulterie, that they may have new.

Augustine saith.

Contra. 1. No separation is to be graunted but for adulterie, and therefore in such lawfull separations, no such danger can be feared; but when the separation is lawfull and marriage lawfull. 2. To practise against a womans chastitie, is not so great a sinne, as to practise against her life: This may follow vpon the denying of marriage, the other vpon graunting. Augustine saith, as he is alledged, cap. 33. qu. 2. c. 9. Si facturus est, quod non licet, iam facit adulterium, & non facit homicidium, &c. If a man must needs doe that which is not lawfull, let him commit adulterie rather than murder, and marrie another while his wife liueth, rather than shed blood: this inconuenience then is worse than the other. 3. Where inconueniences are like to ensue on both sides, the lesse is to be taken, as rather that rule to be followed which is more conforme to the Gospell, as this is to marrie after lawfull diuorce.

Augustine saith, that he which putteth away his wife for adulterie, and marrieth another, Non est aquandu ei is not in the same case with him, which for any other cause putteth away and marrieth againe. But if it be as lawfull for other causes to be diuorced, as for hereſie and inſolencie, as the Iesuite telleth vs, there should be no difference made betweene the second marriage of the one and the other. Augustine in the same place, though he be elsewhere resolute against marriage after diuorce, yet graunteth that it is not plaine out of Scripture, whether he be an adulterer, that marrieth againe after diuorce for adulterie: Sed quantum existimo, venialiter ibi quisque fallit: But as I thinke, we are ebery one of vs herein deceiued: And, de fide & operib. c. 20. he dooth, whether he be an adulterer which marrieth another wife, the first being put away for adulterie.

I end this point, better allowing Pollentius iudgement for this matter, than Augustines betwene whom there is much discoursed of both sides: Si mulier à viro non fornicante discesserit, non ei liceat alteri nubere propter preceptum: si autem à fornicante, non ei expedire propter opprobrium: If a woman depart from her husband being no adulterer, it is not lawfull to marrie another because of the commaundement: but if he be an adulterer, it is lawfull to marry, but not expedient alwaies because of the shame and reproch, Ad Pollent. lib. 1. c. 6.

We haue also further euidence of antiquitie: Veretie. Concil. can. 3. Eos qui relictis uxoribus suis, sicut in Euangelio dicitur, excepta causa fornicationis, seu adulterij probati, aliam duxerint, statim à communione arcendos: They, which leaving their wiues, vnlesse it be for fornication, and adulterie manifestly prooued, and marrie other, we decree, to be put from the Communion. It followeth then, that if adulterie be prooued, they may relinquish their wiues, and marry other.

Concil. Varmatiens. can. 63. Si quis cum matre & filia in adulterio mansit, & postea illas vir mulierum acceperit, dimittat eas, &c. illa vero mulier, quam reliquerit, accipiat virum: If any hath continued in adulterie with the mother and the daughter, and after hee taketh a wife, let him dismiſſe her, and haue no wife so long as hee liueth, but the woman so dismiſſed may take an husband: Likewise if the mother and daughter did commit this sinne ignorantly, they may keepe their husbands: if wittingly, one knowing of another, dimittant maritos, they shall dismiſſe their husbands, illorum vero viri accipiant mulieres: but their husbands may take other women to their wiues. This Coun-all giueth libertie to the innocent partie to marry after diuorce. But Beſarmine confeſſeth, Libertatem diuortij facienda ob crimen parum eſſe uero & uisum: That the libertie to make diuorce for adulterie, is alike to the man and wife; De matrimonio lib. 1. c. 14. Ergo, they may both marrie after diuorce for adulterie.

Lazarus, part. 30. cap. 46. Mulier licita aliqua cauſa à uirō ſeparata poſt annum expletum accipiam aliam uirum, ſimiliter uir uxorem: Women ſeparate from their husbands lawfully, after a year may take other husbands, and their husbands other wiues.

Lazarus, part. 6. cap. 21. Primum, decreed thus: Si quis pendens lite matrimoniali aliam accipiat, & poſtea inter ipſam & primam diuortium fuerit celebratum, poterit cum ſecunda remanere: If any man, while the ſuite dependeth about marriage betweene him and his wife, doe marry another, and afterward ſentence of diuorce be pronounced betweene him and the firſt, he may vpon ſufficient penance remaine with the ſecond. Synod. Florentin. ſeſſ. 25. Graciam matrimonij ſeparant, in quo ſoluitur à Latinis: The Grecians doe vſe to ſeparate matrimonic, wherein they diſſent from the Latines: but the Latines ſeparate marriage onely, quod ſoluitur, non quod uiuentium, they diſſolue the ſole of marriage, not the bond: Ergo, the Greeke Church diſſenting from them, diſſolueth the whole, both the vſe of marriage and the knot. And thus ſare of this queſtion of marriage after diuorce: which we ſee hath been practiſed in times paſt of the Church, and approved of antiquitie.

Yet we haue further euidence, S. Ambroſe in 7. 1. ad Corinth. thus writeth, the Apoſtle ſaying, Let the man put away his wife, doth not adde as before of the woman, ſed ſibi ſe remaneat, Quia uir ſua uxor eſt, ſi diſmiſerit uxor ſua peccantem: Becauſe it is lawfull for the man to marrie a wife, having diſmiſſed the firſt for her offence: here the man in Ambroſe iudgement is permitted to marry after diuorce: but there is the ſame reaſon and libertie both of the man and wife in this caſe: Ergo it is lawfull for both.

Idem, 3. 17. leg. 8. Theodoſ. Uxorē ſi uelit, ſtatim ducere deſinitum: We do define, that he may lawfully marrie a wife, which putteth away the firſt, for cauſes there expreſſed.

Idem, 3. 9. leg. 2. Crimen leuociny incurritur, &c. They incurre the crime of Bawdes, that retaine their ſell in marriage deprehended in adulterie: and leg. 3. Diſſolutio matrimonij: Vtter diſſolution of marriage is granted vpon the detecting of that crime.

Likeſe their owne Canons thus teſtifie: cauſ. 3. 1. qn. 2. 6. Licet uxorem inſidiarum diſmittere, & ſubſequi aliam ducere: It is lawfull for a man to diſmiſſe a wife, laying awaite for her husbands death, and if he will, to marrie another.

Caſ. 39. qn. 2. c. 4. Qui ancillam duxerit uxorem, &c. Hee that hath married a bond-woman, ſi uxor, aliam accipiat: After he knoweth her to be a bond-woman, let him take another.

Caſ. 33. qn. 7. c. 17. Vir licet ducere aliam: The man may marrie another: ibid. c. 18. Gregor. 3. aliam a man to marrie againe: ſi mulier infirmitate corrupta non uales debitum reddere: If the woman taken with ſickenſſe cannot render her debt or due to her husband, ibid. c. 19. Iſti, cum non ſuprata cum uiri fratre, licita coniugia non negentur: lawfull marriage is not to be denied to him, whole wife committed adulterie with his brother.

Ibid. c. 24. Si quis cum nouerca: If any man hath lyen with his mother in law, Vir eius poteſt aliam accipere, the man may take another, if he cannot containe.

Caſ. 33. qn. 1. c. 1. Licet mulieri alteri nubere, ob frigidiſſimū uiri: The woman may marrie another for the weakenſſe of her husband. c. 2. Viſetur mulierem ſecundas nuptias contrahere poſſe: It ſeemeth that the woman may marrie againe, ſpeaking of the ſame caſe. c. 33. qn. 2. c. 9. Potius uxorem aliam ducat, quā humanum ſanguinem fundat: Let a man rather marrie another wife, theſe yet liuing, then ſhedde mans blood.

Thus it is euidēt, how by their owne law and Canons, marriage is lawfull after diuorce: yea, we ſee that ſome of their Popes haue granted ſecond marriage vpon diuorce, for other cauſes then adulterie, wherein, as they preſumed, exceeding the rule limited in the Goſpel, ſo now they offend in abridging the libertie graunted.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE DEGREES IN MARRIAGE PROHIBITED.

Fiſt, of the ſupputation of degrees. Secondly, whether the degrees forbidden, Leuit. 18. may be diſpenſed with. Thirdly, whether any other degrees may by humane law be prohibited by the ſame.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE SUPPUTATION AND ACCOUNT OF DEGREES.

The degrees are either of conſanguinitie, which is of diuerſe perſons comming of the ſame ſtocke and blood: or of affinitie, which ariſeth of marriage, as when the kinſmen of either partie

partie that is married, are by marriage allied to the other, though not of his blood, as Laban the brother of Rebecca was allied by marriage, as also by blood vnto Isaac; though not so neerely.

In both these kindes of kinted there is a right line both vpward and ascending: as in consanguinitie, the Father or Mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, and so forth: in affinitie, the father in law, and mother in law, the stepfather, or stepmother: as also descending, as the sonne, the sonnes sonne, the sonne in law, or daughter in law, and their sonnes and daughters. There is also collaterall line in consanguinitie, as brother and sister, brother and sisters children, vncle or aunt: in affinitie, the brothers wife, sisters husband, the vncles wife, or aunts husband. Now our aduersaries set downe these rules to know the degrees by.

85. Error.

1. IN the right line there are so many degrees as persons, except the first, from the which we begin the account: as in this example, Jacob is in the second degree from Abraham. The first is excepted, because it is no degree of distance, but the beginning of the distance of the rest: Beke cap. 26.

Ans. We see no reason, why the first should be left out: for, 1. looke how many generations, so many degrees: but every person is a generation. 2. And this is the manner of account in Scripture: as Matth. 1. there are 14 generations reckoned from Abraham, whereof Abraham maketh one, Iude 14. Enoch the seventh from Adam, Adam being the first himselfe in that number. Thus the Scripture nameth inclusiue, not exclusiue, inclusiue comprehending also the number from whom the account beginneth. And thus Abraham must be counted the first degree, and Jacob, not in the second, but the third from him. The vse of Scripture for this matter will perswade more, than any reason the Iesuite can bring. And we see that in Scripture not the space betweene the persons, but the persons themselves are counted the degrees.

Thus the Ciuill law accounteth: Gen. 11. 16. leg. 2. Diocletian: Frater ania: The grandmothers brother is in the fourth degree, from the grandchildren. Filius fratris ania: The sonne of the grandmothers brother, est quintus gradus constitutus, is set in the fifth degree: as by this example may be made plaine: Abraham is grandfather to Jacob: Jacob then is in the fourth degree from Harans brother, and in the fifth from Lot Harans sonne: so by this account of the Ciuill law, every person standeth for a degree: Jacob 1. Isaac 2. Abraham 3. Haran 4. Lot 5.

This manner of account is allowed also by the Canon law: Caus. 35. qu. 3. c. 2. Calixtus: Eius sanguineos dicimus, quos diuina & imperatorum leges consanguineos dicunt, &c. We call those kindred, or of one blood and consanguinitie, whom the diuine lawes, and the lawes of the Emperours doe so call.

Ibid. qu. 5. c. 2. Alexander: Quia hereditates nequeunt deferri, &c. Because inheritances cannot be conueied but from one person to another, the secular Emperour hath provided, in singularibus singulos praesidere gradus, that in every person there should be a degree: but because nuncupatio non est without two persons, therefore the sacred Canons haue appointed two persons in every degree: but it is manifest that both these kindes of computations, are of one sentence, and come both to the same effect.

Ibid. c. 6. declarat. arbor. consanguinitat. In computatione ascendenti, descendenti concordanturque ius, &c. In the computation of those that ascend and descend both lawes doe accord: for one person added to another maketh a degree. Thus we see that the computation of the Ciuill law is confirmed by their owne Canons.

86. Error.

2. IN the collaterall line, if the parties be equally distant from the roote or stocke of the generation, looke how many degrees distant they are from the stocke, so is the distance betweene themselves: Jacob and Rachel are in the second degree, because each of them is removed from Bathuel, in the second degree: neither haue they any relation one to the other, but as they are ioyned in the stocke, Beke cap. 26.

|            |           |
|------------|-----------|
| Bathuel.   |           |
| Rebecca 1. | Laban 1.  |
| Jacob 2.   | Rachel 2. |

Ans. Neither doe we allow this rule: but rather follow the account of the Ciuill law, which in the collaterall line maketh so many degrees as persons, excepting the stocke, which is not to be counted in collaterall degrees, because we begin not to number there. Wherefore according to the rule aforesaid, how many generations, so many degrees. According then to the account of the Ciuill law, which wee here follow, Jacob and Rachel are not in the second, but the fourth degree each from other: Rachel 1. Laban 2. Rebecca 3. Jacob 4. For in collaterall degrees, we count not the distance from the roote or stocke, but the mutuall distance from themselves.

2. And by this rule one brother should be as neere another, as they are both to their father: the which nature it selfe confuteth: seeing there is greater loue and affection, and so a neerer coniunction betweene the father and the sonne, than betweene brethren.

3. By

3. By this reason also, if Cousin germanes be but in the second degree, there should be no degree beyond the second forbidden, Leuit. 18. for there is no degree forbidden beyond this: neither within by name, and directly forbidden.

Belarm. First, à fratre ad fratrem non transitur per patrem, &c. Wee doe not passe from brother to brother by the father: for one brother proceedeth not from another, either mediately or immediately. One brother hath no coniunction with another, but considered in the father; and therefore from him we must seeke for the distance of brethren. Secondly, in the same equal distance, there may be notwithstanding a greater coniunction, as betweene the father and the sonne, the coniunction is greater, than betweene brethren, yet the distance is alike.

Cutra. First, in the 1. collaterall line, the computation doth not follow the carnall profection or generation, as in the right line: and therefore, though one brother proceede not in generation from another, yet the computation may proceede from one to the other. 2. And he reasoneth ab- solutely, brethren are conioyned in the father, therefore from him the distance must be deriued: for coniunction and distance are two diuers things: and the contrary rather is inferred, that because their coniunction is considered in the father, the distance also and disunction cannot be taken from thence. 3. And reason it selfe sheweth, that from one brother wee cannot account to another, but passing by the father in computation.

Secondly, it cannot be that in an equall distance, there should be an vnequall coniunction: for the nearnes and farnesse of the blood, maketh the greater or lesse coniunction: wherefore if brethren bee as neere each the other in blood as to the father; the coniunction and affection should be as great: like as in a tree, the neerer the roote the more sappe, so in consanguinitie; the neerer the roote, the more affection.

The Ciuill law in the collaterall line maketh as many degrees as persons, the stocke onely ex- cepted: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 57. leg. 3. Decim: Soror in secundo gradu &c. The sister in the second degree, the brothers sonne in the third. Leg. 7. Patruus & matertera: The vncle and aunt in the third de- gree. Th. 18. leg. 5. Diocletian. Fratres vterini, &c. Whole brothers are in the second degree. Leg. 6. Amulus: The vncle by marriage in the third degree: Consobrinus, The cousin germane in the fourth. In all these examples, there are so many degrees as persons, beside the stocke. This kinde of computation hath also the approbation of the Canons: Caus. 35. qu. 5. c. 2. Alexander. 2. Perrague computatio vno sine concluditur, &c. Both the computations haue the same end: for two degrees le- gal make but one degree canonically: as brothers that are by the secular lawes in the second de- gree, are by the Canons in the first.

Idem. c. 6. declarat. arbor. consanguinitat. These two rules of the Ciuill computation in the collaterall line are commended: first, Quo gradu quis distat à stirpe, in linea equali tota duplento distat in se &c. In what degree any are distant from the stocke, double so much are they distant from themselves: as Iacob and Rachel are in the second degree from the stock (which is not coun- ted for a degree in the collaterall line) and therefore they are distant each from the other in the fourth degree. Secondly, another rule is this, in the equall line of collaterals, whether the line be pernumerari, vel disparis: Of euen number or odde, the degree is alwaies euen. As the first line is odde, the second euen, &c. yet Rebecca and Laban being in the first line from Barbuel, are in the second degree, which is an euen number. It is otherwise in the Canonically computation: for in an odde line, they haue an odde degree: as in the first line, where Rebecca and Laban stand, they haue the first degree: yet the first computation is commended in these words, Bene dicitur secundum leges, &c. It is well said according to the lawes, &c.

I will here lastly adde the testimonie of S. Ambrose, that it may appeare how degrees were ac- counted in his time: Ad paternum paruulos fratres sibi quarto gradu sociantur, &c. Brothers children are ioyned in the fourth degree: hic autem gradu tertius est: but this degree is the third, namely, betweene the vncle and his niece.

The Papists.

Their third rule is this: In collaterall degrees vnequall, that is, when both are not alike distant from the stocke, they shall differ in that degree, in the which the further of them is remoued from the stock: as in this example, Ioseph is distant foure degrees from the stocke, and as many from Nachor, likewise from Barbuel and La- ban. Belarm. ibid.

The Protestants.

Neither is this rule perfect: for by this reason, he that is indeede a degree farther off, shall be in the same degree: as Ioseph shall be as neere to Laban as Nachor, who is three degrees from Laban: but this is against common sense, that Ioseph should be as neere the fur- thest off, as to him that is neerer by three degrees.

Belarmine answereth: The reason is, because the persons that are of the one side, Non habent habitudinem

|-------------------|-------------------|
| Abraham 1. | Nachor 1.  |
| Isaac 2.   | Barbuel 2. |
| Iacob 3.   | Laban 3.   |
| Ioseph 4.  |                   |

habitudinem ad eos, qui sunt in altero, nisi ratione stipitis: Haue no relation or disposition to the persons on the other side, but in respect of the stocke wherein they are all ioyned. And therefore looke how farre Ioseph is distant from the stocke, so farre hee is from each of the other side.

Contra. If this rule hold in Ioseph, who is the fourth degree from the stocke, why shall it not hold in Abraham of the same side, who is in the first degree from the stocke, that as Ioseph is in the fourth degree from Thare, it would followe, that Laban should be neerer to Abraham, than to the stocke, from the which he is remoued three degrees, which is impossible.

Bellarmino saith the reason is this; because that if Abraham should be no further distant from the collaterall persons, than he is from the stocke, as but one degree from Laban, because he is but one degree from Thare, it would followe, that Laban should be neerer to Abraham, than to the stocke, from the which he is remoued three degrees, which is impossible.

Contra. 1. Yet by the Iesuites reason alleaged before for Iosephs account, it must bee so for Abraham: because the collaterall persons haue no relation or disposition together, but as they meet and are vnited to the stocke: why should not then Abrahams account be directed by his distance from the stocke, as Iosephs is?

2. As this way there falleth out an impossibilitie for Abraham, that Laban should be neerer him than the stocke: so on the other side for Ioseph, that Laban should bee as neerer him, as Nachor is, who is three degrees from Laban, and must needs be so much neerer Ioseph. This account therefore and measuring of degrees according to their blind Canons, is found to be must doubtful and vncertaine: as it may further appeare thus: The Canon law saith, Persona addita persona vna ad lineam equalitatis non crescit gradus: That one person being added to another, till the line be equal, the degree is not encreased; as in the former example, Laban is added to Bathuel, yet both in the same degree from Ioseph: canon. 35. qu. 5. c. 6. declarat. arbor. consanguinitat.

Contra. 1. It is absurd and vnreasonable that they should be in the same degree of consanguinitie, and that the addition of a person or generation should not make a degree: for what is a degree of consanguinitie, but a generation? so that so many generations as there are, so many degrees there should be.

2. In the degrees of affinity the rule holdeth well: Persona addita persona per carnem equalam non mutat gradum sed genus: One person comming or being added to another by carnal copulation, the degree is not chaunged but the kinde: Ibid. declarat. arbor. affinitat. As the brothers wife, marryng another husband, the second husband is in the same degree of affinity with the brothers wife, though in another kinde: but it is otherwise in the line of consanguinitie.

3. If this were a good rule, that when two differ vnequally from the stocke, one two degrees, another foure, they shall differ one from another in that degree, which is farthest off, than the fourth: then it would follow very well, they being distant in the same degree one from another, that if I cannot marrie my daughter, then thou canst not marrie mine, and so also affirmatiuely: but this is denied by their Canon: For he that is in the third degree may contract with his daughter that is in the fourth: sed non e converso, but not contrariwise: declarat. arbor. affinitat. But if they were in the same degree of distance, according to their rule one from the other, why should it not follow both affirmatiuely, and negatiuely.

4. Celestinus 3. decreeth contrarie to this rule: Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 14. c. 3. That whome there was a certaine indulgence or libertie to marrie in the sixth degree: and so consequently, he that was in the sixth degree on the one side, might marrie into the second or third degree on the other: Quod videtur posse fieri secundum regulam, &c. Which it seemeth (saith Celestinus) might bee done according to the rule: which is, that how many degrees one is distant from the stocke hee is distant from euery one descending from the stocke on the other line. And so one in the sixth degree, and another in the second or third in another line, differ from themselves in the sixth degree, and consequently by this indulgence might marrie: yet Celestinus decreeth, that they must not be vnderstood to be in the sixth degree, vntill both of them were distant from the stocke in the sixth degree: and so hee apparently croseth the Canon, by the which they are said to differ in the sixth degree, if one of them onely bee remoued from the stocke in that degree.

Wherefore in collaterals we preferre the Ciuill account of degrees: that is, so many persons, the stocke of the kindred excepted, so many degrees. These then are the rules for the degrees of marriage.

The rules for the degrees of Consanguinitie.

1. In the right line ascending and descending all degrees are forbidden; as ascending, the father, mother, Grandfather, Grandmother, Leuitic. 18. 7. Descending; the sonne or daughter, the sonnes daughter, or daughters daughter, Leuit. 18. 10. and so of the rest.

2. In the collaterall line of consanguinitie the prohibition reacheth expressly to the third degree: as it is not lawfull to marrie the Vncle or Aunte, Leuit. 18. 12. and by way of consequence to the fourth degree; as to the Vncle or Auntes sonne or daughter.

3. The same degrees are forbidden by way of Analogie, both to the man and woman: as it is not lawfull for the Nephew to marrie the Aunte, Leuitic. 18. 14. So by the same reason, not for the Niece to marrie her Vncle. And these are the rules for the limitation of the degrees of consanguinitie: The directions also for the computation are these.

4. In the right line there are so many degrees as persons: as the ciuill law saith: Generata persona semper adijcit gradum: The generation of euery person maketh a degree: as before I haue shewed, Err. 85.

5. In the collaterall line equall, or vnequall, there are so many degrees as persons, not counting the stocke; See before Err. 86. 87.

Of the degrees of Affinitie.

First of the Computation of the degrees; then of the limitation: the rules for the Computation are these.

1. The first rule of the Canon law is this: Inter virum & mulierem non contrahitur affinitas, sed ex sola affinitatis causa: Affinitie is not betwene the man and the woman, but they are the cause of affinitie: for affinitie is defined Personarum proximitas ex coitu promouens: The neerestesse of persons proceeding of carnall coniunction.

2. Hereupon it followeth, that the neerest affinitie is in the second or third degree: for if the man and wife be counted as one degree, the first affinitie is in the second; if they be reckoned for two, the first affinitie is in the third, as the wiues or husbands, father, brother, daughter, &c.

3. Quo gradu quis tibi consanguineus, toto uuluer affinis: In what degree thy kinsman is of consanguinitie, in the same degree of affinitie is his wife. The law giueth this reason, because they are in hoc caus. 35. qn. 5. c. 3. And this rule seemeth to be grounded vpon the Scripture: Leuit. 18. 14. Thou shalt not vncouer the shame of thy fathers brother, thou shalt not goe into his wife, for she is thy aunt. Here the vncles wife is called the aunt, as being in the same degree of kinted: hee of consanguinitie, she of affinitie. By this rule the brother being in the second degree of consanguinitie, his wife shall be in the second degree of affinitie. I am not ignorant that some doe account alwaies of affinitie in a degree further than the consanguinitie by the which it commeth in; as they place the vncles wife in the fourth degree of affinitie, the vncle being in the third of consanguinitie, sum. dnm. in 18. Leuitic. And this account I followed in the other edition: the matter is not great, whether way wee make our computation: but the first seemeth to me to be more probable, and according to the rule of the Ciuill law: Generata persona adijcit gradum, &c. The generation of a person maketh a degree: where then there is no generation, but a copulation onely or coniunction, there is no new degree.

4. Persona addita persona per carnis copulam mutat genus, non gradum: One person coming to another by carnall copulation, chaungeth not the degree, but the kinde of affinitie: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the second degree and first kind: if she marrie a second husband, he is of affinitie in the same degree, but in the second kinde: if he marrie another wife, she is of affinitie in the second degree still, but in the third kinde.

5. By this rule of the Canon law may another be collected: Persona addita persona per generationem mutat gradum, sed non genus, &c. A person added to a person by generation, doth chaunge the degree of affinitie, not the kind. As we haue an example, Leuit. 18. 17. The wiues daughter is in the second degree of affinitie to the husband and the first kinde: her daughters daughter is in the third degree and first kinde. And these are the rules of the computation of the degrees of affinitie.

The rules for the limitation of the degrees of Affinitie.

1. Inter affines ascendentes, descendentes, prohibitio extenditur in infinitum: In ascending or descending, affinitie is prohibited infinitely, that is, without any limitation: as Leuitic. 18. 17. It is not lawfull to marrie the wiues daughter, nor daughters daughter, and so downward: and likewise ascending, not the wiues father, or fathers father, &c.

2. Affinitatis

2. Affinitas perpetuum est impedimentum, quod durat, moriua persona, qua mediante contrahitur: Affinitie is a perpetuall impediment, and it holdeth, though the person be dead, by whom it was contracted: caus. 35. qu. 10 c. 2. As, though the wife be dead, yet her kinred is of affinitie still with her husband remaining alieue.

3. Affinitas non habet prohibitionem nisi in primo genere: Affinitie is not forbidden, but in the first kind: declar. arbor. affinit. Affinitie in the first kind continueth, till it be changed, by a new coniunction in marriage: as the brothers wife is of affinitie in the first kind, but if she marrie againe, her second husband is of affinitie in the second kind, and with him marriage is not prohibited.

4. In collaterall affinitie marriage is inhibited till the third degree, counting the man and wife for one, or to the fourth, making them two degrees, Leuitic. 18. 14. the Vncles wife is of affinitie in the third degree, the vncle being in the same degree of consanguinitie.

5. Inter consanguineos viri & consanguineos uxoris, nulla affinitas: Betweene the kinred of blood on the mans side, and the kinred of blood on the womans side there is no affinitie: and therefore two brothers may marrie with two sisters; the father and the sonne, with the mother and the daughter.

6. In consanguinitie it followeth, the father is my kinsman, therefore his sonne, but not in affinitie: for the father marrying my sister, and hauing a sonne by her, he is of consanguinitie, but not of affinitie vnto me, if he haue a sonne by another wife: though the father be my kinsman in affinitie by his first marriage, yet the sonne is neyther of affinitie nor consanguinitie.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER ANY OF the Degrees prohibited in the law may be dispensed withall.

The Papists.

83.7. c.

They say not that the Pope may dispense with all, but with some of them, Concil. Trident. sess. 24. can. 3. As they tooke vpon them to dispense with King Henry the 8. marriage with his brothers wife: their reason is, because some of those prohibitions were only iudicall and positive constitutions, not grounded vpon the law of nature.

Argum. 1. If it be the law of Nature not to marrie within those degrees, it should haue been in force before the law was made: but so was it not: for Abraham married his brothers daughter, and Jacob two sisters, Bellarmin. cap. 27.

Ans. 1. As Augustine saith of the marriage and copulation of Adams children, brothers and sisters together: Factum est compellente necessitate: It was for necessitie sake, because there were then no more women: so also may it be in some sort true of those Patriarkes, that hauing a necessitie to marrie amongst their owne kinred, and not with the Gentiles, there was no choise to be had of women of their owne kinred further off in degree.

2. Although this example of theirs, both in marrying many wiues and so neere of kinne, cannot be altogether excused or iustified in them: yet because the law of nature was not yet so clearly knowne, as afterward by the giuing of the law, which is nothing else but an exposition of the law of nature; the offence was not so great in them, but might better be tolerated: because as Augustine saith, it was neither Contra morem illorum temporum, nec contra preceptum. Neither against the custome of those times, nor against any flat precept. And to conclude, although those holy men had their imperfections, yet we must not iudge them in these things according to the euill and corrupt disposition of men in these dayes, which might vse this great libertie in marriage, better then many vse lawfull marriage now: as Augustine sayth, Cassius habebant plures, quam nunc multi vnam: They vsed many wiues more chastely, then many now liue with one, De bon. coniug. cap. 10.

Bellarmines replieth: First, hee denieth that Jacobs marriage and the rest, were facta dispensatio Deo, were dispensed with of God: for it appeareth, Genes. 28. 2. that it was the custome of the place, to giue two sisters to one man: neyther would Jacob haue so easily 3. yeelded to it, if it had been an vnwonted thing: 4. and beside there was no necessitie in it, that they should marrie their kinswomen.

Secondly, if they had sinned in these marriages, 1. then should they haue continued all their life in sinne, which the seruants of God do not: 2. and by this meanes their children should haue been bastards, being borne in vnlawfull Matrimonie: Bellarmin. c. 27. respons. ad probat. 2.

Contra. First, Bellarmin. is 1. contrarie to himselfe in denying that the marriages of the Patriarkes were dispensed with: for he affirmed before, c. 11. propos. 4. Dispensatio circa polygamiam est indicata patrius, &c. The dispensation concerning polygamie, or multitude of wiues, was declared to the Fathers by God, &c. Their Canons affirme the same, Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 19. c. 4. Nulli licet simul plures uxores habere, nisi cui fuit diuina reuelatione concessum, &c. It was lawfull for none to haue many wives at once, but to whome it was graunted by diuine reuelation, &c. that as Iacob from lying, the Israelites from theft, Sampson from murder, so they are excused from adultery: and in taking many wives, so also in marrying in their neare kinred, it was by the same toleration permitted, though not by dispensation authorized or warranted.

2. Genes. 29. There 1. appeareth no such custome, to giue two sisters to one man, but the manner was not to marrie the younger before the elder, v. 26. 2. Though there had been such a custome, it was in an idolatrous countrey, and therefore could not make it lawfull.

3. Iacob 1. desired but one, and had a purpose onely to marrie Rachel; but being deceiued, hee was druen to this strait, that he must either take both, or els be deprived of her whome he chiefly loved. 2. Iacob's affection herein is no excuse of his infirmitie. 3. And the vnlawfulness of such marriage, there being yet no positieue law, was not so fully reuealed vnto them. 4. Wherefore that which Iacob might doe either of infirmitie, or ignorance, maketh not the thing lawfull.

4. Their necessitie was such, that they must either marrie their kinswomen, or else the daughters of Canaan, which was vnlawfull and forbidden, Genes. 23. 6.

Secondly, 1. Gods seruants doe not continue in any sinne which they know, without repentance, but a sinne of ignorance or infirmitie may remaine in them: for how should they correct that which they knew not: it was a weaknesse in Abraham to cause Sara to dissemble, as though she were not his wife; yet did not Abraham know it; but continued in it; for he committed the same error twice: and Isaac his sonne by his example did the like. 2. Neither can it be denyed, but that there was bastardie in some of their seed: such were the two sonnes of Thamar which she had by Iudah her father in law: But we deny, that though those marriages in themselves were vnlawfull, that therefore all their seed was illegitimate; both 1. because the positieue law was not yet giuen, which iudgeth of bastardie: 2. And beside, they married not for lust, but for procreation and propagation of the Church: 3. As also the vnlawfulness of these marriages was tolerated in respect of the necessitie and condition of those times. 4. And by lawfull marriage succeeding, in continuance of time, the first stain and blot was extinct and worne out.

By Deuteron. 25. 5. The law giueth this libertie, that if a brother die without issue, his brother should take his wife, and raise vp seed to his brother. This lawe commaundeth nothing against nature, because God is the author of nature, who made this law, and doth nothing against nature: therefore that is no naturall lawe, Leuitic. 18. that a man should not marry his brothers wife; neither is it simply euill so to doe, for then God would not haue commaunded the contrary: but it is onely a iudiciall law, afterward abrogate by Christ: Bellar. cap. 27.

1. That the law, Leuit. 18. was grounded vpon nature, and endured euen after Christs coming, it appeareth, in that Iohn Baptist (Christ being then come; and entred into his office) reuoced Herod for marrying his brothers wife. 2. That libertie graunted, Deut. 25. is an exception from the other law, which serued onely for those times, for the continuance of carnall lust, and maintenance of their tribes and families, which were to hold till the coming of the Messiah: but now the cause of that exception ceasing, the libertie also is taken away. 3. Neither doth it follow, that if the other law, Leuit. 18. 16. be grounded vpon nature, that this exception should be against nature: for not simply the marrying of the brothers wife, but the vncleane affection in vncouering the brothers shame by so doing, maketh it vnnaturall, as it is in the lawe expressed: but in marrying the brothers wife in this case onely, to raise vp seed to him, and onely at that time during the state of that people, was not to vncouer but to recover his shame, and raise vp his name and honour in Israel, wherefore it was not vnnaturall. 4. God is aboue nature, and aboue the law: and who may better expound the law than the lawgiuer: and by the same right might the Lord in this case onely graunt libertie to marry the brothers wife, notwithstanding the other generall law, as Phineas did slay the adulterer and adulteresse, and Samuel the King of Amalek, notwithstanding the law, Thou shalt not kill. Neither doth it follow, that because God did in that case dispense with his law: Ergo, man hath authoritie to doe the same. 5. Lastly, if it be answered, that in this exception, Deut. 25. 5. the next kinsman who might marrie the widowe by law, not the brother, is to be vnderstood: for neither doth the word in that place signifie a brother properly: and we see the practise accordingly, Ruth. 4. where not the brother but the kinsman performeth this duty. This answer might suffice to remooue the Iesuites force: but we rather recourse to former.

Abel replyeth: First, this exception sheweth, that to marry the brothers wife, is not simply euill of itselfe, for then it could not be made good and lawfull by any circumstance. Secondly, he denieth it to be an exception; for not God, that knoweth all things, doth vse to make exceptions after a law made, but men, when they see the law cannot otherwise be kept. Thirdly, neither is it a dispensation, for a dispensation is no lawe, but onely a qualifying of the law in some particular case. Fourthly, this kinde of marriage is against the lawe of nature, no otherwise than killing is, which by some circumstance may be made lawfull, and so may the other. Bellar. c. 27.

Contra. First, to marrie the brothers wife of a fleshly mind, and carnall lust, is simply euill, and cannot be made lawfull by any circumstance: but to marry her according to the lawe, onely to raise vp seed to the brother, for the continuance of the tribes and families, which were then Gods people, was not euill, not proceeding of any such carnall desire to the brothers wife, but of obedience to the law: like as to kill a man in malice is simply euill, and is neuer made lawfull, yet Pharisees killing not in malice, but in the zeale of Gods glory, was commended.

Secondly, as man may make exceptions against mans lawe, so to God onely it belongeth to take exception against his owne law: for who dare presume to adde any thing to Gods law, but himselfe: neither doth God giue exceptions against his law for want of foresight, but for the profite and vtilitie of men, as this exception was for the commoditie of the Iewes.

Thirdly, neither was this a perpetuall lawe, but onely for that nation and for that time, and therefore hath the right nature of a dispensation.

Fourthly, 1. As killing with a malicious mind and of priuate reuenge, is against nature, and cannot be made lawfull; so is the marrying of the brothers wife with an vnclane affection: but to kill to the glory of God, is dispensed with in the worde: so is this marriage done onely in obedience to the law, and vtilitie of the people of God. 2. Againe, as the lawfull kind of killing (as by publike authoritie) is allowed by the same lawgiuer; so also the cases and exceptions that allow the marriage of the brothers wife, must be warranted by Gods word. 3. Wherefore Belarius graunting that this kind of mariage is as much against nature as killing is, doth confesse as much as we doe desire: neither hath he gained any thing but lost; seeing that as no man hath power to dispense with killing but God, so neither is this marriage lawfull, but in cases limited and appointed by God: so that neither the Pope nor any other mortall man hath power to dispense in this case.

The Protestants.

WE affirme, that it is vtterly vnlawfull for any Christian to marry within the degrees prohibited: neither can any humane power dispense with such marriages: but the equitie of that law being grounded vpon nature, is in force for euer. Wherefore the Pope of Rome teacheth himselfe plainly to be Antichrist, in dispensing against the law of God.

Argum. 1. Leuit. 18. 24. The reason of that law is giuen concerning the forbidden degrees: They should not defile themselves in any one of those things, because the Gentiles defiled themselves thereby, and were cast out before them for it. Wherefore it is a naturall and perpetuall law, otherwise the Gentiles had not been bound vnto it.

Belarius answereth: First, the Gentiles were punished for other greater sinnes, as idolatrie, adulterie, mentioned before; v. 21. 22. and not onely for these marriages. Secondly, the Gentiles did marry in their kinned without any respect, and no circumstances considered, and therefore offended against the law of nature: for the Patriarkes married within the degrees prohibited, as Abraham, yet were not punished, Belarius. 2. 7. resp. ad argum. 1. protestant.

Contra. First, the words are, In all these the nations are defiled: therefore these vnlawfull marriages are comprehended among the rest: and although they had other sinnes, for the which they were punished; yet these also raigned among them, and consequently were vnnaturall. Secondly, the marriages here forbidden are simply propounded without any circumstance, and therefore no circumstance of mans deuise, not allowed in the law, can dispense with the vnlawfulness of these marriages. Thirdly, the sinnes of the Gentiles are noted, wherewith they did then pollute themselves: the marriages of the Patriarkes were before the law, and in respect of the necessity of those times, their chastitie and fidelitie tolerated.

Argum. 2. Mark. 6. 18. Iohn saith to Herode, It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife. Ergo, the law was not abrogate, being in force in our Sauour Christs time. Neither are they to alledge, that Herodes brother was yet liuing, or that he had a child by Herodias, and therefore it was not lawfull for him to marrie her: for all this being graunted, which cannot be prouoed, yet it is plaine out of the text, that Iohn reprocueth him in no other name, but because hee married his brothers wife.

Argum. 3. Saint Paul reprocueth the incestuous young man that had his fathers wife, 1. Cor. 5. 1. and excommunicateth him for it: but this is not forbidden any where in the newe Testament, but onely by vertue of Moses law: Ergo, that law concerning degrees of kinned continued in force still. Neither is it a good answer to say, as Belarius doth, that in some degrees that law holdeth, and not in other; seeing that all the degrees there named, Leuitic. 18. are with the like strictnesse, and in the same forme of words prohibited: neither can the Iesuite shewe, where any part of that law is reuerfed. The words are, v. 24. Ye shall not defile your selues in any of these things: so then all the degrees there expresse are forbidden. Neither doth it helpe him to say, that this incestuous person did keepe his fathers wife while his father liued: which is vncertaine, for as it is by some affirmed, so it is by other denied, as Theoderet: howsoeuer it were, the Apostles describeth both his sinne to be this, that he had his fathers wife: so that we see, that the Leviticall prohibition is perpetuall, and in force vnder the Gospell.

Augustine is against them, who speaking of the marriage of Consobrinnes or Cousin germanes, which had been sometime in vse, Quia id nec diuina prohibuit, & nondum prohibuerat lex humana: It was yet thought lawfull, because neither the diuine law forbid it, neither was it yet prohibited by mans lawe. If that then be thought lawfull, which Gods law manifestly forbiddeth not, that is lawfull which it plainly forbiddeth. Wherefore to marrie within any of the degrees directly forbidden, Leuit. 18. is vtterly vnlawfull.

Where the full consent of antiquitie, Concil. Agathens. 61. Hos in cōsensu esse, si quis relictam fratris, aut germanam uxorem duxerit, &c. These we count incests, if a man marrie his brothers wife, or his owne sister, his mother in law, his Aunt, &c. as it followeth in Moses law.

Epiphanius. can. 30. Aurelianens. 3. cap. 10. Arclatens. sub Carolo can. 11. Gregor. 3. decret. 5. Hincmar. can. 2. In all these Councils it is in flat termes decreed, that it shall not be lawfull for a man to marrie his brothers wife.

Concil. Porrbisens. can. 4. Nullus illicita coniugia contra preceptum Domini sortiri praesumat, ut fratrem relictam, ueneriam, &c. Let no man presume to make any vnlawfull marriage contrary to the commandment of God, as to marrie his brothers widow, his mother in law, &c.

And that it is not lawfull for the Pope to dispense in this case with the marriage of the brothers wife, we see the determination of the Pope himselfe: Zacharie of that name thus writing to Boniface, who required his aduise concerning one that had married his vncles wife, who affirmed that he was dispensed with by Gregorie the 3. his Predecessor, Pope Zacharie maketh this answer: Abbas, ut predecessor noster ita praeceperet, nec enim ab Apostolica sede illa deriguntur, quae contraria canonum statuta esse perhibentur: Farre be it from my predecessor to make any such law, for the Apostolicall see hath no authoritie to decree any thing contrary to the auncient Canons, Epistol. ad Bonifacium. But for a man to marrie his brothers wife, is contrarie to the Canons, as we haue seene: Ergo, in this case the Pope cannot dispense.

We haue the approbation of the Imperiall lawes, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 5. leg. 4. 5. Valent. Theodos. Fratri uxorem ducendi, vel duabus sororibus coniugendi penitus licentiam submouimus, &c. We do denie licence to marrie the brothers wife, or to be ioyned to two sisters: ibid. leg. 9. Anastasius: Rescripta omnia quibus carere decreuimus, &c. We decree, that all dispensations, licences of the Prince, &c. shall be void, which do giue leaue to marrie the brothers wife. Wherefore seeing the lawes of Princes do concur with the law of God, in the prohibition of such marriages, it followeth that they are mere morall precepts, and agreeable to the law of nature.

Their owne Canons also are euident, Caus. 27. qu. 2. c. 17. & decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 1. c. 4. Spensam fratri habere non potest: The brother cannot haue to wife his brothers spouse: how much more cannot he haue his brothers wife, that was not espoused onely, but married to him.

Caus. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Non relictam fratris: It is not lawfull to marrie the brothers widow, c. 12. Nec relictam fratris uxoris: Nor the wifes brothers widow.

Qu. 5. c. 3. Vxorem propinqui mei ita me oportet attendere, &c. I must so regard my kinsmans wife, as what degree soeuer, as though she were in the same degree of mine owne kined. By this rule it is no more lawfull for a man to marrie his brothers wife, then his owne sister: And the Canon goeth further, Qui aliter sentiant Antichristi sunt, they that thinke otherwise, are Antichrists: so consequently the Pope is by their owne Canons an Antichrist, for allowing such incestuous marriages.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ANY OTHER DEGREES may be by humane law prohibited, beside those directly forbidden in the law.

The Papists.

1. They affirme, that by the law of Moses, those degrees only are vnlawfull to marrie in, which are directly and by name set downe: and therefore it is not vnlawfull, by Moses law, for the Vncle or Aunts husband to marrie his niece, because it is not by name prohibited: as Abraham married his brother Arams daughter: for Sara was his niece. The marriage also of Cousin germanes was lawfull by Moses law, and practised, Numb. 36. The daughters of Zelophebad married their Vncles sonnes. Therefore by Moses law no degrees are forbidden, which are not directly named, Brach. cap. 27.

The Protestants.

1. Concerning Abrahams marriage what is to be thought, we haue shewed before, respons. ad Ceryan. 1. that although this marriage of Abraham is neyther commended, nor simply allowed in Scripture: yet it was tolerated both in respect of the necessitie 1. of those times, when as they could not marrie in further degrees of kinred, vnlesse they would haue taken them wiues from the idolatrous heathen. 2. Likewise the libertie then was greater, there being then no lawe to the contrarie. 3. And their chastitie and sobrietie did somewhat beare them out, who as Augustine saith, Non lasciuendi, sed gignendi causa illis feminis videntur: They did not vie those women for lust, but for generation sake: de bon. coning. c. 25. but this example of Abraham notwithstanding, now after the law giuen, it is a plaine case, that the vncle is no more to marry his neece, than the nephew his Aunt: and this being by name prohibited, Leuit. 18. 14. 20. 2. the other also is necessarily included: for the same rules for degrees of kinred, doe proportionably hold both in men and women: wherefore such marriage is vnlawfull, neither to be contracted; and if it be so be dissolved.

The like iudgement is to be giuen, of the marriage of two sisters; that as the brother is forbidden to marrie his brothers wife, so the sister not to ioine her selfe to the sisters husband. And whereas Bellarmino vigeth that place, Leuiticus 18. 18. Thou shalt not take a wife with her sister, as vxorib during her life: thereby proouing, that the lawe onely forbiddeth to marrie two sisters together, not successiuelly one after another. I answer, that the text is rather to be read thus, Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, that is, one woman to another: First, the worde uxor, signifieth a woman, as well as a wife: as in the next verse following 19. and in many other places. Secondly, the true reading is, to a sister, not, with a sister; so the preposition cum signifieth: Then thus to reade, Thou shalt not take a wife to her sister, hath no sense: to take the sister to thy wife, by inuerting the wordes, were to better sense. Thirdly, the phrase is so taken in Scripture, Genes. 26. 31. They did sweare, vir fratri, a man to his brother, that is, one to another: for other wise, Isaak and Abimelech were not brethren. Likewise Ezech. 1. 10. Their wings were ioined, femina ad sororem, the woman to her sister, that is, one to another: where the very same wordes in the very same construction are vsed: so then in this Text, not the marriage of two sisters together, but Polygamie or Bigamie, the hauing of two wiues or women together, is forbidden.

Now then, that by the same analogie, the prohibition giuen to one sexe, doth bind the other, it may thus appeare: First, because all the rules of prohibited degrees are prescribed namely to the male; so that if the other sexe were not included also, none of the prohibitions should concerne them. Secondly, to giue an instance, Leuiticus 18. 11. Thou shalt not discover the shame of thy fathers wiues daughter: If the analogie did not hold in the other sexe, then it might be lawfull to marrie the fathers wiues sonne. Thirdly, concerning these degrees which are in question; first, to marrie with the vncle, is forbidden in direct wordes, Thou shalt not uncover the shame of thy fathers brother, vers. 14. Secondly, for the marrying of sisters, seeing degrees further off in affinitie are forbidden, as to marrie the wiues daughters daughter, the nearer cannot be lawfull: now the wiues sister is nearer than the wiues daughters daughter.

Further, concerning marriage betweene the vncle and his neece, I will adioyne the most excellent testimonie of Ambrose, who writeth hereof at large to one Paternus, Epistol. 66. Tuopulare parau filium, &c. You would ioine together your sonne, and his sisters daughter. 1. Non ipse te reuocat sonus nominum, &c. Doth not the very sound of the names call you backe? for thus you shall be both a grandfather, and a father in lawe. 2. The diuine lawe doth forbid brothers children to marrie which are in the fourth degree, &c. but these are in the third. 3. But you will pretend, that it is permitted by the diuine lawe, because it is not forbidden: Eponimus & prohibitum assero, but I say it is forbidden, because lighter matters are forbidden, de parantibus fratribus, of brothers children, &c. Neither doe you finde it forbidden, that a man should marrie his daughter, quia interdictum est lege natura, because it is forbidden by the law of nature. 4. What is so common, as for the vncle to kisse his neece? Hoc inoffensa pietatis osculum suspectum facies: You will make such kisses of loue to be suspicious, if such be admitted to marriage. 5. But if you regarde not the diuine lawe, yet the Emperours law might moue you. Theodosius forbiddeth, that cousin germanes should come together in marriage. Thus much Saint Ambrose.

2. Concerning the marriage of brothers and sisters children, there is a greater question. First, it cannot be proued that Zelophebadi five daughters married their vncles sonnes, that is, their Cousin germanes: for the Hebrues call the nephewes, sonnes: as Isabrah daughters are called the daughters of Raguel their Grandfather, Exod. 2. 17. So it is very like that their husbands were their vncles sonnes, as in the 12. verse it may be gathered; where the text saith, They were married into the families of the sonnes of Manasses: therefore not into one familie. But as touching the question in hand, the marriage of Cousin germanes seemeth also by some analogie to be forbidden by Moses law: for if the degrees of affinitie be limited to the third or fourth degree; as it is not lawfull for a man to marrie his wiues daughters daughter, Leuitic. 18. 17. why should not the line of consanguinitie hold to the fourth degree likewise? And so neither the sonne to marrie his his fathers brothers daughter, or the daughter the sonne: for here are also foure degrees: the sonne, one: the father, two: the fathers brother, three: the brothers sonne, foure. Againe, the vnckles sonne is as neere as the vnckles wife, the one being of affinitie, the other of consanguinitie: and therefore the first being forbidden, Leuit. 18. 14. why not the other also? Yet this we graunt, that this analogie or proportion is not so strong, nor doth conclude so necessarilie as the other. Wherefore we thus determine of this matter, that it is well that the marriages of Cofin germanes be restrained by humane law, and so they ought to be: which kinde of marriages may lawfully be hindered, and the contract loosed: but the marriage being consummate and finished, it is not for this cause to be dissolved.

So was it decreed, Constit. Lateranens. part. 6. cap. 30. Matrimonium in quarto gradu consanguinitatis consummatum non debet dissolui: Marriage in the fourth degree of consanguinitie (such as the marriage of Cofin germanes is) being consummate and finished, must not be dissolved.

Augustine also writeth very well of this matter: Quis dubitet, honestius hoc tempore consobrinarum potius esse coniugia, etiam si id diuina lex non prohibeat: cuius enim debet causa propinquitatis verecundiam honorem, ab ea contineat quamuis generatricem libidinem? Who doubteth, but that the marriage of Cofin germanes is honestly forbidden, though the diuine law doe not prohibit it? for to whom a man oweth a shamefast reuerence for kinned sake, he ought to refraine his lust.

De ciuitate
Dei. lib. 13.
cap. 16.

Let vs see the consent of antiquitie: Gregor. 3. deor. 6. Si quis neptem, nurum, uenercam duxerit, &c. anathema: If any man marrie his niece, his daughter in law, or mother in law, accursed be he: As thus is vnlawfull for the Nephew to marrie his Aunt, so is it for the vnckle to marrie his niece.

As for the marriage of Cofin germanes, the Canons euery where forbid it: Aguithens. can. 61. Epans. can. 30. Aurelianens. 3. cap. 10. it is decreed, that no man shall marrie consobrinam, his Cofin germane.

Isidorens. can. 31. Non licet consobrinam, hoc est, quæ de duabus sororibus, aut duobus fratribus procreatur, coniugium accipere: It is not lawfull to marrie a cofin germane, which commeth of two brothers, or two sisters.

Arelaten. can. 11. Ne quis consobrinam, vel filiam auunculi ducat: That no man marrie his cofin germane, or vnckles daughter. Thus we see how that our aduersaries, that make shew of antiquitie, are the onely enemies to antiquitie.

Now further I will shew the consent both of the Ciuill and Canon law for the vnlawfulness of marriage: first, with the vnckle: secondly, the wifes sister: thirdly, the vnckles daughter.

Calid. 5. sit. 4. leg. 17. Diocletian. Nemi in matrimonium contrahere liceat cum sororis filia: No man may contract Matrimonie with his sisters daughter, that is, his niece.

Calid. 6. sit. 20. leg. 19. Iustinian. Whereas in the conferring of dowries and other gifts, some seemed to make a difference betweene vnckles and aunts: Afferbant, in personis auunculorum, non etiam peruenire, materiarum, vel amillarum locum habere: They affirmed that it tooke place in the persons of the vnckles by the mothers side, not of the vnckles by the fathers side, or of the aunts: the law proceedeth, Talem subtilem dubitationem amputantes: Wee cutting off this subtiltie and doubt: and so maketh the condition of vnckles and aunts to be alike: As then in this case, there was no difference betweene vnckles and aunts, so why not also in marriage?

Dreus per. 2. caus. 27. qu. 2. c. 12. Gregorie decreeth against one, qui desponsatam nepotis virginem duxit, which married one espoused to his nephew: how much more doe the Canons forbid the marriage of the niece by blood?

Cal. 35. qu. 3. c. 8. Si quis relicta, vel filia auunculi: It is not lawfull to marrie the vnckles wife or daughter: how much more vnlawfull is it to marrie the vnckle himselfe?

Secondly, the marriage of two sisters is contrarie to the Imperiall lawes: Cod. lib. 5. leg. 5. Valens. Theodosius. Duabus sororibus coniungi, &c. We giue no licence to marrie the brothers wife, or two sisters.

Thirdly, concerning the vnlawfull marriage of Cofin germanes, that is brothers or sisters children, I finde not the like strict prohibition in the Imperiall lawes: for by the law of Antoninus: Cal. lib. 6. sit. 25. leg. 2. and the constitution of Arcadius, lib. 5. sit. 4. leg. 19. the marriage of consobrinæ, and cofin germanes is made lawfull: Yet degrees as farre off are inhibited; as lib. 5. sit. 4. leg. 17. Nemi liceat: No man is to contract Matrimonie with the brothers daughter, vel ex ea nepotus filia daughters daughter. Theodosius also made a law against the marriage of cofin germanes, as before out of Ambrose: yea and the Canon law is very strict against such mariages: Caus. 35. qu. 3. c. 20. and Caus. 12. qu. 7. c. 20. Brothers and sisters children are inhibited to marrie.

Dem. Greg. lib. 4. sit. 2. c. 12. Non debet cum consobrina propter publicam honestatis iustitiam permanere: He must not remaine or dwell with his Cofin germane for publike honestie sake, whether he hath knowne her, or not.

Thus we see: first, that the two first degrees are euen by the law of the Gentiles inhibited, as being vnnatural, that is the marriage with the vnckle, or with the wifes sister. Secondly, a difference we finde betweene these, and the marriage of cofin germanes, which though it be not conuenient, yet is not so vnnaturall, nor prohibited by the Imperiall lawes. Thirdly, the Canon law separateth Cousin-germanes after carnall knowledge: but that is too hard a sentence: it is sufficient to hinder marriage contracted, but not consummate by carnall coniunction, as I haue shewed before.

The Papists.

90. Error.

91. Error.

92. Error.

2. IT is lawfull for the Church to restraine other degrees of affinitie and consanguinitie, besides those prescribed by Moses, and that the decrees of the Church in such cases do binde in conscience, Council. Trident. sess. 24. can. 3. As to prohibite marriage vnto the seventh degree in naturall kinred, and afterward to the fourth. 2. Also their Canons do make a spirituall kinred, that commeth in by Baptisme and Confirmation: and suffer not the godfather to marry the godchild, or the godfather the godmother. 3. Likewise they haue found out an affinitie that commeth in by espousals onely of Matrimonic, which bindeth (say they) in the first degree by the Canon law, which is the first and second by the Ciuill law: as that it is not lawfull for the brother to marrie her which was espoused to his brother. 4. Also another kinred and affinitie, by fornication and vnlawfull fleshy knowledge, which bindeth in the second degree Canonically, which is the third and fourth Ciuill: as it is not lawfull for the sonne to marrie his fathers baitard, Bellarmin. cap. 24. cap. 30.

Bellarmin thus reasoneth for the restraint of consanguinitie and affinitie: first, to the seventh degree, and afterward to the fourth.

Argum. 1. There is a peculiar shamefastnes and reuerence of nature due to kinsmen, which is violated in marriage. 2. If kinsmen might marrie together, they could not vse cohabitation, or any familiaritie together without suspicion: but whereas marriage is interdicted betweene kinsmen, there is no daunger. 3. For the propagation of loue and charitie vnto others, marriage is forbidden in these degrees, wherein their affinitie or consanguinitie is a sufficient bond of loue, without marriage. 4. If kinsmen should marrie together, their loue would be too inordinate, the loue of marriage being ioyned to the naturall loue of kintred, Bellarmin. cap. 29.

Contra. First, the wisdom of man is not to controule the ordinance of God: if the Lord hath not thought good to make a restraint of marriage so farre, it is presumption in man to doe it: shall it be thought, that God had not respect to the reuerence of nature, propagation of loue, familiaritie of kintred, sobrietie in marriage, in setting downe the marriage law?

Secondly, none of these inconueniences neede to be feared in degrees so farre off: for whereas the fourth degree in the Canons, is the eight Ciuill degree: and by the Canons, brethren are in the first degree, brethrens children in the second, their childrens children in the third, and their children in the fourth: what kinred can there be now betweene Cousin-germanes twice removed, and there being little or no kinred, there is neither 1. reuerence of nature due as to the kintred of the flesh: 2. nor familiaritie to be admitted without suspicion, otherwise than betweene strangers: 3. nor yet shall the propagation of loue be hindered, there being no such sure bond as is due out of marriage: 4. and consequently inordinate loue in the marriage of such is not to be feared, the naturall affection by such long descent being extinguished.

The Protestants.

1. TO forbid more degrees in marriage, than are either directly or by necessarie consequence prohibited in the lawe, is a meere Antichristian yoke laid vpon the people of God: for the Lord (the author of that law) best did know, both what persons were fit for marriage, and how farre the line of marriage was to extend.

Bellarmin answereth, that the law of the degrees of marriage was peculiar to the people of the Iewes, vnto whom the marriage of their kinred was not so much restrained: first, because they were but few. Secondly, for the preservation of the Tribes and families. Thirdly, that being suffered to marrie in their kinred, they should not so easily put away their wiues. Fourthly, as they were permitted to put away their wives, and to haue many at once; so in like manner to marrie within certaine degrees of kinred, Bellarmin. c. 29. vsq. ad argum. 2.

Contra. First, these reasons are not sufficient to proue the law of degrees in marriage peculiar to the Iewes: 1. They were a great and populous nation: in Dauids time there were 13. hundred thousand fighting men in Israel and Iuda, 2. Sam. 24. In the raigne of Iehosaphat, Iudah onely was able to make 111. hundred thousand men of warre, 2. Chron. 17. 14. to 19. therefore in respect of their small number, there was no reason to allow them to marrie with their kinred. 2. For the preservation of their families there was a speciall prouiso in the law, that the brother might take the brothers wife to raise seede to his brother, Deuter. 25. 3. Moses permitted them (notwithstanding this law of degrees) to giue vnto their wiues bills of diuorcement: and it is seene by experience, that the neerer in degree the married couples are, for the most part greater contention falleth out. 4. To put away their wiues was but a toleration: but the law concerning degrees was a commandement, and the transgression thereof punished with death, Leuit. 20. The hauing of many wiues was directly contrary to the law, Leuit. 18. 18. Deuter. 17. 17.

Secondly,

Secondly, that this was not a law peculiar to the Jewes, but generall, to bind the people of God under the Gospell: it appeareth both by Iohn Baptista reprehension of Herode for marrying his brother's wife; and Saint Paul censuring of the incestuous person that tooke his fathers wife: which are the very degrees forbidden in Leuiticus. 2. Neither can they shew any dispensation or relaxation in the new testament contrarie to that law.

The prohibition of marriage to the fourth degree Canonically, that is, the eight Ciuill, is contrary both to the Imperiall and Canonically lawes.

Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 17. Dioclet. In collaterals both of affinitie and consanguinitie, the prohibition reacheth not beyond the fourth degree: Nemini liceat, a man must not contract matrimonie with his Aunt, sisters daughter, or Neece, that is her daughters daughter; with his brothers daughter or Neece: and in affinitie, with his wifes daughter, wifes mother, sonnes wife; fathers wife, &c. none of these exceed the fourth degree Ciuill. The Canon law thus testifieth, Caus. 35. q. 2. 3. Fabianus: In quarta generatione si contracti fuerint, non separantur: They which are married in the fourth generation, let them not be separated: ibid. c. 12. Iulius, Vsq̃ue in tertiam progeniem, &c. No man must marry a wife to the third degree: These Canons inhibit not marriage in the third and fourth degree Canonically, much lesse to the seventh.

Lateranens. part. 50. 29. Cognati non sunt separandi nisi in primo vel secundo gradu consanguinitatis et consanguinitatis: Cousins must not be diuorced, vnlesse they marry in the first or second degree of consanguinitie: the second degree by the Canon law, is the fourth degree by the Ciuill law, and after our account: after the fourth degree then marriage is lawfull: it is not then restrained till the seventh.

Secondly, the inuention of spirituall kinred is but a popish trick, to get the more money for their dispensations: for by this reason no Christians ought to marrie together, because they are all of one spirituall kinred in Christ.

Their owne Canons are against them, Caus. 30. qu. 3. c. 4. Urban. Post copulationem genitis, &c. Godfathers children may marrie: Qu. 4. c. 5. Paschal. Vxorē compatrii ducere licet: A man may marrie his Godfathers wife: Deer. Greg. lib. 4. tit. 11. c. 1. Alexander. Filij duorum compatrium licite nupti: Godfathers children may contract matrimonie.

Thirdly, the new affinitie that cometh by espousals, is also but an humane inuention: for the law speaketh onely of the kinred of the flesh, which ariseth of carnall knowledge and copulation, not an intent or purpose onely of marriage, Leuit. 18. 6.

We haue the consent of a generall Councell, Lateranens. part. 6. can. 27. Pope Benedictus decreth thus: Qui unam sororem desponsauerit, si eam non cognouerit, potest aliam sororem sibi matrimonialiter: apparet enim virum & mulierem non posse fieri unam carnem, nisi carnali copula sibi adhaerent: He that espouseth one sister, not hauing knowne her, may marrie her sister: for man and wife are not made one flesh, but by carnall copulation. Therefore by the espousall words they are not made one flesh: Propinquitat sanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood by words is said, by words it is not made. Curr ergo prohibeamus, quod prohibitum nunquam scriptura delinquit: Why therefore should wee forbid that, which is nowhere in scripture forbidden: To this agreeth also the decree of Pope Alexander, Lateranens. part. 45. can. 5. Non sunt una caro vir & mulier, nisi carnali copula cohaerint: Man and wife are not one flesh but by carnall copulation.

Thus also the Ciuile law testifieth: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 24. Iustinian. Conditio nuptiarum impletur potestatem, non habitum, aut potentiam: The condition of marriage is accomplished by the acte, not by the habite or possibilitie.

These Canons also are euident, Caus. 27. qu. 2. c. 17. Iulius: Mulier prater commixtionem sexuum non potest ad matrimonium: A woman without the copulation of the sexe, belongeth not to matrimonie. C. 18. Benedictus. Per nuda sponsonis verba non possunt una caro fieri: They cannot be made one flesh onely by the words of espousall. The rest of this Canon is recited before.

The Master of Sentences maketh this answer, That those Canons are vnderstood of espousals which are made, per verba de futuro, by wordes not of the present, but of the time to come; when there is not, consensus de presenti, sed sponso futuri: not a consent for the present, but a promise for the future.

Contra. First, that distinction of the Canon law is but an humane device, that there is fides praesens, fides consensus: That faith of marriage is made by couenant and promise, or by consent: the first holdeth not, the second is firme euen after carnall societie with another: Caus. 27. qu. 2. c. 51. For wee see the Scripture maketh no difference betweene the couenant of marriage, and consent: Genes. 24. 57. 58. We will call the maid and take her consent, &c. Wilt thou goe with this man? and shee saith, I will goe. Her promise by these words of the future, I will goe, are called her consent. So David leueth to Abigail, ut accipiat in uxorem, to take her to his wife: he said not, I do take thee to my wife: 1. Sam. 25. 40. Wherefore that simple and well meaning age, knewe no such difference in contracts.

Secondly, the Canons exclude all espousals whatsoever from the computation of the degrees of marriage: Propinquitus sanguinis verbis dicitur, non verbis efficitur: Propinquitie of blood is sayd by words, not made. He speaketh generally of all words of espousall or contract whatsoever: Benedict. can. 27. qu. 2. c. 18. And the question is of a maide that was simplicibus verbis desponsata, &c. espoused by simple, that is, plaine and direct words, to a young man: the maide espoused dieth, he is licensed and to marrie her sister, and by warrant of Scripture; because man and woman are not made one flesh, nisi carnali copula, but by carnall copulation: as the Scripture saith, They two shall be one flesh.

Fourthly, the last we admit, for the sonne of the father begotten out of marriage, is of his fleshly kindred, though not lawfully: and therefore in marriage matters there is respect also to be had even of this kindred of the flesh: as Ruben is cursed of his father because he lay with his concubine, Gene. 49. 4. which notwithstanding was not his fathers wife. So also the Ciuill law, Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 4. Alexander. Concubina patris non debet esse uxor filij: The fathers concubine cannot be the sonnes wife.

THE FQVRTH QUESTION, OF OTHER impediments of marriage.

There are some impediments which may hinder and dissolue the contract of marriage, before it be consummate, but not after: some, which both may hinder the contract, and dissolue the matrimonie euen after carnall knowledge.

The Papiſts.

93. Error.

1. Bellarmino reckoneth vp diuers impediments of both kinds, which may disannull the contract of marriage, and dissolue the Matrimonie it selfe: but hee maketh no mention of the consent of the parents. And indeede it is their opinion, that it is not a necessarie thing to be respected in marriage: nor of the essence thereof, neither can such marriage, as hath the consent of the children only, either by the parents, or Magistrate be dissolued, Bellarmino. c. 19.

Argum. Eſau married without his fathers consent, yet was not his marriage dissolued: Jacob also had not his fathers consent to the marriage of Lea, and of his two handmaidens: Ergo, the parents consent is not necessarie, Bellarmino. cap. 19.

Anſw. First, concerning Eſau his marriage, we say he did very euill in marrying without his fathers consent, and it was a great griefe to his parents: yet the marriage being once consummate, wee say not, that then it ought to be dissolued, for want of the parents consent, but the contract and espousals onely. Secondly, for Jacob, his maidens were not his wiues, and Lea was thrust vpon him against his will: no maruile if he had not his fathers consent, when his owne was wanting: but to marrie one of his fathers kindred, as he made choyce of Rachel, he had his fathers full consent.

Argum. 2. In the marriage of children without consent of the parents, the consent of the parties is present, which is sufficient: for consensus facit matrimonium, consent maketh Matrimonie. And if the marriage of seruants against the will of their masters be notwithstanding firme and sure, much more the marriage of children; &c. Bellarmino. cap. 19.

Anſw. First, one of your owne writers shall make you an answer: Consensus facit nuptias, sed eorum, qui sui iuris sunt, &c. Consent maketh marriage, but of such, as are in their owne power: so are not children, and therefore their consent is not sufficient: Espe. de clandestin. matrim. cap. 11. Secondly, where the masters are in stead of parents, there they haue the same right and power to approue or dissolue the contracts of their seruants, which fathers haue: but where seruants haue fathers beside, they are to depend vpon their fathers consent, and not the masters: and in this case the argument followeth not, for fathers haue greater power in the marriage of their children, than masters ouer their seruants.

The Protestants.

First, wee doe not say, that the want of the parents consent may dissolue marriage consummate after mutuall coniunction: but that it may breake off the contract and espousals. Secondly, neither haue the parents power to bestow their children in marriage without their consent, Genesis 24. 57. And this is agreeable to the law of nature: according to the constitution of the Heaehen Romane Emperours: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 12. Diocletian. Nec filium familias inuitum ad uxorum ducendam cogi, &c. The discipline of the lawes doe not permit, that the sonne should be compelled against his will to take a wife. Thirdly, neither must the parents exercise a tyrannicall power ouer their children in forbidding them marriage, but must alway haue respect vnto their neede. And thus doing their consent is necessarie, and without it the contract hath no validitie, 1. Corinth. 7. 37. 38. The parent hath power to giue in marriage or not to giue.

Argum. Exod. 22. 16. The law is this, That if a man lie with a maide not betrothed, and her father refuse refusa to giue her into him to wife, he shall pay money. Here the full authoritie of giuing or not giuing the daughter in marriage, is committed to the father.

Belarmine answereth: That this is in such cases where there is no contract: but the law sayeth not, that the father may refuse after the contract made.

Contra. 1. As though their mutuall carnall knowledge be not as forcible to ioyne them, as a bare contract, thus being but in word, the other in deede. Secondly, Numb. 30. 4. The father may bind his daughters vow made vnto God: Ergo, much more her promise and contract made to man.

Belarm. It is to be vnderstood of such an one, as is in state puellari, yet vnder age, a young maiden, which is not yet fit for marriage.

Contra. 1. In this chapter there be three estates or degrees of women set downe: a maide, a wife, a widow: of these three only the widow hath power to make a vow: she that is not a widow, is either vnder her husband, if she be married, or vnder her father, if she be not: So then the law meaneth all maides vnmarrried, vnlesse you can finde out a fourth kinde, that is neither of maides, wives, nor widoues. 2. Againe, here are to be vnderstood rather maides of yeeres and discretion, to make a vow, than of tender and young yeeres, who knew not what a vow meaneth. 3. And besides, the worde here vsed, verf. 4. non signifieth a woman, not a girle or young maide. 4. Lastly, a writer of their owne thus concludeth vpon this place: Ergo vota à filiabus Deo nuncupata parentum parentis dissolueret, sponsalia, &c. Therefore might the parents dissolue vowes made by their daughters vnto God, and could they not retract espousals made to men? Esponses. 1. de clandestinis matrimoniis.

Argum. 2. Deuter. 7. 3. Ye shall not make marriages with the Heathen, thou shalt not giue thy daughter in his name, &c. Hence the same author concludeth thus: Eam legem frustra latuerit, &c. This law had been made in vaine, if marriages had been free for the children without the fathers consent. Againe, whereas the Israelites had sworne, that they would not giue their daughters to the Beniaminites to wife, Iudg. 2. 1. and therefore were very much perplexed & grieved for that tribe, saying, verf. 7. How shall we doe for wives to them that remaine? The daughters might haue helped their parents in this perplexitie, if notwithstanding their parents oth, they might haue married of themselves. Thus much Esponses. and much more, lib. de clandestinis matrimoniis. c. 1. 2.

We haue also the consent of antiquitie: to omit those ancient Canons, which are very many, which doe inioyne that children should not be married without their parents consent: vnto the which Belarmine answereth, that so much hee graunteth, yet it followeth not, that the contract should for that defect and want be dissolved: we will therefore bring forth such Canons, as annihilate and disannull the contract, where the parents consent is not.

Lupinus epistol. 1. Non fit coniugium nisi ab his, &c. There is no marriage made, but by them that haue power ouer the woman: let the wife be demanded of her keepers and tutors, and espoused by her parents, and the neereft of her kinned: as it is adulterie rather and whoredome, than lawful marriage.

Celsus decret. 4. Quod parentes, fratres, &c. ita vi si non interfuit, et consensum non adhibuerint, secundum legem nullum fiat matrimonium: That the parents, brethren, kinsfolkes of both sexes be admitted to testifie their consent for their sonne or daughter, and so to establish or breake off their marriage: who if they be not present, neither giue consent, according to the law, let it be counted no marriage. What plainer euidence can we haue for this matter?

Celsus. 5. tit. 4. leg. 7. Gordian. Minus legitima coniunctio, cessante patris voluntate, &c. It is no lawful coniunction, the fathers will being wanting, leg. 11. Diocletian. Sociare, &c. Thou art not hindered to associate thy selfe to what marriage thou wilt, ut contrahendis nuptiis patris consensu accedat, &c. so that thy fathers consent be to the contracting of marriage: leg. 18. Valent. 1. heodos. Vidua in reuocatum quintum, &c. Widoues vnder 25. yeeres, in secundas nuptias sine patris sententia non conuincant, must not enter into second marriage without the sentence of their father: tit. 6. leg. 6. If a man marrie an orphan or pupill, whose father is dead, being vnder 25. yeeres of age, nee matrimonium habuisse, it is to be counted no matrimonie, nor they children, that are borne in such marriage, vnlesse the father dying willed it.

Likewise the Canons: Canf. 32. qu. 2. c. 13. Consultatur puella non de sponsalibus, &c. The maiden is not asked concerning the espousals; for therein she expected the iudgement of her parents, but she is consulted with about the day and time of her iourney: This is spoken of Rebecca: The same Canon alleageth Euripides, thus speaking in the person of the woman, nuptiarum, Sponsalium interum pater meus curam subibit, &c. For my espousals my father shal take care, it appertaineth not to me. Thus we see that it is agreeable to the law of nature, that the marriage of children should not be attempted without the consent of the parents.

Canf. 36. qu. 2. c. 11. gloss. This law is alleaged out of the Digests, tit. de nuptiar. ritu, leg. 2. Consistendum possunt nuptia, &c. Marriages cannot stand, vnlesse they consent, in whose power they are.

Diuers

Divers of the learned Papists condemne such marriages, as are enterprised without the consente of the parents: Gropperus, in institut. Colonienf. Gentianus, in his booke let forth of this matter, alleageth a certaine Greeke canon to this effect: Qua sine p[ar]e, qui habent potestatem matrimonii facere, fornicationes sunt: They are fornications, no mariages; which are done without them that haue the power, &c. Likewise Calbarinus, irrita esse velim, nec vera esse matrimonia, &c. I iudge them to be no true, but void mariages: Essene lib. de clandestin. matrimo. c. 15: in such regard, that they are void.

There are notwithstanding certaine cases excepted by the law, wherein the soine or daughter haue free libertie to marrie without consent.

1. Sicut p[ar]es, ubi parentes: If both the parents be dead. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 2. d. Honor.
2. Cod. lib. 3. tit. 28. leg. 19. Post viginti quinq[ue]; &c. After 25. yeeres children might marrie without the parents consente.
3. Ibid. leg. 20. Post matrimonii penitentiam, &c. If the mother shall giue consent; the father being dead, and afterward repent her, yet the marriage shall be good.
4. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 25. Filij surrogi. &c. The sonnes of madde men may marrie without consent.

Other cases there are beside, as when the sonne is manumittid, that is, set free by his father; or hath borne any publike office of Magistracie or gouernement; Essene x. 16. de clandestin. matrimo. But these irregular and extraordinarie cases excepted, the power of parents is not to be infringed, but their consent to be expected in the espousals of their children.

This truth also is sealed: Master Tindall holy Martyr; Let parents provide mariages for their children in season, teaching them also to know, that she is not his wife whom the sonne taketh, nor her husband whom the daughter taketh, without the consent or good will of their Elders, or them that haue authoritie ouer them; if their friends will not marrie them, then are they not too blame if they marrie themselves: let not the fathers and mothers alwayes take the vttermoost of their authoritie of their children, but beare their weakenesse; &c. pag. 1249. col. 2. artic. 2.

There are also other causes which may dissolue contracts and espousals made: as if the honest and lawfull condition propounded in the contract be not kept; or if there be an error in the person, hee hearth afterward of her dishonestie, whom hee tooke for an honest woman: both these may make void the contract, but not the marriage, if they be once ioyned together.

The Papists.

2. They set downe many impediments, which may make a nullitie of marriage it selfe, after it be consummate: some of them we acknowledge, as afterward it shall appeare: but these following we do renounce.

First, the vow of chastitie and entering into Orders do loose the bond of marriage. Belarmus to this purpose vrigeth that place, 1. Timothi. 5. 12. Having damnation, because they haue forsaken their first faith: the first faith, is the vow of continencie, which was a sufficient impediment of matrimonie. Belarm. c. 21. propos. 1.

Contra. By the first faith, is vnderstood their faith, which they professed in Baptisme, to renounce the workes of the flesh, which these wanton widowes now follow in forsaking their calling: 1. So the interlinearie glosse, and Bruno expound this place: ex Essene in hunc locum. 2. The Apostle doth interpret himselfe, vers. 8. He that provideth not for his owne, denyleth the faith, &c. that is, by his workes he denieth the religion of Christ: now to denie the faith, vers. 8. and to violate the faith, vers. 12. doe signifie the same. 3. The Apostle afterward giueth these widowes licence to marrie, vers. 14. which he would not haue done, if it had beene damnation, & a breach of the faith to marry after their professed widowhood: this place both Crisostome & Theophilact expound of widowes professed. vide Essene in hunc locum. This text then nothing maketh for them.

Secondly, mariages of the faithfull with Infidels are not onely vnlawfull, but void; Belarmus c. 23. Yet he confesseth that such mariages are not void eyther by diuine or naturall law, or by any law of the Church, but onely by the custome of the people of God, hauing the force of a law. propos. 2. 3.

Argum. Infidelitie in the old law, and disparitie of religion did make matrimonie void: Ergo much more now; for there is greater difference betweene Christians and Infidels; then was betweene the Iewes and Gentiles, Belarm. argum. 1.

Ans. First, if this argument conclude anything, it sheweth, that euen by the diuine Law such mariages are void: which notwithstanding he before denied.

Secondly, the argument followeth not, for this law belonged to the policie of that nation, that they should not marrie with the Gentiles: who were accounted as an vncircumcised, and vnholy people: but now this wall of partition is taken away; and in Christ there is neither Iew nor Grecian, Galath. 4. 3. 28. Thirdly, the marriage of the Gentiles, was for no other cause inhibited than Iewes, but least it should be a meane to withdraw them from the worship of God, Deut. 7. 4. This proueth not, that an Infidell willing to dwell together, and of whom there may be some hope, should

94. Error.

95. Error.

should be put away, contrary to S. Paul's rule, 1. Cor. 7. 13. Fourthly, the Jewes were permitted upon diuers occasions to put away their wives, for the hardnes of their heart, Matth. 19. 8. wherefore the impediments and dissolutions of marriage among them do not bind vs.

Thirdly, the marriage of those which committed adulterie, and did compact together before to marrie after the first husbands or wives death, is actually void. Bellarm. l. 2. c. 12. 96. Error.

The Protestants.

1. Concerning the inualiditie of vowes to disanull marriage, wee haue declared the trueth before, Contro. 6. de Monachis. For marriage lawfully contracted and consummate, is onely made void by way of diuorice in the case of adulterie, as we haue before proued.

Argum. Matth. 19. 9. Our Sauour giueth this perpetuall rule, that no man should dismiss his wife but for fornication: but Orders is no fornication: Ergo, not for entering into Orders is she to be dismissed: and vers. 6. No man must put asunder that, which God hath coupled: but they which are lawfully contracted, are coupled before God: Ergo, no humane ordinance, such as is the single life annexed to Orders, can separate them.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 3. tit. 32. c. 7. Alexander, giueth libertie to a woman professed, vs ad religionem rursus &c. to profess religion, or returne to her husband: Ergo, it was lawfull after profession to returne.

Sect. decretal. lib. 3. tit. 15. c. 1. Bonif. 8. Simplex votum non rescindit, &c. A simple vow doth not cut off marriage afterward contracted: and againe he saith, Voti solemnitas ex sola constitutione est &c. A solemn vow is onely by the constitution of the Church: and Alexander saith, that Votum simplex non minus obligat coram Deo, a simple vow doth not lesse binde before God, then a solemn and publike vow: it followeth, that a solemn vow then, doth not hinder marriage afterward contracted.

Canon. Ioan. tit. 6. c. 2. Votum solemnizatum per sacri susceptionem ordinis, &c. A vow solemnized by entering into holy orders, is not of force to dissolue matrimonie before going, though not consummate with carnall knowledge: wherefore marriage contracted is not hindered or interrupted by the profession of Orders.

2. Neither doth the infidelitie of the one partie make a nullitie of marriage: for S. Paul saith, that the woman in that case is not to forsake her husband if he will dwell with her. 1. Corinth. 7. vers. 13. Of this matter see more, quasi. 2. part. 2. of this Controuersie.

Canon. lib. 1. tit. 7. leg. 16. Leo & Autum. Si sponsa coniugium sponsi propter religionis diuersitatem recusauerit: If the spouse refuse to marrie with him, to whom she is espoused, &c. the law alloweth only a dissolving of the contract and espousals for religion sake, and not otherwise.

Distict. 10. c. 1. Nicolai. Si religionis causa coniugia debere dissolui dicuntur, sciendum est, quia licet lex humana concessit, lex tamen diuina prohibuit: If for religion sake marriages are said to be dissolved, let it be knowne, that although humane law doth allow it, yet Gods law doth forbid it.

Canon. 8. c. 1. Innocent. Quod deus coniunxit, homo non separet, &c. What God hath ioyned together, let not man put asunder: and least he should be thought to speake onely of those, which marrie by Baptisme, let them remember, that the question was asked by the Jewes, and to the Jewes was answered made, c. 8. Augustine thus writeth to Pollentius: Tibi videtur infideles a fidelibus diuisum licere, &c. You thinke that the infidels ought not to be dismissed from beleeuers, because the Apostle forbiddeth it, but I say it is lawfull, because the Lord forbiddeth it not; yet not expedient, quia hoc ne fiat mouet Apostolus, because the Apostle wisheth or admonisheth, that it should not be: here be two opinions, one thinketh it is not lawfull for infidels to be dismissed, the other that it is not expedient: so which opinion soeuer is followed, they are not at all to be dismissed, lib. 2. c. 9. Affert impedimentum salutis, &c. The departure of the beleuer from the Infidell, bringeth an hindrance to his saluation.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 19. c. 8. Innocent. Fideles cum infidelibus matrimonialiter copulati, &c. The beleuers ioyned in marriage with vnbeleuers, may freely and lawfully remaine with them.

Decret. Eutychiani. In potestate fidelis est post baptismum recipere uxorem, quam infidelis infidelem misisset: It is in the power of a beleeuing man to receiue his wife after Baptisme, which, when they were both infidels, he dismissed. But if the very bond and marriage knot were dissolved, as Belarmine saith, how can they come together againe?

Thirdly, neither is the fault committed before the marriage, sufficient to disable the marriage once done: for then question might haue bene made of the strength of Dauid's marriage with Bathsheba. And Augustine doubteth not thus to conclude, Possunt sane fieri nuptiae ex mali conuulsiis &c. postea placito consequente: That marriage may very well stand betweene those, that once had vnlawfull carnall copulation, but afterward an honest purpose of marriage followed.

Canon. Apostol. 66. Non licitum est a liam ducere, quam quis prius sollicitus, quamuis pauperula sit: It shall not be lawfull for a man to marrie any other, but her whom hee entised to follie before, though she be poore.

Concil.

Council Lateranenſ. part. 45. can. 2. Alexander. Contrahere quis poteſt cum ea matrimonium, quam, viua viuente, adulterio polluerat: A man may contract marriage with her, whom, while her husband liued, he defiled with adulterie. Theſe Canons are directly oppoſite to the Ieſuites opinion.

Now whereas Bellarmino excludeth not all adulterie before going from future marriage, but where the parties were compact and confederate together to marrie afterward: their owne lawe ſimply maketh it lawfull for a man to marrie his concubine, though he had promiſed her marriage before: Cauſ. 22. qu. 4. c. 22. Quam prius concubinam habueras, non eſt peccatum in coniugem ſuſcipere: It is no ſinne to make her his wife, that was before his concubine: cui in iuramento ſormam, &c. to whom he confirmed by an oth, to take her to wife. Cauſ. 31. qu. 1. c. 2. Fieri poteſt coniugium cum quo preceſſit adulterium: Marriage may be made with whom adulterie was before committed. Decret. Gregor. lib. 4. tit. 7. c. 8. Siquis uxore viuente fide data, &c. If a man, hiſ wife yet liuing, did giue hiſ faith to marrie another, or did contract himſelfe to her, and did not carnally know her, the marriage is not to be diſſolued. So then neither adulterie precedent, nor yet the giuing of faith, or contracting marriage, the firſt husband or wife yet liuing, though theſe are grieuous offences, yet are not ſufficient to diſſolue or breake off Matrimonie.

But there are certaine caſes, wherein Matrimonie vnlawfully contracted, yea conſummate, may be diſſolued: as firſt, if the conſent of either partie be wanting, as when by tyrannicall coercion and compulſion they come together, and the conſent is ſtill withholden.

Hormiſda. decret. 4. Filiam inuitam & renitentem, uero viri alicuius coniugio cogat ſociari: quoniam enim unum eſt corpus, vni uſſe debes animu: Let no man match in marriage vnto any hiſ daughter againſt her will: for they that haue one bodie, ought alſo to haue one minde. Nicholaus de matrimon. can. 1. Si ſolui conſenſu deſuerit, cetera cum ipſo coitu celebrata fruſtrantur: If the conſent onely be wanting, the very carnall copulation, and whatſoeuer elſe beſide, are all fruſtrate and voyd.

Secondly, if the conſent of both be wanting, as in the marriage of children, that are not able to giue conſent.

Nichola. 1. de matrimon. can. 3. Vbi non eſt conſenſu utriuſq, ibi non eſt coniugium: &c. Where each partie conſenteth not, there is no marriage: Therefore they which giue girles to boyes in marriage in the cradle, doe no act at all, vnleſſe both of them when they come to yeres of diſcretion, conſent.

Thirdly, if there be an error of the perſon, as if one be thruſt vpon a man in ſtead of another, as Lea was vpon Jacob: or an error in the condition of the partie, as if he or ſhe be an Hermaphrodite, an Eunuch, or ſuch like.

Lateranenſ. part. 50. cap. 28. Alexander. Sicut puer, qui non poteſt reddere debitum non eſt aptus coniugio, ſic quoque qui impotentes ſunt, minimè apti ad contrahenda matrimonia reputantur: As a child, which cannot render the debt or dutie of marriage, is not fit for marriage; ſo neither are they fit to contract marriage, that haue any naturall weakenes or imbecillitie. In this place it is ſaid further, that although it be not the cuſtome of the Romane Church, yet the French Church doth diſſolue marriage for frigidity, and impotencie of nature.

Fourthly, if they marrie within the degrees forbidden by Mofes law. In all theſe caſes, Matrimonie thus vnlawfully begun and ratified, may be diſſolued. But lawfull Matrimonie cannot be abrogate, but either by naturall death, or lawfull diuorce for fornication. In the caſe of deſertion alſo and long abſence of either partie, after the expecting of hiſ returne ſome terme of yeres, with probable intelligence of the parties death; or if he be wilfully abſent, of hiſ lewde and diſhoneſt life, the innocent partie, by the wife and deliberate ſentence of the Magiſtrate, may be pronounced free.

For other matters which are commonly obiected, marriage is not to be diſſolued: As for long abſence, when the husband is detained in captiuitie, or ſuch like: Leo epiſt. 77. cap. 1. Quod ſemina debeant, qua captis uirginibus nupſerant alijs, reſſeſſis de captiuitate uirgin. prioribus copulari: Women marrying to others while their husbands are captiues, muſt be reſtored vnto them at their returne.

Barrennes is no cauſe of diſſolution: Lateranenſ. part. 6. cap. 25. Ob cuiusmodi poſſibilitatem ſeruum debet diuortium: Diuorce muſt not be made, for poſſibilitie of generation.

The leproſie is no cauſe: Lateranenſ. 37. part. cap. 3. Alexander. Vxores propter lepram non ſunt dimittenda: ſed illis petentibus debes debitum reddi: Women for leproſie muſt not be put away: but their husbands muſt performe the dutie of marriage if they require it.

So likewiſe in other caſes: Quicquid mulier contrate cogitaueſſet, vel ſi te accuſauerit, non eſt excepta cauſa fornicationis eijcienda: Though thy wife ſhould conſpire againſt thee, and accuſe thee, yet ſhe muſt not be caſt off except for fornication, Nichol. 1. decret. de matrim. 6.

Ibid. can. 7. Hi qui matrimonium ſani contraxerunt & vni ex duobus dementia, aut furor, aut aliqua infirmitas acceſſerit, non debent coniugia talium diſſolui: They which were ſound when they married, if either of them afterward fall into frenzie, madnes, or ſicknes, they muſt not for that be diuorced.

Ibid.

Nid Similiter sciendum est de his, qui ab aduersarijs excrucantur, aut membris truncantur, aut à barbaris sunt: The like is to be said of those that haue their eyes pulled out, are maimed, or gelded of their enemies. None of these are sufficient causes to breake off marriage. And thus much of this question.

THE FIFT QUESTION, OF THE COMPARISON betweene Virginitie and Marriage.

The Popists.

Virginitie is preferred before Marriage, not onely for that it is a more quiet state of life, and free from troubles in this world, but that it is more conuenient for the seruice of God, and doth with a gratefull puritie and sanctitie, both of bodie and soule, which marriage hath not,

1. Corinth. 7. 32. The unmarried careth for the things of the Lord, how she may please God? Virginitie is a fitter state of life to serue and please God in, Rhenist. ibid.

The Protestants.

For we grant, according to the Apostles laying in this place, that virginitie is also a fitter state for the seruice of God, yet not simply, but for those onely that haue the gift of continence: for they which cannot abtaine, may and doe serue God with a more quiet minde being married than many popish virgins which burne in y lust of concupiscence. Secondly, yet it followeth that virginitie is a more holie and cleane thing in it selfe, and more meritorious before God, than marriage is: for this were to make marriage vnholy and vncleane; whereas it is not the act of marriage, but the abusing thereof, that bringeth vncleannes with it: before God in themselves, is more holy than other.

It is faith which maketh vs accepted of God, not the merite of any worke: and therefore all faithfull beleeuers it is sayd, Apocal. 14. 4. These are they which were not defiled with women: they are virgines. And he vnderstandeth all that are redeemed by Christ, from amongst men, and are the first fruits of the Lambs, vers. 4. and not onely those, which properly in common vse of speech we call Virgines. And thus Saint Ambrose expoundeth: Si ideo putes virgines dictas, quia corpora sanctissima seruauerunt, &c. If you only vnderstand virgines, because they haue kept their bodies unpolluted, then the Saints shalbe excluded from this glorie: for al the Apostles, except Iohn and Paul his wiues, Amb. in 2. Corinth. 11. True godlines therefore and a sincere faith, whereby wee are rewarded from the world, and ioyned to God, is the true virginitie.

Sicut non est impar meritum patientia in Petro, qui passus est, & in Iohanne, qui passus non est: non est impar meritum continentia in Iohanne, qui nullus est expertus nuptiar, & in Abraham, qui impuauit: As there was no greater merite of patience in Peter that suffered, than in Iohn, who suffered not; so there was no greater merite of continencie in Iohn that was neuer married, than in Abraham that begat children. Seethen, by his iudgement, there is the same merite of married and unmarried persons. Siquis virginitatem professus tanquam abominabiles nuptias indicat, an abominabile sit? Any man professing virginitie doe condemne marriage, as an abominable thing, let him be damned. But thus doe our aduersaries, who are carried away with such an extraordinarie liking of their Monkish fained chastitie, that they despise marriage, calling it a prophaning and pollution of orders, as we haue seene before.

Calid. 1. 58. leg. 1. Constant. Whereas there was a lawe, that, caleb, a single man was not capable of any bequest or legacie: the Emperour correcteth that ordinance, and thus enacteth: Sit omnibus aqua conditio capessendi, quod quisque mereatur: Let the same condition be to all, married and unmarried to receiue, whatsoeuer they are meete or worthie of. This is the equitie of mans law, to make no difference in reward between the single and married: shall Gods law be thought to be more vnequall?

Diffin. 30. c. 4. Siquis virginitatem, &c. If any man professing virginitie for Gods cause, doe arrogantly dispraise those that are married, let him be accursed. But the extraordinarie extolling and aduancing of single life, tendeth to the dispraise of marriage.

Comp. 13. 44. q. 4. c. 6. Quis ignorat omnes retro sanctos eiusdem fuisse meriti, &c. Who is ignorant, that all the Saints in time passed, were of the same merit, that Christians are? If then the Saints and Patriarchs that were married, be equall vnto Christian virgines; then is not virginitie simple to be preferred before marriage.

THE SIXTH QUESTION, OF THE TIMES of marriage prohibited.

The Papists.

91. Error.

THere are certaine seasons in the yeere, wherein for the holines of the festiuall times, they hold it vnlawfull to haue marriage solemnized: as from the Aduent to the Epiphanie; from Septuagesima Sunday (as it is called) to the octaues of Easter: from three dayes afore the Ascension, to the octaues of Pentecost, Rnard. Tapper. artic. 20 p. 526. But the Council of Trent hath somewhat moderated this time, & cut it shorter, thinking it vnreasonable that mariage should be prohibited the third part of the yeere (for so much the time interdicted ariseth to, if account be taken of the weekes): The time of Pentecost therefore they haue dispensed with: and the time prohibited at Easter they would haue begun not from Septuagesima, but from Ashwednesday, Seff. 24 cap. 10. Vpon these times they hold it vnlawfull publikely to haue marriage solemnized, both for the holines of so great feasts, and because of receiuing the Sacraments, Bellar. de matrim. cap. 31.

Argum. God commaunded the people to abstaine from their wiues, when hee was to appeare vnto them in Mount Sinai, Exod. 19. 15. And Sam. 21. 4. Before the high Priest would deliuer the shewbread to Dauid and his companie, he asked if the young men had kept themselves from women: Ergo, marriage is not lawfull at all times, Bellar. ibid.

Ans. First, these places alleaged doe rather proue, that men in those interdicted times ought not at all to come at their wiues, then that the solemnization of marriage should be restrained: but I thinke they would be ashamed to forbid men their wiues companie so long together, as five or sixe weekes at the Natiuitie, and eight or nine weekes at Easter: why then should not it be as lawfull as the other? Secondly, the abstinence from their wiues was commaunded them, as a legall and ceremoniall kind of sanctification, as was also the washing of their clothes, Exod. 19. ver. 10. And the companie of women was at some times counted as a legall pollution, not as a sinfull or vncleane act of it selfe: as the women after childbirth were commaunded to purifie themselves, Leuit. 12. from a legall pollution onely, not from any sinfull or vncleane act: then it had been a manifest iniurie to that holy birth, that Mary purified her selfe according to the law, Luk. 2. 22. Wherefore seeing it was a legall kinde of sanctification, it is not to be intruded and imposed vpon Christians now. Thirdly, neither can they proue that this kinde of abstinence is necessarie alwaies before the receiuing of the Sacrament, though sometimes wee denie noth it is conuenient: for it was not alwaies required, no not of the Priests in the lawe, when they were to offer incense or sacrifice. For whereas the high Priest, which was alwaies but one, was bound morning and euening to offer incense vnto the Lord, Exod. 30. 8. he could not obserue this law, lesse he had been inioyned perpetuall abstinence, which we see by the law was not imposed vpon them. This doubt somewhat troubled Augustine: for first he saith, That it must needs follow, seeing the high Priest was married, and did sometime go in vnto his wife, that the offering of incense should some dayes be intermitted: but in his Retractions he miliketh his former solution, and thus determineth; That the high Priest first offered the morning incense, and afterward went in to his wife, and so was vncleane, vsque ad vesperam, but vntill the euening, not after the euening, & then he offered the euening incense. To take this answer for this time, though it be insufficient: for the Hebrue word, which is translated the euening, or euening tide, ev, signifieth the twilight, when the Sunne is set, when light and darknes are mixed together: but the incense was renewed before the Sunne set: yet I say, admitting Augustines solution, the high Priest did not abstaine one whole day before he offered: much lesse many dayes, much lesse many weekes, much lesse some moneths: as the Popish Church prescribeth by interdicting so many dayes.

The Protestants.

That not onely the publike solemnitie of marriage at some times may haue intermission, but all Matrimoniall acts ought to cease: as when men either priuately doe giue themselves to fasting and prayer, 1. Cor. 7. 5. or when publique or generall fasts are by the spirituall gouernours thought meete, and by the Christian Magistrate proclaimed: we doe not denie, but in our iudgement allow it, and by our practise approue it: but that Matrimonic at such set times as an vnholie and vncleane thing is to be forbidden and restrained, we take it to be popish superstition, and an Antichristian yoke.

Argum. 1. It disgraceth the holy institution of marriage, which the Apostle calleth honorable, Hebr. 13. 4. and Saint Paul counteth the fruites of marriage, which are the children of the faithfull, holie, 1. Corinth. 7. 14. How is it then, that there can be any time so holie, the which holie Matrimonic is not beleeving? Againe, in thus doing they make difference of dayes, esteeming some in themselves more holie than others, contrarie to the Apostles rule, Galat. 4. 10. Colossians 2. 16.

Argum. 2.

Quest. sup.
Leuitic. 15.Retract. lib. 2.
cap. 85.

Argum. 2. The Apostle willeth, that they should not defraud one another, but by consent for a time 1. Cor. 7. 5. which though it be especially vnderstood of married persons, yet it may be extended to those which are contracted together: how can they obserue this rule, when their marriage is suspended tenne weekes together, from Septuagesima till the octaues of Easter? may not Satan tempt them all this while for their incontinencie? Againe, what is this else, but a forbidding to marry, though not in whole, yet in part: contrarie to the Apostle, 1. Timoth. 4. 3.

Argum. 3. The Tridentine Chapter maketh but two holie times in the yeere, the Natiuitie, and Easter: during which times, they would not haue Matrimonie solemnized: and I pray you, why is Pentecost left out, is it not as festiuall a time as the other? And if they haue power to dispense with the festiuall of Pentecost, why not with the rest also? wherefore it appeareth to be but an humane deuise. And as the Popish Church hath abrogated one of the interdicted times for marriage; so were to be wished, that those reformed Churches, which haue abandoned other superstitious obseruations, and yet doe retaine this vse for the restraint of marriage at certaine seasons, would proceede a degree further, and graunt a generall libertie to marrie in those inhibited times: first, because it is an offence to other reformed Churches, that where the Gospell is professed, any such yoke should be imposed. Secondly, if Papists haue enlarged this restraint, thinking it not reasonable to enioyne so many times of inhibition, much more ought Protestants to doe that which is most agreeable to the libertie of the Gospell. Thirdly, while by dispensation it is made lawfull to marrie in these times, for euery one that will be at the charge thereof, and not otherwise, it will be taken onely to be an engine to draw aduantage. Fourthly, seeing that the Martyrs were persecuted for marrying in these inhibited times, as Iohn Crimes mentioned afterward: it is very vnfit, and vnbeseeming, that the people should vnder the Gospell be encumbered with such things. Fifthly, because the lawes of the Realme doe seeme to giue libertie for marriage at all times, in these words: This no reservation, or prohibition, Gods law except, shall trouble or impeach any marriage, without the lawfull decrees: ann. 32. Henrie. 8. c. 38. If no prohibition, then not the prohibition or restraint of time. Lastly, because this restraint of marriage is not grounded vpon the word of God, for then it could not be altered; but is onely an humane constitution, and seemeth rather to abridge the libertie of marriage, and to be against the Apostles rule, 1. Cor. 7. 5. as I haue shewed before: in mine opinion it were much better for these reasons alleadged, for this Canon of restraint to be discontinued, than vrged: and I hope, that the discrete officers of our Church, will be more caring and moderate therein.

But to returne, let vs see a little I pray you, how well they agree together about the times proposed for marriage: some of them beside the three times of the Natiuitie, Easter, Pentecost, make a fourth time vnseasonable for marriage, and that is at the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist: Neither do they here agree about the time, some prescribing three weekes before of abstinence from marriage: Synod. Hierdens. decret. 1. ex Gratian. Some 14. dayes onely, Synod. Salernitadiens. can. 3. Some beside also other times of prohibition, as in the foure Ember fasts, and in the holy dayes euen: when they hold it vnlawfull to marrie, Salernus ad libid. Others doe abridge the three vsuall times of restraint, either in part, as reformat. Ratispon. articul. 21. the last weeke onely of Aduent is restrained for marriage: or in whole, as the restraint of Pentecost is abridged and cut off in the late Tridentine Chapter. Thus it appeareth to be onely an humane tradition, which hath so much doubtfulness, and vncertaintie: as though any time can be too holy for marriage.

Could there be a more holy place then Paradise? or a more holy time, than while man was in his innocencie? yet euen then and there Matrimonie was instituted.

Lastly, is not the Sabbath or Lords day an holy festiuall time? and as holy as any is? what if I find more holy, for this onely immediatly was instituted of God: but marriage may notwithstanding be truly solemnized vpon that day, the abuses and disorders, which commonly fall out in such assemblies, being cut off: for Augustine is of opinion, that the marriage in Cana of Galilee, was the De tempore. Serm. 159. solemnized vpon the Lords day. And it is most fit that Matrimonie should bee solemnized in the face of the congregation, which is vsuall assembled vpon that day: Ergo, it may as fitly and conveniently at any time be kept and solemnized, excepting the respects aforesaid.

The Ciuill law for decencie and comelines sake interdicteth some times of marriage to particular persons: as a woman marrying within a yeere after her husbands death, was counted infamous: Cod. lib. 2. tit. 12. leg. 1. 5. Gordian. but generally to all and for religion the law enioyneth not times of restraint.

We haue here the testimonie of the Martyrs: Iohn Lamberts holy Martyr: In that they will not suffer marriage to be solemnized at all times in the yeere: I think it standeth not with Christs rule, but is against the same; and that they will not suffer the banes vpon all holy daies to be proclaimed, vnlesse a dispensation for money be purchased: All this God forbiddeth, Fox p. 1105. col. 1. Henrie Crimes troubled and persecuted for marrying his wife on Palme Sunday euen, Fox p. 1917.

THE SEVENTH QUESTION, TO WHOM MATRIMONIAL causes properly doe belong.

99. Error.

The Papists.

Matrimonial causes, as to determine of the degrees of kinred, of divorces, of the impediments of marriage, of contracts: doe only belong vnto the Church, and the Magistrate may make lawes hereof (approbante principe ecclesiastico) by the approbation of the ecclesiasticall prince (hee meaneth the Pope:) otherwise the lawes of Princes are in this behalfe void, Bellarm. de matrim. cap. 32.

Argum. 1. Our Sauour Christ giueth a law concerning divorces, Matth. 19. he sendeth them not to the ciuill Magistrate: and Saint Paul prescribeth, what is to be done in the marriage of beleeuers and Infidels, 1. Cor. 7. 13. Ergo, the officers of the Church are onely iudges of these causes Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, the argument followeth not: for Christ as King of his Church, the Apostles as his chiefe Ministers, by warrant and commission from him prescribed, and gaue lawes to the Church: no mortall man now is to challenge that authoritie to himselfe. Secondly, by this reason ecclesiasticall persons shall haue the rule of all causes: for Saint Paul describeth the office also of Princes, and giueth direction for ciuill causes, as for tribute, vsing of the sword, and such like, Rom. 13. doth it follow then that these things doe belong to the Apostles successors? Thirdly, as the Apostles did giue rules and directions for Matrimoniall and other causes: so it is the Ministers part also, by the word of God to minister counsell, and giue direction to the ciuill Magistrate in these cases, but not without authoritie from the same power to meddle with the execution thereof.

Argum. 2. Matrimonic 1. is a Sacrament, and therefore belongeth to the knowledge of ecclesiasticall persons: 2. and many cases of conscience may fall out, wherein recourse is to be had to the pastors of mens soules: 3. otherwise, when there are no Christian Magistrates, their spiritual causes should be brought before Heathen Iudges, if the Church hath no power to diuine of them, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. First, we denie Matrimonic to be a Sacrament, neither shall they be ever able to proue it so. Secondly, in cases of conscience in Matrimonic the pastors of soules must be consulted with out of the word: but it followeth not, that they therefore should make lawes: and are your Canonists and Licentiates pastors of soules, to whom you referre the deciding of these causes? Thirdly, Heathen Iudges haue 1. made good lawes concerning Matrimoniall matters, as that no man should marrie his fathers concubine, Alexander. Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 4. not without the parents consent: Dioclet. ibid. leg. 12. Not the sister, sisters daughter, aunt, &c. Leg. 17. Dioclet. Not one woman at once: ibid. tit. 5. leg. 2. Dioclet. 2. But where such lawes faile, they must take that counsell which S. Paul did against the incestuous person, to vse spirituall correction.

The Protestants.

Matrimoniall causes, such as are before rehearsed, originally doe belong to the ciuill Magistrate, by whose munificence they haue been graunted to ecclesiasticall persons, and vnto them properly it doth belong to make Matrimoniall lawes.

Argum. 1. This is euident first out of the Scripture, for Moses and not Aaron, did publish the lawes concerning the degrees of marriage, Leuit. 18. and other Matrimoniall causes. The Magistrate is Gods minister to take vengeance on them that doe euill, Rom. 13. 4. therefore also to censure and punish all transgressions and offences in marriage; to him it appertaineth to see that man liue in godlines and honestie, 1. Tim. 2. 2. Therefore it is part of the Magistrates care, that honestie and godlines be kept in Matrimonic and Matrimoniall duties and causes.

Argum. 2. Secondly, this is proued by the ancient practise of the Ciuill power: how the Emperours both Heathen and Christian haue made lawes as concerning the degrees, contracts, divorce of marriages; see Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. de Nuptijs. tit 5. de incesto. &c. Beside their practise, the matrimonic of the law is euident: Cod. lib. 5. tit. 4. leg. 3. Semerus. Illicitum matrimonium coram seculari iudice: Vnlawfull marriage must be complained of before a secular Iudge: whom the lawe calleth, competentem iudicem, a competent Iudge. If the Secular be competent, the Ecclesiasticall is incompetent. Ibid. leg. 11. Dioclet. If a mans father detaineth his wife, rector provincie, the rector of the province shall helpe. Leg. 20. Theodos. If there be many competitors of a woman, that is an orphan, Iudici deliberare permissum est: The Iudge shall determine whom she shall haue.

Argum. 3. It appeareth by the reason of the law: first, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 8. leg. 1. Alexander. Per quoniam in universam incidentem questionem examinare, &c. Hee before whom any principall cause is brought, may examine euery question incident: But so cannot an Ecclesiasticall person, examine euery matter that falleth in question in the case of Matrimonic. Secondly, Ibid. leg. 3. Valerianus: Ciuilis questio & incidens criminalis eadem sententia terminantur, &c. A ciuill question and criminal falling into are ended with the same sentence: But Ecclesiasticall persons have nothing to doe with Civil causes, as with matters of inheritance, debts, Jewries, which are incident into Matrimoniall causes: Ergo, neither the iudgement of the crimes belongeth to them: Thirdly, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 26. de Antiqu. Cuiusmodi executione denegatur pronuntiatio: To whom the execution is denied, the pronouncing also or giving of the sentence is denied: But Ecclesiasticall persons cannot execute the law in Matrimony, all offences, as in punishing of their bodie, or goods: Ergo, neither doth the sentence originally and properly appertaine vnto them. They being incompetent persons of themselves, are made competent by the constitution of Princes: as the law saith, Cod. lib. 3. tit. 13. de Arcad. Principis oraculum incompetentem iudicem facit competentem: The oracle of the Prince maketh an incompetent Iudge competent.

THE EIGHT QUESTION, OF THE CEREMONIES and rites of Matrimonic.

The Popists.

The Iesuite reckoneth vp seven. First, they which are to be ioyned in Matrimonic, are blessed of the Priest. Secondly, oblation is made for them in the sacrifice of the Masse. Thirdly, they are covered with a vaille. Fourthly, they are coupled together with a purple & candida, with a lute or riband, partly white, partly purple. Fifthly, the Bride giueth to the Bridegroom a ring, hallowed and blessed of the Priest. Sixthly, he commendeth them to God in his prayers. Seventhly, hee exhorteth and admonisheth them of their mutuall dutie; Bellarmin. cap. 33. de Matrimonio.

The Protestants.

Some of those rites we altogether allow and vse them our selues, as the 6. and 7. for both prayers made vnto God for them, and they are by the Minister put in minde of their dute: and all done with vs in the vulgar tongue, much more to the edifying of the people, and comfort of the parties themselves: whereas their idolatrous Priest chattereth all in an vnknowne tongue: A quality exhortation sure, when the parties exhorted vnderstand not one word thereof.

Some other of these rites we utterly reiect, as the 2. 3. 4. for oblation or sacrifice, in their meaning we acknowledge none: for the married parties to receiue the Communion, if there be a sufficient number, we neither hold it necessarie as being of the essence of marriage; nor yet thinke it necessary.

As for that coloured and painted attire of blew and white, we take it fitter for a May-game, than be shewed in a solemne assemblie of Christians.

Libel. 1. de Matrimonio. 4. Nihil ligaturum aureum, vel argentum, vel ex quolibet metallo compositum, quilibet talia fidei contrahant, in capitibus non desistant: That they weare no billament or plate of gold or siluer in their heads, when they celebrate the Matrimoniall contract. Yet such ornaments were more seemely, than such gawes, and toys of blew and white. Idem. lib. 1. tit. 1. de Matrimonio. 4. 7. Ludicra illa, quae in templis post benedictionem sacerdotum fieri consueverunt, non in pios, sed in ludicra, et quae alia eiusdem generis penitus tollantur: nam res seria, quam Deus ipse instituit: Those light toys which are accustomed to be done in the Church, after the blessing of the Priest vpon the married couple, as in smiting of the Bridegroom, and such like, must be left: for serious matter of Gods owne institution is in hand.

Libel. 3. tit. 4. tit. 2. Theodos. Milites sine antiqua solemnitate, &c. Squididors haue licence to contract Matrimonic without the ancient solemnities. Ibid. leg. 22. Si pompa atque nuptiarum celebratio &c. If the pompe and celebratie of marriage be omitted, nothing is wanting to the firmness or surenes of marriage: Ergo, by the Ciuill law such toys and vaine pompe are not required, nor necessarie.

The rest we in part allow, as the Ring, so it be vsed onely as a ciuill ornament, and token of mutual love: but that popish blessing either of the Ring, or of the married couple with the fingers, and muttering of some few inchaunting words, as though by the very act of popish blessing there were a secret vertue and qualitie of holines infused into the things so blessed, or in changing we condemne it as a superstitious toy. So we conclude, all such rites in Matrimonic as haue not a worthy and profitable vse, tending to edifying, we refuse not: the rest we reiect, and send them to Rome, from whence they came.

THE SIXTEENTH GENERAL CONTROVERSIE, OF CONFIRMATION, OR ORDERS, EXTREAME UNCTION.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF Confirmation.

Que parts of this question are these: First, whether it be a Sacrament. Secondly, of the parts thereof. Thirdly, of the Minister. Fourthly, of the effect of this ceremony. Fifthly, of the rites, and whole order thereof.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER it be a Sacrament.

101. Error.

The Confirmation is properly and truly a Sacrament, it was decreed in the Tridentine Council, sess. 7. can. 1. and it is their generall opinion.

Argum. Act. 8. 17. They did lay their hands vpon them, and they receiued the holic Ghost: This imposition of hands, together with the prayers here specified, was no doubt, the Sacrament of Confirmation: for here is an outward signe, and a spirituall grace: Ergo, a Sacrament, Bellem. de Confirmat. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Ans. First, these were miraculous gifts of the holic Ghost, as the gifts of tongues, of prophesying, healing, which were bestowed vpon the Disciples, whereof the imposition of hands was signe at that time: but it is impossible to ground an ordinarie and perpetuall Sacrament vpon an extraordinarie example: and that they were such visible graces of the spirit, it appeareth, because Simon Magus saw that the holic Ghost was given them by laying on of hands.

Secondly, the holic Ghost was obtained by their prayers, vers. 15. and not by the very laying on of hands.

Thirdly, to make a Sacrament, it is not enough to have a visible signe, and to shew some spirituall grace therewith to be bestowed: for then the spittle and clay that Christ used, the napkins and partlets, which were carried to the sicke from the Apostles, and they were healed presently: all these should be sacraments; for here are outward signes, and some effect followed: yet because there was no institution of a sacrament by Christ, nor any commandement to do thus, neither these, nor the imposition of hands can be a sacrament.

Fourthly, the Apostles had an especiall commandement to impose hands, and a speciall promise by laying on of hands to give the holic Ghost, which we now have not.

Fifthly, seeing the extraordinarie gifts, which the Apostles bestowed by imposition of hands, are now ceased, the ceremonie in that behalfe also is expired.

Bellem. answereth, 1. The Apostles gaue not only the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, but the holic Ghost; for all did not speake with tongues, 1. Corin. 12. 30. but these gifts all the believers had. 2. It cannot be shewed, that the Apostles had any such speciall commandement or promise; but the promise is generally made to the Church: I will be with you to the end of the world.

3. Though the visible signes are ceased, yet the invisible grace, which was giuen by the imposition of hands, remaineth still: Bellem. de Confirmat. lib. 2. cap. 2.

Contra. First, we 1. graunt, that by imposition of hands, the Apostles gaue both invisible graces and visible signes together, not the one without the other: this notwithstanding it was an extraordinarie worke of the Apostles, and no good ground for an ordinarie sacrament. 2. Though all beleeuers spake not with tongues, yet they had all in those dayes some especiall or extraordinarie gift for the confirmation of their faith, Mark. 16. 17. These tokens shall follow them that beleue. 3. Yet it is cleare, that all these at Samaria receiued extraordinarie gifts, for they had bene baptized before and beleeued, and were partakers of the common grace: and they were such graces as Simon saw to be giuen: therefore extraordinarie and visible.

Secondly,

Secondly, it is great boldnesse to denie, that the Apostles had a speciall promise to giue the graces of the Spirit, and a commaundement so to doe: for he himselfe graunteth, Nunquam inducitur iniquum manus, They would neuer so ordinarily haue imposed their hands, if Christ had not so commaunded. 2. Manus by the commaundement of Christ laid his hands vpon Paul, not to take away his blindnesse onely (as Bellarmine boldly affirmeth) but that he might be filled with the holy Ghost, Act. 10. 17. Here is both an expresse commaundement and promise. 3. Some generall promises were made not onely to the Apostles, but to the whole Church, as of Christs perpetuall presence and protection: but it is very absurd, to say, that the Apostles had no more power to give the holy Ghost, than others succeeding them haue; for this were to make all Apostles, which Paul denieth, 1. Cor. 12. 29.

Thirdly, if the visible signes are ceased, which came by imposition of hands, then haue you lost your sacrament, the sacramentall effect being extinct: the inuisible graces of the Spirit remaine, but not conferred by imposition of hands, but by the preaching of the word, and prayers of the Church. Hitherto therefore you haue prooued no sacrament.

The Protestants.

We graunt a ceremonie of imposition of hands vsed in the Apostles time, and after, so long as the miraculous giftes of the holy Ghost continued in the Church: there is also another kind of imposition of hands, such as the Apostle speaketh of, Hebr. 6. 2. which may haue perpetuall use in the Church, which is nothing else but a kind of prayer to be strengthened by the holy Ghost, and for the increase of grace. But neither this nor the other doe we hold to be a Sacrament.

Argum. 1. Euery sacrament must haue his appointment from Christ, consisting both of an outward element, and the worde of institution: but the Popish sacrament of confirmation lacketh one of these: the element they vse, is oyle, the word of consecration, I signe thee with the signe of the Crosse, and anoint thee with the Chrisme of health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost: but none of these haue their institution by Christ or his Apostles any where in the new Testament, Act. 8. 19. and in other places we reade that the Apostles vsed imposition of hands, but there is no where mention made of Chrisme or oyle: neither this superstitious deuise in vesturen, whatsoever the Iesuiste saith, being brought in long after by Syluester, who is reported by Damasus to be the deuiser of Chrisme: Ergo, it hauing no institution in the Gospell, it is no sacrament.

Argum. 2. The Scriptures beside that extraordinarie imposition of hands vsed by the Apostles; make mention of another imposition of hands, not as of a sacrament by it selfe, but as appertaining to the sacrament of Baptisme, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 6. 2. The doctrine of baptisme and laying on of hands: this externall rite depended vpon baptisme, it was nota seuerall Sacrament by it selfe.

To this effect also their owne Canon, p. 3. distin. 4. c. 124. Nullus ministrum, &c. None of the ministers that hath power to baptize should goe without Chrisme: Quia inter nos placuit simul in baptismo Chrysma, &c. Because the vse is with vs once in baptisme to be Chrismed: Chrysma is an oyle benedicted: Chrisme is but once blessed or hallowed. Here we see, that Chrisme, which they vse in confirmation, went together then with baptisme.

Argum. 3. Manus impositio quid aliud est, quam oratio super hominem? The imposition of the hands, what else is it but prayer ouer a man? He saith not, it is a sacrament.

Deusdedit. Papa decret. Scitis quomodo sunt 7. dona spiritus sancti, ita sunt septem dona baptis- mi, primo pabulo sacra- tis, & ingressus sancta Ecclesia, usque ad confirmationem spiritus sancti per Cyprianum: Yee know, that as there are seuen gifts of the holy Ghost, so there are seuen gifts of baptisme, from the first spirituall nourishment of hallowed salte, and the entrance to the Church, vnto the confirmation of the holy Ghost by oyle. Here confirmation is but a part of Baptisme, and therefore not a sacrament of it selfe.

Chas. Arlatens. sub Carolo. can. 18. Vt presbyteri sub sigillo chrysmas custodiant, genus enim sacra- menti est: That the Priests keepe the chrisme vnder seale, for it is a kind of sacrament: Confirmation ministred with chrisme is a kind of sacrament, that is, after a sort, properly it is not.

In this cause suffered Master Baybridge holy martyr, for denying Confirmation to be a Sacrament, or that the Bishop doth giue grace thereby, pag. 2046. col. 1. artic. 3.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of Confirmation.

The Popish.

The matter of this popish Sacrament, they say, is oyle mixed and tempered with balme, Rub. 102. Error. Mat. 23. 5. Sed. 6. First hallowed and consecrated by the Minister thereof, and striked in manner of a crosse vpon the forehead of him that is to be confirmed, Bellar. 2. 2.

Argum. 2. Corinth. V. 21. It is God which establisheth vs, or confirmeth vs with you in Christ, and hath annointed vs. Here the Apostle speaketh of confirmation, and of the materiall part thereof, which is holy vnction, or anointing: and this holy chrisme was prefigured by that precious ointment, Exod. 30. wherewith the tabernacle and the priests were annointed: Bellar. ibid.

The Protestants.

Ans. First, the Apostle saith not, Which hath confirmed, but, Which doth confirme: which if it were meant of that externall ceremonie of confirmation, see what iniurie you offer to the Apostle, that being a confirmer of others, hee had neede now to be catechized and confirmed himselfe: Again, he speaketh not of confirmation wrought by the ministerie of men: but God (saith he) confirmeth vs, that is, establisheth vs by his spirit.

It is too grosse to vnderstand by this anointing, your greazie befeigning mens faces with your Chrisme, seeing the Apostle expoundeth himselfe in the next verse, Hee hath sealed us, and given us the earnest of his spirit in our hearts, vers. 22. Of this holy anointing of our hearts by the spirit, Saint Iohn also maketh mention, saying, This anointing teacheth you all things, 2. Epist. 27. But doth the anointing of the face I pray you, giue men instruction?

Ans. S. Ambrose thus expoundeth S. Paul of the spirituall anointing: Christus confirmat nos in fide promissa, &c. Christ confirmeth the Gentiles in the faith promised to the Iewes, &c. he hath annointed vs, giuing vs regiam honorificentiam, a kingly honour: as Peter saith, we are reges, of a royall kind: per vinctum spirituum, by the spirituall anointing: who hath also signed vs, danda spiritum suum nobis pignus, giuing his spirit as a pledge, that we should not doubt of his promises: Ambros. in 1. Cor. 2.

Tract in Epist. Ioh. 4.

Let vs heare Augustines exposition, Christus fit in corde, vincto ipsius fit in corde: inspiratio eius docet: Let Christ be in your hearts, let his anointing be in your hearts: his inspiration is his anointing: you may be ashamed therefore, so grossely to abuse the Scripture.

And concerning the ointment of the tabernacle: first, it is no way answerable or like to the popish Chrisme: 1. There is no mention made of balme in that consecration, Exod. 30. for the word which Bellar. vrgeth, mas bessem, is a generall name for sweet spices; by the Septuagint translation, aroma; by the vulgare Latine, aromata, spices: and so is it taken in scripture, Cant. 4. 16. y. 1. But to admit that there was balme there, as some thinke, being the chiefe of the red, yea, and they other sweet spices, cynamon, calamus, cassia: you must mingle these also with your Chrisme, if you will finde a type here. 3. This ointment serued for the priests: you must prooue that Christ the high Priest of the newe Testament was thus annointed: for if it belonged not to him, neither are we to challenge it: but Christ was no otherwise annointed then by the spirit, Ioh. 1. 33. 4. They were not to annoint any mans flesh with that ointment, Exod. 30. 32. how then dare you presume to lay your Chrisme vpon euery mans forehead that is confirmed.

Secondly, say that your Chrisme, and that ointment were in all points agreeable; who might you borrow ceremonies of the Iewes, seeing they were but types and shadowes, but where is in Christ? Coloss. 2. 17.

Argum. 1. As for your oyle therefore mixed with balme: First, the true balme you know is not to be had, and therefore you abuse the people: As it may appeare, Epist. 2. Fabiani ad Quirilianum in the which Epistle he reprooueth them for not renewing the Chrisme every year: Quoniam nec balsamum per singulos annos non posse reperiri: For they alledged, that they could not get the right balme every year: If they of the East country could not get it where it groweth, how should it come into the West parts? Plinius also saith, that the balme, which grew but in those places of Iudaea, is perished: yet Bellarmino controuleth him, and saith, that there is a kind of balme brought from India, beside that which vsed to grow in Iudaea: yet by Bellarmines leave it cannot be that balme, which grew in Iudaea, which he saith the Apostles vsed. And Plinius may be cited for this matter, being a curious searcher out of the secrets of nature. Secondly, make the best of it you can, it is but a Iewish ceremonie. Thirdly, your benediction of it, is but a kind of magicall enchantment, seeing you haue no word of God to consecrate creatures in that sort: for all things are sanctified by the word of God and prayer: Ergo, without the warrant of God, there is no such sanctifying of creatures.

Argum. 2. Act. 10. 44. the holy Ghost is giuen without any Chrisme, Act. 8. 17. 19. 5. the Apostles layde on their handes, but vsed no chrisme: Ergo, your chrisme hath no ground out of Scripture. Kennish argum.

Bellarmino. 1. In the first place alledged, the holy Ghost was giuen by the singular priuiledge of God without a Sacrament. 2. Where mention is made of imposition of handes, chrisme also is vnderstood: as where the Apostles are said to baptize in the name of the Lord Iesus, Act. 19. 5. both the father and the sonne are vnderstood: and where the Apostle saith, We are saved by the laver of regeneration, he vnderstandeth also the word, though he make no mention of it: Bellar. 2. 9. responsus ad argum. 1. act.

Contra.

Contra. First, though 1. the holy Ghost came vpon them while Peter preached, Act. 10. 44. yet this is no singular or extraordinarie priuiledge, but the visuall effect of the preaching of the word as we may see in Lydia, Act. 16. & faith ordinarily cometh by hearing, Rom. 10. 17. 2. And though the spirite was giuen without and before the Sacrament, yet presently for their further confirmation, they were baptized, but not confirmed with chrisme: so here is a Sacrament ministered vnto them, to their further assurance and confirmation, but none other, then the Sacrament of Baptisme.

Secondly, 1. we do not doubt, but that the Apostles baptized in the name of the whole Trinity, though compendiously the name of Iesus be expressed, because they were commanded so to do: that although mention be not made there of the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, yet in other places there is, Matth. 28. 19. 2. And S. Paul also elsewhere ioyned the word with the washing of water, Ephes. 5. 26. and in the very same place it followeth, by the washing of water and renewing of the holy Ghost; whereby the operation of the word is signified: so then if in any other place of scripture, you could finde your chrisme to haue beene vied by the Apostles with imposition of hands, though they be not euery where ioyned together, it might seeme probable, that you say: but that you are not able to do, therefore these examples are fruitlessly alleaged.

Thirdly, whereas Bellarmino doubteth not to say that the Apostles vied Chrisme: other Papistes more basely denie it, being conuincied with euidence of Scripture: as synod. Maguntin. c. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio sola manuum impositione exhibitum: The Sacrament of Confirmation in the beginning was onely exhibited with imposition of hands.

Deus. Gregor lib. 1. tit. 16. c. 1. Innocent. 3. Confirmationis sacramentum non d. bet in no iterari, quod per ipsum fuit non chrismate, sed oleo, delinitus: The Sacrament of confirmation must not be iterated in him, which by error was annointed with oyle, and not with chrisme: Ergo, chrisme is not necessary to confirmation.

Some of the popish writers affirme, that balme, whereof their chrisme is made, is not necessary to the essence of the Sacrament: Caietan. 3. par. qu. 72. artic. 2. Dominicus. 4. sentent. dist. 7. qu. 1. art. 2. synod. Arausican. cap. 1. Quia baptisate Chrismatum fuerit in confirmatione sacerdos commonebitur: nam inter nos Chrismatum ipsius, non nisi una benedictio sit: Hee that is chrismed, or annointed in Baptisme, must aduonish the Priest thereof in confirmation (that he be not annoynted againe) for with vs chrisme is but once blessed and vied. He then that was annointed with chrisme, was confirmed without chrisme: This Chrisme then and consecrate oyle, make the matter of confirmation.

The Papists.

The forme of Confirmation is in the words which are pronounced, I signe thee with the signe of the Crosse, and confirme thee with the Chrisme of saluation or health, in the name of the Father, the Sonne, and holy Ghost, Bellarmino. cap. 10.

The Protestants.

They must shew the institution of Christ, out of the word, for the forme of euery Sacrament: which they cannot do for this, vntill they runne to their beggerly traditions, which they blasphemously call the word of God vntwritten.

Where haue they learned, that men are confirmed and established with the external annointing of oyle? so said some amongst the Colossians, Touch not, taste not, handle not: to whom the Apostle answereth, Which things perish with the vsing, and are after the commandements of men, Coloss. 2. 21. 22. So is this annointing with oyle, a meere inuention of men, and hath no longer vertue or force, then in the naturall vse thereof.

Bellarmino answereth: First, we haue the warrant of the word for the forme of confirmation; for the Apostles prayed, when they layed on hands, Act. 8. 17. and the forme of the Sacrament consisteth in prayers. Secondly, the oyle is called the oyle of health or saluation, as Baptisme the washing of the new birth, because it is an instrument thereof, Bellarmino. cap. 10.

Contra. First, prayer 1. is made to God, this forme is pronounced to him that is confirmed, therefore it is not a prayer: 2. Beside in the forme there is mention made of the signe of the crosse, and of chrisme: can you fetch these also out of the Apostles prayer? 3. And if you make confirmation nothing els, but prayer ouer a man, we will not much stand with you.

Secondly, 1. we make not Baptisme a cause of regeneration, as you do the oyle; but a seale only thereof. 2. Neyther can yee shew the like institution and ordinance of Christ for confirmation, as we can for Baptisme.

Inuicibilis. cap. 16. Sacramentum confirmationis initio impositione manuum tantum celebratum fuit, &c. The Sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was onely celebrated with the imposition of hands: It was then no part of the forme of consecration in those dayes, to say, I confirme thee with the Chrisme of health, &c. for at the first no oyle or Chrisme was vied, but onely the imposition of hands.

THE

THE THIRD PART, OF THE MINISTER of Confirmation.

The Papists.

104. Error.

THe Papists are here diuided: Some thinke that the Bishop is so necessarily the Minister of confirmation, that it can in no wise be committed to Presbyters: Sic Bonaventur. Durand. Adrian. in 4. distict. 7. Other of them are of opinion that it may extraordinarily be ministred by Presbyters, as Thomas, Marfilus, Richardus, Paludanus: But the Bishop is the ordinarie Minister thereof by the word of God: of this sentence is Bellarmine cap. 12.

Argum. Act. 8. Peter and Iohn are sent to Samaria to lay on their hands, Philip onely baptized, if Philip could haue giuen the spirite, what need the Apostles haue beene sent? the Apostles then onely confirmed: Bishops succede Apostles: Ergo.

Anſw. First, the Apostles by laying on the hands, gaue the extraordinary grace of the spirite, therefore this place maketh not for confirmation. Secondly, none can succede the Apostles, in their Apostolike and extraordinarie power in giuing the spirite. Thirdly, Philip gaue the holy Ghost also, though not those visible signes, which belong not to confirmation; for by his preaching they beleueed, and were baptized: and S. Hierome saith, Nisi forte Eunuchus a Philippo, Diuino baptizatus sine spiritu sancto fuisse credendus est: vnlesse it is to be thought, that the Eunuch was baptized of Philip the Deacon without the holy Ghost: aduers. Luciferian. Fourthly, Philip was an Euangelist, Act. 21. 8. which was an office before Pastors: Ephes. 4. 11. Bishops are the Pastors of the Church: will they denie that to an Euangelist, which they yeeld to Pastors? Lastly, other beside the Apostles were sent to second the first preachers, and to confirme them in their faith, as Barnabas to Antioch, Act. 11. 22. 23.

The Protestants.

WE say with Hierome, Si hoc loco queras, quare in ecclesia baptizatus, &c. If you aske in this place, why he that is baptized in the Church doth not but by the hands of the Bishop receiue the holy Ghost? Know, that this obseruation, Ad honorem potius esse sacerdotij, quam salutis necessitatem: Is rather for the honour of the Priesthood, then any necessitie of law: otherwise, if the holy Ghost onely be giuen at the prayer of the Bishop, they are to be bewailed, which in remote places are baptized by Presbyters, and die before they are visited of the Bishop: Hierom. aduers. Luciferian. He thinketh this difference to be rather an ordinance of the Church, then any diuine institution.

Argum. Ananias a disciple of Antioch, layd his hands vpon Paul, Act. 10. and at Antioch certaine Prophets and teachers layd on their hands vpon Paul and Barnabas, Act. 13. and none of these were Apostles.

Bellarmino answereth: that Ananias laid on his hands, to heale him of his blindnes, and not to giue him the holy Ghost. Contr. The text it selfe is contrarie, Act. 9. 17. He put his hands vpon him, and said, brother Saul, the Lord hath sent me, that thou mightest receiue thy sight, and be filled with the holy Ghost.

Distict. 95. c. 1. Gregor. Vbi Episcopi defunt, ut Presbyteri, &c. Where Bishops are wanting, we grant, that Presbyters may touch those that are baptized with Chrisme in the forehead: per. distict. 4. c. 129. Presbyteris, &c. It is lawfull for Presbyters to annoint those that are baptized with Chrisme, whether they baptize in the presence of the Bishop, or without: c. 125. he that doth receiue the office to baptize, must not go without Chrisme, decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 4. c. 4. Simplicius sacerdotes apud Constantinop. &c. Simple Priests at Constantinople do confirme: Concil. Florentin. sess. 25. Apud Græcos, &c. Among the Greekes, Priests not Bishops do vse Chrisme: it is not therefore of any diuine institution.

Bellarmino himselfe graunteth, that the chiefe Bishop may giue authoritie to a simple Priest to confirme, lib. 1. de matrim. c. 5. resp. ad argum. 13.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE EFFI-cacie and vertue of Confirmation.

The Papists.

105. Error.

THe holy Ghost is giuen in confirmation, for force, strength, and corroboration, against all our spirituall enemies, and to stand constantly in the confession of our faith, euen to death, with great increase of grace, Rhemist. Act. 8. sect. 7. And in this respect it giueth more aboundance of grace, in strengthening of vs against the diuell, then Baptisme doth, Bellarmino cap. 11.

The Protestants.

First, they do offer great iniurie to the spirit of God, tying him as it were, to their beggerly elements, which haue power, as they say, to conferre grace. The Scripture sayth, The spirit is where it listeth, John 3. The spirit of God is free, and is giuen without Sacraments, as we haue proued before.

Their owne Matter of sentences lib. 1. dist. 14. d. proueth that the Apostles themselues gaue the spirit: Orabant quippe ut veniret: They prayed that the spirit might come vpon them, whom they laid their hands, they themselues gaue it not. And againe, ibid. d. Non accipere hoc. We according to our measure may receiue this gift, effundere super alios visq; non possunt: but we cannot powre it out vpon others: Ergo, Confirmation doeth not conferre the holy spirit.

Secondly, they do greatly deface the Sacrament of Baptisme, making it imperfect without confirmation, saying, that he which is baptized, shall neuer be a perfect Christian, vnlesse hee be confirmed with Chrisme, Gerson. And that it is to be reuerenced with greater reuerence then Baptisme, see Fulke 1. 8. sed. 7. Yea, they deprime Baptisme of the proper effect and vse thereof, which is vnto vs of the assistance of Gods spirit, to fight manfully against the Diuell: for by Baptisme we are buried into the death of Christ, Rom. 6. 3. But Christ by his death triumphed ouer the Diuell, Coloss. 2. 15. Ergo, Baptisme is a signe of our victorie against the Diuell: yet they will haue it to be the substance of this honor, and giue it to confirmation. And thus they preferre their owne ordinance before the ordinance of God; no sacrament before a Sacrament.

Tilleman. Hous. loc. 12. error. 12.

Chrysostome sheweth, what the Sacrament of Vnction is, Vnctionis sacramentum est virtus ipsa, invisibilis, spiritus sanctus: The sacrament of Vnction, is the inuisible vertue: the holy spirit. What is become now of your Sacrament of Vnction? that confirmation maketh no supple, or addeth any complement to Baptisme, their own Church testifieth: decret. par. 3. dist. 14. c. 2. Melchiorides: Spiritus sanctus in syne tribuit plenitudinem donorum: The holy spirit in Baptisme giueth fulnesse tending to innocencie: Continuo transiunt sufficiens regenerationis beneficia: The benefite of regeneration is sufficient to those that prebaptize out of the world: ibid. c. 5. In the vnction in Baptisme is signified descensio spiritus ad baptizandum, the descending of the spirit to dwell with vs: If then by Baptisme we haue innocencie, and the spirit dwelling in vs, how is it not perfect and absolute without confirmation?

Tract. in. E. pist. Iohan. 4.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE RITES and ceremonies of Confirmation.

The Papists.

The ceremonies which they commonly vse in Confirmation, are these. First, the Bishop must treade vpon the pot or cruze of Chrisme. Secondly, hee saluteth it in these wordes, Aue sanctum Chrisme: Haile holy Chrisme. Thirdly, he giueth a kisse. Fourthly, he striketh him that is confirmed with his hand, to teach him patience. Fifthly, his forehead is bound about, least the Chrisme should runne downe, which teacheth him not to lose the grace of God. Sixtly, seuen times together he must neither wash his head nor face. And these with such like ridiculous toyes, are practised amongst them, Beilarin. cap. 13. lib. de confirmat.

106. Error.

The Protestants.

Some of these ceremonies wee condemne as ridiculous: as the breathing vpon the oyle, the striking of the partie confirmed, which light gestures become not the grauitie of the Ministers of the Gospell: all things should be done in the Church in decent and comely order, 1. Cor. 14. 40. Concerning this light gesture of striking, the like whereof was vsed in the celebration of Marimonie, we heard before the iudgement of the Councell of Cullin: how it is counted, in iudicio, among ridiculous and wanton toyes. Concil. Colonienf. part. 7. cap. 47. vid. supra. c. 15. quest. 7. In the like case, in the emancipation, or setting of men free, they did vse to strike them: which foolish vse was corrected by the imperiall lawe, Cod. lib. 8. tit. 49. leg. 6. hee listeth, In iurijs a raphisimata, such iniurious strokes to be left, quorum nullus rationabilis inuenitur, of the which there can be no reasonable end: Inuenimus circumscriptionem in posterum quiescentem. we will such toyes and circumstances to cease. If in a ciuile acte such ridiculous toyes were admitted, how much more vncomely are they in an acte of religion? Secondly, one of them is a meerly idolatrous, to salute the oyle, as the Angell saluted Mary, to say, Aue, All haile vnto it, making an idoll of it, being a thing without sence or life. Thirdly, all of them are superstitious, hauing mysticall and typicall significations and shadowes, which agreeth not with the nature of the Gospell: for all shadowes are now past, the body being come, Col. 2. 17. Lastly, they are superstitious, cumberfome, and burdenous, as Augustine saith: Ipsam religionem, quam Deus paucis

simis sacramentis liberam esse voluit, oneribus premens. They oppress religion with the burden of ceremonies, which God hath left free in fewe sacraments. Againe, who seeth not how thus by their owne traditions they doe euacuate the ordinance of God? for in stead of catechizing and instructing of the youth in the principles and foundation of religion, as of repentance from dead workes, faith toward God, of the resurrection and eternall iudgement, Hebr. 6. 2, 3. they have brought in nothing else, but oyling, greazing, anointing of them, breathing vpon them, crossing, and such like: And whereas S. Paul giueth parents a charge to bring vp their children in the instruction of God, Ephes. 6. 4. they bid them bring their children to be annointed, crossed, and chrismated, as they call it, and they haue done enough.

Against these ridiculous ceremonies we haue the iudgement and determination of the Councell of Mentz, cap. 18. Sacramentum confirmationis ab initio sola manuum impositione exhibitum: cum initio spiritus sanctus, ad euentiorem recentis adhuc fidei confirmationem, signo visibili infusa confirmatio, externa unctione tum opus non erat: The sacrament of confirmation in the beginning was exhibited onely with laying on of hands: for whereas the holy spirit then for the more euident confirmation of faith, did appeare by euident signes in those, that were confirmed, there was no need then of outward anointing. At the first, the Apostles vied nothing, but imposition of hands: all the rest of the ceremonies came in since by men. And this decree maketh directly against the Iesuite, who will needs beare vs in hand, that the Apostles vied oyle and Chrisme together, with imposition of hands: which is but his braine-sicke conjecture, without any ground.

This truth hath that holy martyr of God Iohn Hesse, sealed with his blood: Lenis & brevis confirmatio episcoporum cum ritibus solemnizata, est a diabolo introducta. The light and briefe confirmation of Bishops solemnized, with the superstitious rites thereof, seemeth to haue been brought in by the deuill. Quantum ad oleum, quo episcopi unctionis pueros, & populum lineum, quod complexum capiti, videtur, quod sit ritus lenis: And as for the oyle, wherewith the Bishops anoint boyes, and the linnen vaile bound to their head, it seemeth to be a ridiculous fashion: For thus saying and boldly vttering his conscience, this good man was condemned in the Councell of Constance, 15.

THE SECOND QUESTION, of Orders.

THe feuerall parts of this question, are these: First, whether it be a Sacrament: Secondly, of the materiall part thereof. Thirdly, of the efficacie and vertue thereof. Fourthly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER THE RECEIVING OF ORDERS BE A SACRAMENT.

The Papists.

107. Error.

That holy Orders are a sacrament rightly and properly so called, it was decreed in the Tridentine Councell, Sess. 23. canon. 3. And that not onely the three higher degrees, of Priesthood, Deaconship, Subdeaconship, but the foure inferiour orders, of Exorcista, Acoluthi, Leuitici, Ophary, do belong vnto the same sacrament of orders, and are sacraments as well as the other, bellar. cap. 8. lib. de sacram. ordinis.

Argum. 1 Timoth. 4. 14. Despise not that gift which was giuen thee through Prophecie, with the laying on of hands. Holy orders giue grace by an externall ceremonie and worke: Ergo, 2. p. a Sacrament, Rhemist. in hunc locum.

Ans. 1. It cannot be prooued out of this place, that imposition of hands giueth grace: for this was an extraordinarie gift which S. Paul speaketh of, and doth not alwaies follow imposition of hands. Secondly, this gift was not giuen by the very ceremonie of imposition of hands, but through prophesie and reuelation of the holy Ghost: for it was reuealed vnto the Church by the spirit of Prophecie, that Timothie was a chosen vessell of God: therefore Saint Paul saith, The thing which is committed vnto thee, keepe through the holy Ghost. 2. Tim. 1. 14. The holy Ghost was both the conferrer of that grace, and the preleruer of it. Imposition then of hands was but an outward signe of the presence of Gods spirit vpon those that were lawfully ordained: for all vpon whome hands were laide, receiued not the holy Ghost, but such onely as were appointed of God: And therefore the Apostle chargeth Timothie to lay hands sodainly on no man, 1. Tim. 5. 22. which caueat was not needfull, if vpon whomsoever he had laid his hands, they should immediately receiue the holy Ghost. Thirdly, euery promise of grace annexed to the outward signe maketh not a Sacrament, but it must be the grace of iustification, such as is not in orders.

Bellar. denyeth, that euery Sacrament serueth to iustification or remission of sinnes; and hee giueth which an instance in the Eucharist, which was not instituted to take away sinne, but to conserue and increase the spirituall life, Bellar. 2. de sacram. ordinis.

Argum. 1. First, that the Eucharist was instituted to assure vs of remission of sinne, it is euident by the Scriptures; for it is a shewing forth of the Lords death, 1. Cor. 11. 26. but to what end else but Christ, but for remission of sinnes? Again, it representeth vnto vs the blood of Christ; which with Christ in the institution of this Sacrament is sedde for many for remission of sinnes; Matth. 26. 28. Secondly, it serueth also to conserue our spirituall life, which cannot be without continuance of forgiveness of sinnes: for 1. the life of the soule is faith, The iust shall liue by faith; Rom. 1. 17. and our faith, is in the blood of Christ; Rom. 3. 25. And 2. what else is the life of the soule but the happinesse thereof? But our happinesse is this, to haue our sinnes forgiven, Psalm. 32. 1. Whom they whose iniquities are forgiven.

Argum. 2. Deaconship is a Sacrament, because it is giuen by imposition of hands: Bellar. cap. 6. Deaconship likewise is a Sacrament, because it is not reuerterable; and so of the rest of the inferior orders; cap. 7. 8.

Ans. 1. The Iesuites reason standeth thus: whatsoever is ministred by laying on of hands is a Sacrament, but Deaconship is so ministred: Ergo, it followeth then that the little children; vpon whom Christ laid his hands and blessed them, receiued a sacrament; Mark. 10. 16. What sacrament may I pray you? not confirmation, for they were not yet baptized; and others, I hope, will not say, they receiued: Ananias laid his hands vpon Paul, and he receiued his sight: Act. 9. 17. By the Iesuites reason then, the giuing of sight, because it is ministred with laying on of hands, shall be a sacrament: for Saint Paul neither receiued orders from Ananias, seeing hee was immediately called from Christ; nor yet was confirmed, nor being yet baptized.

Secondly, hee hath reasoned as well for the rest of the orders: Whatsoever is not reuerterable (saith) is a sacrament: but the creation of the world, the drowning of the same by water, and such other, are to be done againe: Ergo, they should be sacraments, by the Iesuits reason. Orders may be reuerterable: Tolstan. 4. 27. Clericus iniuste depositus, si in Synodo innocens reprobatur, non potest quod fuerat, nisi gradus amissus recipiat de manu Episcopi. A Clerke, deposed, if hee be found in the Synode, cannot be restored to his former state, vnlesse hee doe receiue the degrees afresh, at the hands of the Bishop.

The Protestants. Our Iesuit Popish orders we doe not at all receiue into the Church, much lesse can we abide, that they should be Sacraments: The lawfull ordaining of Pastors, Teachers, and Deacons, we acknowledge; but no sacrificing Priesthood, nor no ministring Deaconship at the Altar: but orders as we haue notwithstanding wee doe not take to bee Sacraments, properly so called, much lesse yours, that are vtterly to be abolished.

Argum. 1. Sacraments must haue their institution from Christ; so haue not your orders: for Christ instituted onely Apostles and Disciples: Presbyters and Deacons were founded by the Apostles, who notwithstanding had no commission to constitute new Sacraments. As for the other inferior, of Subdeacons, Readers, Acoluthi, Exorcistes, doore-keepers, they are neither read in Scripture, nor ordained of the Apostles, nor heard of for many yeeres after.

Our Saviour, when he ordained Apostles, vsed no imposition of hands, or did anoint them; therefore Orders giuen by imposition of hands, is no Sacrament, because it hath no institution from Christ. We denie not, but that the ministerie of the word is Christs ordinance, but that it is no Sacrament, because they can shewe no institution of the outward signe from Christ.

Bellar. 1. Christ might make Apostles without imposition of hands, because he was not tyed to the Sacraments: 2. and there is nothing to the contrarie, but that he might also vie imposition of hands. 3. Further, seeing that in orders grace is tyed to the outward signe of imposition of hands, it must needs be of God, for no man hath power to annexe grace to the signe but God: and that grace is tyed to imposition of hands, S. Paul testifieth, 2. Timoth. 1. 6. Stirre vp the grace of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands, Bellar. cap. 2.

Ans. 1. First, we doe not speake of Christs power, that he can worke without sacraments, but of his will in ordaining of a sacrament: for there is no sacrament of the new Testament, which is not grounded vpon his precept and example: but neither can be shewed for orders by imposition. Secondly, the institution of a Sacrament must be expressed in Scripture, not implied or continually collected. Thirdly, in none of the sacraments grace is annexed to the signe; much lesse in orders, which is no sacrament: neither hath S. Paul any such meaning, as I haue shewed before: Respons. ad argum. 1. Fourthly, an ordinance of the ministerie by commandement from Christ, we graunt, but no institution of a sacrament.

Argum. 2. Secondly, your sacrament hath neither outward element, nor word of institution: if you say, laying on of hands is the externall signe; we answer, that the visible signe in a sacrament must not onely be an externall action, but a materiall element, as water in Baptisme, and bread and wine in the Lords Supper. The forme (you say) is in these words pronounced by the Bishop, Accipite potestatem offerendi sacrificium. Receiue ye power to offer sacrifice: Belar. cap. 9. We answere againe, that this sacrificing office hath no foundation in Scripture: The Ministers of the Gospell are called dispensers of Gods mysteries; namely, of the word and Sacraments, 1. Corinth. 4. 1. Ministers for Christ, not sacrificers of Christ: wherefore neither haue yee any word of institution; and consequently no sacrament.

And I pray you tell me, if you will make euery one of your orders a sacrament; then must you needs haue as many sacraments as there are orders: and so shall you haue seuen sacraments more than you thought; and so fourteene in all: for you doe distinguish all the orders in office and forme of consecration one from another: and therefore they cannot all make one sacrament.

Belarmus answereth; that all these make but unum sacramentum generis, one Sacrament in generall, though they be diuers in speciall, cap. 8. Answer; by this reason, Baptisme, Orders, Confirmation, shall make but one Sacrament, seeing they are all of one kind or gender, that is, Sacraments irreiterable. But seeing all these seuerall orders doe differ both in matter and forme, it cannot be auoided, but there must be diuers Sacraments.

Epist. 118.
cap. 1.

Augustine saith, Christus sacramentis numero paucissimis societatem populi colligit: Christ hath ioyned together his people with most fewe sacraments: and then he nameth Baptisme, and the Communion: Et si quid aliud in Scripturis canonicis commendatur: And if any other be commended in Scripture: Ergo, there is no sacrament of orders, because it is not found in Scripture, as we haue said.

Their owne writers are against them: the Master of Sentences speaking of Presbyters, hic ordo à filijs Aaron sumptus initium, This order tooke beginning from the sonnes of Aaron. Leb. 4. dist. 24. 1. And of Exorcists, ibid. E. Hic ordo à Salomone videtur descendisse, This order cometh to haue descended from Salomon: ibid. 1. Ecclesia sibi Subdiaconos & Acolythes quosdam, The Church hath ordained Subdeacons and Acolythes: De his solis præceptum Apostoli habemus, Of these onely we haue the precept of the Apostles: speaking of Deacons and Presbyters. If some of these were instituted before Christ, some of them since Christ and the Apostles, by the Church, can they be sacraments of the Gospell, which must be instituted onely by Christ? Durandus, Censurus, two learned Papists, denie the inferiour orders of Subdeacons and vnder, to be sacraments.

This doctrine is sealed: Laurence Maxwell persecuted, because hee denied that the order of Priesthood is a sacrament. Fox. p. 1041. col. 2.

OF THE MATERIALL PART, OF ORDERS,

which is the imposition of hands.

The Papists.

108. Error.

This matter is chiefly controuerted among the Papists themselves: Some of them hold, that the imposition of hands is not an essentiall part of orders, but onely accidentall; as Dominicus à Soto. dist. 24. qu. 1. artic. 4. Others affirme it to be essentiall: Petrus à Soto. lib. 5. de iuris. Hosius. confess. Polemic. c. 50. whereunto Belarmus subscribeth, c. 9.

Argum. In the Scripture euery where, when any are ordained, mention is made of the imposition of hands, Act. 6. 6. 1. Tim. 4. 14. and in other places: Ergo, it is an essentiall part of this sacrament, Belar. ibid.

Ans. First, in the election of Matthias to be one of the twelue, there was no imposition of hands vsed, Act. 1. therefore not euery where: Neither can it be answered, that this ceremony was omitted, because Matthias was extraordinarily called by the direction of the Spirit, for Act. 13. 2. Paul and Barnabas were called of the Spirit, yet they impose hands vpon them. Secondly, these places alledged, onely prouue it to be requisite as a decent ceremonie, not necessarie, as an essentiall part, without the which there could be no ordination.

The Protestants.

That imposition of hands is a comely and decent ceremonie to be vsed of the Church in ordaining of Ministers, we willingly graunt, and our Church doth retaine it: but we take it not to be of the essence of orders, as that without it, vpon no occasion, there could be any ordination.

Argum. Christ, when he instituted his Apostles, breathed vpon them, he laid not on his hands: the Apostles cast lottes for Matthias, no imposition of hands is mentioned: Ergo, it is not an essentiall part of orders, for then it could not be omitted.

Decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 16. c. 1. & c. 3. Greg. 9. They determine, that orders ministred sin impositione manuum, without imposition of hands, should not be iterated: Ergo, orders may be ministred without it.

THE THIRD PART, OF THE EFFICACIE which they ascribe to this Sacrament.

The Papists.

This sacrament of orders, as they call it, giueth a double grace. First, it giueth those that are ordained, abilitie and power to execute their office: which is to consecrate and offer vp the bodie and blood of Christ; wherein chiefly the priesthood consisteth, and not in preaching the word: for they may be priests, though they preach not, Council. Trident. sess. 23. can. 1. By holy orders then the holy Ghost is actually bestowed, when those words are pronounced, Accipe spiritum sanctum, Receiue yee the holy Ghost, Canon 4.

109. Error.

The Protestants.

First, the Gospell alloweth no externall sacrificing Priesthood, but a spirituall onely, whereby every Christian is made a King and Priest to offer spirituall sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving vnto God. Apocal. 1. 6. And the onely essentiall part of the office of Ministers vnder the Gospell, is, to be able dispensers of the mysteries of the worde and Sacraments, 1. Corinth. 4. 1. 2. Corinth. 3. 6.

So Augustine also saith: Quicumque aut Episcopus aut Presbyter frequenter de Deo loquitur, & quodlibet vitam eternam perueniat, annunciat, merito Angelus Dei dicitur. Whosoever, Bishoppe or Presbyter, doth speake freely of God, and preacheth the way to eternall life, is an angell of God. This then is the only principall office of true Pastors, to teach the way to the kingdome of God. Secondly, it is also a great vntuth, that the holy Ghost is straightway giuen to all those, vpon whom seuer hands are laid, and they admitted to Orders: For what need then that triall and examination, which ought to be had of those, which are to be ordained, whereof S. Paul speaketh, 1. Ioth. 5. 22. if the only laying on of hands can make able Ministers?

In Apocal. hom. 2.

Nostri sacerdotes, saith one, super multis quotidie nomen Domini & verba benedictionis imponunt, sed in omni effectus est: Our Priests doe lay the word of blessing vpon many, calling vpon the name of God, but in few followeth any effect of that blessing. And hee giueth the reason in another place, Dei est, effectum tribuere benedictionis: It belongeth vnto God, to giue effect to priestly blessing: Ergo, it is not by onely act and vsing of the ceremonie bestowed.

Ex veter. test. qu. 109. inter opera Augusti.

Augustinus cap. 1. 4. Præconis officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit: He taketh vpon him the office of a preacher, that cometh to the priesthood.

Secundus Ciceronius part. 4. ad p. 1. Officium Parochorum in duobus potissimum situm est, disseminatione verbi administratione sacramentorum: The office of parish priests, consisteth especially in two things: in sowing of the word, and administration of the Sacraments.

Ibid. part. 6. Verbi ministerium sanctissim. Apostolus ceteris omnibus præfere, &c. The most holy Apostle preferreth the word before all other things, saying to the Corinthians, that Christ sent him to preach, not to baptize. The office then of Ministers of the Gospell chiefly standeth in preaching their owne decrees: Distin. 3. 8. c. 6. Substantia sacerdotij vera scripturarum diuinarum disciplina: The substance of the priesthood is the true knowledge or discipline of the diuine Scriptures. Remigius commun. lib. 1. tit. 9. c. 4. Sextus 4. calleth them buccinatores spiritus sancti, the trumpetters of the holy Ghost and preachers of the word. Ibid. lib. 5. tit. 7. c. 1. Benedict. 11. Post baptismum inter omnia magis ad salutem necessaria est propositio verbi, &c. After Baptisme among other things more necessarie to saluation, is the propounding of the word of God, whereby the hearers are instructed in the faith. What orders then call you those, wherein the more necessarie things to saluation, such as the preaching of the word, are omitted?

And that orders doe not conferre grace vpon him, that is ordained, their decrees also testifie: Conf. 1. qu. 7. c. 29. Non omnes Episcopi, Episcopi: All Bishops, are not Bishops. Ibid. c. 32. Qui regimini in se rationem non habet, &c. He that hath no gouernment of himselfe, impudens causi dicendus quidam Episcopus, is to be counted rather an vnshamefast dogge, than a Bishop.

Erron. Thom. 1. 1. 4. c. 5. Scientia ordinato non confertur: Knowledge is not conferred vpon him, that is ordained.

The Master of Sentences, lib. 4. distin. 19. a. Multi sacerdotes, nec ante consecrationem, nec post, scientiam habent discernendi: Many Priests neither before their consecration, nor after, haue the knowledge of discerning. How doe orders then conferre grace?

Lastly see the testimonie of Iohn Tenkesburie holy Martyr, who affirmed, that a Priest by taking orders, receiueh not more grace, vnlesse his faith be increased, For pag. 1026. col. 1.

The Papists.

Another effect of their Sacrament of Orders, they say, is to imprint a certaine indeleble marke and character in him that is ordained, which can neither by sinne, Apostasie, or he-resie be blotted out, Rhemist. 2. Corinib. 1. fell. 7. And therefore a priest once ordained can neuer lose his orders, or become a lay man againe, Concil. Trident. sess. 24. can. 4. Bellarm. cap. 10.

110. Error.

The Protestants.

Fox pag. 613.

First, the practise of the popish Church is contrarie to their owne rules: for I would haue them tell me, whether they tooke not the Priesthood and annoynting from Iohn Huffle, when with a payre of sheares they clipped off the skin of his head most cruelly, as they were busie in degrading of him, in the Councell of Constance: Or when they had grossly abused that reuerend Father Bishop Cranmer, and vnmanerly behaued themselves in his degradation, and clapt him in a poore beggerly, thread-bare, Lay-mans gowne; did they not think, that they had dispoyled him of his priesthood? What is now become, masters, of your indeleble character? Or is it your meaning, that it may be clipped or scraped off onely, but not washt off, or lightly rubbed away? Your owne cruell deedes doe ouerthrow your popish principles.

Epistol. 50.

Augustine is against you: Constitutum est in ecclesia ne quisquam post criminis alicuius poenitentiam clericatum accipiat, ad clericatum redas, aut in clericatu maneat: It is a constitution of the Church, that no man after publike penance done for some notorious crime, should be either made a Clerke, or returne to his Clerkship or priesthood, or be suffered to continue therein. If his priesthood were neither restored to him, nor he suffered to remaine therein, then surely hee had lost his priesthood.

We haue here euident testimonie of both lawes: Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. leg. 12. Arcad. Curialis clericus A Courtier taking Clergie vpon him, is brought backe to his former estate. Ibid. leg. 33. anathema. A seruant without his masters knowledge taking orders, within a yeere may be challenged, and must returne to serue his master.

Decret. dist. 54. c. 7. A seruant promoted to the Clergie without his masters consent, minus gradum, let him lose his degree. Dist. 50. c. 12. Martin. Lapsus post ordinationem nullum gradum sacerdotij adipisci potest: He that is fallen after his ordination, can haue no degree of the priesthood. Caus. 1. qu. 1. c. 60. Ordinatus & non baptizatus, &c. Hee that is ordained and not baptized, must be ordained againe. Caus. 11. qu. 3. c. 10. Nitholam: Episcopi depositi communicant ut laici: Bishops deposed must communicate as lay men. What now is become of the indeleble character, if Clergie may be lost, and Clerkes become lay men againe?

Concil. Lateranens. part. 50. cap. 56. Si seruus fraude aliqua ad sacros ordines peruenierit, si dominus illum libertate non donauerit, deponendus est, & gradum amittat: If a seruant or bondslau by craft attaine to orders, if his master will not make him free, let him be deposed, and lose his degree of orders. Where is now your indeleble character? Concerning the indeleble character imprinted, as they say by orders, see more, Controv. 1. 1. quast. 2. part. 11.

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE Minister of Orders.

The Papiists.

110. Error.

They hold, that they are neither Priests nor Deacons, which are not ordained of Bishops, Bellarmin. de sacram. Ordinib. cap. 11. he meaneth popish Bishops, such as receiue their consecration and other Episcopals from Rome: and such Bishops hee saith onely are Ministers and conferrers of Orders. Arguments he vseth none, neither alleageth any testimonies at large, but referreth vs to the Controversie of the Sacraments in generall: but hee forgetteth himselfe; for in that place there is no such thing handled: but he onely proueth this proposition, that verus Minister sacramentorum, &c. that the true Minister of the Sacraments is not euery man, but he only that is lawfully ordained in the Church, lib. 1. de Sacram. c. 24. which proposition we willingly grant.

The Protestants.

IN this assertion of the Papiists, I note three errors, as it now followeth to be shewed. First, where Bellarmin. affirmeth, that they are no Ministers or Presbyters which are not ordained by popish Bishops: we doubt not to anouch the contrarie, that they are no true Presbyters that receiue ordination from such: for their Bishops are vndoubtedly the Ministers and officers of Antichrist: which was the very position maintained by Iohn Huffle: Sunt procuratores & discipuli Antichristi: Papa, Cardinales, Patriarche, Archiepiscopi, Episcopi, &c. The Pope, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, are the proctors and disciples of Antichrist. One of their owne written speaking of their Bishops, saith, they are not Episcopi, but apostopi: not ouerscers, but by-seers: Episcopi praeferuntur, et ad Timorib. Being then the officers of Antichrist, they cannot create or ordaine Ministers for Christ.

Secondly, neither is it true, that there are no Ministers but by the ordination of Bishops: for this were to condemne all those reformed Churches, of Heluetia, Belgia, Geneva, with others, that haue not receiued this forme of ecclesiasticall gouernment. Vndoubtedly where godly Bishops are, able to the practise of the Church of England, which requireth all the Presbyters present to lay on their hands together with the Bishop vpon his head, that is to be ordained.

Againe, Decret. Greg. lib. 1. tit. 13. c. 1. Alexand. 3. Ordines minores; & non Episcopis conferuntur: The lesse orders (that is, all the Subdeaconship) are conferred by them that are no Bishops. Widius. 1. 4. c. 11. Innocent. 3. Abbas si off presbyter conferre potest ordinem clericalem: An Abbot in his Monastrie, if he be a Presbyter may giue orders. Thus we see, that by their owne law, there are other Ministers of orders beside Bishops.

Now because I haue entred to make mention of the calling of Bishops (and there being two chiefe aduersaries to this dignitie in our Church; the Papists that refuse it as hereticall; the Anabaptists that condemne it as Antichristian) before I leaue this place, I will briefly deliuer this honorable calling, from both their slaunders and accusations.

THAT THE CALLING OF BISHOPS AS IT IS receiued in the Church of England, is not Antichristian.

IN the office and calling of Bishops, somewhat is diuine; some things are humane; and in both Bishops there is somewhat Antichristian: these three points, I purpose by Gods grace, briefly to declare in order. First then, that it is a diuine ordinance, that among the Ministers of the Church, there should be a superioritie, and that one should be appointed among the rest, to whom chiefly, though not soly, the imposition of hands, and administration of discipline did appertain: thus I trust to make it euident. First, the Scripture evidently sheweth, that even among the Apostles themselves there was a certaine order obserued: as Galath. 2. 10. Iames, Peter, Iohn, were counted as the chiefe, and as the pillars among the rest: as Act. 15. the assemblie of Apostles and Elders was moderated by Iames and Peter. And to this purpose speaketh Cyprian. de simplici. Cler. The Iam doubtesto were the rest of the Disciples, that Peter was, having an equall fellowship with him, Iohn in Iam, and Peter: but the beginning thereof proceedeth from unitie, to signifie to vs, that there is but one Church. Againe, who doubteth but that the twelue Apostles were in office and calling superior to the 70. Disciples, which were also sent forth to preach, Luk. 10. 1. for else what needed another to be chosen in Iudas roome, and namely Matthias, supposed by the ancient writers to haue beene one of the seuentie, if the Apostles office had not been greater? If there had been an equalitie, a supplie had not been necessarie: neither had it been requisite or fit to remoue Matthias from his Discipleship to an office of the same equalitie.

2. Beside, the seuen Epistles written to the seuen Churches of Asia, Reuel. 2. 3. are directed to the Angels, which are the chiefe pastors of the Churches, who are in the name of the whole Church blamed and commended, as in whose hands the Ecclesiasticall discipline chiefly consisted. Saint Paul also writeth to Timothie, as the chiefe pastor in Ephesus, to whom chiefly the imposition of hands appertained, 1. Tim. 5. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man: vpon the which place, I haue thus wrote, notandum est, it is to be noted out of this place, that Timothie was in the Ephesian presbyterie or Ministerie, & was, the President, or chiefe Pastor: And to omit here the testimonies of the fathers, who all with one consent affirme Timothie to haue beene Bishop of Ephesus, the same is affirmed by the reformed Church of Bohemia, in their confession, Harv. sect. 11. To like for Paul writeth to Timothie a Ruler and a Bishop.

3. Secondly, concerning the difference and superioritie of Bishops, wee haue plentifull euidence from the ancient Church: Can. 2. Apostol. 13. Episcopus &c. The Bishop must not haue propriam Parochiam, his proper Church or parish; so then was his diocesse called: Carthag. 4. can. 11. Episcopus &c. The Bishop must sitte highest in the assemblie of the Presbyters: Cyprian. lib. 4. epist. 9. Christus dicit ad Apostolos, &c. Christ saith to his Apostles, and consequently to all gouernors, propositus, which succede the Apostles vicaria ordinationis, as their Vicars or deputies by ordination: Hieron. ad Rusticum: Singuli ecclesiarum Episcopi, &c. In euery Church but one or a single Bishop, one archpresbyter, one archdeacon, &c. as in a ship but one gouernour, in an house one master; in an armie, one Captaine: Ambrose in 1. Timoth. 3. after a Bishop he setteth the ordination of a Deacon, and why? because there is but one ordination of a Bishop and a Presbyter, for each of them is a Priest: Episcopus tamen inter Presbyteros primus: But a Bishop is the first or chiefe among the Presbyters. But the testimonies of the fathers concerning the antiquitie of Bishops is infinite: who listeth to see further, I referre him to the learned treatise of a reuerend writer of our Church, written of the perpetuall gouernement of Christs Church.

Thirdly, let vs see the consent of the reformed Churches, and the writers thereof. M. Calu. epistol. 87. written to the Lord Protector of England, Episcopi & parochi &c. Let the Bishops and the parish Ministers be especially intent, that the Supper of the Lord be not polluted: cap. 190. To the King of Polonia: Effus deinde vel provincialis, &c. If there were provincial or ciuile Bishops, which should especially be intent to conferre order, as nature teacheth, that one should be cho-out of every college, to whom the chiefe care should belong : and epist. 199. Fratres nostri Episcopi. Our brethren the Bishops of England are deteyned in prison: So farre was this godly man from counting our Bishops Antichristian, that he giueth them the name of brethren. Idem M. Baza This was essentiall in the matter we haue in hand, that by Gods perpetuall ordinance it is, & shall be necessarie, that some in the presbyterie, first in place and dignitie should moderate every action, with what might which by Gods law is giuen vnto him in respons. ad tract. de Ministris. lib. 1. fol. 153. So also the reformed Church of Swereland confesseth: Such as haue an earnest desire for the flocke of Christ, and do labour faithfully in the word and doctrine, &c. are acknowledged of our Preachers for true Bishops; such as the Scripture euery where speaketh of. Thus it appeareth, that to haue superiortie among the Ministers of the Gospel, that one should be chiefe and aboue the rest, by Scripture, consent of the ancient and new reformed Churches found to be diuine and Apostollicall.

Secondly, I affirmed somewhat in the calling of Bishops, to arise rather of humane constitution, than of diuine prescription: as it appeareth by these particulars following.

First, that Bishops were subiected to their Primates and Metropolitans, was an ordinance of the Church: as Hierome testifieth lib. de 7. ordinibus; or who els is the author: Propter hoc & nomen. For this cause the Episcopall election of late was referred to the Metropolitane, &c. and the Priest begin not of right, but of necessitie to suffer another Priest ouer them.

Concil. Aquisgranens. c. 8. It is thus alleaged out of Isidore, Solum propter auctoritatem, &c. Only for authorities sake to the chiefe Priest is reserved the ordination of Clerkes, &c.

In the same place, Consecratio virginum, the consecration of virgines is for the same cause retained also: but this is now out of vse in our Church.

Of the same sort is confirmation, as Hierome witnesseth, aduers. Luciferian. Si hoc loco quæritur. If thou aske in this place, wherefore he that is baptized receiveth onely the holy Ghost by the hands of a Bishop, know, that this obseruation is rather for the honour of the Priesthood, than necessitie of any law.

Hierome againe in the same place, Inde venit, &c. From thence it commeth, that is to auoid that without the Bishop bid, neyther a presbyter or deacon may baptize: but this vse, very iurious to the office of Ministers, is discontinued in our Church.

The titles of honor giuen to Bishops haue the same beginning as Augustine witnesseth epist. ad Hieronym. Secundum bonorum vocabula, according to the names of honor, which ecclesiastical vie hath obtained, a Bishops office is greater than a Priests.

Of the same kind are the possessions and reuenues of Bishops, as Augustine saith; Vix videri potest, &c. That portion which I had from my parents, is hardly the 10. part in comparison of the manors of the Church; which I am held now as Lord to eniuy, epist. 5.

The distinction also and diuision of Diocesses is grounded vpon the ancient custome of the Church: decreet part. 2. caus. 9. qn. 3. c. 2. Vnusquisque, Episcopum, &c. It behooueth euery Bishop to haue power ouer his owne Diocesse, and of the region which is vnder his citie: ex Concil. Antiocheno.

Certaine causes as matrimoniall and testamentarie haue by the fauour of Christian Emperours bene referred to Bishops; as Cod. lib. 1. tit. 6. ley. 28. Authentinus thus decreed: That where de iure uocatur appointed, the Bishop shall distribute the goods.

they were guided the Church vnder the Apostles; Paulatin ad unum, &c. the whole care thereof was little and little deriued to one. To this it is further thus added by a reuerent learned man, Idem of our Church: So as leugh by custome Presbyters were vterly excluded from all aduice and governance of Ambrose complayneth, and Bishops onely intermeddled with the regiment of the Church: the manner of subiection in Presbyters, and prelature in Bishops grew onely in continuance of time, and not by ordinance of Christ or his Apostles: See more of this matter, Contr. 5. qn. 3. part. 2. of the difference of Ministers.

These and other such like additions, priuiledges and increasing of the dignitie of Bishops, grounded rather vpon custome then any commandement, do not yet make that function vnlawfull or Antichristian: To this wee haue the consent of other reformed Churches: Hierome. fell. 11. Confession of Swereland; Our Preachers haue great iniurie offered them, in that they are blamed, as though they sought to bring the auctoritie of ecclesiasticall Prelates to nothing, whereas they mean for to bring them, that worldly gouernement, and auctoritie; which they haue; but they haue often misd, that they would come nearer the ecclesiasticall commandements, &c. fell. 16. caus. 1. Aupurg. We do not yet desire to weaken the auctoritie of ecclesiasticall power, we deuiat nothing from the dignitie of Bishops; wee do not disturbe the good order of the Church: Again; fell. 17. in the confession of Aupurg. The Church do not desire of the Bishops, that they would repaire peace and concord with the lesse of their honour, but yet good Pastors ought to do, namely they desire, that they would remit vniuersall burdens, &c. If the calling ling then of Bishops were Antichristian, all these Churches should be no lesse, that allow them.

3. Thirdly, I will now in the third place shewe the difference betwene Protestant Bishops, and Popish Bishops, that it may appeare wherein indeed these are worthily counted Antichristian.

1. Popish Bishops receive their power from the Beast, and doe fight vnder Antichrists banner: so doe not our Bishops, who expect not any forraigne ordination, but are made overseers by the spirit of God, directing & governing every true Church, according to the Scriptures, Act. 20. 28.

2. Popish Bishops are maintainers of corrupt doctrine, and enemies to the faith, contrarie to the Scriptures, Tit. 1. 9. Saint Pauls bishop must hold fast the faithfull word according to doctrine: So are our Bishops defenders and preachers of the truth.

3. Popish Bishops for the most part are vnlearned and vnpreaching Prelates, and iudged herein by their owne writers, Rhemist. annot. in 1. Tim. v. 17. contrarie to the Scriptures: A bishop must be apt to teach, 1. Timoth. 3. 2. But our Bishops are preachers; there is not one at this day in the Church of England, but is both able, and doth preach: which is the most weightie parte, and giueth greatest grace to their pastorall office: for whome we doe pray, that God would giue them grace both in their life and doctrine to set forth his holy word: as Saint Paul warneth Timothee, Preach the word, be instant, in season, out of season: according also to the Canons, Carthage. 4. can. 1. Episcopus, &c. A Bishop must onely attend vpon reading, prayer, and preaching of the word.

4. Popish bishops must ascend by seuen steppes or degrees: first, hee must be a Doorekeeper, then a Reader, then an Exorcist, an Acolythist, a Subdeacon, Deacon, Priest, and last of all a Bishop, ex deo. Gay. But our bishops ascend but by two degrees, of Presbyters and Deacons, according to the Scriptures, which describe the office onely of Bishops, vnder them also comprehending Presbyters and Deacons, as degrees of the ministerie, 1. Tim. 3. 2. 12.

5. Popish Bishops are superstitiously consecrated, with the anointing of oile, they haue their mitre, pall, crosse, crozier staffe, with other superstitious ornaments contrarie to the Scriptures, 1. Tim. 1. 6. Timothee was ordained onely by imposition of handes: so are our Bishops consecrated, with imposition of hands and prayer.

6. The popish Prelates doe reserue vnto themselves for their aduantage, many superstitions rites and customes, as to baptize belles, to dedicate Churches, to annoint with Chrisme and such like: which things Saint Pauls Bishop hath no charge of, 1. Tim. 3. neither haue our Bishops any thing to doe with such things.

7. Popish Prelates are as Lordes over their flocke, ouerruling their faith; and the Clergie and people are as their subiects, nay which is more, their slaues: contrarie to the Apostle, 2. Cor. 1. 24. Not that we haue dominion over your faith: and 1. Pet. 5. 3. Not as though ye were Lords over Gods inheritance, But so are not our Bishops, who disdaine not in the ordaining of ministers, to call them brethren: as Hierome saith, Pontifices Christi, &c. We reuerence Bishops, preaching the true faith, not with the feare of Masters, but with the honour of Fathers; that wee may yeeld reuerence to Bishops as Bishops, and not vnder one name to serue another: Hieron. ad Theophyl.

8. Saint Pauls Bishop must be spes. adu. a lover of good men, Tit. 1. 8. So are not popish Prelates, who hate to death the professors of the Gospell of Christ: So doe not our Bishops; I doubt not but many among them are patrons and louers of the truth.

9. Popish Prelates take vpon them to dispense Indulgences, to forgive sinnes for dayes, monthes, yeares; by their owne power to acquite and discharge sinners: But our Bishops take not vpon them to be conferrers or bestowers of Gods graces or mercies, but according to the Scriptures, to be as Ministers by whome the people belecue, 1. Cor. 3. 5. as disposers of the secret of Gods will, 1. Cor. 4. 1. as helpers of our joy, 2. Cor. 1. 24.

10. Saint Pauls Bishops must be readie to suffer aduersitie for the truth, 2. Timoth. 4. 5. so doe not popish Prelates, who haue made many martyrs, but themselves neuer were martyrs of or for the truth: but many of our Bishops haue been faithfull martyrs, and suffered for the truth, as B. Granmer, Ridley, Hooper, Latimer, Ferrar, of blessed memorie.

11. Saint Pauls Bishop beleeueth and is perswaded, that the Scriptures sufficiently containe all doctrine necessarie to saluation, 2. Tim. 3. 15, 17. So also doe our Bishops professe in their consecration, as is euident in the booke of Orders: but so doe not the popish Prelates beleue, neither are they so perswaded, holding many vnwritten traditions necessarie beside Scripture.

12. Our Bishops doe professe, when they are consecrated, To teach nothing as required of necessity to eternall saluation, but that they are perswaded may be concluded, and promoued by the Scriptures: according as S. Paul saith to Timothee, 2. Timoth. 3. 14. Continue thou in all things which thou hast learned, and art perswaded of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them: But popish Prelates doe binde mens consciences to obserue their own traditions, as the Church of Saxonic complained in their confession: The Bishops take to themselves authoritie to ordaine newe rites of worship, and to bind consciences, Harmen. sect. 17.

13. Saint Pauls Bishop is required to be sober, watching, modest; so is it demanded of our Bishops in their consecration: Will you denie vngodlinesse and worldly lustes, an l iue soberly? Such are not popish Prelates, who forcing themselves to keepe the violent vowe of single life, are many of them detested of incontinent and adulterous life: as Pope Iohn 13. was wounded and slaine in adultery. Lausprand. lib. 6. Two adulterous Bishops of the Tridentine Councell, were slaine in adultery: on protestat. concion. German.

Popish Prelates take to themselves authoritie to giue power vnto Priests, to make the bodies of Christ, and to offer sacrifice for the quicke and the dead: for this is the very forme of the order of popish priesthood inuented by man, and not grounded vpon the word of God: but our Bishops do continue ministers to be faithfull dispensers of the word of God, and of his holy sacraments: agreeable to the Scriptures, 1. Tim. 4. 13. Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, do doctrine: 2. Tim. 4. 2. Preach the word.

Popish Prelates neglecting their Episcopall office, take vpon them the vse of both swords: to be captaines and leaders of armies, muster matters: Such an one was Henry Spencer, anno 1560. or thereabout, that was Pope Urbanes captaine Generall, and in his owne person fought the Popes battailes: Fox. p. 446. Such an one was Theodorike Bishop of Colen, that waged many battailes. Cardinall Ballua vnder Lodovic. 11. King of Fraunce, tooke generall muster of the soulds in Paris: whereupon one Chabannu a Courtier merrily said to the King: Send me, I pray you, to the Bishopricke to consecrate Priests, for I may as well doe that, as be muster souldiers: Espeue. di. gloss. in 1. ad Tim. lib. 3. c. 6. And it is not long since a Cardinall was Lieutenant of the king of Spaine his forces in the Low countreys. But Saint Pauls bishop must be no fighter: 1. Tim. 3. 3. neither are the Protestants bishops such.

Popish Prelates doe most tyrannically compell their Clergie to liue vnmarrid, and to forsake their wiuces to whome they were coupled, as is euident in the stories of Lausfranke and Augustine Bishops of Canterburie: contrarie to the Apostle, Heb. 13. 4. Marriage is honorable among all: but our Bishops enforce no such thing.

Popish Prelates are most grosse idolatours, falling downe before stockes and stones, attending the people to doe the like: contrarie to the Apostle, 1. Ioh. 5. 21. Keepe your selues from idols: But our Bishops are free from all idolatrie.

Popish Prelates doe take themselves and their Clergie to be exempted from the ciuill power, contrary to the Apostle, Rom. 13. 1. Let every soule be subiect to the higher powers: so are not our Bishops, who doe most willingly submit themselves to the lawes of the Prince, and at their consecration bind themselves by oath thereunto.

Popish Prelates are capable to be Lord Cardinals, and so to insult aboue their brethren and other Bishops, and to be the Popes agents and factors: contrarie to the Apostle, who reprooueth Simon for loosing to haue the preheminence, Iohn Epist. 1. 9. And Hierome saith, Whose power is it, whether at Rome, Eugubium, Constantinople, they are of the same merit or worthinesse of the papisthood: Hieron. Epist. But our Bishops are capable of no such proud or ambitious title.

Popish Bishops and Cardinals are capable of the papacie, the seate and throne of Antichrist, and Satan: for they are not true Bishops: as Antipas was slaine, euen where Satans throne was, because he kept the name of Christ, and did not sit in Satans throne: Reuel. 2. 13. And our Bishops at their consecration do renounce and disdaine the power and iurisdiction of all foraine Princes, Potentates, and so doe not communicate at all with that throne of Satan.

In these and many other materiall points, doe our Bishops differ from the popish Prelates: and yet if they agreed with them in all other matters, and dissented only in doctrine and faith, it were sufficient to cleare and discharge them from their slanderous accusation of Antichristianisme: for where Satans throne is not, there cannot Antichrist sit: and where Christes name is kept, his faith not denied, but sincerely taught, there Satans throne is not, Reuelat. 2. 13. Therefore the Church of England, professing the true doctrine and faith of Christ, is not vnder the kingdome of Antichrist: and so I conclude with that saying, Nicei. council. c. 2. ad. 2. Nostri Hierarchie substantia, &c. The substance of our Hierarchie are the heavenly words, that is, the true knowledge of the diuine Scriptures: the Church and Ministerie then of England hauing the substance of the true ministerie, cannot be iudged Antichristian: neither are our Bishops the ministers of Antichrist, being preachers and professors of the true faith. Now I will proceed.

THE FIFT PART, OF THE CEREMONIES.

They doe annoynt the hands of such as are ordained, with oyle, and do inioyne them to shau their crownes. And the higher degree of priesthood they haue, so much broader must their crowne be, Telemachus. lib. 4. Error. Bellarm. cap. 12.

The Protestants.

WE haue the ſame opinion of theſe ceremonies, as we haue of the popiſh orders themſelues, counting them worthe of no place in the Church of God. As for the ſuperſtitious cuſtome of annoynting, it is a Iewiſh rite, better beſeeming Aarons order, than the Miniſters of Ieſu Chriſt. Looke how he was annoynted, ſo are we: of him it is ſaid, The ſpirit of the Lord is vpon me, becauſe he hath annoynted me, Luk. 4. 18. So the inward working of the ſpirit is our annoynting. 1. Iohn 2. 27. Againe, in diuers places of the Scripture wee reade of ordaining by impoſition of hands, Act. 13. 3. 1. Tim. 4. 14. and 5. 22. 2. Tim. 1. 6. But there is no mention at all made of annoynting with oyle.

And as for the ſhauing of the crowne, it is worſe than a Iewiſh ceremonie: for it ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Heathen: and the Iewes were forbidden to cut or make bald their heads, Deuter. 14. 1. Leuit. 19. 28. In ſo much, as it was a ſigne of more holines amongſt them not to ſuffer the raſor to come vpon their heads, as it is to be ſcene in the law of the Nazarites, Numbers 6. The reſt of the queſtions that concerne the calling of Miniſters, we haue entreated of more at large, Controverſ. 7. of Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

Concil. Elberin. can. 55. Sacerdotes, qui tantum ſacrificantium coronam portant, nec ſacrificium habent, placuit poſt biennium communionem accipere: Priests, that haue only a ſhauen crowne like idolatrous ſacrificers, and yet doe not ſacrifice to Idols, after two yeeres may receiue the Communion. We ſee that by this Canon they are cenſured, that had ſhorne crownes.

Decret. Gregor. lib. 1. tit. 15. c. 1. Innocent. 3. Among the Greekes, Non conſueuerunt poſt ſacerdotium conſecrari inungi: Biſhops, when they are conſecrated, are not annoynted. If it were an Apoſtolicall inſtitution, it would haue been generally obſerued in all Churches.

Conſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 7. Hanc coronam habent ab inſtitutione Romana eccleſie: They haue their ſhauen crowne from the inſtitution of the Romane Church. Then not from the inſtitution of the Apoſtles.

Magiſter ſententiar. lib. 4. diſt. 2. 4. b. Tonsura eccleſiaſtica uſus à Nazareis exortu uidetur: The uſe of Eccleſiaſticall tonsure or ſhauing ſeemeth to haue taken beginning from the Nazarites. How then can it be a ceremonie of the Goſpell, being altogether a Iudaicall rite? Nay the Iewes neuer ſo abounded in ſuperſtitious obſervations and fooliſh ſignifications. The Priests ſhauing beſt (they ſay) betokeneth that they are as it were Kings of the Church, which is ſignified by the crowne, to rule themſelues and others: And ſo indeede popiſh prelates haue taken vpon them to be Kings indeede, exalting themſelues aboue Kings and Princes: Conſ. 12. qu. 1. c. 7. Secondly, Raſio capitis eſt temporalium omnium depositio: The ſhauing of the head ſignifieth the laying aſide of temporall things: ibid. This did well appeare in their cloiſtered Maueclings, that had ſcattered together the riches of the land. Thirdly, Deuolutio capitis eſt reuelatio mentis: The baring of the head ſignifieth the reuealing of the minde, that they ſhould not be ignorant of Gods ſecrets: Magiſter ſententiar. ibid. And no maruile, their ſhaueing Priests were ſuch great Clerkes. Fourthly, their ſhauing betokened the mortifying of the fleſh, and the ſubduing of vice: Magiſter ibid. The vncleane ſtories of Monkiſh liues do well make prooſe of their mortification. Thus wee ſee how vnlike they are in their workes, to the meaning of their ſhauea crownes vpon their heads. The ſuperſtitious Iewes themſelues may well laugh at ſuch toyes.

To this agreeeth the iudgement of the holy Martyrs: Robert Smith holy Martyr: Aſſeruing annoynting, greaſing, polling, rounding: there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods booke: and therefore I haue nothing to doe ſo beleeue your orders. And as for you my Lord, if you had grace or holineſſe, you would not ſo diſfigure your ſelfe, as you doe Edw. 1. 1693.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF EXTREAME VNC- tion. Firſt, whether it be a ſacrament. Secondly, of the effi-cacie. Thirdly, of the ceremonies.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER EX-
treame Vnction be a Sacrament,

III. Error.

That extreame Vnction is rightly and properly a Sacrament, which is (ſay they) the annoynting of thoſe that are extreame ſicke, to aſſure them of remiſſion of their finnes: it was concluded in the Chapter of Trent. ſeſſ. 14. can. 1. and is generally maintained by the Church of Rome, Belarmus cap. 2. Argum. Iam. 5. 14. The Sacrament of extreame Vnction in this place is plainly promiſed by the Apoſtle, being inſtituted before by our Saviour Chriſt, Mark 6. 13. For here is remiſſion of finnes

James promised to the outward element, that is, the annoynting of the sicke with oyle: Ergo, a Sacrament, Rhenish.

Ans. 1. This annoynting of oyle, was a signe onely of the miraculous gift of healing, that was then in the Church, and therefore was no longer to continue, than the gift it selfe. But it is not like, will they say, that euery one of the Elders had this miraculous gift of healing. Ans. Though euery particular Elder perhaps had it not, yet the whole companie of the Eldership might haue it, and speaketh of the gift of prophesie giuen to the Eldership, 1. Tim. 4. 14. And it is not like that the Apostle would haue promised health by calling for the Elders, if the gift had not been general in euery congregation.

Ans. 2. Neither is remission of sinnes annexed to the element, but to the exercise of prayer made in faith. The prayer of faith, saith the Apostle, shall heale the sicke.

Adversaries on the contrarie side laboureth to proue, that this place of James cannot be vnderstood of the miraculous gift of healing. First, if it had been a miraculous gift, it should haue been general, not onely to cure sicke folke, but the blind also and lame.

Contra. 1. As though there were not diuers miraculous gifts, which were not all in euery one, neither was it requisite so to be. Saint Paul distinguisheth the gifts of the spirit, as one hath the gift of healing, another the operation of great workes, 1. Corin. 12. 9, 10 as to cast out diuels, to heale those which were borne blinde, and such like: doth it follow now, that hee which had the one, must needs also haue the other? 2. The Iesuite controuleth the wisdom of our Saviour Christ, who although he endued his Apostles with a generall power to worke miracles, yet gave them this gift, that by this speciall meane the annoynting the sicke with oyle, they should heale them. Mark. 6. 13.

Advers. 2. If the Apostle had spoken of a miraculous gift, he would not haue prescribed them the water to worke by, namely oyle.

Contra. By this reason, that gift of healing, which the Apostles vsed, Mark. 6. 13. should not be miraculous, because there also, they are prescribed oyle: nor that, which is promised, Mark. 16. 18. because there is a prescription also, how they shall lay their hands vpon the sicke, and so heale them.

Advers. 3. If it had bin a miraculous gift, it should haue neuer failed, but they alwaies should haue recovered bodily health, and so none should haue dyed in the Apostles time.

Contra. 1. As though the miraculous gifts, which were then giuen vnto men, were infinite, and neuer measured, and directed according to Gods will: The Apostles had power giuen them to cast out diuels, Mark. 3. 15, yet could they not cast out a dumbe spirit, Mark. 9. 18. So that their miraculous giftes, then, and so often, and for the most part tooke place, when it pleased God, when hee saw it to be to his glorie, and needfull for his Church. 2. Neither doth it followe, that they which were thus once healed, should alwaies be healed, and so neuer dye: no more then Lazarus, who was once raised out of the graue, was preserved from death, who afterward notwithstanding dyed.

Advers. 4. The Apostle speaketh in direct termes of forgiuing of sinnes: therefore spirituall health is here vnderstood, rather than corporall.

Contra. We graunt, that remission of sinnes did concur with the outward miraculous gift, at frequent prayers of the faithfull. For how could the disease be cured, if the cause thereof, which was then, were not first remoued? but it followeth not, that the gift of bodily health was not there: For Christ, whom he healed bodily, to many of them also he forgave their sinnes, yet did hee heale by miracle, as Mark. 2. 5. Christ saith to the sicke of the palsey, thy sinnes are forgiven thee: he healed him both bodily and ghostly: shall wee say therefore, that he was not cured miraculously? Wherefore it remaineth, as wee answered before, that this gift of healing, which Saint James speaketh of, was miraculous, and so proueth no Sacrament: for it is all one with that gift, which the Apostles exercised, Mark. 6. which cannot be denied but to haue bin miraculous.

Thus much also is confessed: Inurrelig. Casarea. cap. 19. Inter initia fidei externa quaque corporis sanatio quasi interna sanationis signum conuequebatur &c. In the beginning, and springing vp of faith, the outward health of the bodie did followe as a signe of the inward healing: Quam admodum in alijs sacramentis ad confirmationem virtutis fidei interna virtus, externis signis & miraculis demonstratur: As in other Sacraments, for the confirmation of their weake faith, the inward vertue was shewed forth by outward signes and miracles: which are not needfull now. The gift of healing then was a miracle.

The Protestants.

Exreame Vnction is no conuenient ceremonie at all to be vsed in the Church, as tending to superstition, and breeding a vaine confidence in terrene elements: much lesse is it to be holden for a Sacrament.

Ans. 1. It hath no institution from Christ: for they themselves confesse, that Mark. 6. 13. there is but a preparatiue to the Sacrament of extreame Vnction, Rhemist. the protulagation and publishing thereof is set forth by the Apostle, Iam. 5. But this is not to be admitted, that Christ was a preparer of Sacraments onely, and that they were perfected and finished by his Apostles: nay they were not to adde any thing to the institution of Sacraments, but to take them as Christ deliuered them, 1. Cor. 11. 23.

The Master of the Sentences saith, Sacramentum vnctionis infirmorum, &c. The Sacrament of annoynting the sicke, is read to haue been instituted of the Apostles: Then is it no Sacrament, for Christ onely is the author of the Sacraments: as Bellarmine proueth at large, lib. 1. de Sacramentis in genere. 24. And it was thus decreed, Concil. Trident. sess. 7. c. 1. Siquis dixerit Sacramentum vni- non esse, anathema à Iesu Christo institutum, anathema sit. If any man say that the Sacraments of the new Testament were not at all instituted of Christ, let him be accursed. How then doth Bellarmino and the rest auoid this curse, that doe hold this Sacrament to haue been instituted by the Apostles? There are two opinions among them: some thinke that the annoynting, spoken of Mark. 6. 13. and the other mentioned Iam. 5. to be all one: sic Thomas Waldensis. Alphonsus de castro lib. de Heresi. Others of them doe thinke, that that, which Mark speaketh of, was not Vnctio sacramentalis, sacramentall Vnction, but onely a figure and shadow of it: Be Ruertius in explicat. artic. 12. Infirmum in Mark. 6. Dominicus à Soto. distinct. 23. q. 1. artic. 1. the Rhemists also and Bellarmino. Thus we see how well they agree among themselves.

Againe, the place in Iames maketh nothing for their popish aneeling: for the Apostle would haue all the Elders called: but one priest is sufficient to bring your oyntment boxe. Secondly, if any man be sicke, saith Saint Iames, though it be not deadly or mortall sicknes, but whensoever he is sicke: But your Vnction is neuer ministred before the poynt of death. Thirdly, here he is certainly promised: But not one amongst ten recovereth after your popish aneeling.

Argum. 2. Christ vsed sometime clay, and spittle, sometime other elements in healing the diseased, as the Apostles vsed oyle: why, I pray you then, may not they bee Sacraments as well as this? for they were signes of healing but for a time: no more was the annoynting with oyle of his, than the other.

Bellarmino answereth, there is not the like reason: first, those other ceremonies are not commanded to be frequented as this of oyle is, Iam. 5. Secondly, there is no promise of spirituall grace annexed to them, as vnto this. Thirdly, neither is the certaine Minister of those ceremonies described, as the Elders, that is the Priests, are of this, Iam. 5.

Contra. First, you cannot proue an institution of a Sacrament out of that place of Iames, being Christ, and not the Apostles, is the author of Sacraments: There is no Sacrament of the Gospel which is not grounded both vpon the example and précept of Christ: but so is not your aneeling.

Secondly, the other elements, which Christ vsed, haue those three things required: first, our Sauiour vsed spittle diuers times: as Mark. 7. 33. in healing the dumbe man, Mark. 8. 23. in curing the blinde man. Here is an iteration of the same element. Secondly, it hath also an infallible effect: for it healeth both dumbnes and blindnes. Thirdly, the Minister thereof is certaine, Christ himselfe.

Thirdly: first, the spirituall grace promised, is not annexed to oyle, but to the prayer of faith, Iam. 5. 13. Neither can it be proued, that all those Elders were Ministers, or, as they call the Prophets for diuers of the faithfull, which were not Ministers, had the gift of healing: as it appeareth, Mark. 16. 18. These signes shall follow them that beleue, &c. they shall lay their hands vpon the sicke, and they shall recover. But all beleeuers were not Ministers.

Augustine saith, De latere Christi in cruce sacramenta ecclesia profuderunt: The Sacraments of the Church issued out of Christs side vpon the Crosse: There gushed out of his side, water and blood: but we reade not that any oyle was shed from him: therefore by Augustines argument, Vnction is no Sacrament.

Innocent. 1. Epistol. 1. can. 8. saith, that this custome in annoynting with oyle, genus est sacramenti, is a kind of Sacrament. It is not then properly a Sacrament, but after a certaine kind and manner. This is rehearsed, distinct. 9. c. 3.

We haue also the seale of the holy Martyrs: Iames Bainham Martyr, being asked what hee thought concerning the Sacrament of aneeling: he answered: It was but a ceremonie, neither did hee was what a man should be the better for such an oyling and annoynting: Fox pag. 1028.

Iohn Dewley, Iohn Newman, Patrick Pachingham, holie Martyrs, condemned to death, for affirming, that the annoynting, and aneeling of the sicke, was not allowable by the word of God: Fox pag. 1684. col. 2.

August. in Psal. 40.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE MATTER and forme of extreame Vnction.

The Papists. The matter is oyle olīve consecrated by the Bishop, not simple, or vnhalloved, as is water in Baptisme: the forme is in these words: By this holy vnction, and by his most goodly mercy, God forgive you, &c. Bellarm. c. 7. 112. Error.

The Protestants. First as touching the forme: 1. It is not warranted, nor found in Scripture, as the words of consecration in the other Sacraments are, and therefore we refuse it. 2. It is blasphemous, matching the beggerly anointing, and Gods mercy together, and so ioyne the creature and Creator in communion together. Secondly, for the matter: 1. The element is not consecrated, but in the vse of the Sacraments 1. Cor. 10. 16. bread is blessed in the breaking: therefore that forerunning hallowing of oyle is superstitious and superfluous. 2. If simple water serue for Baptisme being so excellent a Sacrament, much more may simple oyle suffice for your vnction. 3. Your canons also allow the sprinkling of water as well as oyle vpon the sick. de 7. p. 3. d. 4. s. 1. 27. Aspergi &c. the sick are bid to be sprinkled &c.

THE THID PART, OF THE EFFECT and vertue of extreame Vnction.

The Papists. It giueth health of bodie. Secondly, it wipeth away the reliques of sinne: And there the priest thus saith: Per istam sanctam Vnctionem, & suam piissimam misericordiam, indulgenti Deus quicquid deliquisti per visum, &c. By the vertue of this holy oymtent, and the most mercifull fauour of God, the Lord forgieue thee, what thou hast offended by the sight, hearing, &c. Bellarm. cap. 7. 8. 113. Error.

The Protestants. Our popish aneeling is not able to heale the bodie, as we see by daily experience: for more diethen liue after your anointing: and they that doe recouer should doe as well without your aneeling. Wherefore this anointing of oyle is not like to that vsed by the Apostles: for their health certainly followed. Iam. 5. 14.

Here also the papists themselves are deuided: some thinke, that the health of the bodie is the proper ende of this their Sacrament: Dominicus à Soto distinct. 23. qu. 1. art. 2. Bellarmine another thinketh, that the health of the soule is the peculiar ende: and the health of the bodie conditionally, so farre forth as it is expedient for the soule.

Some replieth, many times he that is aneeced, is more wicked then before, how then is it to the health of his soule? Bellarmino, when this falleth out, he obtaineth not health by the Sacrament, but by some other naturall meanes. Contra. Then it would follow, that other naturall meanes applied, are more effectuell for the health of the bodie, then your Sacrament is: seeing they may giue health, when the Sacrament doth not: so then seeing your extreame aneeling doth not alwaies giue health, by your owne confession, it is no effect of a Sacrament; for the Sacrament alwaies worketh Sacramentally, where it is not otherwise hindered for want of faith: but many a faithfull man may be aneeced, and yet die, in whom there is no such let: and many a wicked man may recouer his health, in whom the impediment is found, namely, the lacke of faith.

It is also a great blasphemie, to ascribe remission of sinnes to a terrene and beggerly element: The Apostle saith, not the oyle, but the prayer of faith shall save the sike. The Scripture also testifieth, that the iust shall liue by faith, Rom. 1. 17. And we walke by faith, not by sight. 2. Cor. 5. 7. But he that ascribeth remission of sinnes to oyle or any other externall element, walketh by sight, not by faith.

Here againe the popish diuines are put to their trumpes; and much scanning there is among them, what manner of sinnes are remitted by extreame vnction: some say veniall sinnes; other the aptnes to sinne that remaineth. Bellarmino thinketh they be reliques of any sinne veniall, or mortall, and the terror or anxietie of soule, which remaineth and perplexeth the soule in the point of death. Bellarm. c. 8.

Contra. The Apostle saith, ver. 6. If he haue committed sinne, or as the vulgar translation readeth, if he be in sinne: whereby the Apostle vnderstandeth neither the lesser sinnes only, which they call veniall, nor the reliques of sinne only: but sinne it selfe whatsoeuer that is pardonable.

This remitting of sinnes is not ascribed to the anointing with oyle, but to the prayer of faith, faith, verſ. 16. Acknowledge your ſinnes one to another, and pray one for another, that you may be healed: here repentance with confeſſion of ſinnes is required in the behalfe of the ſicke; prayer to be performed by the other: by theſe two meanes health is obtained.

3. The ſinne being once pardoned and remitted, there remaineth no more terror of confidence, Rom. 5. 1. Being iuſtified by faith, we are at peace with God. Rom. 8. 1. There is now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus; and conſequently no feare of condemnation.

4. The annoynting was a ſigne onely of their bodily healing: Matth. 6. 13. They annoynted many that were ſicke with oyle, and healed them: but in this place they ſay, the ſame gift of healing is ſhadowed forth, which is deſcribed in Saint Iames:

5. Whereas the Apoſtle requireth confeſſion of ſinnes in the ſicke, whereupon followeth remiſſion of ſinnes: they uſe to aneele the ſicke when they are paſt ſenſe, and ſo can ſhew no repentance: as Sext decret. lib. 3. tit. 2. c. 3. Alexander 4. reprehendeth the uſe of certaine, Qui nullum confeſſantur, qui non ſit ſancti memoris, &c. Which uſe not to comfort any that are not of a right minde and ſounde memorie: how then can there be forgiveness of ſinnes, where no confeſſion goeth before?

THE FOVRTH PART, OF THE MINISTER of extreame Vnction, and the ceremonies.

The Papiſts.

214-Error.

Fiſt, they giue power onely vnto their annoynted Maſſe prieſtes, to aneele the ſicke with oyle. Lay men haue no authoritie to do it, nor whoſoeuer are no prieſts, Council. Trident. ſeſſ. 14. ca. 4. Secondly, for the rite and ceremonie, the prieſt comming to the ſicke muſt annoynt him five ſenſes; his eyes, eares, noſtreils, mouth, and hands: alſo the reines, which is the ſeat of conceit, and his feete, which are the inſtruments of execution, Bellarmin. cap. 10.

The Proteſtants.

1. This annoynting which Saint Iames ſpeaketh of, was done by the whole company of Elders in euery congregation, which were not all the Paſtors of the Church: and altho the Paſtors and Miniſters of the Church, are both more eſpecially bound in reſpect of their dutie to viſite the ſicke, and are the fitteſt perſons in regard of their calling to pray for them & comfort them; yet Saint Iames much commendeth the prayer not onely of faithful Paſtors, but of any righteous man, which is auailable to procure health vnto the ſicke. verſ. 16. Yea, and appeareth by their owne Canons, Innocent. 1. Epiſt. 1. c. 8. that it was lawfull for lay men and all Chriſtians to vie this annoynting.

Bellarmin answereth with Iuſenius, that Innocentius ſpeaketh not of the miniſtring, but receiving of this oymment, that it is lawfull for euery lay man to receiue it at the Prieſts hands, and ſo uſe it, cap. 9.

Contra. 1. This place alleaged out of Innocentius troubleth them ſore, and maketh them almoſt at their wits end: Thomas Waldenſ. answereth, that lay men may aneele, where there are no Prieſts to be had: but this answer miſliketh Bellarmin, becauſe the Prieſt muſt neceſſarily be the Miniſter of euery Sacrament, vnleſſe it be in Baptiſme. Dominicus à Soto ſaith, that Innocentius ſpeaketh of a kind of conſecrate oyle, which it was lawfull for lay men to uſe, beſide this ſacramentall oyle: this answer alſo diſpleaſeth the Ieſuite, for Innocentius ſpeaketh of oyle conſecrated by the Biſhop, which was the matter of this Sacrament. Secondly, therefore Bellarmin hath found out another answer, but as vnſufficient as the other: the words of the decree are theſe: Sanctis oleo chriſmatis ab Episcopo conſecrato, non ſolum ſacerdotibus, ſed & omnibus vti Chriſtianis licet in ſua neceſſitate inuigendo: The holy oyle of Chriſme made by the Biſhop, it is lawfull not onely for Prieſts, but for all Chriſtians to uſe by annoynting, in their, or their friends neceſſitie. This cannot be vnderſtood as the Ieſuite ſuppoſeth: Fiſt, it is lawfull for other Chriſtians to uſe oyle, as the Prieſt did uſe it, which was by miniſtring, not receiving. Secondly, they may uſe it to annoynt their friends, as well as themſelues, therefore they miniſtered to their friends.

2. What need the bodie be annoynted in ſo many places? It is meere ſuperſtition: of the like minde was Peter ſometime, when he ſaid to Chriſt, who would waſh his feet; Lord, not my feete onely, but my hands and my head. To whom Chriſt answered: He that is waſhed, need not ſaue to waſh his feet, but is cleane all, Iohn. 13. 9. Where, although the words of Chriſt haue a ſpiritual meaning: yet we ſee the euident and plaine praſtiſe of them in Baptiſme: In the which Sacrament, wee doubt not, but that infants are thoroughly baptized though euery part be not touched with water. And euen ſo, if your aneeleing were a Sacrament: why might it not ſuffice, in ſome one part of the bodie to bee annoynted, and not in ſo many? This wee are ſure of, that nowe you ſpeake without booke: For the Apoſtle maketh no mention of annoynting, eyes, hands, or mouth, but onely generally of annoynting the ſicke. And thus it appeareth that your extreme Vnction is no sacrament, nor any of the other foure, which you haue in-uented.

THE CONCLVSION OF THIS TREA- tise concerning the Sacraments.

Thus, I trust, wee haue made it plaine by Scripture, and euidence of argument, that there are but two Sacraments onely, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord, left and inioyned to the people of God by our Sauour Christ: for foure things are required to make a sacrament: First, the authoritie of Christ in commanding it. Secondly, the element or externall signe, as the matter. Thirdly, the word of institution, as the forme. Fourthly, the end and vse, to bee a scale of our faith for remission of sinnes.

1. Concerning the efficient cause, we finde that two Sacraments onely in the new Testament, are commanded by Christ to be vsed for euer in the Church, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper: which both by his owne example and presence, as also his precept and commaundement, were established.

2. There must be an outward visible elementall signe, as is water in Baptisme, bread and wine in the Lords Supper. But so is there not in the five popish sacraments: For in some there is no signe at all, as in Matrimonic, where they are driven to say, that the parties that are married are the signes. In some there is a signe, but not visible, as in absolution, the audible voyce of the Priest pronouncing the words of absolution is, they say, the outward signe: But in all the Sacraments of Christs institution, we finde a visible signe. In some there is an outward signe, but it is an action where only, no materiall element, which is not sufficient: so is the imposition of hands in giuing of Orders. In some there is a materiall signe, as Chrisme in Confirmation, oyle in extreme Vnction: but they are not of Christs institution.

3. They also want a word of institution: In Penance the Priest saith, I doe absolve thee, after particular confession made of his sinnes. In confirmation the words are, I signe thee with the signe of the Crosse, and confirme thee with the Chrisme of saluation in the name of the Father, Sonne, &c. In Matrimonic, I take thee to my wife. In giuing of Orders, Receive thou power to offer vp the bodies of Christ. In extreme Vnction, God by the vertue of this oyle forgive thee thy sinne. These, they say, are the words of the institution: But they can shew no word of God for them: for it is not euery worde that sanctifieth, but onely the word of God, 1. Timoth. 4. Wherefore, seeing they haue no word of institution, they are no sacraments.

4. Lastly, they want the true vse and end of a sacrament, which is, to strengthen our faith for the remission of sinnes: for in some of these there is no relation at all had to the forgiveness of sinnes: As Matrimonic doth but performe, say they, the graces of marriage, as fidelitie, mutual loue, and such like. Orders doe conferre the power of Priesthood. Here is no signe or efficacy of the grace of iustification. In the rest, remission of sins is ascribed to other instrumentall means, than to faith only; as to satisfactorie workes in Absolution, to Chrisme in Confirmation, to oyle in extreme Vnction: wherefore we conclude, because they are no scales of the righteousness of faith, as S. Paul defineth a sacrament, Rom. 4.

vers. 11. that they are no sacraments of Christs institution, but superstitious ceremonies deuised by men.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE AND REVEREND IVDGES

SIR IOHN POPHAM KNIGHT, LORD CHIEFE IYSTICE OF ENGLAND, AND of her Maiesties most honorable priuie Councell; and

Sir WILLIAM PIRIAM Knight, Lord chiefe Baron of the Exchequer, grace and peace in the Lord Iesus.

Among other notable personages, whom I thought worthy of these my labours, though the same not worthy their honourable acceptation, I could not in any honest shew with silence overpasse your Honors (right reuerend, and honourable Iudges) to whom I haue presumed to present this fourth part of this laborious worke, and for these reasons me thereunto especially mouing: first, that as her Maiestie is right intituled and interessed in this whole worke, which setteth forth the summe of our religion against the Papists, as vnder whose defence and protection we in peace professe the same: so vnto your Honors, as vnder her Maiestie, able instruments of our peace, executors of iustice, preseruers of religion, part of this treatise doth properly appertaine: That as principally to her gracious licence in the whole, some signe of thankesfulnes I trust, for the peace of our flourishing, so vnto you in a part thereof, as her worthy ministers for the same, it meete some dutie should be acknowledged. Againe, what is better befitting the person of a Iudge, than to heare of questions of religion, and to be occupied in discerning of truth from error, religion from superstition, good from falsehood, which this booke performeth in some measure? This authority God hath put into your hands, and indued you with this discerning spirit. A Iudge must not be a stranger from religion, neither receiue the iudgement of faith at the second hand. To whom belonged the iudgement of the false Prophets, Deuteronom. 13. 5. and the punishment of Idolaters, Deut. 17. 3. but to the Ciuill Magistrate, which did sit in the gate? Hereof it is, that the Iudge and the Priest are iyned together, as followes in commission for matters of iudgement: so prescribed by Moles, Deut. 17. 9. so practised by Ieholaphat, 2. Chron. 19. 11. Neither yet doe I presume in this worke to giue vnto your Honors any direction for knowledge in these matters, who are I trust daily conuersant therein: but, as Augustine saith, writing to a noble man: Scio non deesse vobis homines, qui secundum vitam huius mundi consilia dent: secundum autem Deum, non facile quisquam tibi consulit, non quia desunt, qui hoc faciant, sed quia difficile est inuenire, quando tecum hoc possint: So I write vnto you, not that you need in your selues these aduersements, or haue not about you to conferre withall, but because your leisure serueth not to peruse the huge volumes, and tedious and long treatises written of these matters. And as the same father saith againe: Si aliquid hic legas, quod minus ad personam tuam pertineat, ne putes superfluum: istæ enim literæ, quamuis ad te, non tamen tibi solum scribendæ erant, sed vt alij per te prodesse negligendum non fuit: In like manner I say, if there be ought in this treatise, that properly concerneth not your Honor, it is not therefore (I trust) superfluous, for my intendment is to helpe the simple and vnlearned sort, who haue not much traualled in these things.

Thirdly, whereas the Scripture saith, When the righteous are in authoritie the people reioyce, Pro. 28. 2. in this common ioy, who should forbid me to reioyce? VVhat honest man soeuerb not to see vpright and iust men exalted to the throne of iudgement? such as the Apostle speaketh of, They are the ministers of God for thy wealth, Rom. 13. 4. not for their owne wealth, as Bernardus saith: Præcunquid vt de subditis crescas, nequaquam, sed vt ipse iudicem te constituerunt, sed sibi, non tibi. Goe on therefore in this your happy course: you, who by calling are as Gods vpon earth, Psal. 82. 6. let your iudgement be vpright, as God is, to hate conuersiones, not to regard the person of man, to loue equitie and iustice, to fauour and embrace religion, not to be blinded with gifts: wherein, as I trust, you haue hitherto walked well: so, God graunt, you may hold out your race to the end. Nuper (as Bernard saith) e vestris paribus hære cœpit aura secundior, Epistol. 42. Some experience we haue had in these places of your disposition to doe iustice, and more we trust to haue hereafter: as Bernard againe saith: Ego quorum viuo meritis volo videri studijs & saloni: all good men liue and are cherished by the righteous iudgement of vpright persons, for whose health and welfare, my studie and prayer shall at all times be noted.

Hitherto I haue onely shewed the reasons that moued me to write to your Honors: now briefly what I haue written. In this fourth part, beside the augmenting and enlarging of that, which is contained in the former edition, I haue added an hundred more of new errors, and heresies of Poperie, as they are collected out of Bellarmines third volume, which was not then extant, when the first edition of this booke came forth. I haue also of purpose interferred in this last part, a new treatise of that great and weightie question, which becometh to haue many followers in these dayes, and euen of our owne countrey men, concerning the vniuersalitie of grace: who are not contented to say, as the Scripture saith, that Christ was giuen onely for those that are giuen him, to whom hee giueth a small life, Ioh. 17. 2. that is the eternall life, but that hee giueth a life euertlasting giuen: which hee giueth vniuersally for all men, euen for the wicked and reprobate: which while they affirm, they fall into a dangerous gulf, either to graunt that seruing all are not saved, whom God, as they say, would haue saved by Christ: that either vniuersalitie and impious, not able to offend, and accomplish his owne will; or that hee imable and variable, in altering and chaunging his purpose. But this matter wee have followed at large in the 19. Controuerſe of this booke, queſt. 2.

Our chiefe ſcope in this buſineſs is to diſcouer the nakednes of Poperie, and to lay open the filthines of ſuperſtition: Theſe euen theſe are the chiefe enemies to our peace: ſometime the Church indured our ward grievous perſecution: then the diuell raged as a lyon, Hostis ille noſter (as Auguſtine ſaith) tum leo fuit, cum aperte ſauiebat. Afterward the diuell played the ſubtile ſerpent, peſtering the Church with hereſies: tum vt draco erat, cum occultè inſidiabatur. But in the popiſh profeſſion, both by his outragious crueltie the diuell ſhe wedh to be a lyon, and by his ſecret poiſoning of religion a dragon: So that theſe two great battell rammes, which before at times did aſſayle the Church, doe now at once lay ſiege vnto vs. As againſt their violent furie, the holy Martyrs vſed the deſenſation of patience: Sic nobis nunc opus eſt vigilantia: So to prevent their ſubtiltyes, we muſt vſe vigilancie and care, the Miniſter to deſcrie the enemye, the Magiſtrate to repell him.

And thus may an enemye to our peace and religion be knowne: firſt, they are ſuch of whom our Saniour ſpeaketh, They hate the light, neither come to the light, leſt their deedes ſhould be reprobued, loh. 3. 20. They ſeek private aſſemblies and conuenticles, as being aſhamed of their doings. For although ſometime the truth was driuen into corners, yet is it now preached in pulpits, and therefore in theſe dayes ſuch conuenticles are ſuſpicious: and they are againſt the maine decree of Councils. Concil. Gangrenſ. cap. 6. Si quis extra eccleſiam priuim populos congregat, anathema. Concil. Laodicen. can. 35. Non oportet Chriſtianos Eccleſiam Dei relinquere, & in angulis congregaciones facere: It is not lawfull to leaue the Church of God, and aſſemble together in corners.

Another marke whereby to know them Saint Iude teacheth vs, where he ſaith, They deſpiſe gouernment, and ſpeake euill of them that are in authority, Iude 8. Such are ſome of the Romiſh ſectaries, who ſpare not to reuile the Lords anointed, and to conſpire to lay hands vpon the Lords holy one. All ſuch ſhall be accuſed before God, who both curſeth their wicked counſels, neither will hee let the authors vnpuniſhed, as ſaith the Toletane Councel. 12. cap. 1. Non erit ab anathematis ſententia alienus, aut diuinæ animaduerſionis vltione ſecurus, quiſquis contra ſalutem principis aut erexerit vocem, aut quancunque quaſierit lædendi occasionem.

Thirdly, if we marke how ſuch corner-creeper doe ſow diſſenſion, and ſeek to diſturbe our peace, hence we ſhall iudge them to be no right teachers, nor true members of Chriſts Church: for we haue no ſuch cuſtome, (ſaith the Apoſtle) nor the Churches of God to be contentious, 1. Cor. 11. 16. Of ſuch Auguſtine ſaith well: Venit perſecutor, & non fregit crura Chriſti, venit Donatus & diripuit Eccleſiam Chriſti: Integrum corpus Chriſti in cruce inter manus perſecutorum eſt, & inter manus Chriſtianorum non eſt integrum corpus Eccleſiæ, in Pſal. 33. cap. 2.

Laſtly,

THE EPISTLE DEDICATORIE.

Lastly, they are obstinate, and wilfully settled in their ignorance, and from in the dregges of their superstition, that although Scripture, reason, antiquitie doe all make against them, yet are they resolved to wallow like dirtie swine stid in the myre of their superstitious ignorance. And as they stopped their eares against Stephen, A& 7. so doe they refuse all wholesome meanes of conference, publike prayer, reading, and hearing of Scripture. Such wilfulness was in the old Heretikes, as Maximinus the Arrian said: Si ad eculeum suspendar, non sum aliter dicturus: Though they hang me, I will not change my minde.

August. lib. 1.
contr. Maxim.

The cause of this their obstinacie is in those which seduce them: as the Prophet Elay saith, Qui ducunt, seducunt vos: They which guide you, beguile you. Such Saint Paul speaketh of: They creepe into houses, and leade captiue simple men laden with sinne, 2. Tim. 4. 6. But that which followeth, they shall preuaile no longer, ver. 9. as God hath decreed it: so it belongeth to you, right Honourable, as Gods faithfull ministers, to see the same executed, as ye doe. Yet wee wish not their destruction, but desire their conuersion: Non oramus, vt moriantur inimici, sed vt corrigantur, sic mortui erunt inimici, iam enim correptione erunt inimici: We pray not for the death of our enemies, but for their correction and amendement, so our enemies shall be dead: for being amended, they shall be no more our enemies. I pray God giue them grace, as they belong vnto him, that their hearts may relent to the truth, and that their mindes may be lightened to acknowledge the same, that wee may goe vp to the house of God together in peace. And the Lord blesse your Honors in your iust and righteous proceedings, that the crie of oppression be not heard in the land, nor the arme of pride strengthened: but that truth and equitie may flourish, vertue and godlinesse encrease, to Gods glorie, the Churches good, and your owne comfort in the day of the Lord. Amen.

August. in
Psal. 37.

Your Honors to be commanded in the Lord,

CONCERNING THE BENEFITS OF our redemption, purchased vnto vs by the death of Christ.

Having now sufficiently entreated of all those matters, wherein wee and our aduersaries dissent, as touching the propheticall, regall, and priestly office of our Sauour Christ: the next place according to our purposed order and methode, doth offer vnto vs such questions to be considered of, as are handled betwene our aduersaries and vs, concerning the benefits ensuing by these heavenly offices of Christ. And this treatise containeth three controuerfies, which now follow in order: The first is of the state of man in his first creation, before his fall. The second, of the fall of man, the condition and qualitie thereof. The third, of the temperation of our decayed nature, and our restitution by Christ.

THE FIRST CONTROVERSIE BEING THE
17. in the whole, of the state of man in Paradise.

This controuerfie containeth three questions. First, of the state of mans soule by creation. Secondly, of the qualitie and condition of his bodie. Thirdly, of the place, namely, of Paradise.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE perfection of the soule of man.

The Papists.

It is agreed betwene vs, that man was created in his soule according to the image of God, <sup>1. Error.</sup> both in holines and righteousness in his will and affections, as Saint Paul sheweth, Ephes. 4. 24, with the light and perfection of knowledge, and iudgement in the vnderstanding part, Coloss. 3. 10. for in these two consisted the image of God, being thus agreed of the thing it selfe, we dissent about the manner: for the Papists opinion is, that the originall iustice and perfection, wherein Adam was created, was not in him a naturall gift, eyther that it was a part of his nature, or did arise or spring out of any naturall beginning; as we say the soule in the body, and the vnderstanding in the soule, are naturall: but that it was meereley a supernaturall gift, hauing no naturall beginning: euen as Helias taking vp into heauen in a fire chariot, was a thing simply & absolutely supernaturall. They say also further, that man now hath all the pure naturals that Adam had, and that the humane nature is the very same that Adams was: And that Adam if it had not been for that supernaturall gift, should haue been subiect to the like ignorance, & infirmity, and rebellion of flesh that we are; sauing that, then in Adam, Ex natura & conditione materiae profuisset: Those infirmities should haue sprung out of the very nature of man, and the quality of the mould that he was made: but now in vs, they doe proceed ex originali culpa, of originall sinne. This then is their sentence, that Adams nature by creation, and ours now by birth, is all one: Bellarm. de grat. prim. homin. cap. 3. And he further declareth his munde thus: The state of man after the fall of Adam differeth no more from the state of Adam in his pure naturals, than a man that is spoiled differeth from a naked man, that is, nothing at all: Neither is mans nature now more subiect to ignorance and infirmities, if you take away originall sinne, then it should haue bene, being created in the pure naturals: and therefore the corruption of nature is not by want of any naturall gift, or by the accession of any euill qualitie, but only by the loss of that supernaturall gift, by reason of Adams sinne. Bellar. ibid. So then 1. his opinion appeareth plainly to be this, that as a man spoiled differeth not from a naked man in the substance of the thing, but in the cause or manner; for the one is spoiled by force, the other is naked without force, yet both without clothing: so man in his creation without that supernaturall gift or grace, was as naked, but now by sinne is as one robbed and spoiled: 2. Againe, where he saith: If you take away originall originall sinne: If he meane, that our nature is the same with Adams; but for sinne, he fighteth with his owne shadow; for no man denieth, but that sinne caused this alteration in the nature of man. 3. And he speaketh against himselfe: for if originall sinne be the cause of our corruption, it commeth by the accession of an euill quality, which he before denied; vnlesse he will denie that sinne is an euill qualitie. 4. But if he make exception of originall sinne, not in regarde of the fruites and effects thereof, but as of the cause; that Adam ignorance and infirmitie should haue proceeded of another cause, then originall sinne, that is, out of the condition of his owne nature; it is a great error, as afterwards shall appeare: let vs see some of his arguments.

Argum. 1. God said to Adam, Gen. 2. Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou returne: that is, by nature and creation, had it not been for that supernaturall gift which I gaue, which now thou hast lost, thou art mortall. Also Psal. 8. the Psalmist saith, What is man, &c. thou hast made him a little lower then the Angels, and crowned him with glory and honour: but Adam being created with a bodily substance, could not by nature, but by a supernaturall gift onely be made like the Angels: And so much is implied by these words, glory, and honour, which are things not naturally in man, but outwardly added: Argum. Bellarm. cap. 6.

Ans. 1. To the first place we answer thus: that it was spoken to Adam after his fall; and the Lord in saying, thou art dust, &c. did not there shew the state, wherein hee was created, but wherein he was fallen by sinne; for by nature he was no more to returne to dust, then to take his bread in the sweat of his browes: for they are both ioyned together. If they answer, that there was also a supernaturall gift to be void of labour and trouble, in seeking his food; then was a supernaturall gift also in the earth not to bring forth thornes and thistles: for these are the things that man must eate his bread with sweat, that is, with labour in tilling the ground. But it were absurd to say, that God created the earth in the beginning with an aptnesse and inclination, to bring forth weedes and vnpromisable hearbes, seeing all he made, was excellent good.

2. To the other place also we doe thus make answer: first, why might not God naturally create the soule of man like vnto Angels, though it were inclosed in the body, as naturally he hath created the bodies of beasts in strength, sense, agilitie, swiftnesse, and the like qualities, not much equall, but farre superiour to the bodies of men, which are ioyned with a reasonable soule; for the bodies of beasts to be in vnreasonable? Secondly, this place, Heb. 2. 15. properly is applied to Christ, ver. 9. But we see Iesus crowned with honour and glory: but the glorie of Christ is not accidentally, externall, or supernaturall; but altogether in him naturall, which he had with God his father before the world was, Iohn. 17. 5. Therefore Bellarmino faileth in his collection here.

Argum. 2. If Adams integritie and innocencie were naturall, then they should haue remained after his sinne: as the same naturals in diuels doe still remaine: but so doe they not, Ergo.

Ans. First, the argument followeth not in naturall qualities: for Adam had knowledge without ignorance, memorie without obliuion before his fall, which were naturall in him, but so hath he not now: so the naturall qualities are corrupted and decayed by sinne, but the naturall substance and subiect as of the soule and bodie remaineth still, though much deprauid and corrupted by sinne.

Secondly, yet this naturall integritie of Adam is not vtterly by sinne extinct, for there is in man a law of nature, which is a remainder of that law of perfection, whereby a mans thoughts doe eyther accuse him or excuse him. Rom. 2. 14.

Thirdly, neither doe the same naturall qualities remaine in the reprobate spirits, which they had before their fall: for they haue also lost the integritie and innocencie of nature; yea and in other qualities of the spirituall nature are inferiour to the elect Angels.

Fourthly, the reason is not like betwene man and spirits: for the decay of perfection in spirits is helped by their spirituall nature, and long continuance, and therefore it is no marvell, that euill spirits, are in vnderstanding, memorie, knowledge, agilitie of nature farre beyond the bodies of men; which are both clogged with terrene bodies, and by the mortalitie thereof abridged of the course of experience.

The Protestants.

That the gifts of integritie and innocency were in our first parents by nature of their creation; yet not without Gods gift (for euen naturall things are of Gods grace; that is, the generall grace and gift of the creation, which is not properly called grace, Lombard. dist. 2. 5. lib. 2.) and that their naturals were not the same, but much more pure and perfect then ours are; neither that they were the same in them before and after their fall, thus we proue it.

Argum. 1. If Adams naturals were the same that ours are, then it would follow that the concupiscence of the flesh, which is in vs by nature was also naturall in Adam, and that Adam should haue bene as prone by nature vnto all kind of vice, as we are: which if it be granted, this were to make God the author of sinne, and his workmanship imperfect, if he had not made man such an one by creation, as could not sinne.

Bellarmino

1. First, if we suppose that the concupiscence of the flesh was by a supernatural way, which had been created in his pure naturall body, he should have been impure to sinne: But God (saith he) did take away, insulam iniquitatis; this concupiscence, and bestowed a supernaturall gift. Secondly, it followed, that God should have been the author of sinne, for concupiscence is not properly sinne; neither if God had created man in his pure nature, should it follow, that he made to concupiscence: Quæ pater in omnibus operibus ex condicione consequuta fuisse: Which should have proceeded from the condition or quality of the seed or matter, whereof man was made, beside the purpose or intention of the creator: quod ap. 7. vers. 16. ad 19. & 10. ubi dicitur...

First, it is false that Adam should have been as pure to sinne, continuing in his pure state, as we are: seeing that neither we should have been made sinners, if Adam had remained in his naturals, and not added the actuall sinne of disobedience, which sinne, guilt to his own naturals, made both him, and vs sinners, as Saint Paul sheweth, Rom. c. 19. By one mans dis- obedience many were made sinners: he saith not, by his naturals. Secondly, he saith, that God tooke away Adams naturall concupiscence: when God did correct his unbecomming manshipp, and so it could be imperfect. And againe, the Iesuite here forgetteth his owne rule, that, Natura naturale placet non datur corruptio: That no naturall part or gift can be corrupted or changed in itselfe, but here he saith, that God took away Adams naturall concupiscence.

Yet here he saith that God tooke away or suppressed Adams naturall conscience of his generation or infusing of a supernaturall gift, was the corruption and destruction of it in all. Thirdly, neither can it be auoided, that God should not be the author of sin; for conscience is properly sinne, as the Apostle saith, he knew was sinfull by the law; and then it followeth, I had not knowne last, vntill the law had said, thou shalt not lust: for that hee is sinner. Neither is it like, that any thing can fall out besides the intencion and purpose of the Creator: for God cannot be deceived, who worketh all things according to the counsell of his owne will; Eccl. i. 1. Things are wrought according to the counsell, purpose, and intention of God. Ergo, nothing fall out beside, or contrarie vnto it.

¶ Adam 2. Every gift and grace beside the generall grace of creation, is given by the mediation of Christ, and the merite of his passion, Ephes. 4. 10. Hee had every iust exception; donation, by his blood, and good giftes to men: but as Augustine saith, Adam in his homine quod corruptibile, Christi in omni. Adam in those gifts wherein he was created, had no need of Christes blood: De homine 1. 1. 1. Ergo, the graces which Adam had in the state of his innocencie, did belong to himselfe, and were not purchased at any mans blood, non sunt quod situm est. See De homine 1. 1. 1.

Whateſoeuer Adam had by creation; he had by nature: ſo as quithing is to us by creation to him; and as well that was naturall to him, which was given by creation: that naturall to vs which we haue in our birth: But Adam by his creation was made righteous. Gen. 1. 31. Ergo, his perfection and originall iuſtice was in him at his creation, though the gift of the creator, naturall.

First, it is true that God made man righteous, but it was by a supernatural gift, beside the work of the creation. Secondly, if man had been created only in his natural state, he would not have been made right or perfect, because as yet there was no evil in the world; only a potential for sin. Thirdly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a savior. Fourthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a law. Fifthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a sacrifice. Sixthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a prophet. Seventhly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a church. Eighthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a gospel. Ninthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a kingdom. Tenthly, if man had been created perfect, he would not have needed a new creation.

First, that man by the very worke of his creation, was made perfect, and righteous; this is taught by the Scripture; for hee was created according to Gods image, Gen. 1. 26, and the Image of God is expounded by the Apostle, to be righteousness and holiness; Eph. 4. 24. Gods power and grace bestowed upon man in his creation; we want, but of any other grace bestowed in the worke of the creation, we read not.

body, as iron, because it is blue and brittle, is subject to rust; but the more perfect and precious metals, as of silver and gold are not; so if man by creation had an incorruptible frame, he could not be perfect. This then is the difference between us; they say that man was created perfect, that is made bright and happy from resting with only God; man in his creation was withheld from falling and sinking by a temporary fall; give 2. we rather say, that man was created perfect, without any special inclination by nature to corruption; if he had not fallen, but by sin from his state of innocence.

Lastly, we reason thus: Whatfoeuer was in Christ as touching his humanitie, was of the nature of man: for in all things he was made like vnto vs, finnedly excepted: so was the first Adam in his perfection, so was the last: for the first Adam was a figure of him that was to come, Rom. 5. 14. But Christ as hee was man had a perfect soule in him, perfect both as to the nature of man, in his state vncorrupted. So Augustine saith: Mentis humanae perfectio est in eo, quod non est perfectio humane foelle, sed eius in Christo. Et dicitur a peccato et a morte in sola iustitia foelle: et whatfoeuer is humane, is of or belonging to the nature of man.

Cont. Maxim.
Arrian. lib. 9.
cap. 31.

Interrogat. Casav. cap. 1. Deu creatio huiusmodi ad imaginem suam & fecit per originem suam, ut esset immortuus, sub animi virtute tritu: God created man according to his image, and made him by his original iustice, perfect, or right in bodie and soule.

Synod. Aduersus, cap. 3. Deu ab initio creatio hominem ad imaginem suam, ut in animi virtute tritu. God in the beginning created man after his image, in his soule void of all motions, &c. Ergo, man by nature in his creation, was endued with a perfect and righteous soule.

Conf. 33. diffinit. 2. a. 31. Hanc imaginem in spiritu mentis impressam perdidit Adam per peccatum. This image of God imprinted in the soule of man, Adam lost by his sinne. From hence it reason thus: Adam soule received the print or image in the creation; (vnlesse they wil say, that Adam soule was created bare and naked;) but the righteousness and holiness of Adam was this print or image: Ergo, he received it in the creation.

THE SECOND QUESTION, OF THE QUALITY AND CONDITION OF THE BODIE OF MAN BY CREATION.

a. Error.

Bellarmin his opinion is, that the immortalitie of Adams bodie was a supernaturall gift: and that by nature his bodie was created mortall, but that this naturall mortalitie was taken away, by the supernaturall gift of immortalitie, Bellar. de grat. primi homin. cap. 9.

Argum. 1. His best reason is drawne from that place of Scripture, which he alleadged before: Dust thou art, &c. which the Iesuite would haue vnderstood of Adams creation: because the reason is rendered, That thou shalt returne to dust, because thou wast taken out of dust.

*Ans. This was spoken to Adam, after that by his transgression hee had deserued death. And whereas the Lord saith, For out of the dust thou wast taken, it sheweth not that he was created mortall: but that he had a possibilitie onely of mortalitie, into the which he might fall by sinne, and so lose the immortalitie of nature, wherein he was created: for this is the difference between the immortalitie of man by creation, and the immortalitie which we shall haue by grace through Christ; that man in his creation had power, posse non mori, not to die, if he would: that, if hee keep himselfe in obedience: but in the kingdome of heauen we shall haue a gift, non possumus, not to haue power or possibilitie to die. And Augustine saith, Bina ista quid inter se differant, Adamus in nouum est, &c. We must diligently consider, what difference is betweene these two: posse non peccare, & non posse peccare, To be able not to sinne, and not to be able to sinne: To be able not to dye, and not to haue power to dye: The first man was able not to sinne, not to dye, but we cannot say, non posse mori, he had no power to dye, or to sinne: De corrupt. & grat. a. 11. N. 4. And before his fall had power not to die, then had he power to be immortal; then consequently he was not created mortall.*

*Argum. 2. Adam in his creation was made apt to generation, for God said vnto him, crede et multiplicare; he had eate also both of meate and drinke; Ergo, he was created mortall. Ans. 1. First, aptnesse to generation proueth not mortalitie, but such generation onely as is by concupiscence and sinne procured: as the tree of life in Paradise should also encrease and multiply, but it should not haue beene corruptible: 2. Eua by a kinde of generation was produced out of Adam, she should notwithstanding haue beene immortal. 3. Some affirme, that the soule cometh into the bodie by a kinde of generation, ex traduce, yet they hold notwithstanding, the immortalitie of the soule. 4. Christ had a generation, as God, will ye conclude him to be mortall? He also had a generation according to the flesh, yet was he not subiect at all to corruption, nor to death of necessitie, but of his owne will.*

*Ans. Secondly, the Angels did eat and drinke, yet were not their bodies mortall, wherein they appeared: therefore not eary eating and drinking proueth mortalitie, but to eate and drinke with hunger, thirst, and of necessitie: but Adam in Paradise should neither haue felt hunger nor thirst, heat or cold, as Augustine saith, In Paradiso absque refrigeratione, aliquali frigore, vel calore, vel dolore, penes, &c. Farre be it from vs to thinke, that there was anything in Paradise, whereby either griefe should offend the sense, or labour wearie the bodie: *Conf. Italian. lib. 1. c. 8.

The Protestants.

What Adam was by nature created immortal, if hee had not sinned, we by these reasons doe make good: 1. The soule of Adam was immortal, and therefore it was meet and requisite, that the bodie also immortal should be created vnto it.

Ans. You an immortal bodie is most meet for an immortal soule: but the functions of the body, which are now exercised, and should haue beene in the state of innocencie, doe require a bodie temperated together of diuers humors and qualities, which must needs make it mortall, bellum. 1.9.

Quæst. First, if an immortall bodie had been a fittest companion for the soule, and yet was not vnto it: then by their sentence, God did not that which was most meete and conuenient. Secondly, what manner of qualited bodie humane actions require now, it skilleth not: certain it is, if man had not sinned, he should haue done no other things then were befitting an immortall bodie, such as he had by creation.

Argum. 2. Augustine saith, Constat inter Christianos veraciter Catholicam tenentes fidem, etiam ipso hominis corporis mortem non lege natura, sed merito inflatam esse peccati: It is euident among Christians rightly holding the Christian faith, that euen the death of body is laid vpon vs, not by the law of nature, but by desert of sinne. Saine Paul also sheweth, that death came in by sinne, Rom. 5.12. Ergo, before man had sinned, he was not subiect to death.

Bellarmin. answereth, that death came in by sinne, because by sinne that supernaturall gift was lost, whereby man was preferred from mortalitie.

Quæst. Yet hath he not sufficiently answered: for if man remaining in his pure naturals was subiect to death; then should there haue been death in the worlde without sinne, which S. Paul denyeth, for death is the wages of sinne, Rom. 6.23.

Argum. 3. Christs body had no possibilitie of corruption, Act. 2.24. It was impossible he should be broken of death: the reason is giuen, v. 27. Thou wilt not suffer thy holy one to see corruption: Christs holinesse and freedome from sinne preferred him from corruption: Ergo, Adam in the state of innocence was freed from the possibilitie of mortalitie and corruption.

Concil. Mileuitan. cap. 1. as it is alleadged, part. 3. dist. 4. c. 152. Quicumque dicit Adam prius hominem mortalem factum ita, ut sine peccaret, sine non peccaret, moreretur in corpore: hoc est de corpore exire, non peccati merito, sed necessitate natura, anathema sit: Whosoever saith, that Adam was created mortall, so that, whether hee sinned or not, he should die in the body; not by the merite of sinne, but the necessitie of nature, let him be accursed: Ergo, Adam was created immortall, if he had not sinned.

Augustine also saith, Si parentes non peccassent, vos, &c. If our parents had not sinned, when they had performed their dutie of obedience: angelica eos immortalis, &c. the euangelicall immortality had followed them, sine interuentu mortis, without death coming betweene, de ciuitat. Dei. lib. 11. c. 1.

But how could angelicall immortality haue succeeded mortality without any change by death? and angelicall immortality hath no possibilitie at all of mortality: Adam should haue had an angelicall immortality: Ergo.

THE THIRD QUESTION, OF THE PLACE WHERE Adam was created: namely, Paradise.

The Iesuite affirmeth, that Paradise, where Adam was placed, was a terrestriall place: which we graunt: and such a place, as was not knowne to any: and therefore hee musliketh their opinions, that would define where Paradise should be: Some thinke, that Paradise is taken for the whole world, as Iosephus: some, that it is a place deuided from the world beyond the Ocean sea: others imagine it to be a high scituated region, reaching euen vnto the globe of the Moone: others thinke it was in Mesopotamia: But Bellarmin. approoueth none of these opinions, but saith still that Paradise was a place vnkowne, yet that it remaineth still vnto this day, Bellarmin. cap. 12. & 14. This question then hath two parts: first, whether Paradise were a place alwayes vnkowne to men: Secondly, whether that Paradise doth remaine to this day.

The Papists.

That Paradise was a secret place kept from the knowledge of men, the Iesuite would seeme to proue it thus. Error.

Argum. 1. If Paradise were scituate in a knowne place, it is most like by the description to haue been in Mesopotamia; but there it was not: for the text saith, that out of Eden went a riuer, which afterward was deuided into foure heads: but there is no such riuer, that hath his beginning in Mesopotamia: Ergo, Bellarmin. cap. 12.

Ans. The text saith not, that this riuer had his beginning in Eden, but went out from Eden, that is, it might haue the beginning before, and so runne through Eden: neither are we to vnderstand the place so, as though this riuer, as soone as it was runne through Eden did deuide it selfe into foure heads: but these foure heads or branches do come from two riuers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which running asunder till they come to Eden, make two heads, which in the text are called Hiddekel and Peraith, and so ioyning together, as they passe through Eden, do againe deuide themselves, and so make two heads more, Pishon and Gibon, and so runne into the Persian gulf.

Argum. 2. How could Paradise be a knowne place being kept of the Cherubims by a fire sword?

Ans. First, the keeping of it with the fire sword, doth shew that it was a place inaccessible, and not inhabited before the flood: for so long was it so kept: but it might be knowne where it was situate, though the passage thereunto were stopped. Secondly, after that the beaurie of Paradise was destroyed by the flood, it needed not any more the custodie or watch of Angels: but the place where Paradise was planted then lay open to man and beast, being both knowne and inhabited.

The Protestants.

That Paradise, otherwise called Eden, was planted in a knowne place of the world, which was most like to be Mesopotamia; thus we make it plaine.

Argum. 1. The two riuers mentioned in the description of Eden, namely, Hiddkel, which is Tigris; and Perath, which is Euphrates, are found to runne through Mesopotamia: Ege, there also was Paradise.

Bellarmino answereth, that the two other heads of the riuer, namely Phison and Gibon, were the two riuers Ganges and Nilus, which come not neere Mesopotamia, and therefore it is not like, that the two other riuers make the other two heads, cap. 12.

Contra. First, Phison and Gibon cannot be the knowne riuers Ganges, whose beginning is in the mountaines of Scythia; and Nilus, which springeth from the mountaines in Aethiopia: for Phison and Gibon are two heads of one Fountaine and Riuer: but Ganges and Nilus haue two severall heads or fountaines, many thousande miles asunder; Ganges in Asia, and Nilus in Africa.

Secondly, if Ganges and Nilus be these two heads, which are knowne Riuers, and their fountaines also knowne, then must Eden also be knowne, where the Iesuice saith the riuer hath his beginning.

Bellarmino replieth, that Phison and Gibon cannot be two heads springing from Tigris and Euphrates. 1. Because those two heads are said to compass diuers nations; but the branches of those two riuers do runne by a straight course into the Persian Sea. 2. The mappes do shew, that Tigris and Euphrates after their coniunction are not deuided againe, but runne together into the sea. 3. Ierem. 2. 18. the Septuagint readeth thus, What hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, drinking the water of Geon? Geon then is Nilus the riuer of Egypt: Again, Ecclesiastic. 24. 31. Gibon is said to overflow in the time of vintage, and so doth Nilus. 4. Hierome, Ambrose, with others, do take Phison and Gibon, for Ganges and Nilus, Bellarmino c. 12.

Contra. First, it is euident, that Phison and Gibon the two neather streames of Tigris and Euphrates, do passe through and compass in a manner the lands Hauilah, where gold is; and Cush, which is Arabia deserta, before they fall into the sea.

Secondly, if he view the Mappe better, or follow the best description, he shall finde that the riuers Tigris and Euphrates part againe, before they runne into the sea.

Thirdly, 1. in Ierem. 2. 18. the hebrue hath not Geon, but Sichar, which some do take for Nilus, others vpon better ground, for a riuer, that passing by Arabia Petrea, falleth into the lake Sirbon, and deuideth the Land of promise from Egypt, Iosu. 13. 3. neyther doth the vulgar Latine read Geon, but aquam turbidam, troubled water.

2. It is 1. no good argument, that Geon should be Nilus, because it ouerfloweth in the time of Vintage: as though it is not vsuall for riuers to rise twice in the yeere, in the spring, and in autumn: 2. and yet Nilus greatest ouerflowing is in seede time, which is in the spring, Deut. 11. 10. 3. I vrge not beside, that this booke is not canonicall; for the other answeres are sufficient beside.

Fourthly, Hierome and Ambrose do follow the opinion of the Greekes, who were herein deceived by the translation of the Septuagint: as Ambrose de Paradiso. 3. Phison Ganges est secundum Gracos: Phison is the riuer Ganges according to the Greekes, &c. And Epiphanius saith, Ege uel aqua Geon, &c. I haue seene with mine eyes the waters of Geon, meaning Nilus, and then he alleagueth Ierem. 2. 18. where the Septuagint so readeth: epist ad Ioann. Hierosolym. So that this conceit of the Greekes was grounded vpon the erroneous translation of the Septuagint.

Fifthly, this opinion is contrary to Scripture, 1. Phison and Gibon come out of one riuer, and haue the same beginning: Genes. 2. 10. But Ganges and Nilus are many hundred miles distant. 2. Gibon compasseth the whole land of Cush. Genes. 2. 13. Which they take to be Aethiopia: but Nilus compasseth Egypt, not Aethiopia, taking his beginning onely from thence: so that Cush here is not taken for Aethiopia, but for Arabia deserta, for it is a general name to them both. 3. Where as Epiphanius saith, he had seene Geon, and that he had drunke of the great riuer Euphrates: the riuers of Paradise being so well knowne, how could Paradise be a place vnknewne?

Argum. 2. Again, Eden is described by the countries next adioyning, as Assyria, Genes. 2. 14.

So Charran and Eden are ioyned together, Isai. 37. vers. 12. Cain also is said to haue dwelled on the East side of Eden: But these countries were well knowne; Ergo, so was Eden.

Belarmine answereth, that this Eden in these places mentioned, was another Eden, beside that, in which Adam was throwne: yea, if you will say, that Cain was sent and banished into Paradise, Belarm. cap. 13.

First, the Iesuite cannot shew vnto vs any other Eden out of the storie of the Bible: Gen. 2. 14. that Eden is spoken of, which is neere to Asshur: Isai. 3. 7. that Eden, which is ioyning to Charran: But Asshur and Charran were not farre asunder, Ezech. 27. 23. therefore it was one and the selfsame Eden. Secondly, the text saith not, that Cain was exiled into Paradise, or that he dwelt in Paradise, but by the East side of Paradise.

Some Antioch saith, Epist. 42. Iosephus historiographus, &c. Iosephus the historiographer saith, that Paradise is a place full of trees and plants, and is watered with a riuer, which is diuided into foure branches. How could Iosephus describe Paradise, if it had been an vnknowne place? And if they will haue Paradise so secret a place, let them say with their Master, that Paradise was situate in a region, that reached vp to the circle of the Moone: lib. 2. d. 17. lit. e. Iansenius a learned Papist saith with vs, that Paradise was situate in Mesopotamia, but afterward defaced and destroyed by the flood, in cap. 143. concord. Evangelic.

THE SECOND PART OF THIS QUESTION,

whether the terrestriall place of Paradise doe yet remaine.

The Papists.

Their best argument is this: Henoch and Elias doe yet remaine aliue in Paradise in their bodies. Error.

Ans. First, that Henoch and Elias doe liue with God we denie not, but whether in their bodies the Scripture saith not. Secondly, but that they liue in an earthly and terrestriall place, such as we imagineth Paradise to be, it is contrarie to Scripture, which saith, that Elias went vp in a white cloude to heauen, 2. King. 2. 11. Ergo, he is not in earth. Thirdly, Paradise is now no terrestriall but a celestiall place in heauen: for Saint Paul taketh Paradise and heauen for all one, 2. Cor. 12. vers. 2. 4.

The Protestants.

The terrestriall Paradise is not now extant vpon the earth, but long agoe, as it is most likely destroyed by the flood: we thus shew it.

Argum. 1. The waters in the flood couered the whole earth, and preuailed ouer all the mountains that are vnder the heauen, fiftene cubites, Genes. 7. 20. wherefore it is most like, that Paradise was then destroyed.

Belarm. First, he saith, that all those mountaines were couered with waters, where sinners and small men dwelt, whom the Lord purposed to destroy; so that the mountaines and regions of Paradise are excepted.

Contra. First, but the text saith all the mountaines were couered vnder the whole heauen: how then dare he make the holie Ghost a lyer, and say, as it were correcting the text, no, all were not couered. Secondly, thus to vphold his fancies, he runneth to forged myracles: for the waters being fiftene cubites aboue other mountaines, and yet not ouerflowing Paradise, must needs compass it about as a wall, and stand as a collar of a coate round about it: But what authoritie hath he thus to coyne myracles beside Scripture?

Belarmine answereth, that it had bin a greater myracle to see Henoch and Elias hanging in the ayre to be kept from the waters, for they could not haue liued in Paradise, being ouerflown, as it is certaine they doe.

Contra. Why Belarmine? Elias was taken vp into heauen, as wee proued out of Scripture, and therefore hee needed not to haue feared the flood vpon the earth. Thirdly, if Paradise were not ouerflown, God might haue spared the making of the Ark, for Noah with his familie and all the small might haue been more safely kept in Paradise.

Belarmine saith, it was no place for sinners.

Ans. Why Noah was a faithfull man, and no more a sinner now, then Henoch was, when he was taken vp: might not Noah therefore as well haue been kept there as Henoch? especially seeing hee was not to continue there, but to remaine onely for a time, till the deluge were ouerpast?

Secondly, Belarmine denieth the argument: it followeth not, that Paradise should be vtterly destroyed, though it were ouerflown: for the deluge did not chaunge the situation of the place, nor the disposition of the ayre, &c. Belarm. cap. 14.

Ans. First, the overflowing of water, which many times casteth downe hills, and fillth up valleyes, which maketh standing pooles where it was drie land, must of necessitie bring great alteration, both for the pleasant situation, and the temperate ayre. Secondly, we say not, that by the flood Paradise was utterly made desolate: for it remained a pleasant and fertile soile even afterward, Genes. 10. 10. The land of Sodome and Gomorrha, before it was destroyed, is said to have been like the Lords garden, which was Eden: But yet the beautie and excellencie of Paradise was by the flood decayed.

Argum. 2. That Paradise is now onely remaining, which is the receptacle of the blessed soules of the Saints after this life: This day (saith Christ) shall thou be with me in Paradise, Luke. 23. 43. the Gospell speaketh not of any other Paradise. But this can be no terrestriall place: for the souls of the righteous goe to heauen: and Paradise in the Iesuites iudgement is a receptacle of bodies, not of soules: Ergo, there is no such terrestriall Paradise.

Saint Ambrose witnesseth with vs: Tum saluus ero, &c. Then I shall be safe, when I shall be in Paradise, where I shall live inter electos Angelos, among the elect Angels: serm. 15. in Psal. 119. Again, in 2. Corint. 12. Ultra omnia mundi sidera raptus intelligitur, &c. Paul is said to be rapt up beyond all the stars, &c. and into that Paradise, of the which the Lord spake to the multitude, even where the citie Ierusalem is, the mother of vs all. Paradise then is no other where now in heauen.

AN APPENDIX OR THIRD PART OF THIS question, concerning the tree of life in Paradise.

The Papists.

§. Error. Bellarmino rehearseth two opinions of this matter: some thinke that it was called the tree of life, because by eating thereof Adam might be preserved from death, and his substance, which might decay, in time be restored: see Augustine. Others are of opinion that it was appointed to be a meane to bring Adam to perfect immortalitie, such as wee shall haue after the resurrection: Of this minde is Bellarmino.

He groundeth his opinion vpon that text, Genes. 3. 22. Least he put forth his hand, and take of the tree of life, and live for ever: Ergo, the tree of life had power to giue eternall life to the eater thereof.

Ironia, is a figure, when one meaneth contrary to the signification of the word or sentence.

Ans. 1. This speech here vttered by the Lord, is ironically to be vnderstood, that God in so saying, meaneth not, that indeede, by eating of this fruit, Adam should live eternally: but in the former part of the verse the Lorde derideth the follie and simplicitie of man, who thought by eating the forbidden fruit to haue been as God, and was deceived: Behold, (saith God) thou art become as one of vs, so know good and euill: that is, hee thought in his owne opinion and conceit, &c. So the same speech is continued in this part of the verse: least he live for ever, that is, because in his simplicitie hee seduced to thinke hee may haue eternall life by eating of the tree of life, as he was made to beleue before, that he should by tasting of the forbidden fruit in knowledge be like vnto God.

2. Or if we take the wordes simply as they are spoken: the meaning is this, that seeing Adam was by his transgression deprived of life, he should also lose the signe thereof: it was therefore called the tree of life, not because it gaue life, but was a signe thereof.

The Protestants.

That the tree of life was neither ordained to preserve Adam in that state wherein he was, nor yet to endue him with a new kinde of immortalitie, but that it was a signe onely or symbole of life received of God.

Argum. 1. This tree, which was in the middest of Paradise, was no otherwise the tree of life, then the other was of the knowledge of good and euill: but this was not so called, because it actually gaue knowledge, but was a scale and signe vnto them of that miserable knowledge and experience, which by transgressing of Gods commaundement in eating of that fruit, they should fall into: And this is confessed by their Master, that it was called the tree of good and euill, because man by transgressing in eating thereof, experiundo disceret, should learne by experience what difference there was, betweene good obedience and euill disobedience, leb. 2. 17. Ergo, the other tree was a symbole or pledge of life. So in the Reuelation, chap. 22. 2. mention is made of the tree of life, which is Christ Iesus: He is indeede the true tree of life, because hee verily giueth life, this was but a signe and symbole of life.

Argum. 2. Spirituall graces are not obtained by corporall and carnall meanes: for as wee can not vie carnall weapons against spirituall euils, 2. Cor. 10. 4. so can wee not by externall and corporall meanes procure celestiaall and spirituall blessings: but immortalitie was a spirituall gift, eating of the fruit was but an externall action: Ergo, it could not giue immortalitie.

Quest. 3. If the tree of life had been able to give immortalitie, and God foreseeing the fall of man, would not have him in that estate to be partaker of immortalitie: God would not have permitted vnto man the vse of that tree as hee did; but rather haue giuen him a prohibition to eate thereof: but this the Lord did not, giuing them onely a charge concerning the tree of knowledge: which is not like that tree had any such force.

Belarmius answereth: 1. that neither Adam nor Satan did know which was the tree of life: for Satan 1. would haue tempted him to haue eaten also thereof, that hee might haue been eternally miserable: but Adam 2. might haue eaten of it by chaunce, as the text is, ne forte, leat perhaps he stretch his hand, &c. Gen. 3. 1. 2. Though Adam had knowne it, he would not haue bin curious to eate thereof before the time appointed, Belarm. cap. 29.

First, 1. Satan had no reason to tempt them to eate of the tree of life, because it was forbidden: for they might haue eaten freely of every tree in the garden; chap. 2. 16; the tree of the knowledge of good and euill onely excepted: In eating then of any other tree they should not haue transgressed: but Satans drift was to bring them into transgression. 2. And the Hebrue particle an, is not so to be translated, ne forte, leat perhaps, but rather as the 70. reads quando, quando, in any time. Likewise, May. 27. 3. I will keepe it, leat any assaile it: but the enemies would assaile it by chaunce, but of purpose and pretended malice. The wordes also that follow exclude the collection of chaunce, ne extorsu manu, leat he stretch out his hand: But hee that stretcheth out his hand, doth it not at aduenture, but wittingly and of purpose. 3. Adam could not be ignorant which was the tree of life: 1. both in respect of his great knowledge, whereby he knew the nature of all creatures, and so of plants and trees. 2. And because they had libertie to eate of all the trees in the garden: vnlesse they will say, he eate he knew not what: 3. and for that the tree of life was giuen onely for Adams vse, as they thinke to bring him to immortalitie, as we say to be a symbol vnto him of Christ: howsoeuer the vse of this tree specially concerning Adams state, was not kept from his knowledge.

Secondly, if Adam had knowne this tree to be able to giue immortalitie, he would sooner haue eate thereof, being not prohibited, than to haue touched the forbidden fruit, seeing that the eate thereof also would haue brought him to greater happines, than the other tree: that giuing immortalitie; the other but the knowledge of good and euill. Wherefore the tree of life could not giue immortalitie to those that eate thereof, but onely was a signe of true immortalitie in Christ.

THE SECOND CONTRVERSIE, OF THE FALL OF MAN.

His Controuerſie is diuided into theſe queſtions: Firſt, of the difference of veniall and mortall finnes. Secondly, whether ſinne any way ſtandeth with the will of God. Thirdly, of the ſinne of Adam, whether it were pride or infidelitie, whether a veniall, or mortall ſinne. Fourthly, of originall ſinne: of the nature thereof, what it is, the beginning thereof, from whence it ſpringeth, the effects thereof, the puniſhment thereof, with other parts of this queſtion.

THE FIRST QUESTION, OF THE DISTINCTION and difference of veniall and mortall finnes.

The Papiſts.

Mortall finnes are thoſe which doe caſt men out of Gods fauour, and are worthe of eternall damnation: veniall finnes doe ſomewhat diſpleaſe God, yet deſerue not eternall death, but are pardonable of their owne nature, Belarm. lib. 1. de amiſſ. gratia, cap. 2. & cap. 9. in princip. R. b. innotat. Roman. 1. 11. They define alſo in particular which are veniall finnes. Firſt, all inuoluntarie and ſudden paſſions of the minde, as of anger, concupiſcence, and ſuch like, Belarm. cap. 3. ad ſum. for all ſinne, they ſay, is voluntarie, and therefore theſe paſſions hauing not conſent of will, are farre from ſinne, neither are imputed to any man, neither for them need he ſay vnto God, ſorgue vs our finnes, R. b. innot. Rom. 7. ſet. 8. 9.

Secondly,

Secondly, these are veniall finnes, which though they be done with consent of the mind, yet are but seene in small and light matters: as if a man steale a halfe pennie, speake an idle word, laugh immoderately, or such like. But the contrarie to these are mortall and deadly finnes, as perurie, adulterie, murder, &c.

Now to proue that these veniall finnes, as they call them, are in their owne nature pardonable, and deserue not eternall damnation; these arguments they bring out of Scripture.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul saith, that they which build hay or stubble, &c. though their work burne, yet they themselves shall be safe, yet through the fire: By hay and stubble the Apostle vnderstandeth veniall finnes, which doe bring detrimient or losse, but not destruction: for hee shall be safe, Belarm. cap. 9.

Ans. Not to stand at this time to sift out the right meaning of this place, where the Apostle intreateth not in generall of the good or euill workes of Christians, but onely of the preaching of the Gospell, which when it is sincerely preached, both for the matter and manner, then do they build vpon the foundation, which is Iesus Christ, gold and silver, &c. but when Christ is taught for vaine glorie, or contentiously, or with any other sinister affection, such doe build vpon hay and stubble. Now we answer: first, to preach Christ but impurely, and not sincerely, which is compared here to a straw-building, is no veniall or light offence, but a sin worthe of death: for Christ shall say vnto them in the day of iudgement, that preached and prophesied in his name, but not sincerely: Verily I know you not, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie, Matth. 7. 22, 23.

Again, veniall finnes, saith the Iesuite, facili negotio expiantur, are easily purged and done away, cap. 2. but so is not this sinne of impure preaching: he shall be safe, yet as through the fire, that is, with some hardnes and difficultie: and so the phrase is vsed, Epist. Iud. 23. Others sawe with him, as pulling them out of the fire: but haue compassion of others in putting difference. These are such as sinne of infirmities: the other are more notorious offenders, which are as it were in the fire, being in great daunger.

2. But admit these are veniall finnes, such as are forgiven at Gods hands: yet is it not hence prooued, that they are veniall of their owne nature, but are pardoned in Christ: for the Apostle speaketh of such which keepe the foundation, that is, Christ Iesus, though their building be not perfect and sound.

Argum. 2. Matth. 5. 22. Only he that saith to his brother, foole, is worthe of hell fire: he that hath raca, or is but angrie, is but culpable of iudgement, or of a Councell, &c. Ergo, every sinne is not worthe of hell fire, Belarm. cap. 9.

Ans. First, this place doth shew a difference and degree of euerlasting punishment, according to the qualitie and diuersitie of finnes: but another kinde of punishment beside, it sheweth not: so then, iudgement, a councell, hell fire, doe but signifie three degrees of the same punishment: hell fire is due to the rest, but it is added onely for distinction, to shew both a difference of the sinne and punishment.

Secondly, this is euident by these reasons: first, because iudgement, aperta, apena, is taken in Scripture for euerlasting punishment or condemnation, Rom. 2. 3. how shalt thou escape the iudgement of God? Secondly, every sin is a transgression of the law, 1. Ioh. 3. 4. And every transgression is vnder the curse, Galath. 3. 10. But these are transgressions of the law, Thou shalt not kill, &c. here our Sauour expoundeth: Ergo, they are vnder the curse of the law, and so subiect to death. Thirdly, Saint Paul saith, no rayler can inherite the kingdome of God, 1. Corinth. 6. 10. but he that saith raca, is a rayler: for the worde signifieth a tighthead, or cockbraine, being deriued of racus, which signifieth to euacuate or emptie: wherefore hee that saith raca, shall not inherite the kingdome of heauen.

Argum. 3. Luk. 12. 59. Thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the vtmost farthing. These are veniall finnes, which shall be purged in Purgatorie, and not bee punished in hell, Belarm. ibid.

Ans. First, our Sauour in this place speaketh of offences among men, and giueth a rule in this place onely how to escape the iudgement of man and the troubles of this life. Secondly, if it be spiritually applied, by prison, hell is vnderstood: and so is it taken, 1. Pet. 3. 19. for the place of the wicked and disobedient. Thirdly, they shall not come out, till they haue paid the vtmost farthing, that is neuer, because it is impossible to pay or answere the debt vnto God, Mat. 18. 34. Fourthly, our Sauour speaketh of vncharitable persons, such as deferre and refuse to be reconciled and to agree with their brethren, Matth. 5. 25. But want of charitie deserueth hell.

Argum. 4. Saint Iames saith, chap. 1. vers. 15. When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished bringeth forth death: Ergo, sinne is not mortall, but when it is consummate and finished: Remittit in hunc locum, Belarm. cap. 9.

Ans. Out of this place it is gathered, that there are degrees of sinne, and that the more heinous sinne is, it is worthe greater death, and is more hardly forgiven: and therefore sinne consummate unconsumed or finished is said to bring forth death, rather then sinne but conceived onely, namely, in respect of smaller sinnes, the greater are nearest to death. Otherwise to speake simply death is the wages of all sinne, Rom. 6.23.

By sinne consummate we vnderstand continuance in sinne without repentance, which is the right consummation of sinne: then the Apostle speaketh not of sinne as it is in it selfe, but as it is accounted of before God, who in his mercie forgiveth sins not consummate or finished, but broken off by repentance, and in his iustice iudgeth and condemneth sinnes consummate by hardness of heart and impenitencie.

Otherwise lust and concupiscence it selfe is worthie of death: 1. Ioh. 2. 17. The world passeth and the lust thereof: (which vers. 16. is said to be the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes) he that hath the lust of the flesh, which is the lust of the world, fulfilleth the will of God: abideth for ever: he that hath the lust of the flesh, which is the lust of the world, fulfilleth not the will of God: Ergo, hee abideth not for ever, and consequently is subject to death.

The Protestants.

WE confesse that there is a great difference of sinnes, both in their nature and in the punishment due vnto them: that as sinnes are greater or lesse in themselves, so they are worthy of greater or lesse punishment. And therefore we detest their error, that thinke all sinnes to be equall and alike: but yet wee cannot admit this popish distinction of veniall and mortall sinnes, though some sinnes were veniall in their owne nature: for even the least sinne deserueth death, if God should deale with vs according to the exact rule of his iustice: yet all sinnes, namely the least but the greatest are veniall by grace and faith in Christ, vnto the faithfull and believers, and not otherwise: We proue it thus.

Argum. 1. That all sinnes in themselves are worthie of death, the Scripture speaketh plainly: Deuter. 27. 26. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in this law: Ezech. 18. The soul that sinneth shall dye: Iam. 2. 10. He that faileth in one point of the law is guilty of all: Euen transgression of the law therefore deserueth death: but all sinne is a transgression of the law, Iak. 4. Ergo.

Belarmino answereth, that all those are vnderstood of mortall and great offences, not of the smaller sinnes which he calleth veniall: for in the first place, the words are (written in this law) and in that law are only forbidden the greater sinnes, as adulterie, idolatrie, murther, and so likewise Ezech. 18. the more hainous sinnes are reckoned vp.

Contra. This poore clause (this law) cannot helpe the Iesuite: for Saint Paul alleaging this place, the curse is on every one that continueth not in all things written in the law, not this law: shewing hereby that all transgressions generally of the whole law, or any part thereof, are subiect to the curse of the law: so also is the Prophet to be vnderstood.

In the place in Saint James hee answereth thus: He that offendeth in one point, that is, not in any point, but such an one, as whereby charitie or loue is broken; and then it is no veniall but a small sinne.

Contra. First, the Apostle saith, Whosoever shall keepe the whole law, and yet faile in one point: hee speaketh not of any great and apparant transgression, for how should the man that doth it, seeme to keepe the whole law: but of some secret and smaller offence rather, which notwithstanding hee is for a good keeper of the law. Secondly, the Apostle himselfe putteth an example, If thou committest not adulterie, and yet killest, thou art a transgressor: but hee onely killeth not that killeth but he also that is angrie vnadvisedly, or calleth Racha, as our Sauour Christ expoundeth the commandement, Mat. 5. 22. therefore he that faileth in these points killeth, and so is a transgressor of the law. Thirdly, all veniall sinnes doe faile also in charitie: for charitie is the fulfilling of the law Roman. 13. vers. 10. hee therefore that breaketh not charitie doth keepe the lawe, and transgresseth it not: But he that committeth any veniall sinne, transgresseth the law, otherwise it were no sinne, and therefore faileth also in charitie: Saint James therefore by this one point vnderstandeth veniall sinnes, as well as other.

Argum. 2. Beside, our Sauour Christ saith to Peter, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in mee, Iak. 1. 3. If all sinnes exclude vs from hauing part in Christ, and consequently from the kingdom of God; then consequently all sinnes are mortall, and in their owne nature worthie of death.

Belarmino answereth, that veniall sinnes doe not simple exclude from the kingdom of God, but onely for a time, till they be purged and washed, res. ad obiecl. 3.

Contra. First, if then veniall sinnes be neuer washed, they shall simple exclude from the kingdom of heauen. Secondly, the force of the argument remaineth vnanswered: for if all sins must be washed away in Christ, or else we haue no part in him, and Christ died only to take away those sinnes which deserued death, as the Apostle saith, Hebr. 2. 14. That he might destroy through death sinnes which had power ouer death: vers. 15. And, that he might deliuer them, which for feare of death were all their their life time subiect to bondage. They then that were subiect to death by reason of their finnes, were deliuered by Christs death: Ergo, all finnes for the which Christ died, were worthie of death.

Argum. 3. If all finnes are not mortall, then Christ died not for all finnes: for he by his death did satisfie onely for finnes that deserved death: but Christ died for all finnes, Ioh. 1. 19.

Again, originall sinne, which is lesse then any actuell sinne, such as their veniall finnes are, is worthie of death, and there by death raigneth euen ouer children, which sinne not actually as Adam did, Rom. 5. 14. Ergo, veniall finnes which proceede from originall sinne, doe much more deserue death. Saint Paul also further thus saith: If I doe that I would not, then is it not I any longer that doe it, but sinne that raigneth in me, Rom. 7. 20. He calleth it sinne, though he consent not to it, which is against the Rhemists, that will haue no motion or passion in the minde sinne, vnlesse it be voluntarie: and say further, that we neede not aske forgiveness for such finnes.

In Psal. 103.

Let Augustine speake in the last place: Peccata ignorantia vel negligentia melius accusantur, quam excusantur ut maneant, meliusq; purgantur inuocato Deo, quam firmanur irritato Deo: The finnes of ignorance and negligence are better accused, then excused; better by praying to God to purge them, then by prouoking God to confirme them: Ergo, forgiveness must be ascribed Gods hand for voluntarie finnes, finnes of ignorance.

Also he saith, Propter omnia peccata baptismus inueniens est, propter leniora oratio dominica: For all sinns Baptisme is a remedie, and the Lords prayer for the lesse, de symbol. lib. 1. 6. Ergo, these lesse sinns are in their owne nature guiltie of death, and not of themselves pardonable: for otherwise we need not say the Lords prayer for them, nor aske God forgiveness, as the Rhemists themselves confesse, annot. 1. Rom. 7. sect. 8. 9.

We haue also the consent of antiquitie: Gelasius, rom. anathemat. Est peccatum ad mortem in idem peccato manentibus, est peccatum non ad mortem ab eodem peccato recedentibus: There is a sinne vnto death, to them that continue in it: there is a sinne not vnto death, to them that depart from it.

Nicen. 2. can. 5. Peccatum ad mortem est, quoties aliqui peccantes se non emendant: A sin vnto death is, when they that sinne doe not amend themselves. Repentance we see, maketh all sinnes veniall: want of repentance maketh all finnes mortall. None therefore are veniall of their owne nature, but by repentance.

Decret. distinct. 25. c. 3. gloss. ex Augustin. Nullum peccatum est veniale, quod non fiat criminis dampnabile: No sin is so veniall, which is not made criminall, if it doe please: that is, if the sinner continue in it. Caus. 33. distinct. 1. c. 47. Venialis culpa, quam sequitur confessio delictorum: That sinne is veniall, which the confession of finnes followeth. This sentence is rehearsed and approved by the Master of Sentences, lib. 4. distinct. 17. a.

The Master hath many sentences to the like effect: Lib. 2. distinct. 24. 1. Totus homo damnatur, &c. Whole man shall be condemned, vnlesse those finnes, which without any will or purpose of working, but with a delight onely of the minde, are committed in thought, are remitted by the fauour of the Mediatour: But these, by their owne definition, are onely veniall finnes, which haue not the consent of the will. Lib. 3. distinct. 38. a. A hye made to saue another, is a veniall sinne, though weak, but to the perfect it is damnable. If the same sin be veniall to one, and damnable to another, then is it not in it owne nature veniall. Lib. 4. dist. 20. b. Quadam peccata mortalia in paruulis sunt venialia: Some mortall finnes, are by repentance made veniall. Therefore they are not veniall or worthie of forgiveness in themselves, but by repentance and mercie in Christ.

Some learned writers of the Papists doe differ from them in this erroneous distinction of veniall and mortall finnes: Ioann. Gerson. 3. pars. theol. tract. de vna anima. lect. 1. Ioann. Episcop. Rossin. refutat. artic. 32. Luther. Iacobus Alman. tract. 3. c. 20.

THE SECOND QUESTION, WHETHER SINNE any way may stand with the will of God.

The Papists.

7. Error.

NO sinne standeth with the will or intention of God, but is directly against it, Rhem. annot. Rom. 3. sect. 4. And therefore Christs death was Gods act no otherwise, then by permission, Act. 3. sect. 2. Neither is God the author of sinne, otherwise then by permission and withholding of his grace: annot. Iam. 1. 13. Sic etiam Bellarm. de statu peccat. cap. 3.

But our faith is this, grounded vpon Scripture, that whatloeu is done in the world, is not done by Gods permission onely, but standeth also with his knowledge: Hell and destruction are before him, how much more the hearts of men? Prou. 15. 11. With his will and pleasure: whatsoever pleased the Lord, that did be in heauen and in earth, Psal. 35. 6. With his eternall ordinance and decree: So the Apostle saith, that Christ was deliuered vp according to y determinate counsell of God, Act. 2. 23. And not onely so, but all things in the world are done by the power of God: Shall there be still in

... Lord hath not done it? Amos. 3. 6. yea, at the bidding and commaundement of God: the Lord hath bidden him to curse David. 2. Sam. 16. 10. Therefore euill actions are not done onely by the commaundment of God. And yet for all this God shall not be the author of sinne.

For first, God is not the author of any euill action, as it is euill, either by willing, decreeing, bidding, or commaunding thereunto, but onely as hee giueth power, as our creator, to his creatures, to moue or worke this or that: Therefore a sinfull worke: Quoniam Dei est iussus, ipse est, crimen autem hominis est, crimen est, scelus est: As it commeth of God the author, it is a worke onely, and no sinne: as it is of man, it is sinne and wickednes. Againe, God is no other- wise to be respected in a sinfull worke and action, but as a iust iudge, which punisheth sin by sin: for it is a iust thing before God to recompence one sinne by another: and so it is to be confide- red, not so much, tanquam peccatum, quia pena peccati, as it is a sinne, as a punishment of sinne. Truly, in the same action, God propoundeth one end, as the exercising of his children, and ma- nifestation of his mercie, as in the tentation of Iob: the instrument whereby hee worketh, respec- teth some euill end, as Satan laboured the subuersion of Iob, and the euill affection and purpose of the instrument maketh the action euill; but God is free, and vnspotted: God therefore is not in any wayes the author of sinne. Let vs now see what arguments our aduersaries bring: first, as- pect our opinion, and then for the confirmation of their owne.

Argum. 1. Belarmine setteth downe foure great absurdities, that (he saith) must needs follow of our opinion. First, if God be the author of euery action good or bad, and if wicked men are instruments to accomplish his will: God must of necessity be the author of sinne, seeing he wills and commaundeth it, cap. 4. Secondly, God is not in thus doing the author onely of sinne, but he himselfe also should properly and truly commit sinne, being consenting, and letting his hand to sinfull actions, cap. 5. Thirdly, God by this meanes should not onely be guilty of sinne, but the onely person in the world that properly sinneth: for if that neither Adam, nor any other posteritie could chuse but sinne, seeing it was so ordained of God: and no man is said to sin, in that which he cannot shunne and anyde: therefore no man properly is guilty of sinne; and so would light wholly vpon God, cap. 6. Lastly, seeing then that man sinneth not, because what he doth is by the power, will, and commaundement of God: and yet God himselfe is no wayes the author of sinne, as the Protestants affirme: then it would follow, that sinne is nothing at all, as the Libertines hold, but onely an imagined and deuised thing, being no where to be found: And if sinne be nothing, then hell is nothing, and Christ's death in vaine, Belarm. cap. 7.

First, these obiections are easily removed by that which we answered before: that God is otherwise the author of euill actions, or the willer and commaunder of them, then as the power of working is of God: but the euill qualitie and condition of the action, is to be imputed onely to the instrument: so that men committing euill, as they receive a generall and absolute power of God, to moue, to liue, &c. are onely, passiva instrumenta, passive instruments: as they are authors of euill, they are onely, actiua instrumenta, active and working instruments. We will make this true by some example: as when the Sunne beames beare vpon some carion, by the beare there is raised a stinck, yet the Sunne beames stinke not, but the euill fauour ariseth onely of the corrupt matter: And as when we see a lame man walking, and halting, as hee goeth: the sound life that is in man giueth motion to the lame part, yet the lamenesse thereof commeth of the infirmities of the member it selfe: Euen so the Lord may be the cause of euill actions, and yet be guiltie of the euill.

Mal. Ioh. 1. 1.

Belarmine obiecteth that these examples are vnlike: for the Sunne, and the soule of man are onely generall causes, not particular of these actions: but God (as you say) is not onely an vni- uersall, but a speciall cause of euery action, Belarm. cap. 3.

The soule in the bodie is both an vniuersall and particular cause of the power of mo- uing in euery part: for as the saying in Philosophie is, anima est in toto, & in quolibet parte: The soule is both vniuersally whole in the whole bodie, and specially whole in euery part. But of the members and defect in mouing it is no cause at all, vnlesse it be the generall and furthest tempo- ral cause: so we doe say also of the working of God in euill actions.

In one and the same action God doth respect a good and profitable end, as the instru- ment may haue a mischieuous purpose and intent, which maketh the action euill: and so the sinne is proper onely to the instrument.

This is against Saint Paul's rule, who saith, wee must not doe euill, that good may come thereof: therefore the good intent, which God propoundeth to himselfe, cannot suffice the euill action, wherein he is a partie, Belarm. cap. 4.

Caue. God is not a partie in the euill of the action at all, as wee haue shewed: wherefore it is false that he doth euill to a good end. Nay, both the action it selfe is good as it commeth of God, and the end also good: which the Lord respecteth.

The iudgements of God are alwayes iust: and therefore sinnes, as they are punishments of former

A. 2. 1. 1.

Mal. Ioh. 1. 1.
A. 2. 1. 1.

former sinne are iust: and so may be of God. Ans. Yea; but Adams sinne was not a punishment of a former; for he was created without sinne, therefore his sin must be imputed to God. Ans. 4.

Contra. Yea, but Adam had free will by creation; to chuse good or euill, and therefore chusing it was his voluntary choice to sinne; he onely is to be blamed for it, on his own free will. Ans. 5.

Obiect. Adam fall is foreseene of God, and he could not otherwise chuse: how then can he be guilty of that sinne, which was not in his power to auoyde? Ans. 6.

Ans. Indeepe Adam in respect of Gods appointment and foreknowledge, did sinne necessarily, but not causally, he was not constrained: but in respect of his owne free will, he sinned, not necessarily, but voluntarily: he did neither sinne of necessitie, nor by constraint, but voluntarily.

Saine Augustine doth answer this obiection to the full: It will be said that Pharaoh could do no other, because it was so foreseene of him: It is answered, saith he, Dei prescientiam non cogit hominum voluntatem, qualem presciuit Deus, sed presciuit ealem futuram, qualem futuram erat, qualem se esse non fecerat Deus: qui si hoc presciterat, quod non esset, prescientia iam non esset. The prescience of God doth not make a man to be that, which he is foreseene to be, but doth onely foreknow him to be such, as he should have been, though God had not made him such: for if God should have foreseene that which is not, it were no foreknowledge at all; De predestinatione lib. 1. c. 15.

Thus we see how sinfull actions may stand with the will, decree and power of God: and yet God shall neither be the author of sinne, nor himselfe thereby be made either properly, or only to sinne, nor yet sinne to become nothing. Now let vs examine the reasons which our aduersaries bring of their part.

Argument. 1. The Scripture saith, that God loueth not, or willet not iniquitie, Psal. 5. He will not the death of a sinner, Ezech. 18. 32. And many such places there are to the like purpose, God giueth no consent vnto sinne, much lesse commendeth it, Beilarm. cap. 8.

Ans. 1. First, these places also make as strong against popish permission: for if God had iniquitie, he will not permit it: for he that permitteth any thing which he hateth, either sheweth his impotencie, in that he is not able to hinder it, but is constrained to permit it: or else deduceth his mutabilitie in louing that which before he hated.

We also graunt, that God neither willet nor worketh iniquitie: hee willet the work, but the iniquitie of the worke is of man: And he willet not the death of a sinner; that is, hee precepteth not, nor worketh the death of any, which is wrought by sinne, with the which the Lord hath no fellowship: Ne Augustinus saith: Cupiditatis peccatum Dei predestinatione non excipitur, sed iniquitas, sed predestinatione iudicium suum, quo iudicium, prout possit retribueretur, non est: Gods predestinatione doth not stirre vs perversely, or enforce the desires of sinners: but God hath only predestinated in iust iudgements, whereby he will render, to every man, as he hath done, and as the sinners, which he hath committed, doe deserue.

Lastly, these places in Scripture, God willet not the death of a sinner, and he will all men be saved, 1. Timothy, 2. and such like, are to be vnderstood of the revealed will of God: who notwithstanding in his secret will hath cast his doe vpon every man, either to life or death: yet the meanes of saluation are offered to all.

Obiect. 1. You confesse then that there is a revealed will of God in the Scripture, from whence then doe ye know his secret will? surely, saith the Iesuite, scilicet ostendunt se cum non ex scriptura sed ex proprio capite deduxisse: By this you declare, that this secret will you learne not out of Scripture, but gather it out of your owne head: Beilarm. cap. 8.

We graunt the Iesuite consequent, you learne it not out of Scripture: Ergo an invention of your owne head: for hereby hee quodmeth all inventions and traditions, from Scripture, to which, soeuer hee most stidly maintaineth them. We denie the antecedent, for this distinction of the secret and revealed will of God, we learne euery out of Scripture: for where we read, Ego dixi creatus mundus Isai. 45. 7. I am the God that create stilles: And againe, Non Domini est saluum fieri: Thou art not a God: which loueth iniquitie: how shall these places be reconciled to speake one truth, vnlesse we make a difference betwene the secret and revealed will of God?

Obiect. 2. If God haue a secret will, whereby he willeth one thing, and a revealed will, whereby he nilleth the same: then hath God two contrarie wills, which cannot be, both true, and as you make God a lyer, Beilarm. ibid.

Ans. First, we doe not say that God hath two wills, but one and the selfesame will, that hath diuers respectes: and in respect of Gods secret will, he willeth one thing, which in respect of his secret counsell hee nilleth, hee is no more contrarie to himselfe, than our Saviour Christ was, who made shew to his two Disciples as though he would go further, and yet had a purpose to stay with them. But concerning this distinction, Augustine putteth vs out of doubt: Remota haec discretio, quomodo una scientia intra secretum iustitia sua continet, sincerissimum credendum est, deum velle saluari velle: Seeing in part the difference of men, which the diuine knowledge hath locked vp in the clothes of justice, it to be beleueed, that God would haue all men saved. There is then another distinction of Gods secret and reuealed will, the Master of sentences very well approueth out of Augustine lib. 1. dist. 47. b. Multa non fieri prater voluntatem Dei, qua sunt contra voluntatem: That many things are done contrary to the will of God, which are not done beside his will: that is, many things may be committed against Gods precepts, which are his will, and yet not against his omnipotent and euerslasting will: Contra eam quippe nihil fit, for nothing is done against that will: this is called voluntas signi, the signed will of God, which is testified by outward signes, as precepts and prohibitions in Scripture: the other is voluntas beneplaciti, the will of Gods Counsell, or purpose. And so Augustine concludeth, Quantum ad ipsos attinet, quod Deus voluit, fecerunt, quantum ad omnipotentiam Dei, nullo modo facere voluerunt: In respect of themselves, sinners do that which God would not; but in regard of Gods omnipotent will, they could not.

Argum. 3. S. Iames saith, Let no man say, when he is tempted; I am tempted of the Lord, I am. 1. 13. and 1. 14. God will not suffer you to be tempted aboue that you are able: Ergo, much more doth not God tempt any man, or compell him to sinne, seeing he doth not suffer his children to be tempted, &c. Bellarm. 2. 8. loc. 4.

Ans. First, this professed disputer forgetteth the point in question, and fighteth with his own shadow, forcing a conclusion, which no man denieth, and so traueileth with wind: For we confesse, that God neyther tempteth, prouoketh or compelleth any man to sinne. Secondly, there is a temptation, which is of God, which is nothing but the triall of a mans faith: as the Lord is said to haue tempted Abraham, Genes. 22. 1. that is, to haue made triall and prooue of his faith: any other way God tempteth not. Thirdly, these three wayes we acknowledge Gods power in the sinfull actions of men. 1. In forsaking them, and giuing men ouer to themselves to follow their own lusts: as he tooke his good spirite from Saul; by the absence of which spirite he fell into most grievous finnes. 2. God as a Creator giueth life and power to euery thing to moue, to liue, to vnderstand. Act. 17. In him we liue, we moue and haue our being. 3. He as a iust iudge doth punish sinners by their owne sinne, Rom. 1. 26. For this cause God gaue them ouer to vile affections: So that sinne is a consequent of desertion, a worke of the creature, a iudgement and punishment; is not without the will of God: yet the Lord is no way accessarie to the euilnesse of sinne, nor the author thereof. In this sense we mislike not that distinction of Origen: Multa sine voluntate Dei geruntur, nihil sine prouidentia; prouidentia est, qua dispensat, & prouidet; voluntas, qua vult, aut non vult. Many things are done without the will of God, nothing without his prouidence; that is his prouidence, wherewith he doth dispense, dispose, and prouide or foresee; that is his will, wherewith he willet or nillet any thing: wherefore though sinne be not agreeable to the will of God, yet standeth with his prouidence.

The Protestants.

WE affirme, that sinne neither standeth absolutely with the will of God, for he made not sinne, nor yet created man to sinne, neither properly or directly doth God suffer or permit sinne, as it is sinne, to be done in the world: but he suffereth the creature, without coercion or constraint to vse their natural faculties, which are of themselves prone to sinne: so that in sinfull actions God worketh otherwise then by permission onely, or withholding of his grace: for he may be considered both as a Creator, that giueth power to euery thing, to moue, to liue, to do this or that, and as a iust iudge, punishing and iudging men in and by their owne finnes.

Argum. 1. S. Peter saith, that Christ was deliuered vp according to the determinate counsell of God, Act. 2. 23. Gods determinate counsell is more then his sufferance or permission.

Ans. The meaning of the Apostle is this: that God had decreed and determined, that Christ should die to redeeme the world: but that Iudas should betray him, or Pilate condempne him, or the Iewes crucifie him, God decreed not it should be done, but to suffer it to be done; Bellarmin. 2. 11. sic etiam Rhemist.

Contra. 1. God did not onely permit the Iewes to worke their malice vpon Christ, but most iustly and most holily he vsed their malice to bring his purpose to passe. 2. For if God suffered and permitted that to be done; which he might haue hindered, hee thereby should be made accessary to the leues of his sonnes death. And 3. again, where the Apostle saith, desinito consilio, he was deliuered vp by the determinate counsell of God: it sheweth an active, not a permissive power of God, and a resolute decree of God for the deliuering vp of his Sonne, not a foreknowledge onely. 4. Neither is it the Lords manner to decree to suffer; but to do: for quasi non sciret Deus, et sciret, Psal. 35. 6. in domum meam et in ecclesiam. 5. But if he should suffer that to be done which he willet not, then not whatsoeuer the Lord willet, is done; but he should be constrained to yeeld to the will of others.

Argum. 2. The Prophet David saith, that God bid Simei curse, 2. Sam. 16. 1. And the Lord saith to the euill spirite, that offered himselfe to go and deceiue Abab: Vade & sic, & praeuerti bis: God and do so, and thou shalt preuaile: But bidding and commanding is more then suffering: Ergo

Ans. First, God may be said to bid or command to doe euill, in suffering the instruments which he vseth to doe euill. Secondly, because he not onely suffereth the wicked so to doe, but lea-ueth and forsaketh them, and withholdeth his grace. Thirdly, and beside these two wayes, Proph.
etiam Deus ipse voluntatibus malis, easque regit & gubernat, ac flectit in eis inuisibiliter operando, ut he- ret vitio proprio mala sint, tamen à diuina prouidentia ad unum potius malum, quam ad aliud, non positiua, sed permissiua ordinentur: God sitteth euen in the wicked purposes of men, gouerning and ruling them, and so by his inuisible power working in them, doth turne them, that although they be euill of themselves, yet they are by the diuine prouidence of God ordained to doe one euill rather then another, not positiuely, that is absolutely, appointing them thereto, but by way of permission: As God is said to haue commanded Shemei to curse, because he inclined his will, being euill, to curse Dauid. And he inclined him, not by compelling, but by opening him a way to this sinne, and stopping the way to other sinnes, sic Bellarm. de amiss. grat. lib. 2. cap. 13.

Contra. Concerning the two first wayes of permitting and withholding of grace, they haue not any place here: for to bid and command, is more then either of these. Concerning the third, first, the Iesuite is contrarie to himselfe, he saith that God doth gouerne, turne, and rule, and incline the minds of wicked men, and yet concludeth, that all this is done by permission: inclinauit id est per- missit, he inclined, that is, suffered: which are cleane contrarie: for to incline is an action, to permit is a thing passiue. Secondly, what differeth now this third way from the first? for here he runneth to permission. Thirdly, in saying that God inclineth to euill by opening a way to euill, and stopping the passage to other sinnes; he runneth into that inconuenience, which he most of all shun-neth, to make God the author of sinne: for how can it be auoyded, seeing God openeth a way to sinne, poynteth to it, and sheweth the meane: and might as well hinder the way to this sinne, as he doth to others? Therefore how much better and more safe is our assertion, that God in bidding
Shemei to curse, was himselfe an agent in this action, so farre as it tended to good: namely, vnto this wicked instrument in respect of himselfe after a most holy and iust maner, for the trial of Dauid, and the manifestation of his iust iudgement vpon this wicked man. And thus speaketh Deliber. a. bit.

 cap. 20.

Augustine, Deus voluntatem eius proprio suo vitio malam in hoc peccatum iudicio suo iustis & uerbis
inclinauit: God by his iust and secret iudgement, did incline his will, being corrupt of itselfe, vnto this mischief. Lo, he saith, inclinauit, he did incline his will, which is more, then permissit, he did suffer him.

Argum. 3. God is said in Scripture to harden mens hearts, and to blind their eyes: Exod. 7. vers. 3. I will harden Pharaohs heart. Iosua 11. 20. It came of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they should come against Israel. 1 Sam. 2. 25. They obeyed not the voyce of their father, because the Lord would kill them. Ilay 63. 17. Why hast thou made vs to erre from thy wayes? Iohn 12. 39. They could not be- leeue, because Esaias saith, he hath blinded their eyes and hardened their heart: Rom. 1. 28. God gauerth vp to a reprobate minde.

Bellarmino answereth, First, God is not the author of induration or excecration positiua, but onely negatiuely: that is, permittendo, deferendo, by suffering them to be hardened, and by forsaking them. Secondly, in Scripture those things are said to harden, or to blind, which are but the occasions onely, as gifts are said to blind the eyes of the wise: so God is said to harden, occasionaliter, by ministring the occasion, by abusing whereof men are hardened: as Psal. 105. God turned the hearts of the Egyptians, so that they did hate his people: God did not pervert the hearts of the Egyptians, but by shewing mercie to his people, they tooke occasion thereby to hate them. Bellarmino c. 13. & 14. obseruat. 5.

Contra. First, Thomas Aquinas, whom Bellarmino alleageth, graunteth, that God doth incline malas voluntates, non solum permittendo, sed positiua, incline the euil willes of men, not onely by permission, but positiuely: in comment. c. 9. ad Roman. that is, not by suffering onely, but by doing and working.

Secondly, neither can it safely be affirmed, that God ministreth occasion to men to be hard-ned or to sinne: seeing 1. that Balaam is reprobued for teaching Balaak to put a stumbling block before the children of Israel, Reuel. 2. 14. Shall we thinke then, that God putteth stumbling blocks before men to fall at? 2. And this were to make God the worker of temptation, as Sathan is, who tempteth occasionaliter, by setting the occasion or motion before mens eyes; as hee shewed Christ the whole world. 3. But if they say, that the occasion which God ministreth, is good but men abuse it, and are thereby hardened: as when through Gods patience men are made worse. Here God doth minister no occasion at all; but they take occasion to be hardened, where there is none offered: and thus God cannot any way be said to harden mens hearts.

Thirdly, Augustine hath foure opinions of this matter. 1. God is said to harden Pharaohs heart, qui causam ministras, because he ministred the cause, whereby Pharaoh his heart was hardened, qu. 30. in Exod. but this as I shewed is not sufficient. 2. Indurare Deus dicitur, quoniam iudicio noluit

God is said to harden, whom he will not mollifie, de predestination lib. 1. c. 4. Thus God should be said to harden the hearts of all wicked men. 3. That God is said to harden Pharao's heart, Non ad operum Dei, sed prescientie pertinere monstratur: It must be vnderstood of Gods prescience onely and foreknowledge, not of his working, de predestination lib. 1. c. 6. this were to confound Gods knowledge and workes. 4. Wherefore in the fourth place he saith, Deus indurauit per suum iudicium; Pharao per liberum arbitrium: God did indurate Pharao's heart, by his iust iudgement; Pharao by the freenesse of his corrupt will: de liber. arbit. c. 23. To this sentence of Augustine wee must add, that God doth not harden mens heartes onely, by permission, desertion, occasion, preiudice; but, as a iust iudge, he punisheth sinne by sinne, and giueth them ouer to the hardnesse of their heart: and Bellarmino vnawares confesseth as much, that when God in Scripture is said to indurate, id facit ut iustus iudex, he doth it as a iust Iudge, c. 14. obseru. 5. This is more then to do it by permission onely or desertion. Lastly, Origen doth very well expresse this matter, by this similitude: Sol duplicis videtur esse virtutis, &c. The Sunne seemeth to be of a double vertue, one to illuminate, another to burne or harden, but according to the matter and subiect: so God hardeneth Pharao's heart, because it was by his corrupt thoughts of an earthly nature, as the Sunne hardeneth the clay: in Cantic. So then as the Sunne, not by withdrawing his light, or by suffering, but effectually hardeneth the clay; so God likewise; but the cause of all is in the corruption of mans heart. To then to conclude this whole matter, I say with Augustine; first, Non cuiusquam peccati author est Deus, sed natura Creator, quia cum potestatem habuit non delinquendi, sponte deliquit: God is not the author of sinne, but the Creator of nature, which when it had power not to sinne, sinned willingly, arist. 6. fals. impos. Augustin. Secondly, aliud fecit Deus & ordinauit; aliud non fecit, sed ordinauit, some things God both made and ordered or disposed: some things he made not, but disposed or ordered, as the darkenesse in the creation, in Psal. 7. So God in the worke of sinne is to be considered as a Creator, from whom the creature hath power to do this or that; and as a iust Iudge, that ordereth and disposeth of sinne, directing it to the iust punishment of the wicked.

Conf. 23. qu. 4. c. 23. Cum aliquos a Deo traditos desideris, aut obduratos legimus, &c. When wee read of any giuen vp to their lusts, and obdurate, &c. We confesse that they had so deserved by their great sins: Where then there is an euil desert preceding, and hardnes of heart followeth as a punishment, there God is not to be considered only as a beholder, or sufferer, but as a iust Iudge.

Conf. 24. qu. 3. c. 39. The Colluthians are numbred among heretikes, Qui dicunt Deum non facere euil: Who say that God doth not euill, contrary to the Scripture, I the Lord create euil: the words excludung the power of God from euill, but onely by the way of permission; are not farre from this heresie.

The Master of the Sentences is a plentifull witness with vs; shewing diuers wayes out of Augustine how sinne standeth with the will of God. 1. Because mala fieri bonum est, it is a good thing, that euill should be done: for by this meanes Gods power and goodnesse is seene, in turning euill to good, lib. 1. dist. 46. g. 2. Voluntas Dei de nobis impletur, sed tamen non implemus eam cum peccamus: The will of God is fulfilled of vs, though we fulfill not the will of God, when we sinne. lib. 1. dist. 47. i. that is, Gods will euen in sinners is fulfilled to their punishment. 3. Actus mali, in quantum actus sunt, bona sunt & a Deo auctore: Euill actions, as they are actions, are good, and of God: lib. 2. dist. 35. d. 4. Ea qua peccata sunt & poena peccati, &c. That which is both a sinne and punishment of sinne, is of God as it is a punishment; for all punishments of sinne are iust, lib. 2. dist. 36. b. So likewise lib. 2. d. 32. Concupiscentia in quantum poena peccati damna habet auctorem: Concupiscentie, as it is a punishment hath God the author, but as it is a sinne or fault, it hath the author. 5. Lib. 2. dist. 44. b. Potestas mali est a Deo: The power of euill, or whereby euill is done, is of God: Potentiam Deus tribuit, elationem potentia malitia nostra mentis inuenit: God giueth power to worke, but the abuse of the power is of the malice of our owne mind. Thus the Master of the Sentences agreeth with vs: whereby it is euident, in what sense God in sinne is to be considered, not as a sufferer onely, but as a worker and disposer.

THE THIRD QUESTION, CONCERNING the sinne of Adam.

This question hath three parts. First, whether Adams fall, were any other way, then by Gods permission onely. Secondly, what Adams sinne was, whether pride or infidelitie. Thirdly, what kinde of sinne, whether veniall or mortall.

THE FIRST PART, WHETHER ADAMS FALL was any other way, then by Gods permission.

The Papists,

Bellarmino affirmeth, that God onely suffered Adam to be tempted and so to fall, and that God, Error.
in no way willed or decreed it: De stat. peccati lib. 3. c. 2.

Argum. 2. Pet. 3.9. God would haue none perish, but to come to repentance: Therefore God no way willed, or decreed the fall of man. Again, the Apostle saith, we must not doe euill, that good may come of it, Rom. 3.8. Ergo, God would not Adams fall, that he might afterward be saued by Christ.

Answ. First, the fall of man tended not to his destruction, but to his further strengthening and raising vp in Christ: as Ambrose well saith, Iusta esset hac accusatio, si vulnera nostra immutabilia essent: This accusation were iust, if our wounds were remediable, de paradiso, cap. 8. Neither was Adams fall euill, as it was foreseene and foreordained of God, the cause thereof was euill, namely Adams rebellion and disobedience: but God in his most holy counsell, knew how to turne Adams ruine and fall to his benefite.

The Protestants.

Neither doe we affirme that Adams sinne was appointed in the will and decree of God, but it proceeded from the libertie of Adams will: but the fall of Adam was both foreseene of God, and decreed to be, not permitted onely.

Argum. 1. As Christs death was decreed and determined, Act. 2.23. So was the fall of Adam, for the end of Christs death, was to restore Adams fall: and if the end be decreed, then those things also, which are necessarilie referred to that end. Again, Ephes. 1.4. The Saints were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, who hath predestinated us to be adopted through Iesu Christ: From whence I reason thus, the adoption of Gods children in Christ was predestinate & foreordained before the world: there could be no adoption, if Adam had not fallen: for what needed a restitution, if there had been no transgression or preuarication? Ergo, Adams fall was decreed.

Augustine saith, Tenenda est inueniuntur hac regula, This rule must surely be held, that sinners, in peccatis praesentis non predestinatos, poenam autem non predestinatos, were foreseene in their sinnes, not predestinate; but their punishment was predestinate. Wherefore Adams fall being a punishment of his sinne, was predestinate, and before ordained. Concerning Adams sinne, how it may stand with the will of God, I haue shewed at large before, quest. 2. part. 2.

THE SECOND PART, WHETHER PRIDE, OR infidelitie were the first sinne of Adam.

The Papists.

20. Error.

The Iesuites opinion is, that neither intemperancie, lust of the flesh, infidelity, or any other, but pride onely was the first offence into the which Adam fell: who being tickled with beloued, and an ambitious desire to better their estate, when the diuell had said vnto them (non, sed cum Diu) ye shall be as Gods: afterwards also fell into infidelitie, in giuing eare to Sathan, and not beleeuing the words of God, Bellarm. de stat. peccat. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Argum. 1. We reade in Ecclesiasticus, chap. 10. vers. 14. that pride is the originall of sinne: Ergo it was the first offence, from the which other flowed, Bellarm. ibid.

Answ. First, the authoritie of this booke doth not binde vs, because we doe not acknowledge nor receiue it for Scripture. Secondly, it is apparant by the text it selfe, that pride hath also his beginning, and therefore is not the originall of all transgression: as verse 13. The beginning of mans pride is to fall away from God: therefore by this sentence, disobedience is let before pride, as the beginning and begetter thereof. Thirdly, the Canonickall Scripture speaketh contrarie: for S. Paul saith, that not pride, but couetousnes or the loue of money, is the roote, that is, the beginning and cause of all euill, 1. Tim. 6.20.

Argum. 2. S. Paul saith, Rom. 5. 19. By one mans disobedience many were made sinners: but disobedience, that is, not to be subiect to the commandement of another, is the first act of pride: Ergo the first sinne of Adam was pride.

Answ. First, Bellarmine himselfe confesseth, that the disobedience of our first parents was tertium actum, the third act of their transgression, infidelitie the second, pride the first, cap. 9. but now he turneth his speech, and saith, that disobedience was the first act, which he maketh a part of pride. Secondly, by disobedience in this place, the Apostle meaneth not any one particular offence committed by our first parents, but the whole lump or masse of sinne rather, which did concur in their transgression: And this appeareth, by setting against Adams disobedience, the obedience of Christ: whereby is vnderstoode, not any one vertue but the whole righteousness, and perfection of Christs obedience: whereby many (saith the Apostle) are made righteous: but we are made righteous, not by the partiall, but whole and entire obedience of Christ. As Christs obedience then is taken for his whole and perfect obedience; so is Adams disobedience likewise.

The Protestants.

Though it be not a point greatly materiaall, whether pride or infidelitie in Adams transgression was the first, seeing it is on each side confessed, that both of them were present; yet because it is good, so far as is possible, to search out euery truth: we will also declare, which of these opinions commeth nearest the truth: first, it is to be considered, that many finnes conspired as it were, and were heaped together in the transgression of Adam: Augustine reckoneth vp these five: 1. Sacrilegium, there was Sacrilege, that is, they robbed God of his honor, in that they beleued his word. 2. Homicidium, Homicide, in being guiltie of their owne death. 3. Fornicatio spiritalis, Spirituall fornication, in giuing credit to the diuell. 4. Furtum, Theft, in eating fruite which was prohibited, and so none of theirs. 5. Auaritia, Couetousnes, plus quam sufficit expetendo, in desiring more then was sufficient: August. Enchirid. cap. 45. And in another place he setteth downe these more: Gulam, cupiditatem, superbiam: Gluttonie, for they saw that the fruite was pleasant to the eye, and therefore desired to eate of it: Concupiscence, or carnall desire, they perceiued themselves to be naked, &c. Pride, in ambitiously seeking to be like vnto God: Ad fratres in Exemo. folio 68. Vnto these we may adde the excusing of their sinne, and in Adam, his credulitie, in giuing too light eare to Eua her suggestion: The first of all these, which are ten in number, was their infidelitie, which Augustine calleth sacrilege, not their pride; and we shew it thus.

Argum. 1. Infidelitie, and forgetting of God is the beginning of all sinne, as the Psalm saith: The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God: and then it followeth: They haue corrupted, and done an Psalm 14.1. damnable worke: The forgetfulness of God therefore, which commeth of infidelitie, begetteth and bringeth forth other vngodly werkes. And our Saviour saith, that from within, out of the heart, (which is the seate of infidelitie) proceede fornications, murders, &c. Mark. 7.21. Therefore pride followeth infidelitie, for the foole will neuer liue vp himselfe against God, if he had not first forgotten the Maiestie, eternitie, and power of God.

Argum. 2. We doe thus also demonstrate it: Eua sinned before Adam: Eua her sinne was by seduction: she could not be seduced, but by giuing eare to the seducer: the seducer lyed vnto her, and made the word of God false: promising they should become as Gods, by eating the forbidden fruite, whereas the Lord had sayd, they should dye the death if they did eate: Sathan therefore could neuer haue seduced them, vntill they had giuen credite to him, which was their infidelitie. Our argument then is this: That, whereby they were seduced, was before that whereto they were seduced: for the cause is alway before the effect, the meane and instrument before the end: but infidelitie is that whereby they were seduced, in giuing credite to Sathan: pride and disobedience, that, wherunto, namely, to eate the forbidden fruit, and so to be like vnto God: the first was the object of their disobedience, the other of their pride: Ergo, their infidelitie was first.

Argum. 3. Faith is the beginning of righteousness, Ergo, infidelitie is the roote of sinne: argum. Caluini.

Determinatio. It followeth not, for the foundation of the house is first laid, but it is last destroyed: the heart is the first that liueth, and the last that dieth, cap. 5. obiect. 2.

Contra. 1. The first decay in a building is at the foundation, and where an house is at once destroyed, and brought to vtter ruine, it is first vndermined at the foundation: such was that vniuersall ouerthrow of mankind, which began at the very foundation, namely the decay of faith, in not beleeuing Gods word: so likewise for the other similitude, in the naturall end of man, the heart is the last that dieth, but where the death is violent, and hastened, the wound is first made in the heart, to procure a more speedie dispatch: and so Sathan gaue first our parents a deadly wound in the heart and life of their soules, namely their faith: thus his owne examples are turned against him.

He is very bolde: thus to contradict their owne Canons: Clementin. lib. 3. tit. 16. Clemens. 5. Thus decreeth in the generall Councell of Vienna: Vnde vulnus est ortum, prodij & medela; unde mors, inde vita euenit: Where the wound began, the cure was made, where death entred, there life proceeded: But our life and cure beginneth from faith in Christ: Ergo, in his faith man was first wounded and wounded.

Lex. Augustinus speake: Ego cum Apostolus dico mentem mulieris fuisse à serpente corruptam, & ex corruptione peruenit libido in mentem mulieris & viri: I say with the Apostle, that the minde of the woman was corrupted by the serpent, and so by this corruption lust came into the minde both of the man and woman: Cont. Iulian. lib. 6. cap. 12. The corruption of their mindes then bred lust; which was two-fold, lust to eate the fruite, which was a spice of gluttonie; lust and desire thereby to be made like God, which was their pride: these two did arise of the corruption of their minde. Their minde then was corrupted first: and that was by infidelitie.

Hereof also we haue further euidence: Tertullian. lib. 2. in Marcion. He doubteth not, Ada delibaturus fuit, &c. To cal Adams sinne heresie, which he committed by preferring his owne sentence before Gods: What was this else but a kinde of infidelitie, not to giue credence vnto the sentence of God.

Likewise in their owne lawe: Clementin. lib. 3. tit. 16. Gustus saucianit, gustus sanat: The taste woundeth, the taste healeth, that is, the taste of Christs flesh giueth health, as the taste of the forbidden fruite gaue the first wound: disobedience then, which was the fruite of infidelitie, was the first first transgression, for they would neuer haue eaten of the tree, if they had beleued the word of God, that they should haue died.

The Master of the Sentences, saith: In quo verbo locum dedit tentandi, cum dixit, ne foris moriamini. In which word the woman gaue way to the tempter, when she said, Leuit perhaps ye die: Atque ordinem et progressum humane perditionis: Consider the order and progresse of mans perdition: First, God saith, In what day ye ate thereof ye shall die: then the woman said, Leuit ye die, last of all the Serpent, Ye shall not die: God affirmed, the woman doubted, the diuell denied: Ergo, the woman doubting, which proceeded of infidelitie, was the beginning of the transgression.

Certaine also of the Schoolemen, as Bona Ventura, Scotus, in 2. senten. distinct. 21. 22. Denie that pride was the first sinne or offence of our first Parents.

Lastly, S. Ambrose thus testifieth, Peccatum Ada non longe est ab idololatria, prauitatis scilicet minime mans futurum Deum, secutus magis quod diabolus suasis, quam quod Deus iussit: The sinne of Adam is not far from idolatry: he sinned thinking that man might be God, following rather that which the diuell perswaded, then that which God commaunded: in Luk. 13. If Adam sinne were idolatry, it proceeded from infidelitie.

THE THIRD PART, WHETHER ADAMS sinne were veniall or mortall.

The Papists.

11. Error.

THe Iesuiste denieth that the sinne of Adam was veniall: his reason is this, because, Culpa ista non tollit gratiam aut amicitiam Dei: Veniall faultes doe not deprive men of the inner or friendship of God. But God was angrie with Adam, and thrust him out of Paradise: and by his transgression he lost his innocencie: Ergo, it was no veniall sinne: cap. 8.

The Protestants.

IF the Iesuiste take veniall sinnes for those, which in their owne nature are pardonable, and deserue not death, as he doth else where; in this sense neither was this sinne of Adam, nor any other, no not the least sinne, which is committed in the world, veniall: for by nature every sin deserueth death, Rom. 6. 23. But if by veniall sinnes we vnderstand those, which, howsoeuer they are in their owne nature, yet through Gods mercie are pardoned: so we affirme, that both this sinne of our first parentes, and all other, which the children of God fall into, are veniall: And though for this sinne God was offended with Adam, and temporally punished him; yet was he againe, through Gods mercie, restored to fauour or grace. Thirdly, if by veniall sinnes we vnderstand the smaller and lighter offences, so we denie also, that Adams sinne was veniall: for it was an huge and grieuous trespasse; yet he was by grace thereof acquitted. These two points then are briefly to be declared: first of the greatnesse of Adams sinne: secondly, of his recoverie by repentance, and his vndoubted saluation.

First it appeareth, that the sinne of our first parentes was a grieuous and great offence, even in the highest degree. 1. In respect of the partie offending: Adam receiued power if he would, not to sinne, therefore his sinne was the greater. 2. His ingratitude doth augment the sinne, in that so soone he had forgotten the vnspeakable benefites, bestowed vpon him in his creation, in respect of the commandement it selfe, which was verie easie: for in such abundance of all kind of most pleasant fruites, hee was onely forbidden to eate of one: and therefore, as Augustine saith: Tam leue preceptum ad obseruandum, tam breue ad memoriam retinendum, tanto maius iniquum violatum est, quanto facilius posset obseruantia custodiri: A commandement so easie to keepe, so short to be remembred, was with so much the greater vnrighteousnesse violated, as it might more easily haue bene obserued. 4. The fourth circumstance, is the issue of this sinne, whereby Adam did not onely hurt himselfe, but brought a miserable state vpon his posteritie, both in the propagation of sinne, and the punishment thereof. 5. Lastly, the great punishment laid vpon this transgression, sheweth the greatnesse thereof: for beside the spirituall wretchednesse of the soule, being not onely deprived of those excellent graces of holinesse and righteousnesse, wherein it was created, but also made subiect to euerlasting damnation; there was a threefold punishment laid vpon them in their bodies: vpon the woman, in bringing forth with paine and trauell: vpon the man, in getting his liuing in the sweate of his browes, that is, with paine and sorrow: vpon them both, in returning to the dust, and yeelding to mortallity and corruption. These circumstances then, being weighed together, do plainly set forth the state and qualitie of Adams transgression: that it was an huge offence before God,

Now concerning the second point: we do, notwithstanding the greatnesse of their sinnes, vndoubtedly hold, against the heresie of the Tutians, who blasphemously affirmed that Adam was condemned, that our first parentes were the children of Gods election. The Iesuit also affirmeth the same: but vpon verie weeke ground: as that Adam & Eve did make them coverings of fig leaues, in of sackcloth, in signe of repentance; also because that Adam by certaine ancient writers is thought to have bene buried in the same place, where Christ was crucified, and shed his blood: which is an vncertaine tradition beside scripture. But our arguments for the saluation of our first parents are these: 1. The first promise of the Messiah was made to our parents immediately after their transgression: The seed of the woman shall break the serpents head, Gen. 3. 15. Ergo they had their interest and part of this promise: for which of all the Prophets or Patriarkes was there, to whom Christ was promised, to whom the promise of grace appertained none.

Argum. 2. The first Adam was a figure of the second: Rom. 5. 14. But it cannot be shewed that any reprobate was ordained, or appointed of God, to be a figure of his sonne Christ, the Messiah to come: Ergo, Adam was no reprobate.

Argum. 3. Saint Luke in setting downe the genealogie of our Saviour Christ, saith, he was the sonne of Adam, who was the sonne of God, Luk. 3. 38. Thus then we reason: Adam was the sonne of God: Ergo, he was no reprobate, not a child of perdition, but an heire of saluation. Other arguments we haue for Adams election, but these at this time, and in this place may suffice.

This Adams sinne was veniall, Hilarie testifieth: Adam confessum, vicia reseruauit: that Adam confessed, and was referred to pardon, in Psalm. 119. cap. 8. and S. Ambrose lib. de Paradiso. cap. 14.
Umbili Eua culpa, quam secuta sit delicti confessio: Eua her fault was veniall, which the confession of her sinne followed.

AN APPENDIX TO THIS PART, OF THE greatnes of Adams sinne.

Pelagius hath foure positions of this matter. First, that Adam was not properly seduced but seduced: 2. de stat. peccat. c. 7. Secondly, that Adams sinne was greater than the womans, cap. 9.
Thirdly, that in their transgression they lost their faith, cap. 6. Fourthly, that Adams sinne, was made in some respect the greatest of all sinnes: first, both because he might easilie haue kept himself from transgression, there being but one precept giuen him: secondly, in respect of his great ingratitude, hauing receiued so many benefites from God: thirdly, for that Adams sinne redounded to the hurt of all his posteritie, as no other sinne doth: cap. 10.

The Protestants, first, say that Adam was not properly seduced, but Eua, we acknowledge; the Scripture so affirming, 1. Timoth. 2. 14. Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived.

Secondly, that Adams sinne in some respect was greater, as in regard of his person, than Eua her sinne was, we also graunt; but simplie it was not: so this poynt we partly affirme, and partly deny in the appendix to the second part of the fourth question following.

Thirdly, that our first parents lost their faith in their transgression, we hold it an error: for because the faith of the Saints cannot be vtterly exting by their sinne, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance: Rom. 11. 29. That Adam had not lost all faith, appeareth first, by the confidence and shame of sinne, in that they hid themselves, being affraide of Gods presence: secondly, because the promise of Christ was presently vpon their fall exhibited to them, which without faith, they were not capable of.

Fourthly, first, the three reasons alleaged, shew Adams sinne to haue been a very great and griuous transgression, but not the greatest that euer was: secondly, the Master of the Sentences will answereth, that because all mankind is hurt by Adams sinne, it was not for that his sinne was greater, then all other, but in respect of Adams person; in whom the whole humane nature then consisted. Thirdly, the sinne against the holy Ghost is greater, which shall neuer be forgiven:
the sinne of the reprobate and damned are greater, being punished with euermoring damnation.

THE FOURTH QUESTION, CONCERNING originall sinne.

There are diuers points of this question, which are on each side confessed; we will first set them downe briefly, and then come to the points of difference and disagreement betwene vs.

First we are agreed, that originall sinne is verily propagated by generation from our parents, and is a corruption ingrafted in vs by nature: Not as the Pelagians did hold, that Adams transgression was onely hurtfull to his posteritie by imitation: for S. Paul saith directly, 1. Cor. 5. 6.
percorramus: That in Adam all haue sinned, Rom. 5. 12. Secondly, we confesse, that originall sinne hath not onely made the body subiect to death and mortalitie; which is the opinion of Iacobus
Petrus and some others; but hath also polluted and defiled the soule of man: So the Apostle saith, that not onely death hath reigned butt all, Rom. 5. 14. but all men by Adams disobedience are made

2. Machab.
7. 12.
August. de
lib. 1. cap. 15.

made sinners, vers. 19. and sinne is the death of the soule. Thirdly, for the originall of the soule, we thinke it a more probable opinion, and agreeable to scripture, that the soules of men should bee created as they are infused into the bodies, conceived; and prepared in the wombe, then that the soules should be produced by generation: from the parents, as the bodies are: for the scripture seemeth to make a diuers beginning of the soule and the body: as the Preacher saith, that dust, that is, the body returneth to the earth, and the spirit to God, that gave it: Eccle. 12. 7. So by the Prophet Zacharie the Lord saith, that he formeth the spirit in the midst of man: Zachar. 12. 1. And the Author to the Hebrewes, seemeth to make a flat opposition betwene the fathers of the bodies, and the father of the spirit, Hebr. 12. 9. Yet because this question is not plainly determined in the scripture, we thinke it more safe, being not a point of faith, to wonder at it as a great myserie, and not rashly to pronounce anie thing, as of a common & knowne matter: And the rather because the Preacher saith, that no man knoweth the way of the spirit, Eccle. 11. 5. And thus Augustine contented himselfe, writing in these words of the woman in the Machabees, that said to her children, I know not how you came into my wombe: Ego, inquit nescio, ille scit, qui formavit, utram suam animam formavit, an iam formati dederit: si ergo dico de anima mea, me nescire, quemodo venerit in partum meum: I know not, saith she, as if she should say, I know not, but he knoweth that formed the spirit, whether he framed it together with the body, or gave it to the body framed before: So I say of my soule, I cannot tell how it came into my body.

Fourthly, this being concluded and determined, that the soule hath the beginning of God, and not of the parents: yet we are able to answer that objection which is made concerning originall sinne: for this they reason: Sinne is an adjunct of the soule; not of the body: it cannot then be in the bodie before the soule comes; and in the soule it is not, because it is created of God pure and vnspotted: vnlesse therefore the soule should be deriued from the parents, we cannot know where to place originall sinne.

Ans. Originall sinne is neither proper to the body, nor to the soule, but it is damini per totum a sinne of the whole man: who consisteth of body and soule: & it cometh not of the bodie alone, or of the soule alone, but of the coniunction of them both together: so that now neither the bodie must be respected alone, nor the soule alone, but as they do ioyntly make one man: and so enter into one condition, and are partakers each of others woe or welfare.

If it be further objected, that it standeth not with Gods iustice, to thrust a pure soule into an vncleane bodie: We further answer: First, that the soule and body are not of God respected as single substances, but as they are ioyned together, to make one man: and therefore there is but one condition of both. Secondly, the soule in respect of Gods creation, is a pure creature, yet it cometh not in that state one moment: for it is created in the midst of the bodie, in an vncleane and polluted place: and forthwith being coupled to the bodie, beginneth to be vncleane. S. Augustine also doth answer very well: Quomodo iustum est ut anima recens creata, ab omni delictis puris, passiones carnis, diuinosque cruciatus, atiam demonum incurfus in parulis sustineat. sic ostendit, quia infans, in carne quousque peccatis subiacet: originale peccatum: Looke how it may be iult, that the soule newly created, and void of all offence, yet should indure in infants the passions and vexations of the flesh, yea the invasion of diuels (which were suffered to torment children) so it may be shewed how it standeth with the rule of iustice, that the soule in sinfull flesh should be touched also with originall sinne.

Lib. 3. contra
cap. 10.

1. 1. lib. 2. di. 1

Firstly, it is of each side concluded, that originall sin doth appertaine as well by nature to the seed of the fleshfull, as of the spiritfull: for David confesseth, who no doubt was borne of faithfull parents, that in sinne his mother conceived him, Psal. 51. 3. and Isaiah saith, that he was conceived in iniquity, and in sinne his mother conceived him, Isa. 7. 14. Secondly, that not all the finnes of our parents and forefathers, but the offence onely of Adam is deriued and propagated to posteritie: so saith the Apostle, the fault came of one offence, namely Adams, to condemnation, but the gift is of many offences to iustification Rom. 5. 16.

Seuenthly, that originall sinne is no substance, nor hath anie naturall being of it selfe, but is onely a deprauation, defect and corruption of nature: for every creature of God is good. 1. Timothy. 4. 4. Ergo, originall sinne is no substance created of God, being euill: Saint Paul also saith, I know that in me dwelleth no good thing, Rom. 7. 18. Originall sin then hath the seate & dwelling in man: it hath no being of it selfe.

Lastly, we do distinguish between originall and actuell sinne: for infants and young children cannot commit anie actuell sinne, but yet they are guiltie of originall: the first is euident, Rom. 9. 1. the Apostle speaking of Isau and Jacob saith, that they yet had done neither euill nor good: the second is also proved, Rom. 5. 14. that children do sinne, though not after the transgression of Adam, that is, actually.

These then are the severall poynts, wherein we and our adversaries are agreed: the difference betweene vs in this question of originall sinne is in these particulars following: first, of the nature and qualitie of originall sinne. Secondly, of the beginning of originall sinne. Thirdly, whether remain after Baptisme. Fourthly, whether it be hurtfull to the regenerate after Baptisme. Fifthly, of the state of concupiscence. Sixtly, of the punishment of originall sinne.

THE FIRST PART, OF THE NATURE AND definition of originall sinne.

The Papists.

The Iesuite defineth originall sin, to be nothing else, but, Privatio seu carentia domi iustitie originalis, vel habitualis aversio a Deo: A privation or wanting of the gift of original iustice; or, an habituall auersion or turning away of the mind from God: but he denieth, that reatus culpa, or, pena, that the Guile of the offence of our first parents, or of the punishment, is anie part of originall sinne. His reason is, because, to be guiltie of the offence, or of the punishment, are the effect or sequell of sinne, rather then anie sinne it selfe: and therefore it is no part of originall sinne, which hath, Veram & propriam peccati rationem, the true and proper nature & condition of sinne: Bellarm. in missam. grat. lib. 5. cap. 19.

14. Error.

Answer. In the affirmative part of Bellarmines definition, there is a double fault: for he saith that originall sinne is onely the defect or wanting of iustice, whereas there is in it beside a supply of naturall corruption and prauitie: there is not only a grace wanting, but an euill present. Secondly, he calleth it an habituall or potentiall turning aside of the mind from God, whereas there is an actuall rebellion of nature, and deprauation of the mind, as euen now shall be shewed.

Nether is the Iesuites reason good, why reatus culpa, the guiltinesse of the offence, that is, the stain or blot of Adams sinne remaining in his posteritie, should be no part of originall sinne, because it is the effect of sinne, not properly sinne it selfe: for hee might so reason against originall sinne: It is the effect of sinne: Ergo, no sinne; which were no good consequent: For it is, peccatum, & pena peccati, both sinne, and the punishment of sinne; as Augustine saith: Primo homini, quod erat pena, natura nobis est: That which was a punishment to our first parents, is a naturall euill in vs: in Psal. 37. So this naturall stain or blot of sinne, in respect of Adam, it is a punishment of his transgression laid vpon his posteritie, in respect of vs it is sinne.

The Protestants.

WE define originall sinne generally to be that euill, which is ingraft in our nature, wherein we are conceued and borne: which S. Paul calleth, peccatum subitans, the sinne that dwelleth in vs. This originall euill or sinne, hath two parts: for first thereby we are made guiltie of the sinne and disobedience of our first parents, which is made ours by propagation: as the Apostle saith, By one mans disobedience many are made sinners, Rom. 5. 19. And together with the fault or offence, the punishment is propagated: that is, death is gone ouer all, in as much as all haue sinned, verf. 12. This is the first part of this naturall euill, which is denied by our aduersaries, but confirmed as we see, by euident testimonies of scripture. By this then, two popish assertions of our aduersaries are ouerthrowne: one of Albertus Papius, and Catharinus, that Adams sinne is ours onely by imputation: which opinion Bellarminus taketh paines to confute, cap. 16. the other is maintained by the Iesuite himselfe, that Adams sin is said to be ours, because we were then in Adams loynes when he sinned, cap. 18. But we affirme that we are guiltie of the sin of Adam, not by bare imputation, nor yet potentially only in Adams loynes, but really, verily, & in some sort actually: As by this reason may appeare: Looke how death, the punishment of Adams sin, is deriued to his posteritie, so is his sinne: but death reigneth ouer vs verily and indeed, not by imputation, or potentially onely: The first part is proued by the Apostles wordes: By one man sinne entred into the world, and death is by sinne: Rom. 5. 12. they entred therefore both after the same maner. The second part experience maketh good: for we see that children are subiect to die, and are taken away by death: Ergo, Adams sinne really and indeed is transfused to his posteritie. This then is the first part of originall sinne, reatus culpa, & obligatio ad poenam: whereby we are made guiltie of the sinne of Adam, and the punishment.

15. Error.

The other part is, beside this reall communicating vnto vs, the sinne of our parents, a general deprauation and corruption of the whole nature of man, both in his soule, and in his bodie: in the soule there is the blindness of the minde, the losse of freewill, the vnrulinesse of the affection, the pronenesse to vice: in the bodie, the concupiscence and rebellion of the flesh.

And here concerning this part of originall sinne, we affirme and maintaine two points against Bellarmines. the Iesuite: first he saith that originall sinne is no positive qualitie, or any inherent euill disposition of nature: but whatsoever is euill in vs, it doth spring onely, Ex carentia iustitie originalis, non ex iustitia aliqua qualitate, from the losse or want of originall iustice, not from anie inherent qualitie. Contra. But the contrarie may be shewed out of S. Paul, who calleth this naturall euill, peccatum subitans, Rom. 7. 20. & corpus mortis, a bodie of death, or sin, verf. 24: but how could it haue

haue a being or dwelling, and be as a bodie, a masse or lumpe of sinne, if it were not an inherent qualitie, but a priuation or defect onely? So Augustine saith: Quod in membris corporis hominis inordinatè mouetur, totumq; animus in se delectum conatur attrahere, &c. hoc est malum peccati, in quo nascitur omnis homo: That which is in the members of our bodie disorderly moued or stirred, and laboureth to captinate the minde vnto it, this is that euill of sinne, in the which euery man is borne: constr. Pelag. 2. 4. This sinne which hee speaketh of, moueth, and is moued: wherefore it is somewhat that hath a being, and is capable of motion; and for this cause not a priuation onely, or a defect.

Secondly, the Iesuite defineth originall sinne: Habitualem auersionem à Deo: An habituall forsaking, or turning aside from God, cap. 19. as though it were onely in habite, nothing in act, and did but giue a promptnes or inclination to euill onely.

Contra. Although we doe admit the distinction of originall and actuall sinnes: for these are by vs done and committed, the other come into the world with vs: yet this originall and nature sinne is neuer idle in vs but alwaies working, and sheweth it selfe euen in infants: This Saint Paul calleth, the law of his members rebelling against the law of his minde, Rom. 7. 23. Rebellion of nature is an actuall thing, but this is the fruite of originall sinne. Augustine also saith, Concupiscentia in lapso cum paruulis nascitur: This concupiscence, which is the law of sinne, is euen borne with children: constr. Pelag. 2. 4. And this rebellion of nature doth bewray it selfe in children, by those unreasonable motions, and stirrings which are seene in them: Qui non ratione, sed dolore interdum inhihentur: Which are not stayed by reason, but sometime with paine and griefe, as Augustine saith: and therefore he thinketh that Christ in his infancie, was voyd of them: constr. Pelag. lib. 2. cap. 19.

Concil. Arausican. 2. can. 1. Si quis per offensam preuaricationis Adams, non totum secundum corpus & animam dicit hominem in deterius commutatum, &c. anathema sit: If any man say, that by the offence of the transgression of Adam, man is not both in bodie and soule chaunged to the worse, let him be accursed. The nature of man therefore by sinne is actually corrupted, it is not potentially, or in habite onely: for there is, actus primus, & secundus, the first act, and the second: the first inward: and so we say that man is inwardly by originall sinne actually corrupted, sinne being yet as in the roote, or seede. The second act is externall, when this bitter roote of sinne within bringeth forth euill fruite in the life.

Decret. par. 2. can. 3. dist. 3. c. 25. This Canon sheweth, that originall sinne is not onely habitual but actuall: first it saith, Iniquitas est habitudo mentis inuisa: Iniquitie is the habite of an vniuersal teous minde. Againe, Peccatum est opus iniquitatis; iniquitas autem operatrix culpa, aut delicti: Sinne is the worke of iniquitie; iniquitie is the worker of the guilt or of the sinne. Thus then originall sinne, which is here called iniquitie, is not onely in habite but in act.

And that originall sinne is not onely a priuation of originall iustice, but a reall deprivation of our nature, not priuative onely but positive, many of the learned popish writers doe affirme: as Hiericus quodlib. 2. qu. 11. Gregor. Arimin. 2. dist. 3. qu. 1. Ioann. Driedo. 1. lib. de grat. & lib. arbitrio.

Likewise, Hieronim. Hangest. c. 3. & 13. Ex Ada delicto, &c. secuta est plaga atque iniustitia originalis ablatio, & originalis culpa incursio: The plague or wound that followed of Adams sinne, is the ablation of originall iustice, and the inuasion of originall sinne. Originall sinne then is somewhat else beside the priuation of originall iustice.

But among the rest the Master of the Sentences is most resolute in this point: lib. 2. dist. 30. f. 0. originalis peccatum culpa est: Originall sinne is a fault, g. Fomes peccati, lex membrorum, languor nature, fuit tyrannus, &c. The nourishment of sinne, the law of the members, the disease of nature, a very tyrant. All this sheweth more then a priuation onely. Dist. 35. l. Aliquid ponit, &c. He sheweth that originall sinne is positive, and not a priuation onely. Thus the truth wanteth not the testimony of the aduersaries thereof.

THE SECOND PART, OF THE BEGINNING of originall sinne, whether it be deriued from Adam or Eue.

The Papists.

19. Error.

The Iesuite thinketh that originall sinne is onely deriued from Adam: his best and onely reason is grounded vpon S. Pauls words: By one man sinne entred into the world, Rom. 7. 12. And, As in Adam all dye, so in Christ are all made aliue, 1. Cor. 15. 22. Ergo, the propagation of sinne is onely from Adam: Bellar. cap. 13. lib. 4. de stat. peccat.

Ans. First, the word, that the Apostle vseth, in Deum, homo, both in the Latine and Greeke indifferently signifieth a man, or a woman. Secondly, sinne is said to haue entred by one man, that is, by Adam, because the man is the chiefest instrument of generation: as the Apostle saith, 1. Cor. 15.

And therefore in the lawe the man only were circumcised, because the beginning of the carnall generation, was from them.
Thirdly, in respect of Adams person, who was the more worthie and excellent: and although in him respects the womans sinne was not inferiour to his, yet because the transgression was not perfected nor consummate but by the consent of Adam, it is chiefly imputed to him. Fourthly, if Adam alone brought in sin, the Scripture should be contrary, that saith, the woman was in the trans- gression, 1. Timoth. 2. 14. Fifthly, Augustine also giueth another answer: The sinne came by two, and the Apostle saith, it entered by one: because they two now made but one: They two shall be one Gen. 2. 24. Lastly, the Master of Sentences giueth these reasons, why sinne is laid to enter by one, and yet both sinned: Quia per mulierem intrauit de viro fellam: Because it entered by the woman made of man: Or, because if man had not sinned, humane kinde had bin corrupted, lib. 2.
dist. 32. g.

Articuli. 2.
cont. Pelag.

The Protestants.

Though wee graunt that Adam was the chiefe in some respects, though not the first in the transgression, yet was he not alone: his sinne indeede was greater than the womans, for these causes: First, he was stronger than the woman, and more able to resist the temptation. Secondly, the woman encountered with a stronger enemy, for she was seduced by the Serpent, in whom the fiell spake, Gen. 3. 13. but Adam obeyed only the voyce of his wife, vers. 17. Thirdly, because the commandement was giuen by the Lord to the man, Gen. 2. 16. and by the man to his wife: wherefore the mans offence seemeth the greater in transgressing the commandement: yet although the man were the chiefe transgressor, as by these and other circumstances may appeare: yet they were both authors and beginners of originall sinne.

Argum. 1. As sinne entered into Paradise, so is it entered into the world: for it is the same sinne which was in our first parents, and is in vs, in them actually, in vs originally: and the same sinne must haue the same beginning: but sinne entered into Paradise both by the man and woman: nay the woman was deceived, and was first in the transgression, 1. Timot. 2. 14. Ergo, by them both sin came vpon vs.

Argum. 2. By whom death entered into the world, by them also sinne entered: but death entered both by the man and woman: for being guiltie of one sinne, they receiued one common punishment, Dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou returne. Ecclesiasticus also saith (which is good scripture against our aduersaries) I brought the woman we all dye, chap. 25. vers. 26. Yea, saith the Iesuite, per il- lam, through her, because she gaue occasion of the transgression, but not in illa, in her, as wee are said to dye in Adam. Ans. Saint Paul vseth both these phrases, to dye in Adam, or death came in by through Adam, Rom. 5. vers. 12. 16: Therefore there is no such difference in the wordes: so whether we say, we dye in or by the woman, all is one matter.

Augustine lastly, answering an obiection of the Pelagians, whether sinne entered by one or two, saith not to say, Ecclesiasticus est tibi satis: per duos homines pertransyisse peccatum: Behold, this sayeth to you, that sinne entered by two, the man and the woman.

Spad. Moguntin. cap. 5. Primorum hominum peccatum propagatione in omnes homines transire, ut so- lutionem suam trahere, &c. That the sinne of the first men (not of the first man, as of one) is demonstrated by propagation vnto all men, and draweth the punishment with it, &c. Ergo, the sinne sprin-geth from both our first parents.

Saint Ambrose saith, Adam & Eua primi illius generis, ita erroris parentes: Adam and Eua, the first parents as of our generatio, so of our error. This is agreeable to the law of nature: Cod. lib. 3. tit. 3. 2.
by 3. Philipp. Partus sequitur matrem, &c. The birth followeth the mother: as if a free man haue a childe by a bondwoman, the childe also shall be bound and not free. Sexto decret. lib. 5. tit. 2. 15.
Infans Hæreticorum filij puniuntur secundum matris quam patris lineam: The sonnes of heretics are punished as well after the line of generation by the mother, as by the father.

Lastly, the Master of Sentences thinketh, that Eua her sinne was the greater, lib. 2. dist. 23. and that Adam was not seduced: then it will follow, that the womans sinne being the greater cannot be excluded, and the mans sinne, which was the lesse, to be taken onely to giue beginning to originall sinne.

AN APPENDIX, WHETHER THE SINNE OF

Adam or Eua were the greater in the transgression.

That Adams sinne was greater.

This question is not so much controuerted betweene the Papists and Protestants, as between the ancient fathers of the Church, who haue written diuersly of this matter. Saint Ambrose doth amplify Adams sinne: Saint Chrysostome and Saint Augustine doe seeme to exaggerate the transgression of the woman: I will propound the arguments on both sides, and then briefly determine

De act. 8. tit. 1.

termine of the truth. First, Saint Ambrose thus reasoneth against Adams sin: Influit. virgin. c. 4.

1 Illam deceptis superior creatura, &c. A superiour creature deceived the woman, that is, an euill Angell: but a woman deceived Adam: he had a weaker tempter.

2 If Adam could not keepe the commaundement, which hee heard of God, how should the woman that heard it not?

3 The man is rebuked, the woman but asked the question.

4 The woman first confessed her fault, Genes. 3. vers. 13. The Serpent beguiled me.

5 The woman accuseth the Serpent, the man more vnkindly accuseth the woman.

6 The woman in her punishment findeth mercie: Ex remuneratione peccati inuenit: She findeth a reward in her punishment: though she was to bring forth in sorrow, yet by her fruit she shall be deliuered.

But these reasons may thus easily be answered: First, Ambrose himselfe confesseth, that homo serpentis persuasione deceptus: That man was deceived by the perswasion of the Serpent, Item. 7. in Psal. 119. So then the diuell tempted the woman, and the diuell by the woman tempted Adam: Adam then was the stronger temptation.

2 The woman knew as well as the man, that they were not to eate of the forbidden tree, vers. 3. God hath said, Ye shall not eate of it, &c.

3 The woman is both rebuked and first punished.

4 The woman confesseth her fault, no otherwise than Adam did, by posting it off to another.

5 The man spake but the truth, that the woman gaue him to eate, as the woman saith she was beguiled of the Serpent.

6 The benefit of the promise concerning the womans seed redoundeth to the man, as well as to the woman: and the promise is first pronounced before her punishment is inflicted.

THAT THE SINNE OF THE WOMAN WAS IN it selfe not inferiour to Adams transgression, but rather greater.

First, the Master of the Sentences thus reasoneth: Plus uidetur peccasse mulier, &c. The woman seemeth to haue sinned more, because she presumptuously desired the diuine equalitie, and beleued it would come to passe: but Adam did not so beleue, being onely entised by his wife, distinction. 2. lib. 2.

2 Mulier plus peccauit, quia grauius punita: The woman offended more, because she was punished more: vpon the man is inflicted labour and sorrow; vpon the woman trauaile and paine in labour: Thom. Aquinas. 2. qu. 1. 63. artic. 4.

3 Mulier in se, proximum & Deum peccauit; vir in se tantum & Deum: The woman sinned against her selfe, against God, against her husband: the man onely against God and himselfe: de Genes. lib. 1. c. 2. Augustin.

4 Saint Ambrose also vseth this reason: Mulier sciens prudensq; peccauit, &c. The woman sinned willingly, and wittingly, in that after she knew she had sinned, she drew also her husband into error, de Paradiso. cap. 6.

5 As their sinnes were in degree and order, so was the punishment: first the Serpent was cursed, as being the first seducer: next the woman is chastised, as being in the second degree of offence: the man is reserved to the last and least punishment.

6 But the best reason of all is grounded vpon S. Pauls words: Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived, and was found in the transgression. 1. Timothy. 2. 14. Whereupon Chrysostome giueth this note: Hec amplius deliqueras, &c. She sinned the more, in so much that Adams sinne compared with it is not counted transgression, Hier. 3. ad Rom. And S. Ambrose thus enforceth it: Uir mulier, non mulieri uir author erroris: The woman to the man, not the man to the woman is author of error. The conclusion of the question is this, that Adams sinne in respect of the dignitie and excellencie of his person was the greater: as Augustine saith, Adam plus peccauit, quia minus bono abundauit: Adam sinned more, because he had more excellent graces and better strength to resist: But in regard of the qualitie of the sinne in it selfe it is euident, that the sinne of the woman was tempered with a greater measure both of infidelitie and ambition, than Adams was. I end this matter with that conclusion of Augustine, in the like case: that as one being fallen into a pit, thus answered him, that asked, how hee fell in: Cogita quaso quomodo hinc me liberet, non quomodo huc ceciderim quare: Be thinke you selfe how you may deliuer me hence, aske not how I came hither. So it is needlesse for vs to be inquisitiue of the beginning, entrance, qualitie and degree of the sinne of our parents; but let vs rather seeke and labour by what meanes to be deliuered from it.

sinne remaine after Baptisme.

The Papists.

Blowing in flat words denieth, that the corruption of nature, or concupiscence, which remaineth in the regenerate after Baptisme, is originall sinne, nor yet any sinne of it selfe, nor yet doth make them guiltie, in whom it is found: Bellarm. lib. 5. de stat. peccat. cap. 7. The like also the Dominists affirme, that concupiscence remaining after Baptisme, is not properly a sinne, nor forbidden by commaundement: it is called sinne, because it is the matter, effect, and occasion of sin, Rom. 6. sect. 6.

Argum. 1. Saint James saith, That lust when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished, bringeth forth death. The Apostle here calleth not lust or concupiscence sinne, but saith it bringeth forth sinne: Sic Bellarm. cap. 7. Rhemist. in hunc locum.

Ans. 1. The argument followeth not, concupiscence bringeth forth sinne: Ergo it is no sinne: for it shall the rather be sinne, as one Serpent bringeth forth another: so both the mother and daughter are sinne.

We may better conclude out of this place, that concupiscence is sinne: A good tree (saith our Saviour) bringeth forth good fruit, and an euill tree, euill fruit. Matth. 7. 17. but concupiscence bringeth forth euill fruit. Every man is tempted (saith the Apostle) when he is drawne away of his concupiscence. Ergo, concupiscence is an euill tree.

Argum. 2. Saint Paul saith, Now it is no more I that doe it, but sinne that dwelleth in me: for I know that in me, that is, my flesh, dwelleth no good thing. Rom. 7. 17. 18. Hence it is proued, first that this sin, which Saint Paul saith, is not his, is not imputed to the Apostle: And againe, it is in his flesh, therefore sinne, for the flesh properly is not capable of sinne, Bellarm. ibid.

Ans. By the flesh and the minde, Saint Paul doth not here vnderstand the two parts, whereof man naturally consisteth, namely, the bodie and the soule: but he speaketh of a man new regenerate: by the flesh vnderstanding whatsoeuer is carnall, either in the soule or bodie: by the minde or spirit whatsoeuer is spirituall and regenerate. And therefore as he is regenerate, he saith, the sin which is in him is not imputed: but yet it is sinne still.

Bellarm. objecteth: 1. Though sometime the flesh be taken for the whole man, yet is it not so here: for that which he nameth flesh, he calleth the bodie of death, vers. 24. but by the mortall bodie both the parts of man cannot be vnderstood: for the soule is not mortall.

Ans. By death here the Apostle vnderstandeth not the mortalitie of the bodie, but that death which cometh by sinne both to the bodie and soule: as the Prophet saith, Thy soule that sinneth, shall die. Ezech. 18. 16. There is then a death of the soule, as there is of the bodie: the bodie then if dead, is nothing else but the bodie, that is, the whole lump and masse of sin, Rom. 6. 6. which bringeth death both to bodie and soule.

Bellarm. 2. Saint Paul here speaketh of the inner man, vers. 22. but that is the soule of man; as 1. Cor. 4. 16. Though our outward man perishe, yet our inward man is renewed daily: the outward man then is the bodie.

Ans. By the inward man in this place, the Apostle vnderstandeth the regenerate part through the whole man, both in bodie and soule: which in other places he calleth the new man, and the outward man is the old man. And as here he saith, our outward man perissheth: so elsewhere, our old man is crucified with him, Rom. 6. 6. And by the old man, he vnderstandeth the workes of the flesh, not only outward, as, Lye not one to another, seeing you haue put off the old man. Coloss. 3. 9. but inward: Cast off the old man, and be renewed in the spirit of your minde. Ephes. 4. 23.

Bellarm. 3. Again, S. Paul doth in very direct words distinguish betweene the minde and the flesh: In my minde I serue the law of God, in my flesh the law of sinne, vers. 25. By the minde, vnderstanding the soule of man: by the flesh, the bodie, Bellarm.

Ans. Saint Paul speaketh indeede of a minde regenerate, not setting it against an vregenerate bodie: for if Saint Pauls minde were regenerate, so also his bodie in some sort must be partaker of the same regeneration: for he himselfe saith, Glorifie God in your bodies, and in your spirits, for they are the Lords. 1. Cor. 6. 20. The regenerate are renewed both in bodie and soule, and in them both doe glorifie God: therefore the flesh cannot be here taken for the bodie, seeing the Apostle speaketh of himselfe, who no doubt was mortified in his bodie, and did beate it downe, 1. Corin. 9. Neither can the minde simple signifie the whole, or all the regenerate part: for as there is a regenerate mind; Be renewed in the spirit of your mind. Ephes. 4. 24. so there is a fleshly mind, Coloss. 2. 18. Wherefore the Apostle by the mind must either vnderstand the whole regenerate part, which is called the vregenerate, as the soule to the bodie, and therefore the regenerate man is called the spirituall man, 1. Corineth. 2. 15. Or else by the minde regenerate which is the principall part of regeneration, neration, incluſively the whole regeneration is inſinuated, a part figuratively being taken for the whole.

Having now answered the Ieſuites objections, we will ſet downe ſome of our reaſons, why this place is to be vnderſtood, as we ſayd, not of the two natural parts of man, the bodie, and the ſoule: but that by the fleſh the Apoſtle meaneth the whole vnregenerate part: by the minde or ſpirit, the part regenerate.

Argum. 1. Saint Paul ſaith, The euill I would not, that doe I, verſ. 21. I ſerue in my fleſh the law of ſinne, verſ. 23. And againe, I ſee a law in my members leading me captiue to ſinne, verſ. 23. Theſe ſpeeches are not vttered of the regenerate part: if of the vnregenerate, which muſt needes be granted, yet not of the bodie or fleſh by it ſelfe conſidered, without the ſoule: for the fleſh of it ſelfe is a dead thing: how can the Apoſtle ſerue in his fleſh, or doe any thing in his fleſh, without the operation of the ſoule? And therefore by the fleſh muſt wee vnderſtand the part vnregenerate both in bodie and ſoule.

Argum. 2. The fleſh of it ſelfe without the ſoule is: no fit place for ſinne: but in the fleſh ſinne dwelleth, as the Apoſtle ſaith: Ergo, fleſh is not here to be conſidered without the ſoule.

Argum. 3. A perfect man conſiſteth of bodie and ſoule, but that which is regenerate is called the inner man: Ergo, regeneration is both in bodie and ſoule.

Argum. 4. The fleſh is the ſame, which Saint Paul calleth the bodie of death, verſ. 24. The bodie of death is all one with the bodie of ſinne, Rom. 6. 6. The bodie of ſinne, or ſinfull bodie of the fleſh, is the whole corruption of man both in bodie and ſoule, ſo much as is put off by the ſpiritual circumciſion of Chriſt, Coloſ. 2. 11. Ergo, the fleſh in this place is the corrupt and vnregenerate part of the whole man.

Argum. 5. The Apoſtle calleth concupiſcence the law of his members, verſ. 23. what members he meaneth, he ſheweth elſewhere: Mortifie your earthly members, fornication, vncleanneſſe, inordinate affection, Coloſ. 3. 5. but theſe are not members of the bodie, but of the whole corrupt maſſe of bodie and ſoule in man: Ergo, Thus much for our anſwere to Bellarmines ſecond argument.

Argum. 3. The Apoſtle ſaith, There is no condemnation to them, that are in Chriſt: But if concupiſcence remaining in thoſe that are iuſtified were ſinne, then there ſhould be ſome matter of condemnation ſtill in them, contrarie to the Apoſtle, Bellarm. lib. 5. cap. 7.

Anſw. There is no condemnation either for concupiſcence, or any other ſinne, becauſe though in it ſelfe it be worſhip of damnation, yet the guilt thereof is taken away in Chriſt.

Bellarmin. The guilt of ſinne cannot be ſeparated from the thing, that in it ſelfe deſerueth condemnation: neither can ſin be forgiven, as long as the foundation thereof remaineth: Ezech. 18. verſ. 21. Forgiveness is remitted, if the wicked will turne away from his iniquitie. If iniquitie ſtill remaine, there is then no forgiveness, ibid.

Contra. 1. The Apoſtle himſelfe had ſaid in the next wordes before, Rom. 7. 25. In my minde I ſerue the law of God, in my fleſh the law of ſinne: He is not aſhamed to confeſſe, that ſinne remained in his members, yet was he one of thoſe, that are in Chriſt.

2. Saint Iohn ſaith, 1. Epiſt. 1. 9. If we ſay wee haue no ſinne, we deceive our ſelues: if wee acknowledge our ſinnes, he is faithfull to forgive them, &c. Here the Apoſtle ſheweth, that to haue ſinne, and to haue forgiveness of ſinne, may both ſtand together: wherefore it is falſe which hee ſo boldly affirmeth, that the guilt of ſinne cannot be ſeparated from the ſinne it ſelfe: the guilt is taken away by forgiveness in Chriſt, and yet after forgiveness obtained, hee is a liar, that ſaith he hath no ſinne.

3. The turning from iniquitie, which Ezechiel ſpeaketh of, is by repentance, and by ceaſing to commit the act of ſinne: the ſtaine or blot of ſinne is one thing, the act and worke of ſin another: though ſin raigne not in vs, that we obey the luſts thereof, Rom. 6. 12. yet there is ſinne ſtill dwelling in vs, Rom. 7. 20. ſo long as we haue our habitation in theſe houſes of clay.

4. If there remaine then in the regenerate no ſinne at all; how farre are they from the opinion of the Pelagian heretikes, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, which hold that a man may attaine in this life to a ſtate of perfection? And if the regenerate haue no ſinne, what neede they ſay that petition in the Lords prayer; Forgive vs our treſpaſſes? But I thinke they will be aſhamed of ſo great impudencie: as Auguſtine ſaith, Nescio virum quilibet vel heretica prauitate reperiri poſſe, &c. I thinke no man can be found, though of a moſt hereticall proud ſpirit, which will (I ſay) not openly profeſſe, but thinke ſecretly within himſelfe, that he neede not ſay this petition, Forgive vs our treſpaſſes, &c. cont. Creeſum. lib. 2. c. 28.

The Proteſtants.

THat concupiſcence, and the corrupt inclination of nature, even in the children of God, is verily and properly ſinne, and in it ſelfe worſhip of damnation, but that both it, and all other ſinnes, are remitted in Chriſt to the faithfull, and ſo not imputed: thus it is proued by the word of God.

Argum. 1.

Quest. 1. Saint Paul calleth it sinne dwelling in him, Rom. 7. vers. 17: 20. Ergo, it is sinne.

Belarmine answereth: first, it is a sinne improperly so called, not because it is a sinne indeede; but either the cause or effect of sinne: for the Apostle saith, that this sinne dwelleth in his flesh: but the flesh is not the seat or place of sinne: Belarm. lib. 5. cap. 10. respons. ad obiect. 11.

Contra. 1. Let it be noted, that the Apostle giuing concupiscence, at the least ten severall times the same of sinne in this one chapter, yet speaketh improperly, and must now learne of Belarmine to speake: 2. By the flesh Saint Paul, as before we shewed at large, vnderstandeth not the bodie, but the whole part of man not renewed as well of the soule, as the bodie: therefore his reason for the place of sinne is nothing. 3. But that concupiscence hath the very proper nature of sinne, it may appeare further by Saint Pauls description: First, he denieth it to be good, vers. 18. Secondly, he saith it is euill, vers. 19. Thirdly, hee saith he hateth it, vers. 15. Fourthly, it maketh him to cry out, Wretched man that I am, &c. vers. 24. It bringeth wretchednes, which is the fruite of sinne: Belarm. lib. 5. cap. 10. respons. ad obiect. 11.

Belarmine answereth: that it is an euill, but no sinne.

Contra. 2. Well then, it is an euill by the Iesuites confession, and Saint Paul saith it is sinne? Ergo, it is sinne that is sinne. 2. What will he answer to this place: I know not sinne but by the law: for I had knowne lust, except the law had said, thou shalt not lust, vers. 7. Lust and concupiscence is forbidden by the law: Ergo, it is verily and properly a sinne.

Belarmine before distinguished of sinne, but that not turning his turne here, for he dare not denie but that the transgression of the law is sinne: he hunteth about for another distinction: Concupiscence forbidden by the law (thou shalt not conue) is not originall, but actuall concupiscence: and therefore it is not pertinent to the matter: for the one wee confesse to be sinne, but not the other.

Contra. 3. First, Saint Paul saith, that sinne tooke occasion by the law to work all manner of concupiscence, vers. 8. Ergo, all concupiscence, originall or actuall, is forbidden by the law: Secondly, Concupiscence wrought in me all manner of concupiscence: By sinne, saith the Iesuite, he vnderstandeth originall concupiscence: the Apostle then calleth the working concupiscence sinne, the concupiscence wrought, he setteth downe by the name of concupiscence still: so then we reason thus: That is sin properly, which is rather sinne, than that which no man doubteth to be sinne: but concupiscence wrought in vs by our aduersaries owne confession is sinne: yet the working concupiscence is rather sinne, because the Apostle calleth it sinne, and not the other: Ergo, it is properly sinne. Thirdly, Belarmine saith, that Voluntarius actus concupiscendi prohibitus est lege: That is, the voluntarie act of concupiscence which is forbidden by the law: so that inuoluntarie motions, in his iudgement, are not against the law. But Saint Paul sheweth the contrarie: If I doe that which I will not, I consent to the law, that it is good, vers. 16. His inuoluntarie motions were against the law: for obeying them against his will, he did in iudgement and consent approue the law, though in practice he went against it. Fourthly, if originall concupiscence be euill, as the Iesuite confesseth, then must it needes be contrarie to the law, which is good, and so forbidden by the law: or else the law shall not be a perfect rule of righteousness, and goodnes.

Argum. 2. The Apostle calleth the Law of his members a law rebelling against the Law of his minde: but whatsoever rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is sinne.

Belarm. 1. Euery thing that rebelleth, or is contrarie to the law, is not sinne: for man, when he sinneth, resisteth the law; and yet man is not sinne. And againe, in that the Apostle calleth it a law, he sheweth that it is not properly sinne, but a law or rule rather of sinning: respons. ad obiect. 6.
